Henry for his part, proſecuted his deſign againſt the Saxons, with whom he had hitherto engag'd without Fortune's declaring her ſelf abſolutely on either ſide. But at laſt Octob. 15, in the ſame Year, there was a bloody Engagement between Henry and Radulphus. The Engagement was very ſharp on both ſides, and Radulphus ſeem'd to have the better of it, till ſuch time as being hot in the Engagement, he receiv'd a Wound in his Arm. This oblig'd him to retreat, and leave the Field to his Enemy: He was carry'd to Marsburg, where he dy'd within a ſhort time after, ſhewing a great deal of concern for having ſwerv'd from his Allegiance to his King. Henry entred Saxony, and made there great Havock, and upon his return re-took all Suabia.

Gregory was the more concern'd for the Death of Radulphus, becauſe it expos'd him to the Mercy of Henry, who prepard to fall down into Italy. He had the Princeſs Matilda at his Devotion; but the Forces which ſhe had, were weak in compariſon of Henry's. A great many advis'd him to adjuſt Matters with that Prince: But being reſolv'd to try his utmoſt before he came to that, he wrote to the Biſhop of Paſſaw, and to the Abbot of Richenau, who ſtill held out againſt Henry; to learn of them, whether they were in a capacity of giving him any Aſſiſtance, and exhorted them to chooſe inſtead of Radulphus, a King entirely devoted to the Intereſts of the Holy See, ſending them likewiſe the form of an Oath which he would have him take. He wrote likewiſe at the ſame time to the Abbot of Mount Caſſin, to deſire Aſſiſtance from Robert Guiſcard, and he himſelf deſir'd the ſame of that Prince, as appears by the Eleventh and Seventeenth Letters of the ſame Book.

Henry's Expedition into Italy, and the Siege of Rome.

In the mean time Henry after he had given neceſſary Orders for the Affairs of Germany, march'd into Italy in the Year, 1081, at the Head of an Army. He march'd directly to Rome without meeting any oppoſition, only when he came near that place he engag'd with the Forces of Matilda, which he quickly defeated. But the City of Rome ſhutting the Gates againſt him, he ravag'd and laid waſt all the adjacent Countries as he retreated to Lombardy. The next year he return'd and laid Siege to that City, which he vigorouſly aſſaulted during all Lent: But Eaſter coming on, and the Heat being inſupportable, he quarter'd his Forces round about Rome, and return'd to Lombardy, leaving Guilbert at Tivoli to Command the Blockades. The next Campagn he return'd, and took the Town Leonina, where he caus'd Guilbert to be ordain'd, ſome ſay by the Biſhops of Modena and Rimini; others by the Biſhops of Bologne, Vincenza, and Cervia. Afterwards he carry'd on a vigorous Aſſault againſt the City. At this time the Romans being weary of ſo long a Siege, adviſ'd Gregory to call a Council to put an end to theſe diſaſters. Henry conſented to it, and promis'd to grant a free Paſs-port to all the Prelates, who ſhould come to that Synod. But he Arreſted by the way the Deputies of the German Rebels, and Otho Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia who came along with them. Notwithſtanding this, the Pope held that Council in November; and tho' his Affairs were ſo deſperate, yet they had much ado to prevent him from pronouncing a new Sentence of Excommunication againſt Henry, ſo full of Paſſion was he. He would not ſo much as hearken to an Accomodation, ſo that this Synod which laſted three Days, determin'd nothing, and was wholly taken up with Complaints and Invectives againſt Henry. In ſhort, the Romans perceiving themſelves very much incommoded by the Army of that Prince, and won over by the Mony he diſtributed among them, ſurrender'd the City to him the beginning of the Year, 1084. and Gregory fled into the Caſtle of S. Angelo, where he was beſieg'd by Henry. That Prince being Maſter of Rome, caus'd himſelf to be Crown'd Emperor by Gilbert on Eaſter-Day in the ſame Year. Gregory in this Exigency had recourſe to Robert Guiſcard, who return'd with all expedition from Greece, (whither he had went to Fight the Emperor Alexis) in order to ſet the Pope at Liberty. Henry did not ſtay for his coming, whether it was for fear that he was not ſtrong enough to oppoſe him, or rather becauſe the preſent ſtate of his Affairs call'd him back again to Germany (for the German Rebels had Elected in the Year, 1082, one Herman in the place of Radulphus) he left Rome, took Gilbert along with him, and re-paſs'd the Mountains, to go in all haſt to Germany. The Pope was ſtill beſieg'd by part of his Army, and by the Romans: But Robert Guiſcard rais'd the Siege; and having entred Rome in Triumph with his Army, he laid part of the City in Aſhes, and reſtor'd it to the Pope's Authority. Henry's Party was likewiſe worſted in Lombardy. In Germany that Prince laid Siege to the City of Auſburg, burg, which the Rebels had seiz'd upon, and re-took it from them. Afterwards he made it his business to punish those who had declar'd against him, and turn'd those Bishops who had been his Adversaries, out of their Churches. Gregory VII.

The year 1085. was more quiet, the two Parties being contented to have several Conferences, and to hold Conventions one against the other. There was one the beginning of the year at Gostat or Berchach, where Otho Cardinal Bishop of Ostia appear'd. Tho' it chiefly consisted of those of Herman's Faction, yet there came some of Henry's Deputies to maintain his Right. The Question discuss'd, was; Whether the Pope had a lawful Power to excommunicate King Henry, and deprive him of his Dominions. It was debated by Gebehard Arch-bishop of Salzburgh on the behalf of Herman, and by Wicelin, who had succeeded Sigefroy in the Arch-bishoprick of Mayence, on the behalf of Henry. The one strongly maintain'd the Negative, the other the Affirmative: But each continu'd obstinate in his Opinion, and nothing was determin'd in that Convention. The Convention at Berchach.

There was another held after Easter at Quintilineburgh, in the Presence, and by the Order of Herman, and the Cardinal of Ostia, compos'd of Arch-bishops, Bishops, and other Prelats and Lords of their Party, who began by determining that it was not lawful to question whether the Pope's Judgment were lawful or no, and that no body could meddle with it. Gunibert Clerk of Bamberg, being willing to argue upon this Proposition, was contradicted by the whole Assembly, and forc'd to withdraw. In this Convention, they declar'd the Ordination of Wiceline to the Arch-bishoprick of Mayence, that of Sigefroy to the Bishoprick of Ausburg, that of Norbert to the Bishoprick of Chur or Coire, and in general all the Ordinations and Consecrations made by excommunicated Persons, to be Null and Void. They there Condemn'd Wiceline, as one who maintain'd, that Laicks when dispossess'd of their Estates, could not be subject to the Judgment of the Ecclesiasticks, nor be excommunicated; and that those who were excommunicated for their Temporal Estates, might be receiv'd into Communion, without being reconcil'd. They there prohibited the receiving such into Communion, who had been excommunicated by their Bishops, unless they had receiv'd Absolution. They there renew'd the Law which enjoyn'd Celibacy to Priests, Deacons and Sub-deacons. They prohibited Laicks from meddling with the Consecrated Vessels or Coverings of the Chalice belonging to the Altar, and from possessing of Tenths. They order'd that the Ember-Week in the Spring should be observ'd the first Week in Lent; and That in Summer the Week after Whitsuntide; that no Person shall eat Eggs or Cheese during Lent. They there ratified and confirm'd all that Gebehard Bishop of Constance had done as Legat of the Holy See. But there arose some difficulty about the Legality of the Marriage of King Herman, who they said had Marry'd his Kinswoman. He said he would refer the Determination thereof to the Synod; but that Affair could not there be try'd, because there were not any of his Accusers. Lastly, They pronounc'd an Anathema, by lighted Candles, against Guilbert, whom they call'd Arch-Heretick and Intruder into the Holy See; and against Cardinal Hugh, John Bishop of Porto, Peter the Chancellor, Liemar Arch-bishop of Breme, Uto Bishop of Hildesheim, Otho of Constance, Burchard of Basil, Husman of Spires; and against Wiceline Arch-bishop of Mayence, Sigefroy Bishop of Ausburg, Norbert of Coire and their Accomplices. This Decree is Sign'd by Herman, by Cardinal Otho, by the Arch-bishops of Salzburgh and Magdeburgh, by twelve Bishops of Germany, who were most of them ordain'd Bishops in the room of those of King Henry's Party, who had been depos'd. For at that time there were several Churches which had two Bishops; the One of King Henry's placing, and the Other of the Pope's: And he of the two whose Party was most prevalent in the City, was in Possession. The Convention at Quintilineburgh.

Henry soon reveng'd himself on this Convention, for in May he held another more numerous Convention at Mayence, at which Assisted the Bishop of Porto, and two Priests of Rome, who took upon them the Character of the Legats of Clement III. the Arch-bishops of Mayence, of Treves, of Cologne and of Breme, twenty Bishops of Germany, and a great many other Bishops of France and Italy. Hildebrand, his Legat Otho, and his Adherents were there Condemn'd, together with the fourteen Prelates of the Assembly of Quintilineburgh, whom they depos'd, as being Guilty of Perjury, Rebellion and Homicide. They excommunicated Herman, Eckbert of Saxony, and the Lord Welpho; prohibited all Christians from holding any Correspondence with them, and plac'd other Bishops in the room of those who were of Herman's Party. The Convention at Mayence.

Whilst these things pass'd in Germany, Gregory VII. not finding himself secure enough in Rome, because the Romans look'd upon him as the cause of that Desolation which they endur'd; went to Mount Cassin, and from thence retir'd to Salerne, where he dy'd May 24th, of the Year, 1085. Authors do not agree about what were the last Thoughts he had concerning his Difference with Henry. Some say that he testified a great deal of regret for what he had done; and others on the contrary tell us, That he continued fix'd in the same Mind to his very Last; and that he said, that he dyed in Exile, because he had lov'd Justice and hated Iniquity. However, the Case stood, 'tis plain that his Death did not put an end to that notorious Quarrel which he had rais'd, and which had drawn along with it such dreadful Conse- The Death of Gregory VII.

quences, as were the cauſe of a world of Miſchiefs, both to the Church and to the Empire, as we ſhall ſhew in the ſequel; after we have done with that which relates to Gregory VII.

The Difference between Gregory VII. and Philip I. King of France.

The Emperor was not the only Perſon with whom Gregory VII. was Engag'd: He had likewiſe Conteſts with the Kings of France and England, and his aim was to bring all the Crown'd Heads under his ſubjection, and to oblige them to hold their Kingdoms as Fiefs from the Holy See, and to govern them at his Diſcretion.

Philip I. was then King of France: And ſince the Death of Baldwin, who had been Regent of the Kingdom during his Minority, he took the Government into his own Hands; but he Adminiſtred it ſo remiſsly, that France was full of Diſorders and Diſturbances. The Churches, which have always greater Sufferings than other Societies, when Juſtice is not maintain'd in a State, were the firſt who were oppreſs'd. Gregory VII. who never ſlip'd an opportunity of making himſelf the Judge and Reformer of Princes, caſt ſeveral reproaches upon him for it, and threatned to puniſh ſeverely his unjuſt proceedings againſt the Churches. The King aſſur'd him by Alberic, that he would reform his Conduct, and govern the Churches according to ſuch Rules as his Holineſs ſhould preſcribe him. Gregory who was not ſatisfied with empty Words, required that he would begin to demonſtrate the reality of his Promiſes, by permitting that the Arch-deacon of Autun, elected Biſhop of Maſcon, after a long vacancy, by the Clergy and People, and even by the conſent of the King, ſhould be put into the Poſſeſſion of that Church, without giving any Thing for it. To this purpoſe he wrote to the Biſhop of Chalons upon the Seyne, and to the Arch-biſhop of Lions: And at the ſame time acquaints them, that in caſe the King ſhould refuſe to do what he deſir'd, and would not permit the Churches of France to be ſupply'd with Biſhops without Simony, he ſhould be oblig'd to excommunicate all the French Nation, if they continu'd in their Alliegance to Philip. He likewiſe enjoyns the Arch-biſhop of Lions to ordain that Arch-deacon Biſhop of Maſcon, what oppoſition ſoever he might meet with, either from the King, or the other Competitor. Theſe two Letters are dated December 4th, 1073. and are the Thirty fifth and the Thirty ſixth of the firſt Book. The Biſhops of France would not venture to ordain the Biſhop of Maſcon, whereupon the Pope ordain'd him himſelf, as he ſent word to the Arch biſhop of Lions, by the Seventy ſixth Letter of the ſame Book, dated Auguſt the 4th, 1074. Two days before, he had written expreſsly to King Philip, to oblige him to make reparation for the wrong he had done to the Church of Beauvais: And had abſolv'd thoſe of that City, who had abus'd their Biſhop. See the Seventy fourth and the Seventy fifth Letters of the ſame Book.

That ſame year Gregory VII. renew'd his Complaints and his Threatnings againſt Philip, with a great deal more Noiſe, by writing a large Letter to all the Biſhops of France, wherein after he had given a deſcription of the Diſorders of that Kingdom, he ſays that the King, whom he ventures to call Tyrant, is the Author and Cauſe of all; becauſe his whole Life being one continu'd Debauch, he took no care to puniſh the Crimes, whereof he himſelf gave ſo bad an Example. That he not only converted the Revenues of Churches to Profane and Criminal uſes, but within a little while ago exacted a very conſiderable ſum of Merchants, who were come from all parts to import their Effects into France, under the publick Faith. He likewiſe accuſes the Biſhops of contributing to theſe diſorders, either by their Approbation or Connivance: He upbraids them for their Remiſſneſs, and exhorts them to meet, and to tell the King plainly of his Faults, that he may correct them, and regulate the Affairs of his Kingdom; and in his Name to declare, that if he does not do it, he can no longer ſhelter himſelf from the Cenſure of the Holy See: That afterwards they ſhould ſeparate themſelves from Communion with that Prince, and forbear performing Divine Service in all France: That if he does ſtill hold out notwithſtanding this Puniſhment, he would have the whole World take notice, that he would uſe his utmoſt endeavours to deprive him of the Kingdom of France. This Letter dated September the 10th, 1074. is the Fifth of the ſecond Book.

Some time after he wrote likewiſe to William Duke of Aquitain, againſt King Philip, and pray'd that Duke to do all he could to bring the King to change his Conduct; declaring that if he did not reform, he would excommunicate him and all the Subjects who paid him any Obedience; and that he would lay this Excommunication on S. Peter's Altar, in order to reiterate it every day. This Letter dated November the 13th, of the ſame year, is the Eighteenth of the ſecond Book.

He continu'd theſe menaces in the Two and thirtieth Letter of that Book, dated December the 8th, directed to Manaſſes Arch-biſhop of Rheims.

The Judgments paſs'd by Hugh Biſhop of Dia.

However, it does not appear that Gregory has acted any thing more againſt the Perſon of the King of France, but he took upon him the ſole Juriſdiction over the Biſhops and the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of that Kingdom; and ſent thither Hugh Biſhop of Dia with other Legats, who took cognizance of the Life, Manners and Elections of the Biſhops; took upon them the liberty of citing them to the Synods, which they call'd; of paſſing Sentence upon them; of injoyning them Pennance; and even of depoſing them, in caſe they would not make their Appearance: And Laſtly, Of diſpoſing abſolutely the Affairs of that Kingdom, without minding whether the King concern'd himſelf ſelf with the defending of them, or with vindicating the Liberty of the Churches of France. So that theſe Biſhops were oblig'd to go to Rome to beg the Pope's Favour for their re-eſtabliſhment, and upon ſuch Terms as he ſaw fit; which Gregory did not ſcruple to grant them. There are a great many Inſtances of this Nature; and the Seventeenth Letter of the fifth Book furniſhes us with a great many. For Hugh Biſhop of Dia having cited to a Synod, which he held at Autun, the Arch-biſhops of Rheims, Beſanſon, Sens, Bourges and Tours, and having inflicted ſeveral Penalties upon them, becauſe they had not made their appearance; they were forc'd to wait upon the Pope, who abſolutely re-eſtabliſh'd the Arch-biſhop of Rheims and the reſt, upon condition that they would clear themſelves before his Legat. This is what he orders by the foremention'd Letter, dated March the 9th, in the Year, 1078. That Legat having excommunicated the Biſhops of Paris and Chartres, they went likewiſe to Rome, and obtain'd a favourable Sentence from the Pope. See the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Letters of the ninth Book. Gregory VII.

But Gregory was not ſatisfied with taking Cognizance of the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of France; he likewiſe endeavour'd to make them his Tributaries, as he had made England and all other Countries. 'Tis upon this Account that he wrote to the Biſhop of Albania, and the Prince of Salerno, his Legats in France, that they acquaint all the French, and enjoyn them in his Name, that each Houſe pay at leaſt a Penny every Year to S. Peter, as an acknowledgment of his being their Father and Paſtor. He pretends that Charlemagne rais'd every Year upon his Subjects a Tax of Twelve hundred Livres for the uſe of the Church of Rome, and that he had offer'd Saxony to the Holy See. Theſe are two ſuch Matters of Fact as are only grounded on the imagination of Gregory VII. This is the Three and twentieth Letter of the eighth Book.

This is what relates to the Kingdom of France; we now proceed to what concerns England, which met with a little better Treatment from Gregory; becauſe King William took care to ingratiate himſelf with him by a ſeeming Submiſſion and Reſpect. That Prince, to give him ſome ſigns thereof, took care to ſend him a complimental Letter on his Advancement to the Popedom, wherein he declares to him, That tho' he was very ſorry for the Death of Alexander II. yet he was as glad to ſee him in his Place. Gregory anſwers him by the Seventieth Letter of the firſt Book, dated April the 4th, 1074. wherein he tells him, That he is oblig'd to him for the Affection which he expreſs'd towards him; and exhorts him to demonſtrate the Submiſſion which he bore to the Holy See by its Effects. At the ſame time he acquainted him of the dangers to which the Church of Rome was expos'd. He confirm'd the Privilege of the Monaſtery of S. Stephen, and recommended to that Prince to take care of the Revenues which the Church of Rome poſſeſs'd in England. He wrote likewiſe to Matilda Queen of England the Seventy firſt Letter, by which he exhorts her to perſevere in Virtue, and to give her Husband good Counſel. The Letters of Gregory relating to England.

By another Letter written to the Biſhops and Abbots of England, dated Auguſt the 28th, in the ſame year, he exhorts them to come to Rome to his Synod, and to put in Execution the Eccleſiaſtical Laws concerning the Marriages of Kindred. This Letter is the Firſt of the ſecond Book.

The King of England would not ſuffer the Biſhops of his Kingdom to go to Rome. This very much diſpleas'd the Pope, who complain'd of it by the Firſt Letter of the ſeventh Book, directed to Hubert his Legat, who was ſent into that Kingdom to Collect the Peter-Pence. He therein preſſes that Legat to return with all ſpeed, and orders him to admoniſh the King of England to pay, and cauſe to be paid the Deference which is due to the Holy See; withal threatning him, if he did not do it, he ſhould incur his Diſpleaſure. He orders him to prevail upon the Prelates of England and Normandy to ſend to Rome, to the approaching Synod, at leaſt two Biſhops out of each Arch-biſhoprick. This Letter bears date September the 23d, 1079.

The Three and twentieth, and the Four and twentieth Letters of the ſame Book, dated April the 25th, and May the 8th, in the Year 1080. are full of Exhortations to the King of England, to bear a due Submiſſion to the Church of Rome, and to Govern his Kingdom with Juſtice, and in the fear of the Lord. The Six and twentieth is a Letter of Compliment to the Queen of England; and the Seven and twentieth a Letter to Robert, the Son of the King of England, whereby he exhorts him to be ſubject to his Father, and to follow his Advice.

In the Fifth Letter of the ninth Book, he order'd Hugh Biſhop of Dia to reſtore the Biſhops of Normandy, which he had depos'd, for not appearing at his Synod. This he did that he might not exaſperate King William, who paid greater Deference to the Holy See, than any other Prince. And he order'd him to behave himſelf more tenderly towards that Prince's Subjects, and to grant Abſolution to the Soldiers which had kept back ſome Tithes.

Part of Spain being (as we ſaid before) in the Hands of the Moors, Gregory VII. from thence took an occaſion of becoming Lord of thoſe Countries, which could be taken from theſe Infidels. To this purpoſe he pretended that the Kingdom of Spain formerly belong'd to the Holy See; and that tho' the Pagans had ſince ſeiz'd upon it, yet the Right of the Holy See was not thereby diſannul'd; becauſe no Preſcription can take place to the prejudice of the Church. The Pretenſions of Gregory VII. upon Spain.

Gregory VII.

'Tis upon the account of this pretenſion, that he granted to Ebold Count of Rocey all the Country which he could recover from the Barbarians, upon condition that he would hold it in Fee from the Holy See, and pay him a certain Duty. He likewiſe granted the ſame Donation to thoſe who would aſſiſt that Count, or undertake the ſame Thing upon the ſame Conditions. And that this Agreement might be put in execution, he gave Orders to Cardinal Hugh the White to go into Spain, and wrote to the Princes of Spain to aid the Count of Rocey. This is the Subject Matter of the Sixth and Seventh Letters of the firſt Book, dated April the 30th, 1073.

Gregory VII. had not only a deſign of bringing the Provinces of Spain, which were newly Conquer'd, under his Subjection, but likewiſe ſought to eſtabliſh an abſolute Dominion over the ancient Churches of that Kingdom. It was upon this account that he wrote the Sixty third and fourth Letters of the firſt Book to Sancho King of Arragon, and to Alphonſo King of Caſtile, recommending to them the Submiſſion which they ought to bear to the Holy See, and to order the Roman Office to be receiv'd in their Kingdoms. Theſe two Letters are dated March the 19th and 20th, 1074. He wrote upon the ſame Subject to Simeon a Biſhop of that Kingdom, by the Eighteenth Letter of the third Book.

In the Eight and twentieth of the fourth Book, directed to the Kings and Princes of Spain, he renews the Pretenſions which the Holy See made to that Country, as being a Kingdom which belong'd to it before the Sarazens were Maſters thereof; and exhorts them to pay the Tribute which he pretended was due from them to the Church of Rome. This Letter is dated June the 28th, 1077.

The Sixth Letter of the ſeventh Book, dated in October 1079, is directed to Alphonſo King of Caſtile, whom he compliments for his good Intentions towards the Holy See, ſending him a ſmall Golden Key with S. Peter's Chain affixt to it, by a Legat whom he recommended to him.

Some time after that Prince, harkening to the Advice of a Monk nam'd Robert, would no longer be ſo ſubject to the Pope as he had been, and openly took upon him to grant the Inveſtitures of the Benefices in his Kingdom. This provok'd Gregory very much: He excommunicated Robert, and order'd him to be confin'd in the Monaſtery of Cluny. He wrote to Alphonſo, willing him, To harken no longer to his Counſels; to make reparation for the ill he had done; to part from the Relation of his Wife, whom he had Marry'd, and to do what Richard his Legat ſhould adviſe him. See the Second, Third, and Fourth Letters of the eighth Book, which are dated in the Year, 1080.

That Prince very probably ſubmitted to the Counſels of Gregory: For by the Second Letter of the ninth Book, the Pope wrote to him, as to a Prince entirely devoted to the Holy See; who had introduc'd the Service of the Church of Rome into his Dominions; who refer'd the choice of the Arch-biſhops of his Kingdom to the Pope; and who ask'd his advice upon ſome Caſes of Conſcience, and upon what concern'd the Churches of Spain. Gregory by this Letter admoniſhes him, not to tolerate the Jews to have Chriſtian Slaves, and grants Abſolution to him and his Adherents of all their Sins, and wiſhes them an abſolute Victory over all their Enemies.

Spain was not the only Kingdom of Europe which Gregory VII. pretended did formerly belong to the Holy See; he maintain'd the ſame Pretenſion with reſpect to moſt of the other Countries of Europe; and was of Opinion, that thoſe who were in Poſſeſſion of them, ought to hold them as Fiefs from him. He more eſpecially carry'd this Pretenſion to the moſt remote Countries whoſe Kings were newly converted to the Chriſtian Religion. This he grounded upon the account that theſe Princes, at the time of their Converſion, had either remitted their Crowns into the hands of the Pope to receive them again from him, or thrown their Kingdoms under the protection of the Holy See. Or Laſtly, Permitted the Raiſing of a certain Contribution for the Church of Rome. He eſtabliſh'd upon theſe demonſtrations of Submiſſion, and upon theſe Alms or Liberalities, a certain Tribute to be paid to the Holy See. 'Tis upon this Principle that he took it ill that Solomon King of Hungary had receiv'd that Kingdom from the hands of King Henry: Becauſe (as he pretended) Stephen formerly after his Converſion had offer'd and given it to the Holy See; and the Emperor Henry after he had Conquer'd it, had ſent to Rome its Lance and its Crown: From whence he concludes that he ought to receive the Scepter from his hands, and threatens him, if he did it not, he would make uſe of the Apoſtolick Authority againſt him. This is the Subject of the Thirteenth Letter of the ſecond Book, directed to that Prince, dated October the 28th, 1074. Gregory wrote likewiſe a conſolatory Letter to Queen Judith his Wife, who was the Daughter of the Emperor Henry; it is the Four and fortieth of the ſecond Book, dated June the 10th, 1075.

The Pretenſions of Gregory to Hungary.

Solomon had a Kinſman nam'd Geiſa, who was at War with him. This Geiſa ſent Ambaſſadors to Gregory, to gain him on his ſide. The Pope by his Letters expreſs'd kindneſs to him, and exhorts him to be entirely devoted to the Holy See; aſſuring him that his Kinſman [Solomon] had not faln into the Misfortunes he labour'd under, if he had receiv'd the Crown from the Holy See, and not from the Hands of the King of Germany. He adviſes him to make Peace with Solomon; withal giving him ſome hopes that he would enter into his Intereſts, ſo ſoon as he was aſſur'd what overtures he would make to the Holy See. You may conſult the Fifty eighth Letter of the firſt Book, and the Sixty third and Seventieth of the ſecond. Gregory VII.

In the Five and twentieth of the fourth Book, he exhorts the Arch-biſhop of Strigonia to bring it about, that he who is Elected King of Hungary, ſhould be made ſenſible of the Duty he ow'd to the Holy See. It bears date June the 9th, in the Year, 1077.

In the Nine and twentieth of the ſixth Book, he extols the Piety of King Ladiſlaus, and his Submiſſion to the Holy See. He recommends to him ſeveral Perſons who were unjuſtly Baniſh'd, and exhorts him to take the Churches into his Protection; and to ſend him forthwith Embaſſadors, if he had not already done it.

All the Kings of Europe receiv'd either Reprimands or Admonitions from Gregory. The King of Denmark had neglected to write to him in the beginning of his Pontificate; he checks him for it in the Fiftieth Letter of the ſecond Book, and gives him ſome Inſtructions about the Government of his Kingdom. He tells him likewiſe, that he had ſent him Legats upon the Affairs about which he had written to the Holy See, in the time of Pope Alexander: But that they could not get to him, becauſe of the Wars of Germany. That therefore if he were deeply concern'd for any one of theſe Affairs, he ought to ſend Deputies to him with full Inſtructions, that ſo he might conſult with them what ought to be done in the Caſe. Laſtly, He prays him to ſend word what Aſſiſtance the Holy See could expect from him, againſt her Enemies; and acquaints him that there is a Province not far from Rome, held by Hereticks, which one of his Sons, if he would come into Italy with a ſmall Force, might eaſily Conquer. This Letter bears date January the 27th, in the Year, 1075. In the Seventy ſeventh Letter of the ſame Book, he offers to grant that King, all that in Juſtice he could, of the things which he ſhould deſire of him by his Envoys, or by the Legats which were diſpatch'd to his Kingdom. This Letter is dated April the 17th, in the ſame Year. That King being dead, and his Son ſucceeding him, Gregory VII. continues his exhortations to him, to be ſubmiſſive to the Holy See, by the Tenth Letter of the fifth Book, dated November the 6th, in the Year, 1077. He likewiſe gave the like exhortation to King Canute, who was in Poſſeſſion of that Kingdom, by the Fifth Letter of the ſeventh Book, dated October the 15th, 1079. and by the One and twentieth of the ſame Book, dated May the 19th, 1080. The Letters of Gregory to the Kings of Denmark.

The Sovereigns of Poland and Ruſſia felt likewiſe the Effects of the deſire which Gregory VII. had to have an hand in the Affairs of all Kingdoms. He recommended to them, as well as to others, the being devoted to the Holy See, and wedded to its Intereſts; gave them Inſtructions about the methods of adminiſtring the Government; ſent them Legats to regulate the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of their Countries: Enjoyns Boleſlaus Duke of Poland, to reſtore to Demetrius King of Ruſſia, the Mony which he had taken from him; and to the Holy See, the Lands which belong'd to it; and undertook to beſtow the Kingdom of Ruſſia, on the Son of Demetrius. This is what we gather from the Seventy third and fourth Letters of the ſecond Book, the Firſt of which, directed to Boleſlaus, is dated April the 15th, in the Year, 1075. and the Second, directed to Demetrius, bears date the 17th of the ſame Month. The Letters of Gregory ſent to Poland and Ruſſia.

Gregory VII. was no leſs careful even of Norway; for he wrote to Olaus the King of that Country, exhorting him to get himſelf fully inſtructed in the Chriſtian Faith, and for that end to ſend ſome of his Nation to Rome, that he might ſend him back neceſſary Inſtructions, how he ought to demean himſelf towards the Holy See. He forbids him ſiding with either of the two Brothers, who pretended to the Crown of Denmark, and orders him to procure a Peace to be made between them. This Letter, which is the Thirteenth of the ſixth Book, is dated December the 15th, 1079. The Letters of Gregory ſent to Norway and Dalmatia.

He gave a King to Dalmatia; and a Lord of that Country intending to riſe up in Arms againſt him, he enjoyns that Lord to acknowledge and obey him, under pain of Excommunication, by the Fourth Letter of the ſeventh Book, dated October the 4th, in the Year, 1079.

Vratiſlaus Duke of Bohemia, was entirely in Pope Gergory the Seventh's Intereſt. He had admitted into his Dominions the Pope's Legats, in ſpight of Jaromir Biſhop of Prague, as appears by the Seventeenth Letter of the firſt Book. In a grateful acknowledgment of this, the Pope confirm'd to him, by the Eight and thirtieth Letter of the ſame Book, dated December the 16th, 1073. all the Privileges which had been granted him by Alexander II. his Predeceſſor, and exhorts him to perſevere in his Obedience; aſſuring him that he himſelf will determine ſuch Cauſes, as his Legats could not paſs a definitive Judgment upon. The Letters of Gregory concerning Bohemia.

The Biſhop of Prague, who had been interdicted and diveſted of the Revenues of his Church by the Sentence of the Pope's Legats, having ſent word to Rome that he could not come thither, becauſe he had not wherewithal to defray the charge of his Journey; the Pope gave Orders that he ſhould be put into Poſſeſſion of his Revenues, except thoſe to which John Biſhop of Moravia laid claim: And he deſires the Duke of Bohemia, by the Five and fortieth Letter of the firſt Book dated January the 30th in the Year, 1074. to cauſe them to be reſtor'd to that Biſhop, and to ſend him to Rome, with the Biſhop of Moravia and ſome Embaſſadors, that with them he might regulate all the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of his Dominions. By another Letter of the ſame date, which is the Four and fortieth of the Book, he acquaints the Biſhop of Prague, that he had written to the Duke to put him in ſame Poſſeſſion of the Revenues of his Church.

Sigefroy Arch-biſhop of Maience, at the Inſtance of Jeromir Biſhop of Prague, who was afraid of the Popes Judgment, was minded to take cognizance of the difference between him and the Biſhop of Moravia. Gregory being advertis'd thereof, wrote forthwith to Sigefroy, that he ſhould not dare to concern himſelf in an Affair, which was referr'd to the Holy See, and at the ſame time he ſent word to Uratiſlaus, that he ſhould not be concern'd at the raſh proceedings of that Arch-biſhop. Theſe two Letters dated March the 18th 1074. are the Sixtieth and Sixty firſt of the firſt Book.

At laſt the Biſhop of Prague perceiving that he could no longer ſhift off the Pope's Sentence, went expreſs to Rome, and when he appear'd before Gregory, he acknowledg'd part of what was laid to his Charge, declaring that he was ready to make Satisfaction; and juſtified himſelf with reſpect to other Things, particularly as to the ill uſage which was ſaid that he offer'd to the Biſhop of Moravia, or his People. The Pope who requir'd nothing more than ſuch a Submiſſion, ſent him back to his own Country reconcil'd and re-eſtabliſhed, with a Recommendatory Letter to the Duke of Bohemia, which is the Seventy eighth of the firſt Book, dated April the 16th 1074. wherein he takes notice to him that he could not put an end to the Difference between that Biſhop and the Biſhop of Moravia, becauſe of the abſence of the latter; but that he would decide it in the firſt Council: That in the mean time he allow'd Proviſion to be made in behalf of the Biſhop of Moravia for the Territory that was in Diſpute. He adviſes the Duke to ſilence the Complaints of the Biſhop of Prague concerning the Right which he pretended to have to a certain Caſtle; if not, he orders him to ſend his Deputies to the firſt Synod, to examine whether he has any Right to it, or no.

The Biſhop of Prague being return'd to his own Country in Triumph for his Reeſtabliſhment, ſeiz'd upon the Lands which were in diſpute between him and the Biſhop of Moravia, being confident that the Pope had adjudged them to be his. Gregory being inform'd that he thus abus'd the Levity he had ſhewn him, wrote him a Letter full of Invectives about it, and enjoyns him to reſtore to the Biſhop of Moravia the Caſtle which he had ſeis'd on; and orders Duke Uratiſlaus to cauſe him to reſtore it to the Biſhop, whom he comforts in a particular Letter. Theſe three Letters are the Sixth, Seventh, and Eighth of the ſecond Book, dated October the 22d in the Year, 1074. In the ſecond Letter he thanks the Duke of Bohemia for having ſent him the Tribute which he paid to the Holy See. This Affair between the Biſhops of Prague and Moravia was again diſcuſs'd in the Year, 1075. and ended at Rome by an agreement between them, by which they agreed to divide into equal ſhares the Lands which were in diſpute, till either of them could produce more authentick Titles; which they continu'd to do for the ſpace of Ten Years. And this Accomodation was approv'd of by a Bull of Gregory, dated March the 2d which is the Fifty third Letter of the ſecond Book.

The Seventy firſt Letter of the ſecond Book, is written to Uratiſlaus, in favour of his Nephew Frederick, for whom the Pope demands of that Prince the Lands which his Father had left him. At the ſame time he exhorts him to live peaceably with his Subjects. This Letter is dated April the 14th 1075. By the next Letter written the Day after, he exhorts all the Faithful of Bohemia to lead a Chriſtian and Innocent Life.

The Pretenſions of Gregory to Italy.

Since Gregory VII. had pretenſions to Kingdoms ſo remote as thoſe we have been ſpeaking of, it is not to be wondred that he ſhould imagine that all Italy, and the Iſlands of Sicily, Sardinia and Corfu belong'd to him; that he might diſpoſe of them as he thought fit; and that all the Lords of theſe Countries were oblig'd to take an Oath of Allegiance to him. It was no difficult matter for him to bring the petty Princes round about Rome under his Subjection; becauſe being weak, they deſir'd nothing more, than the ſupport of the Holy See: But he had much ado to bring his deſign about upon the Normans, whoſe Power became formidable in Italy, forasmuch as they were eſtabliſh'd ſo firmly there as we ſhall now relate.

The Conqueſts of the Normans in Italy.

Several Norman Lords having been invited to the Relief of the Greeks and Italians againſt the Sarazens of Sicily, upon Condition that they ſhould have ſhare in their Conqueſts; after they had done wonderful things againſt theſe Infidels, were dealt falſly with by the Greeks, who refus'd to give them what they had promis'd, But theſe Bravoes knew very well how to do themſelves Juſtice, and ſeiz'd on Pozzuolo under the Conduct of William Firebraſs their General, who in a ſhort time after defeated the Greeks in a great Engagement, and weaken'd them ſo far, that in a ſmall time they loſt all that they had left in Italy. The Normans afterwards turn'd their Arms againſt the Lords of Italy their Neighbours, and ſeiz'd upon ſome Lands which belong'd to the Holy See. The Popes, who could not without Jealouſy behold ſo formidable an Enemy ſo nigh at Hand, declar'd againſt them, and Leo IX. engag'd in a War with them: But the Forces of that Pope having been defeated, and himſelf taken Priſoner, as we formerly ſaid, that Reſpect which they ſhew'd him, by ſetting him at Liberty, and reconducting him to Rome with all the Demonſtrations of Honour and Submiſſion, inclin'd that Pope to grant them by way of Recompence all the Lands which they had Conquer'd from the Greeks and Sarazens. Robert Guiſcard, in league with Onfroy, Brother to William Firebraſs, extended theſe Conqueſts, and having made an end of taking Calabria, caus'd himſelf to be call'd Count thereof for the ſpace of two Years, and afterwards took upon him the Title of Duke. His Brother Roger undertook to Conquer Sicily from the Sarazens, and having at firſt taken Panorma and Meſſina, he open'd himſelf a way to become Maſter of the whole Iſland, of which he took upon him the Quality of Count. Gregory VII.

The Differences and Agreement of Gregory VII. with the Normans.

It was very difficult for theſe Warriers to forbear Conteſting with the Lords their Neighbours; and their Forces who were uſed to Plunder, could not forbear ſeizing upon the Lands, Caſtles, and Territories of private Perſons; upon Churches, upon Abbies; and even upon the Holy See it ſelf. This was the cauſe of the many Anathemas thunder'd out againſt them by Gregory, who from the very beginning of his Popedom excommunicated Robert, Roger, and all the Normans who made any attempts upon the Revenues of Churches, or of the Holy See, or upon thoſe Lords who were under its Protection. But afterwards foreſeeing that he might ſtand in need of their Aſſiſtance, he grew milder, and by his Letter dated March the 13th 1076. which is the Eleventh of the third Book, he grants the Biſhop of Cirenza Power to abſolve Roger and all his Soldiers, upon condition that he would promiſe to Obey the Holy See; do Penance for his Offences, and abſtain for the future from all capital Crimes. At the ſame time he adviſ'd that Biſhop, that if Count Roger ſhould ſpeak to him about his Brother Duke Robert, he ſhould declare to him, that the Church of Rome was ready to ſhew Mercy to thoſe who being affected with true Repentance, would give Satisfaction for the Scandal, which they had given: That therefore if Duke Robert would be obedient to the Holy See, he was ready to give him Abſolution, and to receive him into the Communion of the Church: But that if he would not, Roger ought not to communicate with him. Laſtly, he order'd that Biſhop to give the Biſhop of Melpha Abſolution. In the fifteenth Letter of the ſame Book to Wifroy, Lord of the Milanois, he ſends word that the Affairs of the Normans were in a hopeful way of Accommodation, and that he hoped ſhortly to render them faithful to the Church of Rome. However this Accomodation was not ſo ſoon concluded; and we ſee by a Letter dated October the 31ſt of the ſame Year, directed to the ſame Wifroy and to two other Lords of the ſame Country, that the Normans were ſtill conteſting with the Pope about the Revenues of the Church, which they had ſeiz'd upon; but that he hop'd to reclaim them as ſoon as Henry. This Letter is the Seventh of the fourth Book.

At laſt Robert thought fit to ſubmit to the Pope, to take an Oath to him to be always faithful to the Holy See; to aſſiſt it in the Defence of the Pope's Perſon and its Revenues; to pay him an annual Rent for the Church Lands which he held; to permit the Churches of his Dominions to enjoy quietly their Revenues, and to procure a free Election of a Pope, in caſe Gregory ſhould dy before him. This Rent amounts to twelve Pence, the Coyn of Pavia, payable every Year at Eaſter. In purſuance of this Treaty, the Pope inveſted Duke Robert with all the Lands which the Popes Nicholas II. and Alexander II. his Predeceſſors had formerly granted him: And as to others which he unjuſtly held; to wit, Salerno, Melpha, and part of the March of Fermo, he left them to him by way of Connivance. This Treaty was made June the 29th in the Year 1080.

In the ſame Year Michael Ducas being turn'd out of the Empire of the Eaſt, ſent into Italy to beg Aſſiſtance of the Pope and Duke Robert. The Pope wrote to the Biſhops of Pozzuolo and Calabria, by the ſixth Letter of the eighth Book, deſiring them to exhort the Faithful to engage in this Expedition with Duke Robert; and before they went away, to enjoyn them Penance for their Faults, and to give them Abſolution.

Gregory ſoon after had himſelf need of the Aſſiſtance of Robert, to protect him againſt Henry. Whereupon he wrote to the Abbot of Mount Caſſin, to know of him whether he could bring him any Aſſiſtance about Eaſter, or ſend him ſome. This is the Subject matter of the fourth Letter of the ninth Book, which doubtleſs belongs to the Year, 1081.

Henry at his coming into Italy, wiſely foreſeeing that the greateſt Enemy he had to fear was Duke Robert, propos'd to come to an Accomodation with him, upon condition that his Son ſhould Marry that Duke's Daughter, and give him the March of Ancona. The Pope being inform'd of this Propoſal, by the Princeſs Matilda, was very much ſurpriz'd at it, and forthwith wrote to Didier Abbot of Mount Caſſin, to prevail upon Robert to keep his Word to him. This is the Subject matter of the eleventh Letter of the ninth Book.

By the Seventeenth of the ſame Book, written to that Duke, he exhorts him to come to the Aſſiſtance of the Church of Rome, which was annoy'd by King Henry.

In the mean time whilſt Robert was in the Eaſt with all his Forces, the Normans of Italy perceiving that Henry was like to become Maſter of Rome, and being afraid what the Conſequence would prove to them, endeavour'd to bring about the Peace between the Pope and the Gregory VII. the Emperor, and ſent Didier Abbot of Mount Caſſin, with the Prince of Capua, and ſeveral Deputies to Henry, to treat with him. But neither the Pope nor the Emperor were inclinable to it; and the latter receiv'd ſome Mony from the Emperor of Conſtantinople to carry on the War againſt Robert. That Duke underſtanding this, and being ſent for by the Pope, left his Son in the Eaſt, and immediately return'd to Italy to the Pope's Aſſiſtance, whom he relieved, as we formerly have declar'd.

The Pretentions of Gregory VII. to Sardinia and Corfu. Gregory VII. was likewiſe willing to make the Iſlands of Corfu and Sardinia his Tributaries. For part of the former having been retaken by the Chriſtians from the Saracens, he immediately ſent a Legat thither to govern abſolutely, and promis'd them Succours to Conquer the reſt; upon condition that this Iſland ſhould be dependent on the Holy See. This appears by the Second and fourth Letters of the fifth Book, dated September the 1ſt and 16th in the Year, 1077. He afterwards beſtow'd this Legation on Landulphus Biſhop of Piſa, and his Succeſſors, with one Moyety of the Revenues of that Iſland, reſerving the other Moyety for the Holy See, together with all the Fortreſſes, whoſe Governors however he was willing ſhould ſtill be dependent on that Legat, as appears by the twelfth Letter of the ſixth Book, dated November the 30th in the Year, 1079.

With reſpect to Sardinia, he was ſo ſtrongly perſwaded that it belong'd to the Holy See, that writing to the Sovereign of that Iſland, he ſhew'd that Prince what a piece of ſervice He [the Pope] had done in having refus'd to give it to the Normans and Lombards, who had demanded it of him, tho' they offer'd him the Moyety of their Conqueſts; till ſuch time as he ſhould ſee after what manner that Prince would receive the Pope's Legat, and how he was inclin'd to the Holy See. By this means he ſuppos'd, that if that Prince would not be ſubject to the Holy ſee, he was ſo far the Diſpoſer of his Eſtates, as to give them to whom he pleas'd. This is the ſubject of the tenth Letter of the eighth Book, dated October the 5th 1080.

The Oath of Fidelity exacted by Gregory VII. from the Princes of Italy. After all this 'tis no wonder that he ſhould treat all the Lords near Rome, as his Vaſſals, and exact from them Oaths of Fidelity. We have one made by Landulphus, Duke of Benevento, by which he engages himſelf to forfeit his Dutchy, if he fail'd in his Duty to the Holy See, or to Gregory and his Succeſſors, and if he did any wrong to the Church of Rome or its Members. This Treaty ſign'd by the Biſhops of Porto, Freſcati, Paleſtrina, by Didier and Peter, Cardinals of the Church of Rome, is in the firſt Book of Gregory's Letters, after the Eighteenth, and is dated Auguſt the 11th in the Year, 1073.

He alſo exacted the like Oath from Richard Duke of Capua, by which that Prince was engag'd to enter into no League againſt the Pope; upon all occaſions to defend the Revenues and Rights of the Church of Rome and of his Holineſs; to make no Pillage on its Territories, and to ſuffer no body elſe to do it; to pay yearly the Rent which he ow'd for the Lands which he held in S. Peter's Patrimony; to be faithful to King Henry, and his Succeſſors; yet without prejudice to the Fidelity he ows to the Holy See: And laſtly, that whenever the Pope ſhould die, he ſhould do his utmoſt to get him to be elected and ordain'd Pope, who ſhould have the Suffrages of the major part of the Cardinals, Clergy, and Laity. This Oath dated September the 24th 1073. is after the One and twentieth Letter of the firſt Book.

There is another Oath of this Nature taken by Bertran Count of Provence, after the twelfth Letter of the ninth Book.

The Project of the CROISADE ſet on foot by Gregory VII. Laſtly, Gregory VII. not willing to omit any one means of aggrandizing the Church of Rome, had reſolv'd upon a CROISADE, to go into the Eaſt at the head of an Army, to aſſiſt the Chriſtians, and to fall upon the Infidels. Big with this Deſign he wrote to William Count of Burgundy, by the Six and fortieth Letter of the firſt Book, dated February the 2d in the Year, 1074. ordering him to be ready, and to give notice to his Allies, to furniſh him with Forces, that ſo he might, after he had reduc'd the Normans of Pozzuolo to their Duty, march directly with an Army to Conſtantinople, and relieve the Chriſtians of the Eaſt.

By the Nine and fortieth Letter of the ſame Book, dated March enſuing, he exhorts all the Chriſtians of the Weſt to unite together for the relief of the Chriſtians of the Eaſt againſt the Infidels. He did the ſame thing by the Seven and thirtieth Letter of the ſecond Book, which bears date the 16th of December of the ſame Year.

This Project of Gregory had not that ſucceſs which he deſir'd: But he engag'd Duke Robert to lead an Army into the Eaſt, under Colour of placing Michael Ducas again upon the Throne of the Eaſtern Empire. This Duke gave Battle to the Emperor Alexis in Thrace, and became Maſter of the Field, tho' the Enemy were much ſuperior in Number. The Difficulties which the Pope's Affairs labour'd under, and the War with the Emperor Henry prevented that Duke from purſuing his Conqueſts in the Eaſt, and from extending the Limits of the Roman Church, and the Authority of the Holy See by his Victories: The which Gregory had attempted in vain, by the way of Accommodation, in ſending to the Emperor Michael (who had writ to him, and made propoſals on his part for the re-union of the two Churches) Dominick Patriarch of Venice, to treat with him viva voce concerning this Peace; and in remonſtrating to that Emperor, by his Anſwer, that the Diviſion which had been between the Roman and the Greek Church, had done great prejudice to the Affairs of the Holy See, and the Empire of the East. This Letter is the Eighteenth of the first Book, dated June the 9th 1073. Gregory VII.

Gregory VII. was no less Solicitous about the Churches of Africa; and having understood that the Christians of Carthage, tho' persecuted by the Sarazens, quarrell'd among themselves, and that some of them had betray'd Cyriacus their Arch-bishop into the Hands of those Infidels, who had very much abused him: He wrote a neat Letter to the Clergy and Faithful of that City, whereby he exhorts them to suffer patiently the Persecution of the Sarazens, and to live in Peace and Unity one with another; and after he had in a very lively manner represented to them the Enormity of the Offence committed in betraying Cyriacus, he exhorts them who were guilty of it, to do Penance. This Letter dated September the 15th 1073. is the Two and twentieth of the first Book. The Letters of Gregory sent into Africa.

In the next Letter of the same date, he comforts that good Bishop, extolls his Constancy, and exhorts him to rejoyce in his Sufferings, and to persevere in the Faith; assuring him that he would continually offer up his Prayers to God, that he would be pleas'd to look down with an Ey of Pity and Compassion upon the Church of Africa, which has so long groan'd under the pressures of Persecution and Distress.

Some time after the Church of Africa being reduc'd to the Government only of two Bishops, the Africans were oblig'd to send one Servandus to Rome, whom they had elected Bishop of Hippo, to be ordain'd by the Pope. Gregory ordain'd him, and sent him away with Recommendatory Letters directed to the Arch-bishop of Carthage, to the People of Hippo, and to Auxir King of Mauritania. These are the three last Letters of the third Book, and belong to the Year, 1076.

In the first Letter of the eighth Book directed to the Arch-bishop of Synnada Patriarch of the Armenians, dated June the 6th in the Year, 1080. Gregory reproves several Errors, or rather several Practices contrary to the Discipline of the Church, wherewith the Armenians were charg'd: Namely, That in their Churches they did not mix Water with the Wine in the Celebration of the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass; that they made the Holy Chrism with Butter, and not with Balsom; and that they had a regard to the memory of Dioscorus. The Deputy of the Arch-bishop of Synnada, who was come to cause an Armenian Heretick, who was fled to Italy, to be driven thence, had assur'd the Pope that all these Things were only groundless Surmises: But for his better Satisfaction Gregory desires that that Arch-bishop would inform him by Writing what were his Thoughts, and send him a profession of Faith. At the same time he advises him to leave out these Words in the TRISAGION, who wast crucified for us, because they were not us'd in any other Church of the East, no more than they were in the Church of the West, and because they might be perverted to an ill Sense. He commends the practice of their Churches in making use of Unleaven'd Bread, and Fortifies them against the Objections of the Greeks. The Letters of Gregory VII. against the Errors charg'd upon the Armenians.

As to the Churches of the West, we may safely say that Pope Gregory VII. govern'd almost all of them, as if they belong'd to his own Dioceſs, either by sending to them his Legats a Latere; or by nominating Vicars to them; or by citing the Bishops to Rome, to give an account of their Conduct; or by confirming or approving their Elections; or by receiving the Appeals of their Decisions; or by admitting the Complaints of their Diocesans; or by appointing Judges upon the place; or by deciding several Points of Discipline: In a Word, by having an hand in the particulars of all that happen'd in the Churches of Europe.

In the first place as to Legats, 'tis certain that nothing conduc'd more to establishing the absolute Authority of the Popes, than the sending Legats a Latere to reside upon the spot. At first the Popes were satisfied with nominating the Bishops of the Country for their Vicars, or for their Legats, and granted them a Commission to call Councils, and to act in their Names: But for as much as these Prelates might have particular Interests to carry on, and were not entirely devoted to the Will and Pleasure of the Popes, the Court of Rome thought it more advisable to send upon the places Legats who were Strangers, with full Commission of calling Councils, of making Rules of Discipline, of judging Priests, and even Bishops themselves; of excommunicating those whom they thought fit, upon condition that they would return a faithful Account of all their Proceedings to the Pope; and provided that those who thought themselves injur'd by their Decisions, might come Personally to Rome, to complain to the Pope himself. By this means the Holy See judg'd the same Cause twice over, and kept all the World in Awe. For those who had been Condemn'd by the Legats, hoping to meet with kinder usage from the Pope, went to Rome in the nature of Suppliants and Penitents, and seldom fail'd of clearing themselves, or of receiving their Absolution; which on the one side, advanc'd the Authority of the Holy See, and on the other, made them its Creatures. This Custom of sending Legats a Latere into the Provinces, began to prevail in the foregoing Century, and became very common in this, especially in Italy, and France: However, it met at first with some opposition in Germany, where they maintain'd that no other Legat of the Holy See ought to be acknowledg'd beside the Arch-bishop of Mayence; but Gregory VII. play'd his part so well as to introduce it there. In the Church Legats sent by Gregory VII. to several Parts.

Legats ſent by Gregory VII. to ſeveral Parts.

of France, the Arch-biſhop of Rheims pretended, by virtue of his Privileges, to be exempt from the Juriſdiction of the Legats, at leaſt of thoſe who were not Romans, and were immediately come from Rome; and for this Reaſon would not appear before Hugh Biſhop of Dia and the Abbot of Cluny, whom Gregory had nominated to be his Legats in France. But the Pope ſent him word by the Second Letter of the ſixth Book, dated Auguſt the 22d, 1078. that the Holy See had always a Liberty of ſending Legats immediately from Rome, or of nominating thoſe who liv'd upon the place, or of taking them whence it pleas'd. England maintain'd its Right much longer, and rejected Foreign Legats; for we read in the Hiſtory of Eadmerus, that Pope Urban ſucceſſor to Gregory VII. having ſent in the Year, 1100. Guy Arch-biſhop of Vienna as Legat of the Holy See to England, all the Kingdom was ſtartled at this Legation, which was look'd upon as a dangerous Innovation, becauſe it was too well known, that there could be no other Vicar of the Holy See in England, beſide the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury; that thereupon the Arch-biſhop of Vienna return'd juſt as he came, without having been acknowledg'd by any one as Legat, and without doing any thing in that Quality.

Gregory VII. who himſelf had been Legat in France, had no mind to abrogate this Cuſtom; on the contrary, the firſt thing he did after he was Elected Pope, was to continue the Legats ſent by his Predeceſſors, and to ſend new ones into thoſe parts, where there were none. By the Sixth Letter of the firſt Book, he confirms the Legation of Gerard Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia, and of the Sub-deacon Rainbold Legats in France, orders them to do their utmoſt in making up the Breach between Hugh Abbot of Cluny and his Monks, and ſends them Hugh the White a Cardinal, to go into Spain, if they thought fit.

In the Eighth Letter, he likewiſe continues the Legation of Hubert and Albert, and exhorts them to execute the Commiſſion which his Predeceſſor Alexander had given them.

In the Sixteenth, he ſhews how he would have his Legats demean themſelves towards him, by writing to Cardinal Gerard of Oſtia, that he was very much ſurpriz'd at his not ſending him word by an Expreſs, what had been done in the Synod which he had held in Spain, becauſe it was cuſtomary, and withal neceſſary that when a Legat of the Holy See held a Council in a remote Country, he ſhould come and give an account of what he had done, or at leaſt ſend one to do it for him: That tho' that Cardinal had acquainted him with part of the Proceedings, yet ſince there was no Perſon, who either ſaw or heard, how things went in that Synod, to inform him about it, he was very much at a ſtand what anſwer to give thoſe, who complain'd of having been excommunicated, depos'd or interdicted unjuſtly; for fear he ſhould either be deceiv'd by the intricacy of the Cauſes, or ſhould not fully exerciſe his Authority: That however, 'tis look'd upon as a piece of Cruelty and Contempt, to defer giving theſe kind of Anſwers, becauſe of the dangers they are in, who are under Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures: That as to the buſineſs of William Arch-biſhop of Auche, whoſe re-eſtabliſhment he deſir'd him to grant; he had himſelf rais'd perplexities in his mind, by taking notice to him that he had been depos'd only for having voluntarily communicated with an excommunicate Perſon; and that yet he had not clear'd himſelf Canonically, but only offer'd to do it before Pope Alexander: That after this Affair had been debated, at laſt they came to this Reſolution, That if the Arch-biſhop of Auche were guilty of nothing elſe, but of having communicated with an excommunicate Perſon, he ought not to be depos'd; but that if he were charg'd with any other Crimes of which he was not clear'd, the determination thereof ought to be refer'd to the Holy See: That Pontius Biſhop of Bexiers, who (as he ſent word) had been depos'd for the ſame Offence, was come to Rome to make his complaint; but that he had declin'd giving him any anſwer out of Reſpect to him: That however, ſince the like Sentence ought to be paſs'd on Caſes that are alike, if he were guilty of no other fault, he ought to re-eſtabliſh him. The Arch-biſhop of Auche was re-eſtabliſh'd, and the Pope wrote in his behalf to the Biſhop of Beziers, and to the other Suffragans, that they ſhould acknowledge him, and ſhew him the Reſpect which they ow'd him. This is the Five and fiftieth Letter of the firſt Book, dated March the 16th, 1074.

The Pope's Legats did not meet with the ſame Reception in all places. Thoſe whom he ſent into Bohemia, were not much regarded, particularly by the Biſhop of Prague, whom they had Reprimanded and Condemned as one guilty of Simony. Gregory thereupon wrote to the Duke of Bohemia, and thank'd him for the Reſpect which he ſhew'd to his Legats; but withal told him, That he had great Reaſon to complain of their being ſlighted in his Country, becauſe formerly Legats were not ſent ſo frequently; which he ſays happend through the remiſſneſs of his Predeceſſors. In particular, he accuſes the Biſhop of Prague, and threatens to confirm the Interdiction pronounc'd againſt him by his Legats, if he did not obey them, by doing what they requir'd of him. This Letter is the Seventeenth of the firſt Book, dated July the 8th, in the Year, 1073.

In the Fortieth of the ſecond Book, Gregory VII. charges all the Faithful to Reſpect his Legats: And in the One and fortieth, he ſends them to be preſent at the Election of the Biſhop of Eugubio.

He

He ſent his Legats even to the moſt remote Countries; as for inſtance to Poland, as appears by the Sixty third Letter of the ſecond Book; to Sclavonia, Ruſſia, Denmark, &c. as appears by ſeveral other Letters. Gregory VII. Legats ſent by Gregory VII. to ſeveral Parts.

Of all the Legations, none was more conſiderable than that of the two Hughs in France, nor were there any Legats who exercis'd it with greater Authority, or diſpatch'd more Affairs. The one was Biſhop of Dia, and the other Abbot of Cluny. The former had been Elected Biſhop of Dia by the Clergy and Laity of that City, with the Approbation of William their Count. After his Election, he had taken an Oath of Fidelity to that Count: But not being forward to pay him the Sum of Mony which was uſually exacted for the Right of Inveſtiture, he diſoblig'd him ſo much, that he was no ſooner gone to Rome to be Conſecrated, but the Count ſeiz'd of the Revenues of his Church. The Pope having read over the Act of Hugh's Election, Conſecrated him, but upon condition that he would not tolerate any Simony in his Diocеſs, nor Conſecrate any Church that had its dependence on any Lay Patrons. This is what he acquaints that Count with, by the Sixty ninth Letter of of the firſt Book, wherein he upbraids him for having ſeiz'd on the Revenues of the Church of Dia. This Letter bears date March the 16th, 1074.

By the Three and fortieth Letter of the ſecond Book, dated January the 5th, 1075. he orders that Biſhop to accept of the Reſtiturions which thoſe of his Church ſhould make him, and to abſolve them, upon condition that they would come and appear before the Synod of Rome.

Gregory VII. repoſing a great deal of Confidence on this Biſhop, made him his Legat or Vicar in France; and in that quality referr'd to him a great many Affairs: Among others, that which related to the Biſhop of Cambray, who after he had been Elected, had receiv'd the Inveſtiture thereof from King Henry. The Pope orders his Legat by the Two and twentieth Letter of the fourth Book, to examine this Affair in a Council, with Hugh Abbot of Cluny, and ſeveral Biſhops of France: And that if he who was Elected to the Biſhoprick of Cambray, would ſwear, that when he receiv'd the Inveſtiture from Henry, he did not know that he was excommunicated, or that the Pope had prohibited ſuch Inveſtitures, he ſhould confirm his Election. By the ſame Letter he likewiſe committed to him, the taking cognizance of the Affairs which related to the Biſhop of Chalons, the Churches of Chartres, Puy and Clermont, and that of the Monaſtery of S. Dennis. This Letter is dated May the 2d, in the Year, 1077.

This Legat in purſuance of his Commiſſion, held ſeveral Councils in France in the Year, 1077. Among the reſt he held one at Clermont, wherein he depos'd the Biſhop of that City, and the Biſhop of Puy in Velay: Another at Dijon againſt the Simoniacal: A third at Autun, to which he cited moſt of the Arch-biſhops of France, and condemn'd all thoſe who would not appear; to wit, Manaſſes Arch-biſhop of Rheims, accus'd of Simony by his Clergy; the Arch-biſhop of Sens, becauſe he would not acknowledge the Legat; the Arch-biſhop of Bordeaux, becauſe he had not appear'd at the Council of Clermont, and becauſe after he had been Suſpended, he ſtill continu'd to diſcharge his Functions; the Arch-biſhop of Bourges, for having relinquiſh'd his Church; the Arch-biſhop of Tours, accus'd of being Vexatious and Simoniacal; the Arch-biſhop of Lions, convicted of Simony, in whoſe place Gebuin Arch-deacon of Langres, was elected and ordain'd; the Biſhops of Senlis, Chartres, Auxerre, for having receiv'd the Inveſtiture from the King; the Biſhop of Noyon, who own'd himſelf Guilty of Simony; and the Biſhop of Autun, for not aſſiſting at the Council. Councils held in France, by Hugh Biſhop of Dia, in the Year, 1077.

The next year Hugh Biſhop of Dia, held another Council at Poitiers, ſpight of the Prohibitions of the King of France, who perceiving how roughly his Biſhops were handled, had written to the Count of Poitiers and to the Biſhops of his Kingdom, not to ſuffer the Pope's Legat to hold ſuch Councils, which he Nicknames Conventicles. The Arch-biſhop of Tours and the Biſhop of Rennes came to this Council, but it was to diſturb it; for which the Legat ſuſpended both of them. However, they ſtill ſpoke boldly againſt the Legat's Proceedings, and even offer'd ſome Violence to him. Afterwards they withdrew with the Suffragan Biſhops of the Arch-biſhoprick of Tours, and left him with a very ſmall number of Prelates. The next day he held a Council in the Church of S. Hilary: The Arch-biſhop of Tours perſiſted to inveigh hotly againſt the Legat, who ſuſpended him; and appeal'd to the Holy See. The Legat referr'd him to the Pope. Afterwards he depos'd the Abbot of Bergues, as being Guilty of Simony. The Arch-biſhop of Beſanzon was ſuſpended for not appearing at the Synod of Autun and Poitiers. The Judgment of the Biſhops of Beauvais and Noyon, accus'd of Simony, was referr'd to the Pope. He who had intruded into the Church of Amiens was likewiſe referr'd to the Pope, together with the Biſhops of Laon, Senlis and Soiſſons, who had ordain'd him. The Abſolution of the Count of Angers, was likewiſe referr'd to the Holy See. Hugh of Dia in this Council, heard the Cauſe between the Biſhops of Terrouane and Poitiers, and after he had diſcuſs'd theſe Perſonal Cauſes, he made ten Canons upon the Diſcipline of the Church. The Council of Poitiers, in the Year, 1078.

Gregory VII The Canons of the Council of Poitiers.

In the Firſt, Eccleſiaſticks are prohibited from receiving the Inveſtiture or Collation of Benefices, from the King, or any Lay Patron. The Laicks who held any Churches in their Poſſeſſion, were excommunicated, and theſe Churches interdicted.

In the Second, It is prohibited, to hold two Benefices in two different Churches.

The Third imports, That no Perſon ſhall pretend to hold Eccleſiaſtical Benefices, by right of Succeſſion.

The Fourth imports, That Biſhops ſhall take nothing for Ordinations, nor for Conſecrating Churches.

The Fifth, That neither Abbots nor Monks ſhall adminiſter the Sacrament of Pennance, without the Commiſſion of the Biſhop firſt had.

The Sixth, That neither Abbots, Monks, nor Prebendaries ſhall purchaſe Churches, or get the Impropriation of them by any method whatſoever, unleſs it be with the conſent of the Biſhop, in whoſe Dioceſs theſe Churches are: That however, they ſhall ſtill hold, and quietly poſſeſs the Benefices which they already have; but that the Prieſt who ſerves them, ſhall be anſwerable to the Biſhop for the Charge of Souls, and for his Miniſtery.

The Seventh, That the Abbots, Deans, and Arch-prieſts who are not Prieſts, ſhall enter into Prieſt's Orders, or loſe their Benefices: And that the Arch-deacons ſhall be Deacons, under the ſame Penalty.

The Eighth, That the Children of Prieſts, and Baſtards, ſhall not be admitted into Holy Orders, unleſs they be Monks, or live in a regular Convent: But that they ſhall not hold any Eccleſiaſtical Preferments. That Slaves cannot be admitted into Orders, unleſs their Maſters give them their Freedom.

The Ninth, That the Sub-deacons, Deacons, and Prieſts ſhall have no Concubines, or any other ſuſpicious Women in their Houſes; and that all thoſe, who ſhall wittingly hear the Maſs of a Prieſt who keeps a Concubine, or is Guilty of Simony, ſhall be excommunicated.

The Tenth, That Clerks who bear Arms, or are Uſurers, ſhall be depos'd.

Moſt of the Prelates, who were Condemn'd by Hugh Biſhop of Dia, had recourſe to the Pope, who releas'd them from their Condemnations, upon condition (as we ſaid before) that they would clear themſelves before his Legat. For this, you may conſult the Letters of Hugh of Dia to Gregory VII. thoſe of Manaſſes to the ſame; and the Letter of that Pope by which he re-eſtabliſhes them, which is the Seventeenth of the fifth Book, dated March the 8th, 1078.

Of all theſe Prelates, Manaſſes was almoſt the only Perſon who perſiſted in his Reſolution of not owning Hugh of Dia as Legat, who continued to proſecute him till he had pronounc'd a definitive Sentence againſt him, in the Council which he held at Lions in the Year, 1080. wherein he depos'd him; and his Judgment was confirm'd by Gregory VII. as appears by this Seventh Letter of the fifth Book.

The Councils of Avignon and Meaux in the Year, 1080.

The ſame year this Legat held two other Councils: The one at Avignon, wherein Achard, who had intruded into the Church of Arles, was turn'd out, and Gibelin put into his place: And the other at Meaux, wherein he depos'd Urſion, Biſhop of Soiſſons, and caus'd Arnulphus, Monk of S. Medard, to be elected in his room.

The Council of Meaux, in the Year, 1082.

In the Year, 1082. he held another Council at Meaux, wherein he ordain'd Robert Abbot of Rebais, Biſhop of that City. But becauſe this Ordination was done without the Approbation of Richerus Arch-biſhop of Sens, the Biſhops of the Province would not own him; and Richerus ordain'd another Biſhop, after he had excommunicated Robert.

The Pope referr'd to Hugh of Dia, the Abſolution of Robert Count of Flanders, excommunicated by the Biſhop of Langres, with Commiſſion to put other Perſons in his place; this appears by the Seventh Letter of the ſixth Book, dated November the 25th, 1079.

By the Sixteenth Letter of the ſeventh Book, dated March the 26th, 1080. he orders Hubert Biſhop of Terrouane, whom Hugh of Dia had cited twice before him, to juſtify himſelf before that Legat.

Hugh of Dia as a Recompence of the good Services he had done to the Holy See, was tranſlated from the Biſhoprick of Dia, to the Arch-biſhoprick of Lions, in the Year, 1083. and became ſo powerful, that after the Death of Gregory VII. he was one of thoſe who pretended to the Popedom; and upon that Subject, had conteſts with Victor III. who had been preferr'd before him. That Pope excommunicated him: However, in the Popedom of Urban II. Hugh was re-taken again into Favour, and continued to exerciſe his Legation in France, as we ſhall ſhew in its proper place. He dy'd in the Year, 1106. in October, at Suſa, in his Journey to the Council which Pope Paſchal II. held about the end of that year at Guaſtilla, in the Dukedom of Mantua.

There are a great many other Affairs relating to France, Normandy, Flanders, England and Bretagne, which Hugh and his Collegues took Cognizance of, and paſs'd Sentence upon either Definitively, after it had been referr'd to them by the Pope, or elſe Proviſionally for any to have liberty of appealing to the Holy See. We ſhall have opportunity of ſpeaking more largely of theſe things hereafter.

Gregory

Gregory VII. to add the more Strength to his Authority, thought it expedient to make choice of one of the most eminent Sees of France, on which he might confer the perpetual Vicarship or Primacy of the Holy See. The Vicarship of the Popes in France, (by virtue of which those, to whom it was granted, pretended to a Jurisdiction above Metropolitans), and the Quality of Primates, had till then pass'd from Church to Church, according as they had been more or less favour'd by the Holy See. The Church of Arles is the first on whom this Privilege was conferr'd by Pope Zozimus, in consideration of the Merits of Patroclus, who was Arch-bishop of that place. Pope Symmachus confirm'd this Privilege in favour of Cesareus Arch-bishop of Arles, as to that part of Gaul, which was then under the Dominion of the Goths: But at the same time he made S. Remy, Archbishop of Rheims, his Vicar in the Kingdom under Clovis. However, afterward the Vicarship of the Arch-bishop of Arles spread it self in the Kingdom under Childebert, and even through all France, by the favour of the Popes Vigilius, Pelagius I. Gregory the Great, and John VIII. But Adrian I. restor'd this Honour to the Arch-bishop of Rheims; and the Popes Benedict III. and Nicholas I. confirm'd it. Pope Sergius granted it to the Bishop of Metz, in consideration of the Person of Dreux, the Emperor's Uncle. But the Bishops of France would not acknowledge him, and we do not find that his Successors have pretended thereto. Ansegisus Arch-bishop of Sens, obtain'd the same Privilege from John VIII. and his Successors retain'd the Quality of Primats of Gaul and Germany, tho' the Bishops of France would not acknowledge it in the Council of Pontyon, and ever since it has been disputed with them.

Gregory VII. Vicars of the Popes in France.

At last Gregory VII. made choice of the Church of Lions, as the Church of most note, to Honour with this Quality, and granted it the Primacy over four Provinces of France; namely, of Lions, Roan, Tours, and Sens, by the Four and thirtieth Letter of the sixth Book, directed to Gebwin Arch-bishop of Lions; and by the Five and thirtieth Letter of the same Book, directed to the Arch-bishops of Roan, Tours and Sens, which are both dated April the 20th, in the Year, 1079. To establish this, he supposes that the distinction of Dioceses, Provinces, Primacies, and Metropolitanships was made by the Apostles themselves, or by the Holy Apostolick See, and that the Dignity of Primate had been granted by his Predecessors to the Arch-bishop of Lions. However, it would be a hard matter to prove this out of any Authentick Record. Besides, the Arch-bishops of Sens and Roan, would not acknowledge the Arch-bishop of Lions for Primate: Which oblig'd Urban II. in the Council held at Clermont, in the Year, 1095. to suspend Richerus Arch-bishop of Sens from the use of the Pall; to enjoyn his Suffragans not to obey him; and to threaten the Arch-bishop of Roan with the same Punishment, if he did not within three Months acknowledge the Primacy of the Arch-bishop of Lions.

The erecting the Primacy of Lions, by Gregory VII.

The Rights or Privileges annex'd to the Pope's Vicars or Primates in France, have been of a greater or less extent, according to the difference of the Times. Pope Zozimus granted three Things to the Arch-bishop of Arles, viz. (1.) That all the Bishops who were minded to come to Rome, shall be oblig'd to take along with them recommendatory Letters from the Arch-bishop of Arles. (2.) That the Ordinations in the Provinces of Vienna and Narbonne shall be his Peculiars. (3.) That he shall have the same Jurisdiction over the Churches, which he has had over them for a long time, tho' they be not in his Territory. Of these three Privileges, the two last belong to the Arch-bishop of Arles as Metropolitan; and the first was granted him as Vicar of the Pope. Simmachus, besides these, granted him a Power of calling Councils of the Bishops of France and Spain: Vigilius added thereto the Honour of wearing the Pall; but he desires that if he should meet with any difficult Point, which could not be determin'd by the Councils, he should make his Report thereof to the Holy See. Pelagius granted him in general, a Power of Acting in France, with respect to every thing which concern'd the Administration of Ecclesiastical Affairs. Lastly, Pope Gregory took notice in particular, wherein this Power consisted, which is, (1.) To cause all the Canons to be Religiously observ'd, and to maintain the Faith. (2.) To call a Synod when 'tis necessary. (3.) To make his Report to the Holy See, of the Controversies of Faith, and of the most momentary and difficult Causes. The Privilege granted by the Popes to the Arch-bishops of Rheims, consists chiefly in being immediately subject to no other than the Holy See, and in having the Right of Ordination and Inspection in the whole compass of his Vicarship. The Bishop of Metz had a Commission to call general Councils; to receive the Judgments pass'd in the Provincial Synods; to hear upon the first instance, the Causes of Appealing to the Holy See; to inform himself of the Lives of the Abbots and Bishops, and to provide for the necessities of the Church. The Privileges granted to the Arch-bishop of Sens, are to call Councils, and to examine into all the Ecclesiastical Affairs of France and Germany; to receive and publish the Decrees of the Holy See, and to make his Report to it, of all the Affairs of Moment and Consequence.

The Rights or Privileges of the Primates of France.

Gregory VII. does not enter into the particulars of the Privileges of the Arch-bishop of Lions; but only says in general, that the Ecclesiastical Affairs of any Consequence ought to be brought before him; and that it belongs to him to confirm and disannul the Judgments of the Ordinaries, and to judge the Causes of Bishops, and the Affairs of Importance, but without prejudice to the Holy See.

Gregory VII.

The Cauſe of Manaſſes Arch-biſhop of Rheims.

Before Gregory VII. was Pope, Manaſſes was Arch-biſhop of Rheims. That Prelate being very powerful, thought that the Monks of the Abby of S. Remy of that City, ought to pay an entire Submiſſion to him. He was for giving them ſuch an Abbot as he thought fit, and took part of their Revenues into his Poſſeſſion. Theſe Monks having preferr'd their Complaints to Alexander II. that Pope wrote to Manaſſes, and admoniſhed him to put an end to theſe Complaints, and to give Orders that that Abbey ſhould be provided with a regular Abbot, who ſhould have the Adminiſtration both of Spirituals and Temporals in his own hands. Gregory VII. continued the ſame Remonſtrances: But being inform'd that Manaſſes, notwithſtanding all the Promiſes which he had made by his Deputies, to give him ſatisfaction, continu'd his Abuſes to thoſe Religious, and enjoy'd their Revenues, He wrote a Letter to him full of Invectives, wherein he threatens to ſhew him the utmoſt ſeverity, if he did not immediately cauſe a Regular Abbot to be put into that Abbey, and if he did not give ſuch Orders as that the Religious might have no farther Reaſon to complain of him: And at the ſame time he orders Hugh Abbot of Cluny to convey that Letter to him, and to learn his Anſwer. Theſe are the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Letters of the firſt Book, dated June the 29th, 1073. and the firſt which Gregory wrote after his Ordination.

Manaſſes obey'd the Pope's Orders, and caus'd William, Abbot of S. Arnulphus of Metz, to be elected alſo Abbot of S. Remy of Rheims. The Pope approv'd of the Choice of the Perſon; but he thought it hard that one Man ſhould have the Charge of two Abbeys. However, he permitted William to hold, or relinquiſh that of Remy, as he thought fit. He held it for ſome time; but not being able to endure the Tyranny and Oppreſſion of Manaſſes, he reſign'd that Abbey. The Pope wrote to Manaſſes to order another Abbot to be elected, and gave at the ſame time notice to Herman Biſhop of Metz, that Abbot William was willing to reſide in the Abbey of his Dioceſs. This is the Subject matter of the Fifty ſecond and third Letters of the firſt Book, dated March the 14th, 1074.

The next year the Pope, by the Fifty ſixth Letter of the ſecond Book, dated March the 4th, committed to Manaſſes, the Execution of the Sentence paſs'd againſt the Biſhop of Chalons, who had been depos'd for not appearing before the Synod of Rome, to which he had been cited, upon the account of ſome Differences between Him and his Clergy. And by the Fifty eighth dated the 5th of the ſame Month, he orders him to cauſe the Biſhop of Noyon to reſtore to the Biſhop of Utrecht, a Church which he had unlawfully ſeiz'd upon.

Hugh Biſhop of Dia, Legat of the Holy See in France, having cited Manaſſes to a Council, which he had call'd at Autun, that Arch-biſhop thought it beneath him to appear there; which caus'd the Legat to Condemn him. Manaſſes went immediately to Rome to clear himſelf; and by the Pope's order waited there three Months together for Hugh of Dia. But when that Biſhop came not, the Cauſe of Manaſſes was argu'd in a Council, between Him and the Deputies of Hugh of Dia. Manaſſes having no Body to Accuſe him, did with eaſe juſtify himſelf; and having affirm'd that it was not in contempt of the Holy See, that he did not appear before the Council of Autun, the Sentence paſs'd againſt him in that Council was declar'd invalid, upon condition that he would appear before the Pope's Legat, whenever he ſhould be Summoned: But he declar'd that he would not admit the Biſhop of Dia to be his Judge. The Pope ask'd him whom he was willing ſhould be his Judge; Manaſſes reply'd, The Abbot of CLUNY. Whereupon the Pope deputed that Abbot to be the Judge in the Cauſe of Manaſſes; after he had made him promiſe, that if he were call'd to any Synod by the Holy See, or to any by that Legat, he would not fail to make his Appearance. Manaſſes being return'd to France, was Summond in the Name of Hugh of Dia and the Abbot of Cluny, to a Council to be held at Troyes; he went thither with part of his Clergy: But the Clerks who accus'd him not daring to come thither, he was countermanded, and the Legats of the Pope were not at that Council. Manaſſes appeard there, notwithſtanding the Orders to the contrary, and thought he had diſcharg'd the Promiſe which he had made to the Pope. He pretended likewiſe that according to the Promiſes he made, he was oblig'd to appear before none beſide the Pope, or before the Roman Legats ſent immediately from the Holy See, and not before the Biſhops on the other ſide the Mountains. He wrote to the Pope about it, and at the ſame time complain'd of the Arch-biſhop of Vienna, who had depos'd and re-eſtabliſh'd ſeveral Prieſts of the Dioceſs of Rheims; and of the Biſhops of Laon and Soiſſons his Suffragans, who had ordain'd a Biſhop of Amiens without conſulting him, and even whilſt he was at Rome. Gregory reply'd to him by the Second Letter of the ſixth Book, dated Auguſt the 22d, 1078. That he ought to acknowledge the Legats nam'd by the Holy See upon the place, as well as thoſe who were ſent immediately from Rome; and that he ought forthwith to clear himſelf of the Things laid to his Charge before Hugh of Dia and the Abbot of Cluny; and that they ſhould do him Juſtice, with reſpect to the Complaints which he had made. This is what he acquaints the Biſhop of Dia with, by the next Letter dated the ſame day.

In the mean time Hugh of Dia caus'd Manaſſes to be Summon'd twice to a Council to be held at Lions, to anſwer to the Accuſations which Count Manaſſes, and ſeveral Clerks of the Church of Rheims preferr'd againſt him. The Arch-biſhop of Rheims refus'd to come to that Council, Council, and publish'd an Apology or Manifesto, wherein he alledges several Reasons for his not appearing. The first is, Because there is no mention made of the Abbot of Cluny in the Order, by which he was Summon'd to that Council. The Second, Because that Council was held in a City, which was not in that part of France, wherein he ought to be Judg'd. The Third, Because the Province which lay between that of Rheims and that of Lions, and through which he must pass, was engag'd in a War; so that he could not come without danger of being made Prisoner. The Fourth, Because he understood that that Council was to consist of the same Persons, who had already Condemn'd him rashly and unjustly. The Fifth, Because according to the Canons, it was requir'd that such a place should be made choice of to Try any one, as was near to his own Country, where one might produce Witnesses, and pass a definitive Sentence. That besides, he was reconcil'd to Count Manasses, and to all those who were at Difference with him, except Bruno, who was neither his Clerk, nor Born nor Baptiz'd in his Dioceſs, but a Prebendary of S. Cunibert of Cologne, for whom he was not much concern'd; and who had serv'd him basely, tho' under particular Obligations to him; and except another Clerk, nam'd Pontius, whom he had convicted of Falshood in the Council of Rome. That if he had no Accusers, he was not oblig'd to come and clear himself before the Council, by the Testimony of six Bishops of an unblameable Life: That when he would have done it, he could not, because of the shortness of the time that was allow'd him; and that it would be difficult to find in his Province six Bishops, who were not his Enemies, and without Reproach: That when he had promis'd to the Pope to appear before the Council which should be held by his Legats, he meant only such a Council as should be held in France, and in case he had not lawful Reasons to excuse his Non-appearance: Lastly, That for his part, he did not acknowlege Hugh of Dia to be Legat; since the Pope had granted him the favour of refusing him for his Judge: That however, to shew his Submission to the Holy See, he offer'd him to appear at a Synod which should be held in some City near to Rheims, either in Lent or at Easter; and that he would there receive him with all the Honour that was due to the Legats of the Pope: That he exhorted him to accept of this Offer; because it would be more advantageous to the Holy See, to attract the Respect and Submission of the French by Acts of Moderation, than by Acts of Severity to keep them at a distance: That if notwithstanding this Remonstrance, he still would persist in the same mind, and pronounce a Sentence of Deposition and Excommunication against him, the Popes S. Gregory and S. Leo had instructed him that he ought not to look upon such an Excommunication as issuing from the Holy See. These are the Reasons contain'd in the Apology of Manasses, which is a very fine Piece, and written in a very elegant Style, and publish'd by Father Mabillon in the first Tome of his Treasury of Italy.

Gregory VII. The Cause of Manasses Arch-bishop of Rheims.

Hugh of Dia had no regard to this Manifesto, but in the Council of Lions pronounc'd a Sentence of Deposition against Manasses, and the Pope confirm'd it in the Synod of Rome, held the beginning of the Year, 1080. and gave Manasses notice of it by the Twentieth Letter of the Seventh Book, dated April the 7th of the same Year; allowing him notwithstanding further time till the Feast of S. Michael to justifie himself, either at Rome, or before his Legats; by producing as an Evidence of his Innocence some Bishops his Suffragans; by restoring to the two Persons who had accus'd him, the Revenues which he had taken from them; and upon Condition that he would retire to Cluny or some other Monastery till Ascension-day, and forbear till then all Episcopal Functions.

Manasses did not hearken to this Sentence, and continued in Possession of his Archbishoprick without submitting in the least to the Pope; who wrote immediately to the Clergy and Laity of Rheims, to the Suffragans of that Metropolitanship, to King Philip and to Count Ebold, ordering them no longer to acknowledge him for Archbishop of Rheims, to turn him out of that Church, and to Elect or cause to be Elected another in his stead. This is the subject Matter of the Seventeenth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth and Twentieth Letters of the Eighth Book, dated Decemb. 27th in the same Year.

This Manasses is accus'd by the Authors of that time of having attain'd to the Archbishoprick of Rheims by Simony, and of having exercis'd an insupportable Tyranny and Oppression over his Clergy; of having rifled Churches, plunder'd Monasteries, exacted Mony from his Clergy, persecuted Men of Estates; of seizing the Revenues of the richest Abbies; of having liv'd more like a Great Lord, than a Bishop; of having greater Care of his Soldiers, than of his Clergy; of having more Concern for the Temporalities, than for the Spiritualities of his Archbishoprick; and of being so impious as to say, That the Archbishoprick of Rheims would be a very pretty Thing, if no singing of Mass were required. 'Tis thus that he is set out by William Abbot of S. Arnulphus of Metz, Guibert Abbot of Nogent, and Hugh of Flaviany. However, Fulcoius Subdeacon of Meaux, has made his Elogy; and the Clergy of Noyon (in a Letter which they wrote at that very time to the Clergy of Cambray, to prove that the Sons of Clerks and Priests might be admitted into Priests Orders) maintain, That the Excommunication of Manasses had been made by a Motive of Envy; and that it was rash and unjust. This Letter is related by Father Mabillon, after the Apology of Manasses.

Gregory VII.

naſſes. All this makes it appear, That tho' Manaſſes had been as guilty as they would have him thought to be, yet he was not condemn'd in due Form.

The Cauſe of the Arch-biſhop of Tours, and the Biſhop of Dol.

There had been for ſeveral Years paſt a Conteſt between the Archbiſhop of Tours and the Biſhop of Dol, who pretended likewiſe to the Dignity of an Archbiſhop, or the Right of Metropolian over the Biſhops of Bretagne. The Popes always declar'd themſelves in favour of the Archbiſhop of Tours. Gregory VII. ſeem'd at firſt to favour the Biſhop of Dol; for the Clergy and Laity having ſent to the Pope him whom they had elected to be Biſhop, he refuſed to ordain him becauſe he was too young: But having choſen Yves Abbot of S. Melaine, who was come to Rome with the Deputies of Dol, he conſecrated him by their Conſent, and granted him the Pall, upon Condition that he would come to Rome whenever he ſhould be ſent for thither, to regulate the Conteſt which was between the Church of Dol and that of Tours about the Right of Metropolitanſhip. The Archbiſhop of Tours thinking that the Pope had by this prejudiced his Right, complain'd of it; but Gregory ſent him word that he had no occaſion to complain, ſince he had taken ſuch Meaſures that what he had done ſhould be no Prejudice to him, and that he would do him Juſtice, when that Affair was in a Poſture of being try'd. This is the Subject Matter of the Fourth, Fifth, and Thirteenth Letters of the Fourth Book, of which the two firſt, about the Ordination of Yves, are directed, the one to the People of Dol, and the other to the Biſhops of Bretagne, dated September 27, in the Year, 1076. and the laſt to Radulphus Archbiſhop of Tours, dated the Firſt of March, 1077.

The Pope was deceived in the Choice of the Man whom he had ordain'd to the Church of Dol. He ſoon receiv'd Complaints of his bad Conduct: And after he had examin'd the Accuſations brought againſt him, he was juſt ready to depoſe him; when he received a Letter from William King of England, who interceded for him. This caus'd the Pope to ſuperſede the Execution of that Sentence, till he ſhould ſend upon the Place Hugh Biſhop of Die, and two other Legats, to inform themſelves more fully about that Affair. This appears by the Seventeenth Letter of the Fourth Book, written to the King of England, and dated March the 2d, in the Year, 1077. He committed the Determination of that Affair to Hugh of Die, to the Abbot of Cluny, and to two other Clerks, by the Two and three and twentieth Letters of the Fifth Book, dated May 22d, 1078.

At laſt the Conteſt between the Churches of Tours and Dol, for the Right of Metropolitanſhip, having been debated in the Council held at Rome the beginning of the Year, 1080. And the Archbiſhop of Tours having made it appear, by good Titles, That Bretagne belong'd to his Metropolitanſhip; whereas the Biſhop of Dol not being able to produce ſuch Authentick ones, was pleas'd to ſay, That he had forgot behind him ſeveral of his Titles: The Pope granted him a farther time, and declar'd that he would ſend Legats upon the Place, to determine that Affair: And that if it appear'd that the Biſhop of Dol had ſufficient Titles whereon to ground his Exception, he ſhould ſtill remain in Poſſeſſion of it; if not, that then the Biſhop of Dol and the other Biſhops of Bretagne ſhall be ſubject to the Archbiſhop of Tours, as to their Metropolitan; upon Condition however that the Biſhop of Dol ſhall ſtill enjoy the Privilege of wearing the Pall. This is what he intimates to the People of Tours and Bretagne, by the Fifteenth Letter of the Seventh Book, dated March 8th, in the Year, 1080.

The Cauſe of the Biſhop of Toul.

The Biſhop of Toul having refus'd to one of his Clerks a Church which he pretended to belong to his Prebendſhip, and having abſolutely ſuſpended him, that Clerk was incens'd againſt him, and accus'd him of ſelling Benefices and Sacred things; of holding a ſhameful and diſhonorable Commerce with a certain Woman, and of having bought his Biſhoprick. The Biſhop's Friends, to avenge his Quarrel, threaten to be even with that Clerk, if ever they could catch him. Whereupon that Clerk not thinking himſelf ſecure abſconded, and the Biſhop immediately caus'd all that he had to be ſold. That Clerk having made his Complaints thereof to Rome, Gregory VII. by the Tenth Letter of the ſecond Book, dated October the 14th, 1074. Commiſſion'd the Arch-biſhop of Treves, and the Biſhop of Metz, to Try this Cauſe. He enjoyns them in the firſt place to put that Clerk into the Poſſeſſion of his Benefice; afterwards to make enquiry into the Life of the Biſhop: If he were Innocent, to puniſh the Clerk who had ſcandaliz'd him; and if he were Guilty, to depoſe him.

The Cauſe of William Duke of Aquitain.

William Duke of Aquitain, and Count of Poitiers, having Marry'd one of his Relations, the Legat of the Holy See, and the Arch-biſhop of Bordeaux call'd a Synod, to oblige him to part from her. Iſembert Biſhop of Poitiers diſturb'd that Aſſembly, and offer'd violence to thoſe who were there. However, the Duke of his own accord parted from his Wife. Gregory no leſs pleas'd with his Submiſſion, than he was offended at the Action of the Biſhop of Poitiers, complimented the Duke upon it by the third Letter of the ſecond Book, and cited the Biſhop to the Council of Rome by the ſecond Letter of the ſame Book, threatning to depoſe and excommunicate him; and by the Fourth of the ſame Book adviſes the Arch-biſhop of Bordeaux to come to Rome, or to ſend ſome body thither to accuſe Iſembert. Theſe Three Letters are dated September the 2d, 1074. Iſembert not appearing at the Synod, the Pope not only confirm'd the Suſpenſion which his Legat had pronounc'd againſt him, but likewiſe excommunicated him, till ſuch time as he ſhould come to the Synod, nod, to be held at Rome the beginning of Lent, as appears by the Three and Four and twentieth Letters of the same Book, dated November the 16th, in the same Year. Gregory VII.

The Letters of Gregory are full of Instances of Bishops whom he cited to Rome, to give an account of their Conduct, or condemn'd for not appearing; or absolv'd when they did appear; or depos'd or enjoyn'd to do Pennance. We may consult beside those already mention'd, the Fifty sixth Letter of the first Book, by which he Summons the Bishop of Chalons, to come and clear himself at Rome: The Fifty seventh, by which he orders the Bishop of Pavia, to come to him with the Marquis Aso, accus'd of Incest with that Bishop's Sister. This Woman's Name was Matilda, which gave occasion to some Authors, to think her to be the same with the Princess Matilda, the Wife of Godfrey. But she was quite another Woman; for she whom we speak of, was the Sister of William Bishop of Pavia, who had Marry'd her Kinsman Aso, before the Death of Godfrey, the Princess Matilda's Husband. The Pope wrote to her by the Thirty sixth Letter of the second Book to part from Aso, till such time as she should prove in the Synod of Rome, that the Marquis was not her Kinsman. And by the Thirty fifth Letter, he likewise cited William Bishop of Pavia upon the same account. These two Letters are dated December the 16th, 1074. The Causes which Gregory VII. bear'd and try'd at Rome.

Sometimes Gregory VII. Commission'd Bishops upon the places to pass a definitive Sentence upon the Affairs in dispute. Thus he committed to the Arch-bishops of Bourges and Tours, the Determination of the Process between the Monastery of Dol, and the Abbey of S. Sulpicius, by the Ninth Letter of the second Book: To Richerus Arch-bishop of Sens, by the Twentieth Letter of the same Book, the correcting of Lancelin, who had injur'd the Arch-bishop of Tours. Causes referr'd by the Pope to his Legats.

By the Sixteenth Letter of the fourth Book, he referr'd to Hugh Bishop of Die, the Tryal of the Difference which was between the Clergy of Romagne, and the Arch-bishop of Vienna.

In the Twentieth of the same Book, he referr'd to Josefroy Bishop of Paris, the Absolution of several Persons excommunicated by the Arch-bishop of Rheims, and granted him power to Absolve them, in case he found them innocent, if that Arch-bishop would not do it.

In the One and twentieth, he referr'd to Herman Bishop of Metz, the Tryal of the Process between the Bishop of Liege, and the Abbot of S. Lawrence, who having been turn'd out of his Monastery by the Bishop, had Appeal'd to the Holy See.

In the Fourth Letter of the sixth Book, he referr'd to the Arch-bishop of Treves and the Bishop of Metz, the Cause of one who complain'd that he had been unjustly excommunicated by the Bishop of Liege.

In the Fifth of the same Book, he advises Herman Bishop of Metz, to assist the Bishop of Toul, whom he had order'd to call a Council of six Bishops, to clear himself Cononically of what had been laid to his charge.

By the Thirty ninth of the same Book, he referr'd to the Bishop of Cumæ, the Tryal of the Election of the Bishop of Pergamo.

By the Eight and twentieth Letter of the seventh Book, he committed to the Bishop of Benevento, and the Abbot of Mount Cassin, the Tryal of an Armenian Heretick.

By the Nineteenth Letter of the ninth Book, he referr'd to the Arch-bishop of Lions, the Tryal of the Cause of an Abbot, who produc'd a Grant of Alexander II. which prov'd that he had been falsly accus'd.

By the Two and twentieth of the same Book, he referr'd to a Council of the Province, to be held in the presence of his Legats, the Tryal of the Count of Angiers, excommunicated by the Arch-bishop of Tours, upon the account of a Concubine which he kept.

He referr'd to the same Arch-bishop, by the Thirty second Letter of the same Book, the Cause of the Bishop of Terrouanne, who being favour'd by the Count of Flanders, had broke open the Church, and offer'd several Violences. You may consult on this Subject the Thirteenth, Two and thirtieth, Three and thirtieth, and Four and thirtieth Letters of the ninth Book, and the First of the eleventh.

By the Thirty first of the same Book, he refetr'd to a Bishop the Tryal of the Difference which was between the Clergy of Autun, and the Monks of Fleury, about a Privilege which the latter pretended to.

To conclude, there were scarce any Controversies in the Dioceses between the Bishops and their Clerks, or Monks, and even Laicks themselves, which Gregory VII. was not minded to take Cognizance of, to try at Rome, and to oblige the Bishops to put his Sentence into Execution, as may be seen by a great many Letters, about several Subjects. The Causes cited to, and Judg'd at Rome by Gregory VII.

In the Fifty fourth of the first Book, he orders against the Bishop of Poitiers, that the Canons of that City shall observe their usual Custom concerning their Stations upon the Feasts of S. Hilary, and All-Saints In the One and twentieth of the second Book, he enjoyns the Abbot of Beaulieu, to be obedient to the Arch-bishop of Tours; and that if he thought he had any Reason not to be subject to him, he should come to Rome, and make his Pretensions good. In the Two and twentieth, he enjoyns Hugh, Knight of S. Maur,

to

Gregory VII. to reſtore to the Arch-biſhop of Tours the Revenues of his Church, which he had taken away from him: And in caſe that he thought that they belong'd to him, to come to Rome to demand Juſtice in the caſe. In the Five and twentieth, he orders the Biſhop of Cologne to Try the Difference which was between the Biſhop of Oſnabrux and the Abbot of Corbey in Saxony, upon condition that if he could not determine it, he would ſend them to his Synod of Rome. In the Thirty third, he reproves the Biſhop of Turin for not coming to the Synod of Rome, and for having offer'd an Injury to the Monaſtery of S. Michael.

The Cauſes cited to, and Judg'd at Rome by Gregory VII.

By the Sixty fourth and Sixty fifth Letters of the ſecond Book, dated March the 25th, in the Year, 1075. he orders that the Accuſation which the Monks of S. Dennis in France had brought againſt their Abbot, ſhall be Try'd by his Legats, or in a Synod of Rome. He likewiſe call'd to Rome by the Sixty ninth, the Conteſt which was between the Biſhop of Turin, and the Monks of the Monaſtery of S. Michael; this Letter is dated April the 9th, in the ſame year. By the Thirteenth Letter of the third Book, he determines a Difference which was between the Church of Roſcelle and the Church of Piombino, in favour of the former.

The Cauſe of Everard Dean of Orleans

There was at that time a great Conteſt in the Church of Orleans, concerning a Deanery, between the Biſhop and his Prebendaries. The Cauſe having been brought before Pope Alexander, he had determin'd it in favour of Joſceline, whom the Prebendaries were for, and excommunicated Everard whom the Biſhop had favour'd. Notwithſtanding this Sentence, the Biſhop of Orleans had ſtill ſupported Everard, and was likewiſe accus'd of having receiv'd Mony for the Collation of a Prebendſhip, the Revenue whereof was appropriated to the maintenance of the Poor: Gregory VII. being inform'd of it, in the firſt place cited Everard to Rome, by the Fifty ſecond Letter of the ſecond Book, dated March the 1ſt, 1075. and afterwards having confirm'd the Sentence paſs'd by his Predeceſſor againſt him, he wrote to the Biſhop of Orleans to turn him out, to put Joſceline into Poſſeſſion of the Prebendſhip then in queſtion, and to ſuffer the Poor to enjoy the Revenue of that Prebendſhip which belong'd to them; if not, he threatned to excommunicate him; and at the ſame time he order'd Richerus Arch-biſhop of Sens to do it, if he did not ſubmit. Theſe two Letters are the Sixteenth and Seventeenth of the third Book, dated in April 1076. The Biſhop of Orleans returning no anſwer to Gregory, that Pope wrote a ſecond time to the Arch-biſhop of Sens, ordering him to thunder out the Excommunication againſt that Biſhop, unleſs he aſſur'd him upon Oath, that he had not come to the leaſt knowlege of the Pope's Letter; and he order'd him to come to Rome along with the Parties concern'd in that Affair. He likewiſe by this Letter Commiſſions Richerus Arch-biſhop of Sens, not only to take Cognizance of this, but alſo of ſeveral other Matters which concern'd the Churches of France. This is the Subject Matter of the Ninth Letter of the fourth Book, dated November the 2d, in the ſame year.

The Biſhop of Orleans did not much regard all theſe Menaces of the Pope, and caus'd the Perſon who brought his Letters to be apprehended. Gregory enrag'd at this proceeding, wrote to the Arch biſhop of Sens and Bourges, ordering them to cite him before them at a place which they ſhould appoint him; and if he continu'd Refractory, to depoſe him, and put Sanzon in his place: He likewiſe advertiz'd the Biſhop of Orleans, that he had given this Order. Theſe are the Eighth and Ninth Letters of the fifth Book, dated October the 6th, 1077. This Sanzon was elected in purſuance of this Order, and the Pope by the Fourteenth Letter of the ſame Book, dated January the 28th, in the Year, 1078. orders the Clergy and Laity of Orleans to acknowldge him: However, by another Letter dated April the 24th, which is the Twentieth of the ſame Book, he writes to Rainier, who was the depos'd Biſhop of Orleans, ordering him to appear at the Synod which ſhould be appointed by Hugh Biſhop of Dia, and Hugh Abbot of Cluny, in order to receive a final Sentence. Laſtly, By the Three and twentieth of the ſixth Book, dated March the 5th, 1079. he acquaints the People of Orleans that he approv'd of the Election of Sanzon, but that he could not confirm him in Form, till ſuch time as he ſhould ſend Legats upon the place.

The Cauſe of Robert, nominated to the Biſhoprick of Chartres.

Robert Abbot of S. Euphemia in Calabria, had been nominated by the King of France to the Biſhoprick of Chartres. Gregory VII. who lik'd not ſuch ſort of Nominations, and look'd upon them as Simonaical, charg'd him by his Legat to quit his Biſhoprick. But Robert was not very forward to obey; whereupon the Pope declar'd him to have forfeited his Title to it, order'd the People of Chartres to elect another Biſhop, and enjoyn'd Richerus Arch-biſhop of Sens and his Suffragans to ſee this Order put in Execution. You may conſult the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Letters of the Fourth Book, dated March the 4th, 1077. However, by a Letter directed to Hugh of Dia, which is the Eleventh of the Fifth Book, he gave that Biſhop orders to examine into that buſineſs, and to make his Report thereof to him.

The Cauſe of the Biſhop of Annecy.

Stephen Biſhop of Annecy had the ſame fortune. Hugh of Dia the Pope's Legat excommunicated him, and Gregory ratified his Sentence by two Letters; the one written to the Clergy of Annecy, and the other to the Biſhops of France, which are the Eighteenth and Nineteenth of the Fourth Book, dated March the 23d, in the Year, 1077.

The

The Arch-bishop of Roan being grown infirm and uncapable of governing his Diocess, Gregory VII. sent him one Hubert a Subdeacon, to enquire whether things were so or no, and to perswade him to give his Consent, that another be put in his place, if he were capable of giving such a Consent; and in case he were wholly infirm, to cause another to be elected. This is what he acquaints the King of England with, by the Nineteenth Letter of the fifth Book, dated April the 4th, 1078. Gregory VII. The Cause of the Arch-bishop of Roan.

The Canons of the Castle of S. Paul and S. Omer, having sent Deputies to Rome, to complain of the Counts Hubert, Guy and Hugh, who had seiz'd upon some Revenues which belong'd to them; the Pope wrote to these Counts, ordering them to make Restitution, according as it had been enjoyn'd in a Council held at Poitiers by Hugh of Dia, or else to justify their Pretensions to these Revenues before that Legat within the space of forty Days. If they would not obey, he order'd the Defenders of the Church to re-enter upon the Premisses, and the Canons of Terrouanne to see that this Sentence be put in Execution. This is the Subject Matter of the Eighth and Ninth Letters of the sixth Book, dated November the 25th. 1079. The Cause of the Canons of S. Omers.

In the Seventh and Eighth Letters of the sixth Book, he approves of the Election which the Monks of Marseilles had made of Cardinal Richard for their Abbot: He declares to them that he wish'd that that Monastery were united to the Monastery of S. Paul. Cardinal Richard elected Abbot of Marseilles.

We will conclude the Account of the Letters of Gregory VII. with several Points of Ecclesiastical and Monastical Discipline, which he decided, and of which we have had no opportunity of speaking. The Letters of Gregory VII. concerning Discipline.

In the Fifth Letter of the first Book, directed to Rainier Arch-bishop of Florence, he determines that a Woman who had Marry'd one of her Kinsmen, and was become a Widow, ought not to receive her Dowry from any part of her Husband's Revenue, nor to have any advantage of that Marriage, which was in its own nature Null.

In the Four and twentieth Letter of the first Book, he recommends to the Bishop of Verona a constant Submission to the Holy See, and promises him the Pall, provided he would come in his proper Person to Rome: Because his Predecessors had order'd that the Pall should be bestow'd only on Persons who were present. This Letter bears date September the 24th, 1073.

In the Four and thirtieth Letter of the same Book, directed to the Bishop of Lincoln, he determines that according to the Opinions of the Fathers, a Priest who had been guilty of Homicide, ought no longer to attend at the Service of the Altar; but he is willing that in case he be truly Penitent, a Subsistence should be allow'd him out of the Ecclesiastical Contributions. Afterwards he gives that Bishop Absolution of all his Sins.

In the Seven and fortieth of the same Book, he exhorts the Princess Matilda to frequent Communion, and to bear a due Respect and Devotion to the blessed Virgin.

In the Eight and fortieth, he enjoyns that a Woman accus'd by her Husband of Adultery, shall be admitted to justify her Innocence.

In the Sixty fifth, he reproves the People of Ragusa for having first apprehended Vitalius their Bishop, and then elected another in his room. He enjoyns them to set him at Liberty, and to suffer his Cause to be try'd by the Arch-bishop of Sipento, whom he had Commission'd for that very purpose, with a Charge that if it could not be determin'd upon the place, they should send to Rome their old Bishop, and him whom they had newly elected, that so he might decide the Controversy between them.

In the Seven and fortieth of the second Book, he acquaints the Lord Rainier, that he had order'd the Bishop of Chiusi, to turn out of the Provostship of a Church, a Priest who had been Condemn'd by his Predecessor Alexander, and whom that Bishop would re-establish in defiance to the Authority of the Holy See.

In the Eight and fortieth, he orders two of his Legats to prevent a Man who had kill'd his Brother, from Marrying till he had done Pennance.

By the Fiftieth, he determines that one who is not Born in lawful Wedlock, cannot be advanc'd to the Episcopacy, because 'tis contrary to the Canons. He likewise therein declares, that he would not accept of the Resignation of the Bishop of Arragon, who had desir'd to relinquish his Bishoprick because of his Infirmities. He says, that he had advis'd him to make use of an Ecclesiastick to take care of the Temporalities of his Diocess, and to apply himself wholly to Spiritual Affairs with the assistance of his Neighbouring Bishops; and that if his Infirmities continu'd upon him longer than an Year, and he were no longer capable of discharging his Episcopal Functions, one might with the Consent of the Clergy of that Church accept of his Resignation, and ordain in his stead the Person who should be elected to assist him in the Government of his Diocess, if he were fit for that Dignity. This Letter is directed to Sancho King of Arragon, and bears date January the 25th, 1075.

In the Seventy seventh Letter of the same Book, directed to Gebehard Arch-bishop of Saltzbourg, he advertises that Arch-bishop, that he ought not to detain the Tenths of a certain Territory, wherein a Bishoprick had been founded in the time of Alexander II.

Gregory VII.

In the Sixth Letter of the fourth Book, he determines that one cannot communicate with a dead Biſhop who is excommunicate, nor pray for him: And he abſolves him in caſe that he had involuntarily Subſcrib'd to what the Emperor had acted againſt the Church. And in the Eighth Letter of the ſame Book, he orders Abſolution to be given at the point of Death to an excommunicate Biſhop, if he requir'd it, even before he had finiſh'd the Pennance aſſign'd him.

The Letters of Gregory VII. concerning Diſcipline.

In the Tenth Letter of the ſame Book, directed to the Counteſs of Flanders, he declares that the Clerks who kept Concubines, ought not to be tolerated to ſay Maſs, or celebrate any Divine Office. And in the Twentieth and ſeveral others he ſays, That the People ought not to aſſiſt them therein.

In the Firſt Letter of the fifth Book, he reproves the Canons of Lucca for having bought their Benefices, and interdicts all thoſe who had given Mony for being Inſtituted and Inducted into a great Church, and prohibits them from holding ſuch Benefices.

In the Thirteenth, Fifteenth and Sixteenth of the ſame Book, he determines that the Elections of Biſhops ought to be done by the Clergy and Laity, with an unanimous Freedom and Conſent.

In the Eleventh Letter of the ſixth Book, he enjoyns the Canons of S. Martins of Lucca to live Regularly and in Common, or at leaſt to allow their Biſhop a Prebendſhip for the Neceſſities of the Church.

In the Six and thirtieth of the ſame Book, he threatens to excommunicate thoſe who ſhould buy Benefices. In the Thirty fourth, he had reckon'd up three ſorts of Simony, viz. a Manu, ab obſequio, a lingua: The firſt ſort is when one gives Mony either in ones own Perſon, or by others, for the obtaining a Benefice. The ſecond is when in hopes of a Benefice one does ſome ſignal Service to a Patron, who beſtows it by way of Recompence for that Service. The third is when one Petitions, or cauſes another in ones behalf to Petition for a Benefice, and when one obtains it by Recommendation.

In the Second Letter of the ſeventh Book, he declares the Canons who diſobey their Biſhop, to have for ever forfeited their Benefices, and forbids both Clergy and Laity from communicating with them.

In the Tenth of the ſame Book, he deſires that the Canonical Diſcipline of Pennance ſhould be re-eſtabliſh'd in England, and ſends a Legat thither for that purpoſe. He therein declares that that Pennance is Hypocritical, which is not attended with an amendment of Life.

In the Eleventh he would not permit Divine Service to be celebrated among the Sclavoniani in their own Language.

In the Thirteenth, he orders the Biſhop of Verdun to enjoyn a Count Pennance, who had Robb'd a Biſhop of Liege in his Journey to Rome, and to anathematize him, in caſe he would not ſubmit to the Pennance.

In the Eighth Letter of the eighth Book, he congratulates the Biſhop of Salerno, for having found the Relicks of S. Matthew, and exhorts him to ſhew them the Veneration which they deſerve.

In the Tenth of the ſame Book, it is obſerv'd that the Legat of the Holy See in Sardinia, oblig'd a Grecian Arch-biſhop to cut off his Beard; the which Gregory approv'd of.

In the Fifteenth of the ſame Book, he declares that he had order'd a Biſhop of Italy, who had without juſt cauſe relinquiſh'd his Biſhoprick, to retire to the Monaſtery of Mount Caſſin, and to ſtay there till ſuch time as it was determin'd what ſhould be done with him. But that Biſhop inſtead of obeying him, re-enter'd upon his Church without his permiſſion: Wherefore he prohibits his Clergy from acknowledging him for their Biſhop, and from obeying him.

In the Second Letter of the fourth Book, and in the One and twentieth of the eighth, he undertakes to prove that the Popes might excommunicate Kings and Sovereign Princes, and even abſolve their Subjects from the Oath of Allegiance taken to them. But all the Authorities and Arguments which he makes uſe of to prove the Latter, are ſuch as are either Suppoſititious, or founded on falſe Matters of Fact, or ſuch as conclude nothing.

In the Firſt Letter of the ninth Book, he reproves the Arch-biſhop of Roan, for not having ſent to deſire the Pall from the Holy See, and prohibits him from performing any Ordination, or any Conſecration of the Church, till ſuch time as he ſhould receive it from thence. This is the firſt Inſtance we meet with of the Popes obliging Arch-biſhops to take the Pall, under the Penalty of being depos'd till they ſhould receive them.

In the Four and twentieth of the ſame Book, he refus'd to ordain a Biſhop of Malta, becauſe that Ordination belong'd to the Biſhop of Reatino.

The Letters of Gregory VII. concerning Monaſtical Diſcipline.

With reſpect to the Monaſtical Diſcipline, Gregory VII. apply'd himſelf chiefly to preſerve or increaſe the Exemptions and Privileges of Monaſteries, or to regulate the Differences which happen'd between the Abbots, the Religious and the Biſhops. We have already mention'd ſeveral of theſe kind of Cauſes, which he Try'd himſelf at Rome, or referr'd to his Legats, or to other Commiſſaries upon the place. We will now relate ſome others which we have not had occaſion to ſpeak of.

By

By the Two and thirtieth Letter of the firſt Book, dated November the 27th, 1073. he orders the Biſhop of Chartres to re-eſtabliſh Iſimbard Abbot of S. Laumer, who had quitted his Abbey to go to Jeruſalem, in caſe he were guilty of no other Fault, and to turn out Guy, who had been put in his place, and who, they ſaid, had not ſo much Piety as Iſimbard, nor was ſo proper to govern that Monaſtery. Gregory VII. The Letters of Gregory VII. concerning Monaſtical Diſcipline.

In the Three and thirtieth, dated the next Day, he writes word to the Religious of the Monaſtery of Saint Mary, in the Dioceſs of Tortone, that he was not willing to confirm the Privilege, which being under the Name of Alexander II. had been preſented to him, by Benedict whom they had elected their Abbot in the room of Hubert; ſince he had diſcover'd it to be forg'd upon theſe two Accounts, firſt becauſe it had falſe Latin in it, and ſecondly becauſe it contain'd ſomething in it contrary to the Intention of the Canons: That he did not think it adviſable to grant them a new one, till the Church of Tortone had a Biſhop elected according to the Canon, by whoſe conſent he might grant them a Privilege conformable to the Eccleſiaſtical Authority. With reſpect to him whom they had elected for their Abbot, he acquaints them, that he did not think him proper for that Place, by reaſon of his great Age, and his Infirmities, and that he had adviſed him to reſign it.

In the One and fiftieth Letter of the firſt Book, he reprimands the Abbot of S. Severus, for not appearing at the Synod of Rome, to anſwer the Complaints preferr'd againſt him, concerning the Monaſtery of the Holy Croſs, from which this Abbot was minded to take a Church. He prohibits him from giving that Monaſtery any diſturbance, and orders him if he thought he had Reaſon for what he did, to come to the Synod held in November with the Abbot of the Holy Croſs. This Letter is dated March the 14th, in the Year, 1074.

By the Sixty ſixth, Sixty ſeventh, Sixty eighth, Seventy ſecond, Eighty firſt, Eighty ſecond Letters of the ſame Book; by the Fifteenth, Seventeenth, Forty ſixth, Fifty ninth, Sixtieth, and Sixty firſt of the ſecond Book; by the Twenty fourth, Twenty fifth, Thirty firſt, and Thirty third of the ſixth Book; by the Seventeenth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, and Twenty fourth of the ſeventh Book; and by the Sixth, Seventh, and Twenty ninth of the ninth Book, he vindicates the Privilege of ſeveral Monaſteries againſt the Biſhops, or any other Perſons who ſeiz'd on their Revenues, and had done any prejudice to their Rights or Immunities.

Thus have we given you a full Account of the Actions, Conduct, Life, Writings, Sentences, and Determinations of Gregory VII. during his Pontificate, extracted out of his Letters, wherein he has deſcrib'd his own Character, and diſcover'd what his Sentiments and Deſigns were. They are in all 359. which Compoſe a Regiſter divided into Nine Books, containing all the Letters which he wrote from April 1073, to the Year, 1082. 'Tis obſerv'd that there was a Tenth Book, but 'tis loſt: That which is call'd the Eleventh, contains only one entire Letter, and the Fragment of another, which may be connected with Seven or Eight other Letters extracted out of Lanfrank, and S. Anſelm, or other Authors.

The Judgments which have been paſs'd on the Perſon, Conduct, Manners and Genius of Gregory VII. have been wholly contrary to each other. His Partiſans have repreſented him to us as a Man very Religious and Pious, Juſt, Equitable, Humble, Patient, Unblameable both in his Life and Morals; a learned Canoniſt and a good Divine, Zealous for the Welfare of the Church, a Lover of Diſcipline, an Enemy to Vice, a Protector of the Innocent, an undaunted Defender of the Eccleſiaſtical Rights and Privileges, and a faithful Imitator of Gregory the Great in his Paſtoral Care. His Enemies on the contrary have made him paſs for a cruel, ambitious, and perfidious Man, who having ſeiz'd by force on the Papal Chair, had put the whole Church into Confuſion to gratify his Ambition, and to attain to his Deſigns; who without reſpect to the Royal Majeſty or to the Sacerdotal Dignity, had a Mind to make Kings his Slaves, and Biſhops his Creatures, by depriving the one of their States, and by unjuſtly Condemning the others, that he might afterwards give them Abſolution: Who had utterly overturn'd the Diſcipline of the Church, by being willing to eſtabliſh in his own Perſon a Monarchy, or rather Tyranny over things both Spiritual and Temporal: Who had advanc'd this unheard of Error ſo far as to maintain, that Popes might by Excommunicating Kings and Princes, diveſt them of their States, and abſolve their Subjects from the Oath of Alliegance taken to them: Who had thunder'd out ſo many Excommunications, and extended them ſo far, that there was ſcarce a Man in his time who was ſure of not being excommunicated. I omit ſpeaking of the other groſs Enormities with which they charg'd him; ſuch as his being guilty of Sorcery, of holding a diſhoneſt Familiarity with the Princeſs Matilda, and of being in the ſame Error as Berenger was about the Euchariſt. There is no doubt to be made but that the Zeal of the One, and the Paſſion of the Others, carry'd them both into Extreams. To paſs therefore a right Judgment upon him, it muſt be acknowledg'd that this Pope was a great Genius, capable of great Things, conſtant and undaunted in the execution of his Deſigns, well vers'd in the Conſtitutions of his Predeceſſors, Zealous for the Intereſts of the Holy See, an Enemy to Simony and Libertiniſm, Vices which he ſtrongly oppos'd, full of Chriſtian Thoughts and Zeal for the Reformation of the Manners of the Clergy; and there is not the leaſt Colour to think that The various Judgments paſs'd upon Gregory VII.

Gregory VII.

he was tainted in his own Morals. But it muſt likewiſe be confeſs'd, that he was advanc'd to the Papal Chair a little too Precipitately: That his Zeal to promote the Grandeur of the Holy See carry'd him to undertake ſuch things as were unreaſonable and beyond his Power: That he was the Cauſe of great Diſturbances both in the Church and in the Empire: That he aſſum'd to himſelf a Power over Kings and their States, which he never had: And that he carry'd the Eccleſiaſtical Authority of the Holy See beyond its due Bounds. This is the Judgment which we ſuppoſe every one will paſs upon him, who ſhall read over his Letters with a diſintereſted and unprejudic'd Mind. In ſhort, they are penn'd with a great deal of Eloquence, full of good Matter, and embelliſh'd with noble and pious Thoughts: And we may boldly ſay, that no Pope ſince Gregory I. wrote ſuch ſtrong and fine Letters as this laſt Gregory did.

An Examen of the Decree ſaid to belong to Gregory VII.

We find among his Letters, after the Fifty fifth of the ſecond Book, a piece Intituled, DICTATUS PAPÆ. i. e. An Edict of the Pope, or Papal Deciſions; which contains Seven and twenty Propoſitions, concerning the Rights of the Holy See, ſome Feign'd and ſome True. The Summary of them is as follows. (1.) That the Church of Rome owes its Foundation to none but God alone. (2.) That no other Perſon beſide the Pope of Rome has a Right to be call'd UNIVERSAL BISHOP. (3.) That 'tis he alone who can depoſe Biſhops and re-eſtabliſh them. (4.) That his Legat ought in Council to preſide over all Biſhops, even tho' he be inferior to them in Dignity; and that he may pronounce a Sentence of Depoſition againſt them. (5.) That the Pope may depoſe even abſent Biſhops. (6.) That no Man ought to live in the ſame Houſe with them whom he has excommunicated. (7.) That 'tis Lawful for him alone to make new Laws, when Times require it, to found new Churches, to turn a Canonſhip into an Abbey, to divide a Rich Biſhoprick into two, and to conſolidate Poor ones. (8.) That 'tis he alone, who can wear the imperial Robes. (9.) That all Princes ſhould kiſs the Pope's Feet, and that 'tis to him alone they ought to pay this Honor. (10.) That his Name alone is to be repeated in the Churches. (11.) That there is no other Name but his in the World (that is, according to ſome, that to him alone belongs the Name of Pope; an Explication which ſeems to be very much ſtrain'd. (12.) That 'tis lawful for him to depoſe Emperors. (13.) That he has the Power of Tranſlating Biſhops from one Biſhoprick to another, when there is a neceſſity for it. (14.) That he can ordain a Clerk in any Church whatſoever. (15.) That a Clerk whom he has ordain'd, may enter into another Church; but that he cannot be oblig'd to ſerve there; and that he cannot be promoted to a ſuperior Order by any other Biſhop. (16.) That no general Council ought to be held without his Order. (17.) That no Book can be Canonical without his Authority. (18.) That his Judgment ought to be corrected by none, and that he can correct the Judgments of all other Perſons. (19.) That no Perſon ought to Judge him. (20.) That no Perſon whatſoever dare to Condemn him, who appeals to the Holy See. (21.) That the Cognizance of the moſt material Cauſes of all Churches belongs to him. (22.) That the Church of Rome has always been, and will always be Infallible, according to the Teſtimony of the Scriptures. (23.) That the Pope of Rome ordain'd Canonically, becomes unqueſtionably HOLY by the Merits of S. Peter, according to the Teſtimony of Ennodius Biſhop of Pavia, approv'd of by ſeveral Saints, and as it is recorded in the Decretals of Pope Symmachus. (24.) That by his permiſſion 'tis lawful for Inferiours to accuſe Superiors. (25.) That he can depoſe and re-eſtabliſh Biſhops without calling a Synod. (26.) That he who does not agree with the Church of Rome, is no true Catholick. (27.) That he can declare the Subjects of wicked Princes, abſolv'd from the Oath of Alliegance, which they have taken to them.

This Piece has no relation to the Letter which preceeds it, nor to that which follows it; and we have not the leaſt proof that it was made in the Council of Rome in the Year, 1076. as Baronius pretends. Nor is it probable that it belongs to Gregory VII. For tho' there be in this Collection ſeveral Propoſitions which have relation to what he wrote in his Letters, yet there are a great many which he never advanc'd, nor approv'd of. There are likewiſe ſome of them that are equivocal, others expreſs'd in odious Terms, and others Intolerable. They are almoſt all of them drawn up ſo ill, that one cannot ſay Gregory VII. who had a good Genius, was the Author of them. This is what inclines me to believe that 'tis the Work of one who was an Enemy to Gregory, who was minded to render his Doctrin odious, by comprehending it in theſe Seven and twenty Propoſitions drawn up at random, which bear ſome reſemblance to the Genius and Manners of that Pope. If this Conjecture be not agreeable to ſome, we may ſay that 'tis the Work of ſome Roman bigotted to the Maxims of the Court of Rome, who ſuppos'd he might deduce theſe Propoſitions from the Letters of Gregory VII. and made this Collection of them, which has been ſince inſerted in the Regiſter of that Pope. Let the Caſe be how it will, one cannot ſay without injuſtice to Gregory, that 'tis his Piece, nor maintain all theſe Propoſitions without doing injury to the Holy See.

'Tis to be obſerv'd, that the Commentary upon the Seven Penitential Pſalms, aſcrib'd to Gregory the Great, was compos'd in the Time of Gregory VII. becauſe the Author of this Commentary ſpeaks in three places, viz. in Pſal. 5. v. 9, 26. and in Pſal. 27. againſt an Emperor peror of his Days, whom he accuſes of renewing Simony in the Church; of having diſturb'd it by a dangerous Schiſm, of having a Mind to make it his Slave; of having ſeiz'd upon what belong'd to it; of making himſelf Maſter of the Church of Rome, and of having begun to exerciſe his Power againſt it. This has inclin'd many to believe that 'tis the Work of Gregory VII. which his Name made others think that it belong'd to Gregory the Great: But the Style of this Piece does not ſeem ſo elegant as the Style of that Pope: However perhaps he might be more remiſs in a Work of this Nature. There is in England a Commentary upon S. Mathew in Manuſcript, which is aſcribed to Gregory VII. and which they ſay he compos'd whilſt he was only a ſimple Religious: But it has never yet been Publiſh'd. CHAP. VI.

An Account of the Church of Rome, and of the Popes who Succeeded Gregory VII. to the end of this Century.

AFTER the Death of Gregory VII. the Cardinals and the Clergy of Rome had their Eyes upon Didier Abbot of Mount Caſſin, to advance him to the Popedom. Some Authors ſay that Gregory VII. had recommended him to them, before he Died. He was deſcended from a noble Family of Benevento, and had ſpent all his Life in the Monaſtery of Mount Caſſin. He at firſt refus'd the Dignity which was offer'd him; ſo that the Holy See remain'd Vacant for almoſt a whole Year. In the mean time Guilbert the Antipope became Maſter of one part of the Churches of Rome, and would fain have been acknowledg'd for lawful Pope. The Cardinals and Biſhops who acknowledg'd Gregory, to prevent Guilbert's deſign, came to Rome about Eaſter in the Year, 1086. with the Prince of Salerno, and Duke Roger, to proceed to the Election of a Pope. When they were there, they renew'd their Importunities to Didier, to engage him to accept of the Popedom; but he would never expreſly conſent to it. However, they Elected him, and having taken him by force, carry'd him to the Church of S. Lucia to proclaim him Pope under the Name of VICTOR III. But when they were about to put on him the Pontifical Robes, he made ſo great a Reſiſtance, that they could not put his Albe on him, but only caſt a red Chappe about his Body. Four Days after he left Rome, and when he came to Terracina, threw off all the Enſigns of the Pontificate, and retir'd to Mount Caſſin, where he liv'd privately, and could by no means be prevail'd upon to be Ordain'd. But the Year after in a Council held at Capua during Lent, he yielded to the Intreaties of Duke Roger, of the Prince of Capua and of the Biſhops, reaſſum'd the Purple and the Pontifical Croſs; and after he had ſpent the Eaſter Holidays in his Monaſtery, was Conducted to Rome by the Princes of Salerno and Capua, who having taken the Church of S. Peter by force from Guilbert, caus'd Victor to be Ordain'd by the Biſhops of Oſtia, Freſcati, Pavia and Albania, and plac'd him on the Papal Chair, May the 9th in the ſame Year. This Election was not only oppos'd by the Favourers of Guilbert, but alſo by Hugh, who from the Biſhoprick of Die was tranſlated to the Arch-biſhoprick of Lions, and pretended to the Popedom; by the Arch-biſhop of Aix and by Cardinal Richard Abbot of Marſeilles, who were underhand ſupported by the Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia, who had himſelf likewiſe ſome Votes on his ſide. The Arch-biſhop of Lions was the greateſt oppoſer of Victor's Ordination, and wrote againſt him two Letters to the Princeſs Matilda, to hinder her from acknowledging and aſſiſting him: Accuſing him of holding correſpondence with the Emperor Henry. But theſe Letters made no impreſſion on the Mind of that Princeſs; on the contrary ſhe came forthwith to Rome with ſome Forces, and retook from Guilbert that part of the City of Rome which he was poſſeſs'd of, and the Caſtle of S. Angelo. Within a while after, the Romans who favour'd that Antipope, being got together, aſſaulted the Church of S. Peter on the Vigil of that Apoſtle's Feſtival, and oblig'd thoſe who held out for Victor to throw themſelves into the Caſtle of S. Angelo. The two Parties continued theſe Acts of Hoſtility for ſeveral Days together. But at laſt Victor deſiſted, and retired to his Monaſtery; from whence he went out in Auguſt, to hold a Council at Benevento, compos'd of the Biſhops of Apulia and Calabria; wherein he made a Speech againſt Guilbert, and iſſu'd out a freſh Anathema againſt him. He therein likewiſe excommunicated the Arch-biſhop of Lions, and Richard Abbot of Marſeilles; renew'd the Prohibitions againſt receiving Benefices from the Hands of Lay Patrons, and the Penalties inflicted on thoſe who were guilty of Simony; and Victor III. The Letters of Hugh Arch-biſhop of Lions. The Council of Benevento under Victor III.

Victor III. and prohibits the receiving the Communion from the Hands of excommunicated and ſimonical Perſons. Victor fell Sick during this Council, which oblig'd him to return immediately to Mount Caſſin, where he died September the 16th 1087. after he had recommended Otto Biſhop of Oſtia for his Succeſſor.

Urban II. Otto was a French Man of Chatillon upon the Marne in the Dioceſs of Rheims. He had been taken out of the Monaſtery of Cluny to be Cardinal, and had done ſignal Services for Gregory VII. who had ſent him Legat into Germany againſt King Henry. He could not be Elected immediately after the Death of Victor; becauſe the Cardinals and the Biſhops were diſpers'd. The Counteſs Matilda conven'd them again at Terracina the beginning of Lent in the Year enſuing, whither John Biſhop of Porto, brought the Conſent of the abſent Cardinals; and Benedict Prefect of Rome, brought a Commiſſion from the People of that City, to acknowledge him who ſhould be elected Pope by the Aſſembly. Otto was proclaim'd by the Cardinal Biſhops of Porto, Freſcati, and Albany, and the Choice confirm'd by the whole Aſſembly. They gave him the Name of Urban II. and plac'd him on the Papal Chair. Upon his departure from Terracina, he went to Mount Caſſin, where they ſay that he was miraculouſly Cur'd of a Pain in his Side, by S. Benedict who appear'd to him, and who aſſur'd him that his Body was repoſited in that Monaſtery. Roger and Beaumont the Counts of Apulia and Calabria, waited upon him in that Place, and carry'd him along with them into Apulia. He was almoſt conſtantly reſident on their Territories or in Campania, and went now and then to Rome, which ſometimes favour'd Guilbert, and ſometimes Him. For Guilbert was at firſt turn'd out by the Romans, and oblig'd to renounce the Popedom. Afterwards he was receiv'd there in the Year, 1091. retook the Caſtle of S. Angelo, and continued Lord of that City, ſo long as the Emperor Henry had the better of it: But his Son Conrad revolting in the Year, 1093. and in League with Welpho Duke of Italy, whom Urban had got to Marry the Princeſs Matilda; Guilbert's Faction began to grow weaker, and Conrad whom that Pope favour'd in his Revolt, caus'd Urban to be acknowledg'd in Lombardy, and to be receiv'd in Placenza, where he held a famous Council in the Year, 1095. He went from thence into France, where he call'd a Council at Clermont in Auvergne, wherein he gave in the Project of the grand CROISADE, which was perform'd under his Popedom in the Eaſt. When he return'd into Italy, he at laſt became Maſter of Rome, tho' Guilbert had a great many Favourers in that City. He dy'd there July the 29th in the Year, 1099.

The Regiſter of this Pope's Letters is loſt: Thoſe that are left us are as follow.

The Letters of Urban II. Urban's firſt Letter, is a Privilege granted to the Monaſtery of Bantino, which the Pope had founded at the Inſtance of the Dukes Roger and Beaumont.

The Second and Third are directed to the Arch-biſhops of Toledo and Tarragon, about their Primacy.

In the Fourth, he preſcribes to the Arch-biſhop of Milan the method he ought to uſe in reconciling thoſe who had been ordain'd during the Schiſm: Which is to order them to come at the time wherein he gives the Bleſſing, and the Impoſition of Hands, that is, at the time of Ordination, and to perform all the Ceremonies with relation to them, except the Unction.

By the Fifth, he confirms to the Arch-biſhop of Bari or Canoſa, the dignity of Metropolitan, and grants him the Pall.

In the Sixth, he exhorts the Dukes Roger and Beaumont to protect the Abbot and Monks of Bantino, againſt the Lords who perſecuted them, and ſeiz'd upon their Eſtates.

In the Seventh, he grants the Arch-biſhoprick of Tarragon to the Biſhop of Vich, which Berenger Count of Barcelona had lately re-eſtabliſh'd and Peopled with Chriſtians.

In the Eighth, he ſent word to the Clergy and People of Chartres, that he approv'd of the Choice which they had made of Yves for their Biſhop in the place of Geofrey who had been depos'd, and that he would ſend him to them, after he had Conſecrated him. By the following Letter he acquainted Richerus Arch-biſhop of Sens with the ſame thing, who had refus'd to Conſecrate him, and injoyns him to receive him, and to uſe him kindly. This Letter is follow'd by a Diſcourſe of that Pope, which contains a great many Inſtructions in a few Words, directed to Yves of Chartres after his Conſecration.

The Tenth is a Privilege granted by the Pope and Duke Roger to the Monaſtery of Cave.

The Eleventh and Twelfth contain the Confirmation of the Privileges granted to the Canons of S. Martin of Tours.

The Thirteenth is a kind of Declaration which the Pope made to Roger Count of Calabria and Sicily, that he would not ſend any Legat into his Dominions without his Conſent: That he and the Princes his Succeſſors ſhall be the innate Legats of the Holy See in their own Territories: And that when the Pope ſhall ſend for any Biſhops or Abbots of their Country, he gives them leave to ſend whom they pleas'd, and retain thoſe whom they ſhould think fit.

In the Fourteenth, he advertiſes the Count Radulphus, that the Clerks ought to be Subject to none beſide their Biſhops, and that ſecular Perſons have no Juriſdiction over them.

In

In the Fifteenth he interdicts a Priest of Salerno, who held a Church as the Patronage of a Laick, and pronounces the same Penalty against all those who receiv'd the Investiture of Benefices from any beside their Bishops.

By the Sixteenth he acquaints Alexius the Emperor of Constantinople, of the great number of those engag'd in the CROISADE for the Relief of the Christians of the East, and exhorts him to assist them in their Expedition.

In the Seventeenth, he replies to Lucius Provost of S. Iuvensius of Pavia upon several Questions which he had proposed to him. In this Letter he proves that all manner of Selling Ecclesiastical Things is Simony. And as to what that Provost had demanded, whether the Ordinations and Sacraments administred by the Simoniacal, by the Adulterous, or by any other notorious Offenders, were valid: He replies, that in case they be not separated from the Church by Schism or Heresy, their Ordinations are valid, and their Sacraments Holy and Venerable: That however his Predecessors Pope Nicholas II. and Pope Gregory VII. had prohibited the assisting at the Mass of such Priests as were guilty of these Irregularities, in order to bring them to Pennance: But as to Schismaticks and Hereticks, that they have indeed the Form of the Sacraments, but not the Power and Efficacy of them; and that they do not produce their Effect, till those who have received them are reconcil'd to the Church by the imposition of Hands.

The Eighteenth is a confirmation of the Privileges granted to the Arch-bishop of Salerno.

In the Nineteenth, he acquaints two Abbots of Fossombrona, that he had excommunicated and depos'd Guezilon Arch-bishop of Maience, who was Consecrated by excommunicated Persons.

In the Twentieth, directed to the Arch-bishop of Sens and other Bishops of France, he declares that no Bishop has any power of absolving the King of France, whom he had excommunicated.

In the One and twentieth, he wrote to the Arch-bishop of Lions to use his utmost Endeavours to oblige an Abbot to return to his Abbey, who was withdrawn to lead an heremitical Life.

The ancient Collection of Urban's Letters contains only these One and Twenty: There have been several others added since, of which a new Collection is made under other Heads.

The first of these is a Letter directed to Gebehard Bishop of Constance, about the Difficulties he met with in executing the Excommunications thunder'd out by Gregory VII. He therein determines, (1.) That Guilbert and King Henry are Excommunicated. (2.) That all those who assist them are Excommunicated likewise. (3.) That those who Communicate with these Excommunicated Persons to the third Degree, ought not to be admitted into the Communion of the Church till they have been Absolv'd. (4.) That he will make an Order in a general Council concerning the Clerks who have been ordain'd by excommunicated Bishops; but that in the mean time, they ought to hold their Orders, who have been ordain'd without Simony by Catholick, tho' excommunicated Bishops, after they had been enjoyn'd Pennance: But yet they should not be permitted to take upon them any higher Order without urgent Necessity. (5.) That he ought to turn out of the clerical Order all those who are guilty of a Crime which deserves to be punish'd according to Law, whether they have committed it before or after their Ordination. Lastly, he makes that Bishop, as well as the Bishop of Passaw, Vicar of the Holy See for the Ecclesiastical Affairs of Germany.

The Second is directed to Robert Count of Flanders, whom he exhorts to suffer the Church to enjoy the Revenues which belong to it. Notwithstanding this Remonstrance, that Prince continu'd to rifle the Revenues of the Church; whereupon the Clergy of Flanders preferr'd their Complaints against him to the Arch-bishop of Rheims, who order'd in a Council held in the Year, 1092. that Robert should restore to the Churches what he had taken away from them, under the pain of Excommunication. That Prince obey'd, and dy'd within a short time after.

The next Fourteen relate to the re-establishment of the Bishoprick of Arras.

In the Seventeenth, directed to Pibo Bishop of Toul, he renews the Decrees of Gregory VII. against the Simoniacal, and those who kept Concubines; and the Decree which prohibits the Children of Priests from entring into Holy Orders. He repeats what he had said in his Letter to Gebehard concerning Ordinations which were perform'd by excommunicated Persons. He excommunicates the Simoniacal, and declares that the Churches which they Consecrate, ought to be Consecrated over again by a Catholick Bishop. He leaves to the pleasure of Bishops, the receiving or rejecting those who are ordain'd without a Title. Lastly, He renews the Law which forbids Holy Orders to those who were guilty of Bigamy.

In the Eighteenth, he permits Richerus Arch-bishop of Sens, to bestow some Livings on some Regular Canons.

In

Urban II. In the Nineteenth, he anſwers Hugh Arch-biſhop of Lions, that he may, if he thinks fit, admit of the Ordinations of the Clerks of his Dioceſs, who have receiv'd Orders from the Hands of another Biſhop, if there be no other defect in their Ordination.

The Letters of Urban II. In the Twentieth, he admoniſhes the Biſhop of Laon, not to take away from the Monks of S. Remy of Rheims, a Church which they had in his Dioceſs, and determines in the general, that all the Churches which the Monks have been in Poſſeſſion of for Thirty or Forty years together, ſhall ſtill be Theirs.

In the One and twentieth, he recommends to Count Raimond and the People of Narbonne, their Arch-biſhop Dalmatius, and orders them to cauſe Reſtitution to be made to the Church of Narbonne, of all the Revenues which belong to it.

In the Two and twentieth, he orders the Abbot of Tomeri to reſtore ſeveral Revenues which he had taken from the Church of Narbonne, and the Monaſtery of S. Cucufato of Barcelona. By the next Letter he refers that Affair to Rainier his Legat upon the place.

The Nine next Letters concern the Primacy of the Church of Toledo.

The Thirty third, contains an Agreement between the Monks of S. Aubin of Angers, and the Monks of Trinity of Vendome.

By the Four and thirtieth, he enjoyns the Count of Poitiers to reſtore ſeveral Revenues which he had taken away from the Monaſtery of Vendome.

In the Five and thirtieth, he upbraids the Arch-biſhop of Rheims and the Biſhops his Suffragans, for having permitted the King of France to part from his Wife, and to Marry one of his Kindred, and for that the Biſhop of Senlis had bleſs'd him upon the Marriage. He exhorts them to reprove the King, to prevail upon him to turn to his Duty, to ſet at Liberty Ives of Chartres, and if he did not obey, to excommunicate him, and interdict his Kingdom.

Theſe Letters are follow'd by a Collection of ſeveral Letters of Reginald Arch-biſhop of Rheims, of Pope Urban, of Lambert Biſhop of Arras, and of ſeveral others written about the Ordination of that Biſhop of Arras, who having been elected by the Clergy and Laity of that City, had been deny'd Ordination by the Arch-biſhop of Rheims. Pope Urban being inform'd thereof, enjoyns that Arch-biſhop to ordain him. Inſtead of doing it, he ſent him to Rome, where the Pope ordain'd him himſelf. The Arch-biſhop of Rheims was oblig'd to approve of this Ordination, and he wrote to Robert Count of Flanders in his behalf. The Pope when he went into France, ſent for Lambert to the Council of Clermont. That Biſhop was taken Priſoner as he was going through Provence, and ſet at Liberty afterwards at the Pope's deſire, who gave him a very kind reception, confirm'd the Privileges of the Church of Arras, and depos'd Gaucher Biſhop of Cambray. Sometime after, the Arch-biſhop of Rheims wrote to Lambert againſt a Lord who had Plunder'd and Burnt a Village belonging to the Church of Cambray. This is the Subject Matter of the Letters we mention'd.

The Council of Rome, in the Year 1089. Pope Urban held ſeveral Councils; the firſt at Rome in the Year, 1089. wherein he confirm'd all that Gregory VII. had done againſt Guilbert. Several Lords propos'd to the Emperor Henry, to abandon Guilbert, for the procuring of Peace to the Empire and the Church. He was well enough inclin'd to it, but was diverted from it by his Biſhops, who fear'd being depos'd as well as Guilbert.

The Council of Melphi, in the Year 1089. The ſame year Urban held a Council at Melphi, wherein he renew'd the Decrees againſt the Simoniacal, and concerning the Celibacy of thoſe who were in Holy Orders. He therein enjoyns that none ſhould be admitted into Holy Orders but ſuch as had led chaſt Lives, and had never been Marry'd to any more than one Woman: That none ſhould be ordain'd Sub-deacon before he was Fourteen years old, nor Deacon before One and twenty, nor Prieſt before Thirty. He therein prohibits Laicks from granting the Donation of Churches, without the Conſent of the Biſhop or the Pope: And Abbots from exacting Mony of thoſe who took upon them the Monaſtical Habit. He therein aboliſh'd the Cuſtom of Exempt Clerks, who either were in the Service of great Lords or depended on them. He therein declares the Sons of Prieſts uncapable of entring into Holy Orders, unleſs they have taken upon them the Monaſtical Habit; and he adviſes Eccleſiaſticks to behave themſelves modeſtly. This is the Subject Matter of the Sixteen Canons made in that Council, which was held in the preſence of Count Roger.

The Council of Touloſe, in the Year 1090. The Legats of this Pope, held a Council at Touloſe in the Year, 1090. wherein they made ſeveral Decrees about Diſcipline. The Arch-biſhop of Touloſe clear'd himſelf in this Council, and they there reſolv'd to ſend Legats to Toledo for the re-eſtabliſhing of the Faith.

The Council of Benevento, in the Year 1091. In the Year 1691. Auguſt the 1ſt, Urban held a Council at Benevento, wherein he renew'd the Condemnations iſſu'd out againſt Guilbert, and made Four Canons. By the Firſt, he prohibits the Electing any one for Biſhop who is not in Holy Orders, that is, according to his Explication, who is not Deacon or Prieſt: And with reſpect to Sub-deacons, he enjoyns, that they cannot be promoted to Epiſcopacy, unleſs upon an extraordinary occaſion, and with the Permiſſion of the Holy See. In the Second, he ſuſpends ab officio the Chaplains Chaplains who are nominated and paid by Lay-Patrons, without the consent of the Bishop. In the Third he prohibits the receiving Clerks, who were Strangers, without Letters Dimissory from their Bishop. In the fourth, Laicks are forbid the eating of Flesh after Ashwednesday, and all the Faithful of both Sexs are enjoyn'd to put Ashes on their Heads on that Day: It is likewise order'd that no Marriage shall be Solemniz'd from Septuagesima Sunday till after the Octave of Whitsontide, and from the first Sunday in Advent till after the Octave of Epiphany. Urban II. The Council of Benevento in the Year, 1091.

In the Year, 1093. he held a Council in a City of Apulia, call'd Troyes, wherein he renew'd the Prohibitions against contracting Marriages between Kindred. The Council of Troyes in Apulia in the Year, 1093.

In the Year, 1094. Gebehard Bishop of Constance, his Legat in Germany, held a Council in his City against incontinent and simoniacal Clerks. He likewise order'd that Ember Week in March should be held the first Week in Lent, and that in June the Whitson Week, and that there should be no more than three Holydays at Easter and Whitsontide; for till then they were us'd to keep Holyday all the Week long. The Princess Praxedis, Henry the Emperors Wife, appear'd before that Council, and discover'd a great many Enormities, which she said she had been constrain'd by her Husband to commit. The Council of Constance in the Year, 1094.

She made the same Declaration before the Pope, in the Council held at Plaisance in the Year, 1095. during Lent, which was so numerous that they were forc'd to hold the Assembly in the open Field. Philip King of France sent his Ambassadors thither to excuse his not appearing. The Pope allow'd him time till Whitsontide. Hugh Arch-bishop of Lions was Suspended in this Council, because he neither appear'd there himself, nor sent any Deputy to excuse him. The Pope gave audience to the Ambassadors of the Emperor of Constantinople, who demanded assistance against the Infidels, and he engag'd the Lords who were there present to promise to go into the East for that purpose: This was the first step towards the CROISADE, which was fully resolv'd upon in the Council of Clermont. There were likewise several Rules of Discipline made in this Council, by which it is order'd that those who will not part with their Concubines, or pardon their Enemies, or were habituated in any mortal Sin, should not be admitted to the Holy Communion. That the Priests shall admit none to Pennance but those who shall be referr'd to them by the Bishops. That the Eucharist shall not be deny'd to those, who shall confess themselves as they ought. They renew'd likewise the Decrees against the Simoniacal, and the Incontinent, and the Judgments pass'd against the Heresy of Berenger, against Guilbert, and against those who were ordain'd by Schismaticks. The Council of Plaisance in the Year, 1095.

Urban going into France, in November, 1095. held a Council at Clerment in Auvergne, which was compos'd of Thirteen Arch-bishops, and a great many Bishops their Suffragans; wherein he confirms the Decrees of the Council of Plaisance, and made other new ones; publish'd the CROISADE for the East; excommunicated King Philip; confirm'd the Primacy of the Arch-bishop of Lions, and made a great many other Institutions. These are the things we will speak of more particularly, and will begin with the Excommunication of Philip I. King of France. This Prince had put away his Wife Bertha, the Daughter of Florentius the chief Count of Holland, and of Gertrude of Saxony, for being too nigh a Kin to him. This Divorce having been made in form by the Authority of the Church in the Year, 1086. and in pursuance of a juridical Sentence, the King banish'd her to Monstrevil a Sea Port, and look'd after another Wife. At first he courted the Daughter of Roger Count of Sicily, nam'd Emma, who was carry'd to the Borders of Provence; but the Match broke off, perhaps because she did not think it safe to Marry a Prince who had another Wife Living. Bertrade the Daughter of Simon of Montfert, who had Marry'd Fulcus Rechinus Count of Anjou, pleas'd the King, and she made no scruple to part from her Husband and Marry him: She was the Kings Relation in the fifth or sixth Degree, and Rechinus her Husband, in the third or fourth Degree. Besides, if Philip were free as he pretended, Bertrade was not, her first Marriage being still valid. All these considerations were of no weight to King Philip, who surmounted them all, and resolv'd upon solemnizing this Marriage with Bertrade publickly. He fix'd upon a Day to celebrate it at Paris, and sent for Reginald Arch-bishop of Rheims, Yves of Chartres, and several other Prelats to render the Solemnity the more Authentick. Yves of Chartres sent the King word, that he could not be there, nor could he consent to, or approve of that Marriage, because his Divorce from Bertha had not as yet been confirm'd by the Authority of the Holy See, and because Bertrade could not Marry him, being another Man's Wife. He sent likewise word to the Arch-bishop of Rheims; that he ought not to celebrate this Marriage, but rather to dissuade the King from it. Lastly, he wrote to Hugh Arch-bishop of Lions (who because of this business refus'd to take upon him the quality of Legat of the Holy See in France) telling him that he ought to be inspirited with a Holy Zeal in order to oppose this Criminal Proceeding of the King. Notwithstanding this, Philip Marry'd Bertrade, and found out a Bishop who dar'd to Marry them for the Revenue of some Churches which the King gave him. Hugh of Lions at the instance of Yves of Chartres held a Council at Autun October the 16th in the Year, 1094. wherein he excommunicated Philip, because he had Married a second Wife whilst the first was Living. In this Council he likewise renew'd the Excommunications The Council of Clermont in the Year, 1095. King Philip I. Divorc'd from Bertha. The Council of Autun in the Year, 1094.

Urban II. munications againſt the Emperor Henry, and againſt the Antipope Guilbert; and the Decrees againſt the Simony and Incontinence of the Clergy; and prohibited Monks from uſurping the functions and rights of Curats. Pope Urban ſuſpended the execution of this Decree againſt Philip, and cited him to the Council of Plaiſance, whither he ſent, as we mention'd before, his Ambaſſadors, who obtain'd a farther Reſpite till Whitſontide. Afterwards when Urban was come to France, the King ſent his Deputies before him, to endeavour to work the Pope into a good Diſpoſition, and to prevail upon him to cancel the Excommunication, and to confirm his Marriage: But the Pope being prevented by the Letters of Yves of Chartres, refus'd to grant him what he deſir'd, and wrote to the Archbiſhops and Biſhops of France ordering them to exhort the King to do Pennance for his Fault, and to part from Bertrade: Yves of Chartres was the only Perſon who did it with Reſolution, which was the cauſe of his being perſecuted, and taken Priſoner. The Pope perceiving that all his Admonitions prov'd ineffectual, in the Council of Clermont thunder'd out a Bull of Excommunication againſt King Philip, and his Concubine Bertrade.

The CROISADE under Urban II.

As to the CROISADE ſet on foot for the relief of the Chriſtians in the Eaſt, Gregory VII. was the firſt promoter of it, but could not put it into practice becauſe of his differences with the Emperor. Victor III. notwithſtanding the difficulties he labour'd under, found out a Means of ſending an Hundred thouſand fighting Men into Africa againſt the Infidels. Urban in imitation of thoſe great Exemplars, and being importun'd by the Letters of Alexius Emperor of the Eaſt, and by the remonſtrances of Peter the Hermit, a Gentleman of Picardy near Amiens, who had brought a Letter from Jeruſalem from the Patriarch Simeon, who conjur'd the Chriſtians to free the Holy Land from the Tyranny of the Turks, did ſo animate the By-ſtanders, by his warm and pathetical Diſcourſes to undertake the Conquering of the Holy Land, and ſo far prevail'd upon all the Prelats to make uſe of the ſame Exhortations in their Dioceſſes, that within a very ſhort time an infinite number of Men were liſted for that Service, and took a Voyage by Sea under the Conduct of a great many Princes and Perſons of Quality. The Badge which the Soldiers wore was a Red Croſs ſew'd on the left Shoulder, and the Military Word, Deo placet.

The Canons of the Council of Clermont.

We have not all the Canons which were made in this Council of Clermont compleat, but only an Abridgment of them, of which the largeſt is that which was made by Lambert Biſhop of Arras, who was, as we ſaid before, at that Council. They are Two and thirty in all. The Firſt takes notice of the Days wherein the Breach of the Peace or Truce of God was made. The Second imports, that the Voyage of thoſe who went to Jeruſalem out of Devotion to deliver the Church of that City, ſhall ſerve them inſtead of all manner of Pennances. The Third, that the Deaneries of Churches ſhall be beſtow'd only on Prieſts; and the Arch-deaconeries only on Deacons. The Fourth, that the Clerks ſhall not bear Arms. The Fifth, that Laicks cannot be choſen Biſhops, and that thoſe who are Elected, ſhall be Sub-deacons at leaſt. The Sixth, that no Perſon ſhall Sell Prebendſhips or any other Benefices, and that thoſe who ſhall give any Mony for them, ſhall reſign them into the Hands of the Biſhop. The Seventh, that the Altars beſtow'd on the Congregations of Monks or Canons, after the Death of thoſe who gave them ſhall be at the Diſpoſal of the Biſhops, if they have not been confirm'd to them by their Letters. The Eighth, that no Perſon ſhall exact any Duty for Burial. The Ninth and Tenth are againſt thoſe Clerks who keep Concubines. The Eleventh prohibits the promoting to Holy Orders and to Eccleſiaſtical Dignities the Sons of Concubines; or the beſtowing any Benefices upon them unleſs they have embrac'd the monaſtical or canonical Life. The Twelfth, Thirteenth and Fourteenth prohibit one and the ſame Perſon from holding two Prebendſhips, or two Livings in the ſame, or in ſeveral Churches, and from altering the Title. The Fifteenth prohibits the receiving the inveſtiture of Livings from Lay Patrons. The Sixteenth prohibits Kings and Princes from granting the inveſtiture of Livings. The Seventeenth prohibits Biſhops and Prieſts from taking an Oath of Allegiance to Kings or any other Laick. The Eighteenth prohibits Laicks from having Chaplains Independent on the Biſhop. The Nineteenth and Twentieth prohibit them from detaining the Tenths or Churches. The One and Two and twentieth prohibit the granting Abſolution to thoſe who are in poſſeſſion of another's Right, unleſs they make Reſtitution; and to thoſe who live in the habitual Commiſſion of any mortal Sin. The Three and twentieth prohibits Chriſtians from Eating Fleſh from Aſh-wedneſday till Eaſter. The Four and twentieth fixes the times of Ordination, viz. the four Ember Weeks, and the Saturday of the third Week in Lent: And declares that if it were poſſible, they ſhould continue their Faſt till Sunday Morning, that ſo the Celebration of Holy Orders might be on that Day. The Five and twentieth imports, that the Children of Prieſts, Deacons, and Sub-deacons ſhall not be promoted to Holy Orders, if they be not either Monks or regular Canons. The Six and twentieth, that on Holy Saturday the Faſt ſhall laſt till Night. The Seven and twentieth, that the Ember Week in Spring ſhall be always the firſt Week of Lent, and that in Summer in the Whitſon Week. The Eight and twentieth, that all thoſe who ſhall communicate at the Altar ſhall receive the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST under both Kinds, if there be no neceſſity or proviſion sion made for the Contrary. The Nine and twentieth and Thirtieth, that those who fly to a Cross, when pursued by their Enemies, shall be as secure as those who fly into a Church: And that they shall not be deliver'd up to Justice, till they are assur'd that no Violence shall be offer'd to their Lives or Members. The One and thirtieth anathematizes those who shall seize on the Revenues of the Church. And the Two and thirtieth declares that those who shall apprehend or imprison a Bishop, shall be in perpetual Disgrace, and never capable of bearing Arms. Urban II.

In this very Council Pope Urban confirm'd the Primacy of the Arch-bishop of Lions, in opposition to the Arch-bishop of Sens, as 'tis intimated in the Bull of Confirmation, dated the first of December in the Year, 1095. publish'd by Monsieur de Marca, with an ingenious Discourse of his own about Primacies. Richerus Arch-bishop of Sens would not submit to this Constitution; but Hugh Arch-bishop of Lions, got it ratified in the two succeeding Councils held at Tours and at Nismes: and Urban oblig'd Danibert, who succeeded Richerus, to promise that he would acknowledge the Arch-bishop of Lions for his Primat. Urban likewise in this Council adjusted the Difference which was between the Arch-bishop of Tours and the Monks of the Monastery of S. Martins, upon condition that that Arch-bishop should not have any Station, nor perform any Office in their Church, nor be capable of Excommunicating them: Only they should receive Holy Orders and the other Sacraments from the Hands of the Arch-bishop of Tours. The Confirmation of the Primacy of Lions.

Before the Council of Clermont broke up, the Pope appointed another Council at Tours, to be held in Lent the Year ensuing; and in his Journey thither he held a Council at Limoges in December, 1095. wherein 'tis said that he depos'd Humboldus Bishop of that City. When he arriv'd at Tours he held a Council there according to Appointment, wherein he renew'd his Exhortations to engage all manner of Persons to undertake the Expedition to the Holy-Land, and adjusted the Differences of several Monasteries. From thence he went to Nismes, where he held another Council, wherein he gave Absolution to King Philip, who promis'd to part from Bertrade; and made Sixteen Canons. The Council of Limoges in the Year, 1095. The Councils of Tours and Nismes in the Year, 1096.

By the First all Bishops are prohibited from bestowing Altars, Churches or Prebendships for Mony: And a reservation is made to the Monks of the Altars and Tenths which they have been in possession of for Thirty Years past, upon condition that they pay the yearly Quit-rent. It is therein likewise order'd that the Monks shall not institute and induct Priests into the Churches which they possess, without the Consent of the Bishop: That they shall be instituted and inducted into them by the Bishop with the Approbation of the Abbot, and that they shall be accountable to the Bishop for the Spiritualities, and to the Abbot for the Temporalities. The Canons of the Council of Nismes.

By the Second and Third it is prov'd by several Authorities, that the Monks may administer the Sacraments, and take upon them the Care of Souls.

The Fourth sets a Brand of Infamy upon, and Excommunicates those who dare to make the Ecclesiasticks Prisoners.

The Fifth enjoyns that after the Death of the Bishop, two Persons of Probity shall be made choice of to take care of the Revenues of his Church, and to preserve them for the use of his Successor: And excommunicates all that shall seize on them; and interdicts the Cathedral Church and the Churches that depend upon it.

The Sixth and Seventh excommunicate the Laicks who possess or detain the Revenues of the Church.

The Eighth injoyns that those who shall receive Benefices from the Hands of Laicks shall be Suspended ab officio.

The Ninth, That those who leave a small Church to go to a great one, shall lose both of them.

The Tenth, that those who Marry their Relations shall be Excommunicated.

The Eleventh, that Ravishers who are Kill'd in the very Rape, without having done Pennance, shall be depriv'd of Christian Burial, and of the Prayers of the Church.

The Twelfth, that the Priests who are guilty of Fornication shall be Depos'd.

The Thirteenth, that young Women shall not be Marry'd before they are twelve Years old.

The Fourteenth, that it is not Lawful to alien the Revenues given to the Church, nor to cite Clerks before Secular Judges.

The Fifteenth, that Bishops shall not entertain those who have been Excommunicated by other Bishops.

The Sixteenth, that Monks shall not grant Burial to, nor admit to Divine Service Persons who are Excommunicated, Suspended, or are guilty of Rape.

When the Pope was return'd to Italy, he held a Council at Bari in the Year, 1098. wherein S. Anselmn disputed against the Greeks about the Procession of the HOLY GHOST. He held likewise another Council about the end of the same Year at Rome, of which we have no Monument, except his granting a farther time to the King of England. Lastly, in the Year, 1099. he call'd a grand Council at Rome the last of March, wherein he Published Eighteen Canons, which are only a Repetition of the Canons of the Council of Placenza, 1099. The Councils of Bari and Rome in the Year, 1098. The Council of Rome in the Year, 1099.

Urban II. cenza, and of the other laſt Councils, againſt the Simoniacal, and the Uſurpators of the Revenues of the Church.

The Council of Roan in the Year, 1096. The Canons of the Council of Clermont were publiſh'd and confirm'd in a Council held at Roan in the Year, 1096. under William Arch-biſhop of that City, wherein Eight Canons were made, of which the firſt four are about that which they call the Truce of God: That is to ſay, the Days wherein it is prohibited to make War, and the Perſons whom 'tis not Lawful to Aſſault. The Fifth reſerves to the Churches all the Revenues of which they were in Poſſeſſion of, and prohibits Laicks from exacting any thing from them. The Sixth prohibits likewiſe Laicks from giving Churches to, or taking them from Prieſts without the Conſent of the Biſhop; and prohibits in general all the Faithful from wearing long Hair. The Seventh imports that Laicks ſhall have no Eccleſiaſtical Courts of Judicature. And the Eighth, that the Prieſts ſhall not be Vaſſals to Laicks.

CHAP. VII.

An Account of the Controverſies on foot between the LATIN and the GREEK Churches in the Eleventh Century.

The Letter of Michael Cerularius and Leo of Acridia againſt the Church of Rome. THO' The Latin and Greek Churches were not in a cloſe Communion with each other ever ſince the Affair of Photius, yet they did not proceed to an open Rupture till the time of Pope Leo IX. and of Michael Cerularius Patriarch of Conſtantinople. This Breach began by a Letter which the Latter wrote in the Year, 1053. in his own Name and in the Name of Leo Arch-biſhop of Acridia and of all Bulgaria, to John Biſhop of Trani in Apulia, that he might communicate it to the Pope and to all the Weſtern Church. In this Letter they reprov'd the Latins. (1.) Becauſe they made uſe of unleaven'd Bread in the celebration of the Euchariſt. (2.) Becauſe they Faſted on the Saturdays in Lent. (3.) Becauſe they Eat the Blood of Beaſts, and things Strangled. (4.) Becauſe they did not Sing ALLELUIAH in Lent. At the ſame time Michael Cerularius order'd the Churches of the Latins who were at Conſtantinople to be ſhut up, and to deprive the Abbots and Latin Religious, who would not renounce the Ceremonies of the Roman Church, of the Monaſteries which they held in that City.

The Letter of Leo IX. to Cerularius. This Letter of Michael being brought into Italy by an Officer of the Emperor Conſtantine Monomachus, who went thither to carry on a Treaty with the Pope againſt the Normans, was communicated to Cardinal Humbert, who was at Trani; he turn'd it into Latin, and ſent a Copy of it to Pope Leo. This Pope wrote upon that Subject a Letter to Cerularius and to Leo of Acridia, wherein he extols the Dignity of the Church of Rome, and complains of the unkind uſage which the Greeks had ſhewn to the Latins at Conſtantinople without diſcanting on any of the particular Points. He only obſerv'd in general, that the Diverſity of Ceremonies is no lawful Foundation for the breach of the unity of the Church. This is the firſt Letter of Leo, of which we have made mention in another place.

The Letter of the Greek Emperor to the Pope. The Greek Emperor, whoſe intereſt it was to hold it fair with the Pope, that he might ſtill be Maſter of that little which he had in the Weſt, wrote him a Letter, whereby he declares that he was willing to procure the Union of both Churches: And the Patriarch of Conſtantinople took notice to him likewiſe that he deſir'd the ſame. The Pope who as much deſired this reunion as the Greeks, as well for the Welfare of the Church, as becauſe he was willing to be ſecur'd againſt the Normans in Apulia, the next Year ſent three Legats to Conſtantinople, viz. Cardinal Humbert Biſhop of Blancheſolva, Cardinal Frederick Arch-deacon and Chancellor of the Church of Rome; and Peter Arch-biſhop of Melphi.

The Legation of the Pope to Conſtantinople. He ſent them with Letters to the Emperor and to the Patriarch, wherein he commends the Zeal which the Emperor expreſs'd for the Peace of the Church, and complain'd of the Patriarch's Proceedings againſt the Church of Rome, even at a time when he pretended to be deſirous of Peace. Theſe are the ſixth and ſeventh Letters of Leo. In that which is directed to the Patriarch he upbraids him with four Things of which mention is made * before, and which 'tis not thought fit to repeat. This Letter is dated in January, 1054.

* P. 25, 26.

Humbert preſents the Writings and Letters to the Emperor of Greece. The Legats being arriv'd at Conſtantinople on the Feaſt of S. John Baptiſt, were kindly receiv'd by the Emperor Humbert, who was the Spokeſman who preſented to that Prince the Pope's Letters, and gave Michael that which was directed to him. He likewiſe preſented to the Emperor a Writing which he had Compos'd in anſwer to the Letter of Cerularius, with with a Refutation of the Treatise compos'd by Nicetas Pectoratus Monk of Studia, against the Practices of the Latins. The Emperor having caus'd them to be turn'd into Greek, made them to be Publish'd in Constantinople, concealing the Names of Humbert and Michael under those of Romanus and Constantinopolitanus.

In the Reply to the Letter of Cerularius, Humbert accuses the Greeks of tolerating Heretick among them, and surpassing all of them in their Rashness; because they had the Confidence to confront the Church of Rome, and to Anathematize it openly; which never any Heretick dar'd to do. He afterwards demonstrates that 'tis a piece of Malice to accuse the Latins of imitating the Jews in Unleaven'd Bread, and in the Sabbath: Since they observe not the Ceremonies of their Passovers; and are so far from Feasting on their Sabbath, that they Fast on that Day. That this reflected rather on the Greeks, who spent the Saturday in Mirth, as if it were a festival Day. He proves that the Unleaven'd is the true Bread, and enlarges himself on the Advantages and mystical Significations, which it may have. He observes that the Bread which is offer'd in the Church of Rome is a great deal more proper and convenient than that which the Greeks make use of; because 'tis made in the Vestry with fine Wheat, and clear Water by the Ministers of the Altar, and they offer a whole Loaf: Whereas the Greeks make use of all manner of Bread, of which they cut a round Piece to put upon the Altar, and return or interr the Remainder, a Practice which Humbert Condemns as contrary to the Respect due to those Holy Mysteries. As to the second Charge, relating to the Saturday's Fast, Humbert only replies in one Word, that the Latins do not Feast on the Sabbath or Saturday, as do the Jews, neither in Lent nor out of Lent. As to the third Point relating to things Strangled, he says that the Latins make use of that Liberty which the Apostle has given them, of eating all manner of Meats; but withal observing the Custom of the Churches wherein they Live, that they might give no occasion of Offence. He adds, that they likewise abhor Eating of Blood, or the Flesh of such Animals as are Drown'd or Stifled, and that they enjoyn Pennance to those who do it: But as to Beasts kill'd or taken in Hunting, 'tis their Custom to eat thereof without any Scruple. In short, as to the last Head, which relates to the omission of singing ALLELUIAH in Lent, He makes it appear that the Latins do not omit it out of any Aversion thereto; but that they look upon it as an Hymn of Thanksgiving, which is not so suitable to that holy time of Pennance and Humiliation. In this Treatise he speaks very sharply against the Greeks, whom by way of Induction he accuses of being Marcionites, Manichees, Theopaschites, &c. He upbraids them with Re-baptizing the Latins; with suffering Children to Dye without Baptism, if they be not eight Days old; with interring the remainder of the Holy Eucharist; with permitting marry'd Men to wait at the Altars, even at a time when they have had to do with their Wives, when at the same time they refus'd to give the Communion to Women newly brought to Bed, or who have their usual Infirmities upon them; with tolerating Sarabait Monks guilty of Fornication, whereas they blam'd the Rule of S. Benedict, which allows the Monks of that Order to wear Breeches in a Journey, and to eat of Flesh when they have occasion for it; and lastly because they represent in their Crucifixes the figure of a dying Man, so that upon the Cross of JESUS CHRIST a sort of Anti-Christ is exhibited to be ador'd as a God.

Humbert's Reply to the Letter of Cerularius.

Is it not a great Sign that Cardinal Humbert and the other great Men of these Times had little to do, when they thus left the Substance to hunt after the mere Shadow of Religion?

The writing of Nicetas Pectoratus, a Studite Monk, against the Latin Church is a great deal more fierce than the Letter of Michael Cerularius. He begins with an Admonition to the Latins, to hearken with Humility and Charity to the Remonstrances which he would offer to them, concerning Unleavened Bread, the Fast on Saturday, and the Marriage of Priests. Upon the first Point he says, That those who make use of Unleavened Bread are still under the shadow of the Law: That they assist at the Table of the Jews, and do not eat that Bread which is Supersubstantial, or Consubstantial to us; because Unleavened Bread is Dead Bread which has no Virtue or Efficacy in it: That 'tis not such Bread as is perfect, compleat, or compos'd of three Things which figure out to us the Body of JESUS CHRIST, which are the Leaven, the Meal, and the Water; representations of the Spirit, the Water, and the Blood of our Saviour. He pretends that JESUS CHRIST made use of Leaven'd Bread in the Institution of the Holy Eucharist; because he instituted it on the Thirteenth, and not on the Fourteenth Day of the Moon of March before the Feast of Unleavened Bread; and that the Apostles forbad the making use of Unleavened Bread. As to the second Point, he asks the Latins upon what they ground the Fast on Saturday, since S. Clement has instituted the Fasts on Wednesday and Friday, because JESUS CHRIST was betray'd on Wednesday, and fasten'd to the Cross on Friday: But that he prohibited the Fast on Saturday, since there was not the least colour for it. He moreover Cites the Canons of the Apostles, the Constitutions of S. Clement, and a Canon which is attributed to the sixth Council. He likewise found fault that the Latins did celebrate the whole Mass on Fast Days; and to refute this Custom he produc'd a Canon of the Apostles, several Canons of the Councils of Gangres and Laodicea, and of the Council of Trullo; which he again Cites under the name of the sixth Council, which he makes use of to Authorise the Laſtly upon the laſt Head, which is concerning the Marriage of Prieſts, he ask'd the Latins who taught them to hinder marry'd Perſons from being ordain'd Prieſts, or to force them to part from their Wives? He confured this Cuſtom by the Conſtitutions of S. Clement, and by the Council of Trullo. He concludes this Treatiſe with an Exhortation to the Latins to ſubmit to his Admonitions, or to produce manifeſt Authorities from the Holy Scriptures to juſtify their Cuſtoms.

Humbert's Reply to Nicetas. Humbert in his Reply begins with caſting Reflections and Reproaches on this Monk, and took it very ill that he (contrary to the Duties of his Profeſſion) ſhould concern himſelf in writing againſt the Roman Church. He rejects his Thought concerning the Conſubſtantiality of the Leaven'd Bread, as a Chimera bred only in his own Brain; and his Application of the Paſſage out of S. John concerning the Spirit, the Water, and the Blood, as wreſting the true Senſe of the Scripture: And he takes an occaſion to charge him with Hereſie, becauſe he had ſaid that the Quickning Spirit remain'd in the Body of JESUS CHRIST after his Death. He does not enlarge himſelf much about the uſe of Unleavened Bread, ſuppoſing that he had ſaid enough in his Reply to Michal Cerularius; he only obſerves that it cannot be ſaid that JESUS CHRIST celebrated the Paſſover the thirteenth of the Moon of March, and with Leaven'd Bread, becauſe if it had been ſo, he would have been guilty of a double Breach of the Law, which he had obſerv'd in all its parts with the greateſt ſtrictneſs imaginable. He rejects the Conſtitutions and Canons of the Apoſtles, except the firſt Fifty, as Apocryphal Pieces. He pretends, that after the Sixth Council, the Emperor Conſtantine Heraclius having ask'd the Pope's Legats after what manner they celebrated the Euchariſt, they return'd this Anſwer, viz. That they made uſe of Wine mingled with Water, and of Unleavened Bread; and that the Emperor approv'd of the Tradition of the Holy Apoſtolical See. This is a Matter of Fact of Humbert's advancing that cannot be met with in any Record: As to what concerns the Saturday's Faſt, he ſays that ſince the Greeks think it requiſite to Faſt every Wedneſday and Friday in the Year, becauſe our Saviour was betray'd and Crucified on thoſe Days, and ſince they were likewiſe willing to Faſt on Holy Saturday, becauſe of his remaining in the Sepulchre on that Day, they ought for the ſame Reaſon either to Faſt every Saturday in the Year, or elſe to Faſt only on the Wedneſday and Friday of the Holy Week, and to celebrate Eaſter Sunday only in Honour of the Reſurrection of our Saviour. He rejects the Canons of the Council of Trullo, as ſuppoſitious or corrupted; he diſapproves of the making uſe of preconſecrated Bread on Faſt-days, as being contray to the Practice of the Apoſtles, and the example of JESUS CHRIST, who conſecrated the Bread juſt before they diſtributed it. He calls Nicetas a perfidious Stercomaniſt, becauſe he ſeems to ſuppoſe that the Euchariſt broke the Faſt, from whence he concludes that he believ'd that the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST were of the ſame nature with other Aſſments, and were turn'd into Excrements. He ſays that in the Latin Church they uſually celebrated Maſs on Sundays and Holydays at the * Tierce Hour, and on
* A Popiſh Canonical Hour. Faſt-days at Noon, or about Night; but that when neceſſity required, it might be celebrated at any Hour without breaking one's Faſt. He reproves the Greeks, becauſe in breaking the Conſecrated Bread they took no Care to gather up the Crumbs which fell; becauſe they rub'd their Patines with Leaves, or a Bruſh; becauſe they crouded the Conſecrated Bread into their Boxes, by thruſting it down with their Hands; becauſe in elevating the Conſecrated Bread, at the Maſs of the Preconſecrated Bread, they ſeem'd to offer one and the ſame Oblation twice; becauſe they did not obſerve the Decretal of Pope Clement, who requir'd that no more Hoſts ſhould be Conſecrated than what were ſufficient for the Communicants, and that if any were left, they ſhould not be kept till the Morrow, but be conſum'd; becauſe immediately after they had communicated they fell to Eating; becauſe that a great many of them did not obſerve Lent, and becauſe ſeveral others faſted only a Week, the which they ſtil'd the Lent of Theodorus. Laſtly, he charges Nicetas with being a Nicolaitan, becauſe he oppos'd the Celibacy of Prieſts and Deacons. He explains the Canons which prohibit Prieſts from parting with their Wives; of the Care which they ought to take of them, in looking upon them ſtill as their Wives, tho' they have no Carnal Knowledg of them. He produces the Canon of the Council of Nice, concerning Women who live with Clerks, and ſeveral Authorities of the Popes, to prove that Prieſts ought to live chaſtly.

In

In short, he charges the Greeks for not ordaining Ministers till after they had oblig'd them to Marry, and concludes all by anathematizing Nicetas.

Cardinal Humbert was not satisfied with having refuted this Monk in so blunt a way, he was willing likewise to make him recant; and when he went with the Emperor and the other Legats to the Monastery of Studius, he oblig'd him to Condemn and Burn his own Writing, and to anathematize all those who deny'd that the Church of Rome was the chief Church of the World, and who Dar'd to call its Doctrin into Question. The next Day Nicetas went himself to wait upon the Legats at the Palace of Pigi, without the City, where they resided; and after he had a second time Condemn'd what he had written or done against the Holy See, he was admitted into their Communion, and became one of their Friends. But as for Michael Cerularius he was not so forward to revoke what he had written; on the contrary he avoided meeting with the Legats, and holding any Conference with them. When the Legats perceiv'd that he continu'd Obstinate, they went July the Sixteenth, which happen'd to be a Saturday, to the Church of St. Sophia about Nine a Clock, when they were just upon celebrating Mass; and after they had complain'd of the Obstinacy of Michael Cerularius, they lay'd on the high Altar in the presence both of Clergy and Laity, a Sentence of Excommunication against that Patriarch, drawn up in these Terms.

The Retractation of Nicetas.

The Excommunication of Michael Cerularius by the Pope's Legats.

HUMBERT, by the Grace of God, Cardinal Bishop of the Holy Church of Rome, PETER Arch-bishop of Melphi, FREDERICK Deacon and Chancellor, to all the Sons of the Catholick Church Greeting.

The Holy Apostolick See of Rome, which is the Chief of the whole World, to which as to the Head belongs in a more especial manner the Care of all the Churches; has sent us to this Royal City in the quality of its Legats for the Welfare and Peace of the Church, that as it is Written, we should go down and see whether the Cries which pierce its Ears from this great City be true or no. Let therefore the Emperors, Clergy, Senate and People of this City of Constantinople know, That we have here found more Good to excite our Joy, than Evil to raise our Sorrow. For as to the Supporters of the Empire, and the principal Citizens, the City is wholly Christian and Orthodox: But as for Michael, who took upon him the false title of Patriarch, and his Adherents, we have found that they have sown Discord and Heresie in the midst of this City, because they sell the Gifts of God like the Simoniacal; because they imitate the Valesians, in causing Eunuchs to take upon them Holy Orders, and in advancing them to the Episcopacy it self; because they Re-baptiz'd, as did the Arians, those who had been Baptiz'd in the Name of the Blessed Trinity, and particularly the Latins; because with the Donatists they maintain that the Greek Church is the only true Church, and that the Sacrifices and Baptism of none else are Valid; because with the Nicolaitans they allow of Priests cohabiting with their Wives; because with the Severians they enjoyn'd the Observation of the Law of Moses; because they have struck out of the Creed the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Person of the Son, as the Pneumatomachi (that is the Macedons, who deny'd the Divinity of the Holy Ghost;) because with the Manichees they ascrib'd a Soul to the Leaven'd Bread; because with the Nazarens they were such strict observers of the Legal Purity, that they would not Baptize Infants, who dy'd within eight Days after they were Born, nor admit Women in Travail, or who had the usual Infirmities of Nature upon them, to Baptism or the Communion; and lastly, because they Condemn'd and Excommunicated those who shav'd their Beards, according to the Custom of the Roman Church. Michael having been advertis'd of these Errors, and reprov'd for several other proceedings by the Letter of Pope Leo, has still persisted in them, and when that we would have apply'd a Remedy to these Evils, he refus'd to appear before, or to have any Conference with us, and has likewise forbad our entrance into the Churches to perform Divine Service therein, forasmuch as he had formerly shut up the Churches of the Latins, calling them Azymitæ, Persecuting and Excommunicating them, all which reflected on the Holy See, in contempt whereof he stil'd himself OECUMENICAL or UNIVERSAL PATRIARCH. Wherefore not being able any longer to tolerate such an unheard of Abuse as was offer'd to the Holy Apostolical See; and looking upon it as a Violation of the Catholick Faith in several Instances: By the Authority of the Holy Trinity, by the Authority of the Holy Apostolical See, whereof We are Legats, by the Authority of all the Orthodox Fathers, the Seven Councils, and the whole Catholick Church, WE do Subscribe to the Anathema which our most Holy Father the Pope has denounc'd against Michael and his Adherents, if they do not retract their Errors; and in pursuance hereof we declare that Michael, stiling himself Patriarch, a Novice, who was made Monk only by the fear of Men, one of a dissolute and Vicious Life; Leo of Acridia, stiling himself Bishop; Constantine, Michael's Chaplain, who had trodden under Foot the Sacrifices of the Latins; and all the followers of their Errors, and the abetters of their Proceedings are Anathematiz'd, with the Simonists, Valesians, Arrians, Donatists, Nicolaitans, Severians, Pneumatomachi, Manichees, Nazarens, and all the other Hereticks, or rather with the Devil and his Angels, if they do not Repent. At the same time in the presence of the Emperor and his Court they pronounc'd viva voce, an Excommunication against all those, who should contradict the Faith of the Church of Rome, or condemn it's Sacrifice; and declar'd that ſuch Perſons ought not to be look'd upon as Chriſtians, but as Hereticks.

The Departure of the Pope's Legats.

After they had publiſh'd theſe Excommunications, they ſet in order the Latin Churches; prohibited under pain of Excommunication, the receiving the Communion from the Hand of any Greek Prieſt, who ſhould Condemn the Sacrifice of the Latin Church. And when they had taken leave of the Emperor, they went out of Conſtantinople, July the 17th, and ſet forward on their Journey homeward. But the Emperor caus'd them to return again on the 19th of the ſame Month, at the inſtance of Michael Cerularius, who promis'd him to enter into a Conference with them. The deſign of this Patriarch was to draw them into the Church of St. Sophia, under colour of holding a Council there, and to cauſe them to be ſton'd by the People, by reading to them the Legat's Decree of Excommunication, which he had corrupted in Tranſlating it, in order to render it the more odious. The Emperor foreſeeing what would happen, would not permit the Legats to appear in any Aſſembly out of his Preſence. Michael having refus'd this Offer, the Emperor ſent the Legats away; which incens'd that Patriarch ſo far, that after he had excommunicated them by a Publick Writing, he rais'd an Inſurrection againſt the Emperor himſelf, who was forc'd to deliver up the Legats Interpreters, who were abus'd and caſt into Priſon. The Legats ſent the Emperor, by his Courriers, a true Copy of the Excommunication which they had denounc'd againſt Cerularius, by which that Patriarch was convicted of being an Impoſtor. This occaſion'd an entire Rupture between the Patriarch and the Emperor, who drove out of his Court all the Relations and Friends whom Michael had there, and would never have pardon'd him, if he had liv'd longer. But he dy'd the ſame Year, leaving the Empire to Theodora Porphyrogenita, Daughter to Conſtantine, and Siſter to Zoe, under whom as well as under Michael Strationicus, to whom ſhe left the Empire, dying within two Years after. Cerularius continu'd in quiet Poſſeſſion of the Patriarchſhip, and grew ſo great, that he oblig'd the latter to reſign the Empire in the Year 1057. to Iſaac Commenius. By this means, the Church of Conſtantinople was wholly ſeparated from the Church of Rome; and theſe two Churches, which till then, were in a manner tolerated and treated with Reſpect, were look'd upon as Enemies, Schiſmaticks and Hereticks, and became almoſt irreconcilable through the fault of the Greeks.

The Letter of Dominick Patriarch of Grado to Peter of Antioch.

Within a while after the Latins endeavour'd to withdraw Peter Patriarch of Antioch from Communion with the Patriarch of Conſtantinople. They thought this the more feaſible becauſe that Patriarch immediately after his Advancement, had writ to Pope Leo, who had return'd him an Anſwer, whereby he approv'd of the Profeſſion of Faith which he had ſent him, and took notice to him, of his being very well inclin'd to carry on the Union of both Churches. The Patriarch of Grado nam'd Dominick, who held the greateſt Correſpondence with the Greeks, becauſe the Provinces of Venice and Iſtria belong'd to his Patriarchſhip, was order'd to write to Peter of Antioch about it. He did it in ſuch a manner as might have engag'd that Patriarch to enter into the Intereſts of the Church of Rome. For in the beginning of his Letter he declares, that without mentioning the Submiſſion, the Deference, and the Amity which ought to be had for the Church of Antioch, which is the Siſter of the Church of Rome, and the ſecond Church of the World: The Reputation of his Piety and the particular Eſteem which he had for his Perſon, inclin'd him to deſire an Intereſt in his Reſpects, and to wiſh to be in an entire Friendſhip with him. He tells him that he thought himſelf oblig'd to let him know that his Church had been Founded by St. Mark, that St. Peter conferr'd upon it the Dignity of a Patriarchal See, and that he had the Right of Pope in the Councils which were held in Italy: That he would inform him upon what theſe Privileges were Founded, when they could come to have a Correſpondence with each other by Letters, but that at preſent he only wrote to him to have the happineſs of being acquainted with him, and to begin a Friendſhip which might be hereafter Corroborated: That however he could not forbear acquainting him, that he underſtood that the Clergy of Conſtantinople blam'd the Church of Rome, becauſe it celebrated the Holy Myſteries with Unleaven'd Bread, and believ'd by reaſon of that, that the Latins were ſeparated from the Unity of the Church; that tho' the Latins make uſe of Unleaven'd Bread, according to the Tradition of JESUS CHRIST and the Apoſtles, yet they Condemn'd not the Cuſtom of the Greek Church, becauſe as the mixture of Leaven with the Meal may be the Figure of the Incarnation of JESUS CHRIST, ſo the Unleaven'd Bread may likewiſe repreſent the Purity of the Fleſh of JESUS CHRIST. That therefore he thought it expedient that he ſhould advertiſe the Greeks not to Condemn the Cuſtom of the Latins, nor to maintain that all their Sacrifices were null, and that they were out of the Road to Eternal Salvation.

The Anſwer of Peter of Antioch, to the Patriarch of Grado.

Peter Patriarch of Antioch, anſwer'd him with a great deal of Integrity, without approving of his Opinion concerning the uſe of Unleaven'd Bread, or his Pretentions concerning the Patriarchſhip. For he makes it appear to him by his Letter, that there were never acknowledg'd in the Church any more than Five Patriarchs, and that the Biſhops of the Capital Cities of Provinces, greater than His, never aſſum'd this Quality. And with reſpect to the uſe of Unleaven'd Bread, he at firſt excuſes the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, by ſaying, that he does not abſolutely Condemn the Latins as Hereticks; but was only ſorry that they ſwerv'd from the ancient Tradition of the Church, and did not make uſe of Perfect, but of Unleaven'd Bread, in Imitation of the Jews. He afterwards oppoſes this Uſage by ſeveral Arguments, but particularly by the Paſſages of the Goſpel, which ſeem to prove that JESUS CHRIST inſtituted the Euchariſt before the Feaſt of the Paſſover, and at a time when they did not as yet make uſe of Unleaven'd Bread. At the Cloſe of his Letter he takes notice that two Years ago he had wrote to Pope Leo in the beginning of his Popedom, to which he had not as yet received any Anſwer, and that he deſir'd he might have a Sight of this.

Michael Cerularius on the contrary wrote to Peter of Antioch, to engage him to declare openly againſt the Church of Rome. After he had thank'd him in the beginning of his Letter, for having at his Recommendation granted to a Deacon a Place which he had demanded of him, he gives him to underſtand, that having ſome time ſince heard that the laſt deceaſed Pope was a Virtuous, Honeſt and Learned Man, he had writ to him with a great deal of Humility about the Re-union of the two Churches, in order to procure his Favour, that he might give ſome Aſſiſtance to the Greeks againſt the Normans: That having committed this Letter to an Officer of the Emperors, who carry'd likewiſe another from that Prince, they were put into the Hands of Duke Argyrus, who detain'd them, as well as the Mony which the Emperor had ſent by that Officer: That Argyrus thought fit to ſend three Perſons to Conſtantinople in the quality of Legats of the Holy See, whereof one had formerly been Arch-biſhop of Melphi, who he underſtood had been turn'd out of his Church five Years ago: Another had only the Title of Arch-biſhop, but where his Dioceſs lay none could tell; and to the Third he had given the Title of Chancellor: That theſe Three Men having accoſted the Emperor with a fierce and arrogant Air, cauſed the Croſs and the Paſtoral Rod to be carry'd before them: That afterwards they gave him a Viſit, but in a way of Inſolence and Contempt: And that without ſaluting him, or paying him the Reſpects which were due to him, they clap'd into his Hands a Letter ſealed up, which contain'd the ſame things concerning Unleaven'd Bread, as Argyrus had formerly advanc'd whilſt he ſtay'd at Conſtantinople, for the which he had been Excommunicated: But that having examin'd the Seal he found it was falſe, and that it was nothing but a piece of Forgery of this Argyrus; as he had afterwards been aſſur'd by the Arch-biſhop of Trani, and by his Chancellor, who had unravel'd the whole Myſtery to him. After he had given this Account of that Tranſaction, he ſays, That it was Reported of him that he inſerted the Names of the Popes in the Church Regiſters, and that the Patriarchs of Alexandria and Jeruſalem did the ſame: That however he did not ſuppoſe them ſo Ignorant, but that they knew that ſince the time of Pope Vigilius, who would not pronounce an Anathema againſt the Writings of Theodoret, and the Letter of Ibas, there was no notice taken of the Biſhops of Rome, in the Churches of the Eaſt: That he likewiſe heard, that theſe two Patriarchs admitted to their Communion thoſe who celebrated with Unleaven'd Bread, and that they made uſe of the ſame ſometimes themſelves: That not being fully ſatisfied of this matter of Fact, he left him to the Liberty of inquiring into it, and deſired he would ſend him Word how the Caſe was: That moreover he had read the Letter which he had written to the Patriarch of Grado, wherein he oppos'd the making uſe of Unleaven'd Bread: But that the Latins hold a great many other Errors, which ought to be rejected; ſuch as believing that one might Eat Things Strangled, that Men ought to be Shaven, to obſerve the Sabbath, to Eat unclean Things, that Monks might be permitted to Eat Fleſh and Bacon: That one might Eat Fleſh in the firſt Week of Lent, and in the Weeks wherein one ought to abſtain from Fleſh and Milk, as well as on every Wedneſday in the Year: That they were guilty of Eating Cheeſe and Eggs in the Holy Week; of Faſting on Saturdays, all of them being Cuſtoms belonging to the Jews; of having added to the Creed, that the Holy Ghoſt proceeds from the Father and the Son; of not permitting Prieſts to be Married; of allowing two Brothers to Marry two Siſters; of obſerving that one of the Miniſters of the Altar who has Eaten Unleaven'd Bread, ſhall embrace the reſt in the Sacrifice, by giving Pax Vobis to them; of giving to the Biſhops a Ring which they wear on their Thumb; of Baptizing only with one Immerſion; of not honouring the Relicks of the Saints, and ſeveral of them not ſo much as Images; of not reckoning among the Saints the Doctors of the Greek Church, ſuch as St. Gregory the Theologue, St. Baſil the Great and St. Chryſoſtom the Divine, and of not obſerving their Doctrin: But what is more ſtrange is, that when they were at Conſtantinople they declar'd that they were not come to enter into a Diſpute, nor to be inform'd of the Differences that might be between them, but to teach and perſwade others to hold their Tenets

The Letter of Cerularius to Peter of Antioch.

There is likewiſe another Letter of Cerularius to the ſame Patriarch of Antioch, wherein he gave him a particular Account of what the Pope's Legats, (whom he ſtill imagins to be Impoſtors ſent by Argyrus, who had trump'd up theſe falſe Letters) had done againſt him at Conſtantinople, by excommunicating him, and exhorts that Patriarch to joyn with him in revenging the Affront.

The Anſwer of Peter of Antioch to Cerularius.

Peter of Antioch reply'd to Michael Cerularius, That he wonder'd that Argyrus, who was a Laick, ſhould concern himſelf in the diſpoſal of the Affairs of the Church, and make uſe of ſuch Artifices as he had acquainted him with: That the Name of the Pope was not in the Regiſters of the Church of Antioch; but that it could not be truly ſaid that even ſince the Time of Pope Vigilius, the Name of the Biſhop of Rome had been left out of the Regiſters of the Greek Church: That it was a groſs Omiſſion in his Secretary; ſince in the Sixth Council, held One hundred and twenty nine Years after Vigilius, Pope Agatho was recogniz'd: That when he himſelf was at Conſtantinople, about Five and forty Years ago, in the Time of Domnus the Patriarch, he found the Name of Pope Sergius in the Regiſters among the reſt of the other Patriarchs; and that he could not tell upon what Grounds it had ſince been left out: That of the Errors and Faults which in his Letter he attributed to the Latins, there were ſome which ought to be avoided and abhor'd, ſeveral others which it were eaſie to remedy; and laſtly, others at which it would be proper to connive. "For (ſays he) what is it to Us, if "their Biſhops do ſhave their Beards, and wear Rings on their Fingers? Do not we make a "Crown upon our Heads, and do not we wear Gloves, Maniples and Stoles embroyder'd with "Gold? Will not you likewiſe find ſome of our Monks who eat Fleſh and Bacon? Do not "the Monks of Bythinia, Thrace and Lydia, eat Magpies, Jays and Turtle-Doves? Do not "the Holy Fathers leave us at liberty to eat indifferently of all manner of Things which "God has Created? In particular he demonſtrates, that St. Baſil and St. Pacomius allow'd their Religious to eat Bacon. But he does not paſs the ſame Judgment on what was added to the Creed, and he pretends that 'tis a very great abuſe, as well as to Baptize with only one Immerſion: However, he thinks it requiſite to be of a Temper inclinable to Peace, becauſe the Latins are their Brethren, altho' through Ruſticity or Ignorance, they might be in ſome Errors: That ſo punctual an exactneſs could not be expected from Barbarians; that it was very well that they held the true Doctrin about the Trinity and the Incarnation: That he blam'd them for their Cuſtom relating to the Celibacy of Prieſts, and for their eating Fleſh and Cheeſe the firſt Week in Lent. That as to the Queſtion about Unleavened Bread, he had handled that in the Letter which he wrote to the Patriarch of Venice; and that he was of Opinion, that every Church ought therein to obſerve its ancient Cuſtoms; that as to that part of their Charge, of eating Things ſtrangled, and of allowing one and the ſame Perſon to Marry two Siſters; it was to be believ'd, that this was not among them by the approbation of the Pope and the Biſhops, but by the abuſe of ſome particular Perſons, as there are a great many of the ſame Nature in the Eaſt, which 'tis very difficult to aboliſh. That moreover, he ought to inſiſt particularly on the Addition to the Creed, and on the Marriage of Prieſts: That with Reſpect to the other Articles, it was not requiſite to ſtand much upon them, becauſe they are ſuch as do not concern the Faith, and becauſe moſt of them are falſe. That therefore he thought it proper, that being thus inclin'd, he ſhould write to the Pope who was to be elected, who perhaps would diſown what is impos'd on the Latins, or elſe alter his Mind: That no Perſon can imagine that the Romans do not honour Relicks and Images, ſince they ſet ſo high a Value on the Relicks of St. Peter and St. Paul; ſince Pope Adrian by his Legats was Preſident of the Seventh Council, and Condemn'd the Iconoclaſts; and ſince it was obſervable that ſeveral Images were brought from Rome, and that the Latins honour'd them. He therefore conjur'd the Patriarch of Conſtantinople to think upon an Accommodation, and to require nothing of the Latins beſide the ſtriking out the Addition which they had made to the Creed. Laſtly, He acquaints him that he ſends him Indors'd, the Letter which Pope Leo had written to him; and that the Letters which he had directed to the Patriarchs of Alexandria and Jeruſalem, he had convey'd to them. Theſe Four Letters have been Publiſh'd in Greek and Latin by Monſieur Cotelier, in the ſecond Tome of his Monuments of the Greek Church.

A New Attempt made for the Reuniting the Greek and the Latin Churches.

Tho' this Action of Cardinal Humbert ſeem'd to put a ſtop to the Re-union of the two Churches, yet the Popes were not quite out of hopes of bringing it about. For this purpoſe, Stephen IX. reſolv'd upon ſending Didier Abbot of Mount Caſſin, and two other Legats to Conſtantinople, who ſet forward upon that deſign in the beginning of the Year 1058. but being detain'd at Bari by the badneſs of the Seaſon, they there heard the News of that Pope's Death, and return'd home again. That ſame Year Michael Cerularius building too much upon the Obligation under which the Emperor Iſaac Commenus lay to him, was for aſſuming to himſelf too great an Authority, threatning the Emperor himſelf. That if he did not follow his Councils, he would be an Inſtrument of making him loſe that Crown which he had procur'd for him. This impudent Boldneſs, and his Pride in wearing Purple colour'd Shoes and Stockings, and in ſaying, That there was no difference between the Sacerdotal Office and the Empire, made Iſaac reſolve to Out him. But foraſmuch as Michael was belov'd by the People of Conſtantinople, he took an opportunity to cauſe him to be apprehended, when he went on the Feaſt of All-Saints to perform his Office in a Church of the Suburbs of that City. He ſent thither ſeveral of his Soldiers, who pull'd the Patriarch out of his Epiſcopal Chair, and carry'd him immediately to the next Sea-Port, where they embark'd him and his Relations, to be convey'd into Exile to Proconeſſus. The Emperor had a great mind to cauſe him to be depos'd in a Council; but he durſt not attempt it, becauſe Michael was a Man of great Parts, and had great Friends. The death of that Patriarch put an end to his Troubles, but made no alteration in the Affairs of the Church; nor did it procure the Re-union of the two Churches, which ever after remain'd divided, tho' frequent attempts have been made to re-unite them, and tho' there have been several Treaties between them, which never lasted long, by reason of the Inconstancy of the Greeks.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Life and Writings of PETER DAMIEN, Cardinal Bishop of OSTIA.

PETER firnam'd Damien from the Name of his Brother, was born at Ravenna the beginning of the Eleventh Century. He was descended from an honourable Family, and his Parents took care to bestow upon him good Education; and in his very Youth he was noted for his singular Piety. After he had went through the whole course of his Studies, he retir'd into the Monastery of the Holy Cross of Avellane near Engulio, the Monks of which place are call'd Hermits, because they spent their Lives in great Retirement, tho' in Common and under an Abbot. He was call'd by Guy Abbot of Pomposio to reform his Monastery. At two Years end he return'd to Avellane, where he was made Prior, and afterwards Abbot of that Monastery, which in a short time he augmented, and Founded several others, where the same Rule was observ'd. He was in so great a Repute and Esteem, that he was nominated Cardinal, and made Bishop of Ostia by Pope Stephen IX. He likewise held by way of Commendam the Bishoprick of Engulio, and began to have a great share in the Affairs of the Church of Rome. In the Year 1059. under the Pontificat of Nicholas II. he was sent Legat to Milan, to reform the Clergy of that Church, where Simony was publickly practis'd. He acquitted himself in this Legation with a great deal of Authority and Prudence, and return'd after he had caus'd an Order to be made, to prevent this and such like disorders for the time to come. Some time after, he resolv'd upon quitting his Bishopricks, and the Employments which he had at large in the World, and to retire into Solitude; he thereupon resign'd them into the Hands of Pope Alexander II. and return'd back to his own Monastery. However, this did not prevent him from having great concerns with the Popes, Bishops and Noblemen, who ask'd his Advice, and made use of him in Matters of the highest Importance. Alexander II. sent him as his Legat into France, to put an end to the Difference there on Foot between the Bishop of Mascon and the Abbot of Cluny, concerning the Privileges of that Abbey. He held a Council at Challons, wherein he made several Orders; confirm'd the Privileges granted by the Popes to the Abbey of Cluny, and made the Bishop of Mascon to consent thereto. He was likewise sent by the same Pope to Florence, to put a stop to the Schism which was between Peter, Bishop of that City, and his Clergy. Afterwards in the Year 1068. he went as Legat into Germany, to hinder the Emperor Henry from being divorc'd from his Wife Bertha. Some time after he took a Journey to the Monastery of Mount Cassin, to consolate the Religious of that place. Lastly, In the Year 1072. he was sent by the same Pope to Ravenna, to take off the Excommunication issu'd, a long time since, against that City, because of the Differences which Henry Bishop of Ravenna, lately deceas'd, had with the Holy See. After he had discharg'd the Commission, he dy'd the 23d of February the Year ensuing at Fayance, being Sixty six Years Old.

Peter Damien, Cardinal Bishop of Ostia.

The Works of this Author, in the last Edition, are divided into Four Tomes.

The First contains the Letters, rang'd in Eight Books, according to the Quality of the Persons to whom they were written; of which the First is compos'd of the Letters which are directed to the Popes.

His Letters to the Popes.

The First is to Gregory VI. whom he congratulates upon his advancement to the Popedom, exhorts to root out Simony, and admonishes to depose the Bishop of Pesaro.

The Second is directed to the same Pope; he gives him to understand, That the Man who was elected Bishop of Fossombrona, was not altogether worthy of the Episcopacy, because of his Ambition; but that yet he was to be preferr'd to a great many others, and that in other Respects he had the Qualifications necessary to a Bishop.

The Third is to Clement II. to whom he writes word, That the Emperor had order'd him to wait upon him, to inform him of the Abuses of several Churches, and of what he thought necessary to put a stop to them; that being upon his Journey, he had receiv'd a Letter from that Prince which was directed to him; that being return'd to his Solitude he sent it to him, where he waits for his Orders to depart. He declares on the one Hand, That he would be very well satisfied to be excus'd from the Journey, that so he might not lose his Time in going and coming; but that on the other hand, he could not but be mov'd with the misera-rable Condition of the Churches of his Country, which were in a ſtrange Confuſion, by reaſon of the Irregularity of the Biſhops and Abbots. He remonſtrates to him, That it ſignified nothing that the Holy See was paſs'd from Darkneſs to Light, if the reſt of the Churches were ſtill in Darkneſs, and exhorts him to apply ſome ſpeedy Remedy to theſe Evils, and to puniſh the Biſhop of Fano.

The Fourth is to Leo IX. He therein complains for that this Pope had given too lightly Credit to the Calumnies rais'd againſt him, and he calls God to witneſs how Innocent he was.

The Fifth is to Victor II. He remonſtrates to this Pope, That he ought to protect a Lord who had devoted himſelf to the Service of God, and whom they would diſpoſſeſs of his Eſtate.

The Sixth, directed to Nicholas II. is amongſt the Opuſcula of this Author, of which it makes the Seventeenth.

The Seventh is to the ſame Pope. He congratulates him for that the Church was in Peace under his Pontificate; and Petitions him in behalf of the Inhabitants of Ancona, who had been excommunicated.

In the Eighth, directed to Pope Nicholas and the Arch-deacon Hildebrand, he deſires to quit his Biſhoprick, ſince they had diveſted him both of his Sacerdotal Habits, and of his Revenues.

The Ninth and Tenth are among the Opuſcula, and they make the Nineteenth and Twentieth of them.

The Eleventh is directed to Alexander II. He recommends to him the Church of Orleans which was then in Trouble.

The Twelfth, directed to the ſame Pope, is very conſiderable. He therein reproves two Abuſes, which he ſays were too frequently practis'd by the Court of Rome in his Time, and he intreats the Pope to redreſs them. The Firſt is, That in almoſt all the Decretals, the Penalty of Excommunication was inſerted. The Second is, That the Clerks and Laicks were hinder'd from reproving the Vices of their Biſhops. "The Firſt (ſays he) makes the Salvation of Men very dangerous; becauſe Perſons are often excommunicated without knowing any thing of it, and that for Things of little or no Conſequence; the moſt trivial Faults being puniſh'd with the ſame Penalty as the more heinous ones: They puniſh a Man more rigorouſly for having violated an humane Law, than ever God does for the breaking of his Commands. He ſays, That St. Gregory and the other Popes had no ſuch Cuſtom, and that they ſeldom pronounc'd an Anathema in their Decretals, except when the Faith was in diſpute. He therefore conjures this Pope to aboliſh this Cuſtom, and for the future to ſtrike this Clauſe out of their Decretals, by aſſigning ſome other Penalty in its ſtead. As to the other Abuſe, which ſuppoſes that it is not lawful for Inferiours to accuſe their Biſhops in a Superior Court, or to alledge againſt them what ought to be Corrected. "This (ſays he) is a very unreaſonable Thing, and contrary to the Diſcipline of the Church. For to whom can one better addreſs ones ſelf to diſcover the Faults, which a Biſhop commits, than to him who has the Office of a Maſter, and who has the Pre-eminence among his Brethren, to correct the Faults of the Biſhops, according to the Privilege of his See? And is it not a piece of inſupportable Arrogance, Pride and Vanity, that a Biſhop ſhall live as he pleaſes, and not condeſcend to harken to the Complaints of thoſe who are under him, in things wherein he may be deceiv'd; eſpecially when they do not apply themſelves to ſecular Judges, but to Biſhops, that they may honourably and gravely redreſs thoſe Grievances which might attract the Smiles of the Laity? Is it not reaſonable, that he who is accus'd ſhould Juſtify and Clear himſelf, or elſe acknowledge his Faults? To this he ſubjoyns the Example of St. Peter, who did not make uſe of his Authority to reject the Complaints of the Faithful, who took it ill that he ſhould Preach the Goſpel to the Gentiles, but gave them a reaſon for this his Proceeding. To this Inſtance he adds that of David, who acknowledg'd his Offence when he was reprov'd for it by Nathan; the Example of Mary, who ſuffer'd the Reproof of her Siſter Martha; and another Inſtance of St. Peter, who did not take it ill that St. Paul rebuk'd him. Afterwards he ſtarts this Objection: "But I am Biſhop; I am the Paſtor of the Flock, I am not to be accus'd by thoſe who ought to be ſubject to me, and whom I ought to lead; they ought patiently to ſuffer my Failings. And to this he anſwers, that in the Goſpel it is ſaid, That we ought to declare to the Church the Faults of our Brethren, when they do not amend after they had been privately reprov'd; the which being expreſs'd in general Terms, ought to be underſtood as well of the Faults of Biſhops, as of the Faults of the reſt of the Faithful; that if the Biſhop would not ſubmit to the Laws of the Church, who would? Laſtly, He concludes, That nothing would more conduce to the abating the Pride of Biſhops, who valued themſelves too much upon the account of their Divinity, to the maintaining of Peace, and to prevent Tyranny, than to ſuffer Inferiors to have recourſe to a Superior Authority, and to Synods, there to proſer their Complaints againſt their Biſhops.

In the Thirteenth, directed to the ſame Pope, he oppoſes an Error which grew very prevalent in his Time; to wit, That it was not Simony to buy a Biſhoprick of a King, or any other other Prince; provided nothing was given for Conſecration. Two Chaplains of Prince Godfrey Marquis of Tuſcany, had broach'd this Doctrin, and maintain'd it by ſaying, That in this Caſe, they do not buy either the Sacerdotal Office or the Church, but only the Temporalities and the enjoyment of the Revenues. Peter Damien makes it appear that this is a Fallacy; becauſe ſince a Man cannot be divided into two diſtinct Perſons, whereof one ſhall enjoy the Temporalities, and the other perform the Spiritual Functions, when he buys the Temporalities, which he cannot enjoy till he be advanc'd to the Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, and perform the Functions thereof; it may be truly ſaid, That he buys the Eccleſiaſtical Dignity and the Sacrament too. This he proves, becauſe the Prince in granting the Inveſtiture of a Biſhoprick does not give a meer Rod only, but the Paſtoral Rod, and the Title of Prieſthood, the Sacrament whereof is receiv'd by the Ordination. He adds, That 'tis only in purſuance of this nomination of the Prince that the Man is ordain'd, and therefore tho' he does not directly give Mony for his Ordination, yet it cannot be ſaid to be gratuitous, ſince Mony made the way for him. Afterwards carrying this Thought a little farther, he ſays, " When the Prince has put the Paſtoral Rod into your Hands, did he ſay, " Receive the Lands and Revenues of ſuch or ſuch a Church? No. Did he not ſay to you, " Receive this Church? If you pretend to have receiv'd the Revenues of the Church with- " out the Church, you are a Schiſmatick, and guilty of Sacrilege; and if you receiv'd the " Church by this Inveſtiture, as you muſt needs own, then you are guilty of Simony. Laſtly, He ſays, That the poſſeſſion of the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues, and the Conſecration are ſo cloſely connected together, that he who receives the Right of poſſeſſing the Revenues of the Church, cannot enjoy them till he be conſecrated, and that he who is conſecrated, ought neceſſarily to have the management of the Revenues of the Church. To conclude, He confirms theſe Maxims by ſeveral Paſſages taken out of the Decretals; and ſhews that it is not only Simony to buy and ſell Biſhopricks and great Benefices, but alſo to buy and ſell ſmall Benefices, ſuch as Curacies and Prebendſhips. In the cloſe, he exhorts the Pope to Condemn the Error, which he had refuted in this Letter, and not to permit any Perſons to be promoted to the Prieſthood, who have acquir'd it by Mony, or (which he pretends to be more blameable) by any Services which they have done for their Princes.

Peter Damien, Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia.

In the Fourteenth, he makes his Complaints to Alexander II. for that he had abus'd and rais'd a Diſturbance in the Church of Engubio, which had been committed to his Care, by the Predeceſſors of that Pope. He puts him in mind of the Obligations which he lay under to him, which deſerv'd quite another ſort of uſage, and takes notice that if ſatisfaction were not done him, he would make his juſt Grief to break out the more. He likewiſe intreated him to take off the Excommunication which he had iſſu'd out againſt the Arch-biſhop of Ravenna, whom he look'd upon to be very unfortunate; becauſe it was an unworthy thing that ſo great a multitude of Men ſhould be in danger of periſhing for the fault of one ſingle Man.

The Fifteenth is an Anſwer to a Letter of that Pope, who complain'd that he had not wrote to him, being too much taken up with Contemplation. He gives him to underſtand, That indeed he did enjoy a little more Repoſe, ſince he had quitted the Epiſcopacy; but that ſtill he was taken up with a great many Viſits, and a multiplicity of Buſineſs, and was ſo highly concern'd at the diſorders of the World, that he had neither Time nor Courage to write. This gave him an occaſion to deſcribe the corrupted Manners of his Time. Afterwards he conjures the Pope, who had taken from him the Earldom of Oſtia, to diſcharge him likewiſe from his Biſhoprick. Laſtly, He exhorts him to uſe his utmoſt endeavours to reform the Church, and concludes his Letter with Eight Verſes, which puts him in mind of his Duty.

In the Sixteenth, directed to the ſame Pope and to Hildebrand, he excuſes himſelf for having wrote to the Arch-biſhop of Cologne, by ſending to them the Copy of his Letter, thereby to let them know that they had no reaſon to be offended at it. He excus'd himſelf likewiſe from taking a Journey to Rome, to which they had ſummon'd him; but does not refuſe to go to Mantua, becauſe he thought that Journey would turn to greater Account.

The Three next Letters are among his Opuſcula; the two firſt are the Three and Four and twentieth of theſe Opuſcula, and the laſt is the Life of St. Radulphus.

The Twentieth is directed to Cadalous Biſhop of Parma, the Antipope, whom he extreamly upbraided, for having caus'd himſelf to be elected Biſhop of Rome; or at leaſt, for having permitted it: He made it appear that his Election is Adulterate, Schiſmatical, Heretical and Vicious. (1.) Becauſe he had been elected, whilſt the Holy See was fill'd with a Lawful Pope. (2.) Becauſe he had not been elected by the Cardinals, who have the greateſt ſhare in the Election of a Pope, nor by the Clergy and Laity of Rome; but by two Biſhops of a bad Life, and who had no Right in this Election. (3.) Becauſe the Church of Rome would not acknowledge him. Afterwards he threatns him with the Judgments of God, and with a ſpeedy Correction.

This Letter made no Impreſſion on Cadalous; on the contrary, that Biſhop came to Rome with an Army, and became Maſter of it by Force. Upon this Peter Damien wrote him a ſecond Letter more vehement than the former, wherein he compares him to the moſt cruel

Tyrants,

Peter Damien, Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia.

Tyrants, and puts him in mind of the Puniſhment inflicted on the Biſhop of Placenza, who had uſurp'd the Holy See by ſuch like Methods, in turning out Gregory IV.

The Second Book contains the Letters which Peter Damien wrote to the Cardinals.

His Letters to the Cardinals.

The Firſt is directed to the Cardinals of the Church of Lateran; he exhorts them to bear a ſtrict Watch over themſelves and others, that they may be Exemplary in ſo corrupted an Age. He therein ſhews how the Lives of Biſhops ought to be Holy and Unblameable. He declaims againſt Biſhops who are Ambitious, againſt thoſe who follow the Court, and who enter into the Service of Grandees, in order to obtain Eccleſiaſtical Preferments by way of recompence. He ſays, That there are three ſorts of Preſents, which are alike prohibited for the gaining of Benefices: Munus a Manu, Munus ab obſequio, Munus a lingua; that is, Mony, Preſents, and Flatteries. After he had invey'd ſufficiently againſt this Abuſe, he exhorts the Cardinals to lead ſuch exemplary Lives, as might ſerve as a Pattern to the Biſhops and all the Clergy.

The Two next Letters are in the Opuſcula, the one is the Two and twentieth, and the other the One and thirtieth.

The Fourth is directed to Boniface Cardinal of Albania, and to Stephen the Prieſt: He recommends to them an Abbot of the Monaſtery of St. Apollinarius.

The Fifth directed to Cardinal Hildebrand Arch-deacon of Rome, and to Peter the Prieſt; contains a great many Myſtical Reflections about the Sabbath, and the Six days of the Creation.

In the Sixth, directed to the ſame Perſons, he ingenuouſly complains of Alexander II. his taking away from him a Book which he had compos'd; he commends this Pope, declaims againſt Cadalous, and makes mention of what he had ſuffer'd in the Service of the Holy See.

The Seventh is likewiſe amongſt the Opuſcula, of which it makes the Two and thirtieth.

In the Eighth, he complains that Hildebrand, to whom he had written, not only took no notice of him, and return'd him no Anſwer, but likewiſe ſpoke very much to his diſadvantage. He puts him in mind what Services he had done to the Holy See, and to him in particular. Laſtly, He declares to him, That he ſurrender'd up to him the Biſhoprick which had been beſtow'd on him.

In the Ninth, he makes his complaint to the ſame Perſon, for having too ſlightly given Credit to his Enemies, who had told him, That he had founded a Monaſtery in a place where he had no Right to do it. He made it appear that it had been granted to him by the Uncle of Guy, who was the Perſon who complain'd that the Monaſtery had been built on his Demeans.

The Tenth is amongſt the Opuſcula, and makes the Eighteenth.

The Three next Letters are directed to Didier Abbot of Mount Caſſin and Cardinal of St. Cecilia, to whom he gives a great many wholſome Advices about his Conduct; as for Inſtance, To have always an Eye upon his Faults, and not to regard his Virtues; to be glad when he was reprov'd by others; not to ſlight, but to correct, as his Duty requir'd him, the Faults of thoſe who were committed to his Charge; to ſay no ill of the Abſent, but to reprove thoſe who were Faulty face to face; to have a due Veneration for Faſt-days, and often to celebrate the Holy Sacrifice, that ſo, ſays he, the old Serpent ſeeing your Lips tinctur'd with the Blood of JESUS CHRIST, may tremble for fear, retire in Confuſion, and not approach to the Sacrament, which has made him a Captive.

The Five others, directed to the ſame Perſon, are among the Opuſcula, of which they make the Thirty third, the Thirty fourth, the Thirty fifth, the Thirty ſixth and the Thirty ſeventh.

The Nineteenth is a Letter of Compliment and Friendſhip, to Peter a Cardinal and Chancellor.

The Two laſt make the Thirty ſeventh of the Opuſcula.

His Letters to the Archbiſhops

The Third Book is compos'd of the Letters directed to Arch-biſhops; the Number of thoſe is but ſmall.

The Firſt is the Eight and thirtieth of the Opuſcula.

The Second is directed to Gebehard Arch-biſhop of Ravenna, who had deſir'd him to come to him. He excus'd himſelf for not obeying him, becauſe he had not wherewithal to undertake this Journey; being Poor himſelf, and having the Government of a very poor Monaſtery in his Hands. He commends this Arch-biſhop, gives him a great deal of Good Council, and conjures him to give him no further Trouble.

In the Third, he declares to that Prelate what a great Affection he bore to him, and exhorts him to turn out the Biſhops of Fano and Peſaro, who were Men of an infamous Life, and guilty of ſeveral Crimes.

The Fourth is directed to Henry Arch-biſhop of Ravenna, who had ſent to know what his Opinion was concerning the Elections of Cadalous and Alexander. He returns him this Anſwer, That the Latter is the lawful Pope, and the other is a Simoniſts and an Intruder: And after-afterwards making a Comparison between the Manners and the Genius of both; he says that Alexander II. is a Man of Parts, Learning and Piety, and that he is Chast and Charitable: Whereas Cadalous is not able to explain one Line. Lastly, he declares to him that he cannot conceal his own particular Sentiment, and that he thinks himself oblig'd to avow freely what he thinks, and stiffly to maintain the Truth and Honour of the Holy See. Peter Damien, Cardinal Bishop of Ostia.

The Fifth is directed to a third Arch-bishop of Ravenna nam'd Wigbert. He complains of the severity which that Arch-bishop shew'd to him and his Monastery. He intreats him to forbear oppressing him by exacting Mony still from him, even after he had been divested of part of his Demeans.

The Sixth is to Anno Arch-bishop of Cologne: He commends him for the Care he had taken of Henry the Emperor's Son, who had been committed to his Trust by that Prince; and for having declar'd himself against Cadalous; and exhorts him to continue and use his utmost endeavours, that a general Council might be held to put an End to the Schism.

The Seventh is a Letter of Compliment to the Arch-bishop of Milan, whom he thanks with a great deal of Address and Neatness, for the Sacerdotal Habits which he had bestow'd upon him.

The Three next are among the Opuscula, of which they make the Twenty fifth, the Thirty fourth and the Thirty ninth.

The Fourth Book contains the Letters of Peter Damien directed to Bishops. His Letters to the Bishops.

The First is written to Bishop Albert: He exhorts him to do his Duty, and to lead an unblameable Life. In a more especial manner he advises him to be Charitable, and to beware of Avarice and Simony.

In the Second he thanks a Bishop for the Alms which he had bestow'd on his Monastery, and exhorts him to add the other Virtues to his Liberality. Lastly, he intreats him to confer the Order of Deacon on Two Clerks, which he sent him, and who had obtain'd a Dispensation from their Bishop for it.

The Third is among the Opuscula, and is compris'd in the Eighteenth.

In the Fourth to the Bishop of Osmo, he makes use of the great number of Dead Persons which he found in his Return, as a Motive to perswade that Bishop not to put off his Conversion.

In the Fifth he gives us a lively and frightful Description of the last Judgment, to perswade him to whom he wrote to lead a Life becoming a Christian.

In the Sixth he exhorts another Bishop to a Contempt of this World.

In the Seventh he advises the Bishop to whom he wrote, to receive no Presents; and upon that Account he relates a Vision that had happen'd to a Priest, who had seen the Confessor of Count Hildebrand punish'd in the other World, for having receiv'd Presents from him; And that Count himself in Torments for not having Repented of his Cruelties, so as he ought to have done, by the over Indulgence of his Confessor. The same Priest said, that he likewise saw Count Lotharius in a Fire of Brimstone, who intreated him to admonish his Family to restore to the Church a Territory which belong'd to it, that so by this means he might be throughly deliver'd from his Torments, and that he understood that Count Guy was suddenly expected in that very Place, where several Torments were preparing for him. After the Relation of this Vision, Peter Damien says, That it was not requisite to receive Presents indifferently from all sorts of Persons; but only from such as were wellpleasing to God, because the Gifts of the Wicked are dangerous.

In the Eighth he exhorts the Bishop of Engubio to redeem the Revenues and the Ornaments of his Churches which were given or Mortgag'd to Laicks. He likewise gives him several good instructions about the Virtues which he ought to put in Practice, and relates the untimely End of Pope John XII. which happen'd that very Day, wherein his Guards pull'd out the Eyes of an Holy Abbot.

In the Ninth directed to the Bishop of Fermo, after he had with a great deal of Modesty rejected the Title of Holiness, which that Bishop had bestow'd upon him, He bewails the Misfortunes and Irregularities of his Age, which inclin'd him to think that the End of the World was at Hand. More particularly he declaims against the Schism of Cadalous, and against the Liberty which at that time was granted to the Bishops and other Ecclesiasticks, of maintaining their Rights and Properties with a Sword in their Hand. He makes it appear that War and Revenge is downright contrary to the Genius and Spirit of the true Church, which breaths forth nothing but Peace, and is for Pardoning all Mankind, that nothing than them can be more dissonant to the Life which JESUS CHRIST himself led upon Earth, and which he propos'd as an Example to his Followers, when he Taught to Suffer with Patience, and not to Revenge by Force the Injuries offer'd them: That Lastly, the Difference between the Regal and Sacerdotal Power lay in this, that the King makes use of Material Arms, but the Priest of the Sword of the Spirit, viz. the Word of God: That since it had never been allow'd to take up Arms for the Defence of the Faith, much less was it Lawful to take them up for the maintenance of temporal and transitory ſitory Goods: And that if the Saints of old never put any Heretick or Idolater to Death, but rather ſuffer'd Death themſelves; With what face could any of the Faithful Kill his Brother, who was purchas'd and redeem'd by the precious Blood of JESUS CHRIST, only for the loſs of mere periſhable and contemptible Things? Afterwards he relates an Inſtance of an Abbot of France, who wou'd not by Force and Violence oppoſe a certain Great Lord, who was marching towards him with arm'd Souldiers to fall upon him; but went to meet him with his Monks unarm'd, with only the Croſs carry'd before them. This Action ſo much ſurpriz'd that Lord and all his Men, that inſtead of offering them any harm, they begg'd them Pardon, and threw themſelves at their Feet. Laſtly he ſays, that if any one ſhould object that St. Leo (viz. Leo IX. he here means and not Leo I.) did engage himſelf in a War, he would anſwer him thus, that as St. Peter had not the Primacy for having deny'd his Maſter, nor David the Gift of Propheſy, for the ſake of his Adultery: So an Eſtimate of the Good or Evil of any Perſon ought not to be drawn from the merit of that Perſon, but all Actions ought to be conſider'd nakedly in themſelves. That St. Gregory who ſuffer'd ſo many Plunderings and Injuries from the Lombards, never made War againſt them. That St. Ambroſe never ſat upon the Arians, tho' they Perſecuted him very Cruelly. That not one Inſtance could be given of any of the Holy Biſhops riſing up in Arms. That Laſtly, all Cauſes relating to Eccleſiaſtical Matters ought to be try'd, either by ſecular Judges according to the Laws, or by the Deciſions of Biſhops; and that they ought not to the Shame and Diſgrace of Eccleſiaſticks to determine that by Force, which ought to be decided by the Courts of Juſtice, or by the Decrees of Biſhops.

[This is ſound and orthodox Doctrin which Peter Damien here Preaches, and ſuch as is conſonant to the Doctrin and Practice of the primitive Chriſtians: But how diſſonant to the Spirit and Genius and Practice of the preſent Church of Rome, let their Fire and Faggot, their Inquiſitions and Dragooning, and the Doctrin of your new Doctors the Jeſuites Speak.]

In the Tenth he excuſes himſelf to the Biſhop of Engubio for having permitted his Church to be Conſecrated by the Biſhop of Foſſombrona, who pretended that he had a Right of Conſecrating the Churches of that Place, tho' it were under the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Engubio. He ſays, That he durſt not oppoſe his proceeding, and the rather becauſe he was already his Enemy: But that he did not pretend to exempt himſelf from the Juriſdiction of the Church of Engubio, which he promiſes to Re-cognize very chearfully. Wherefore he intreats the Biſhop of Engubio to take off the Interdiction he had iſſu'd out againſt that Church; and to be perſwaded that not only that Place, but alſo that whatſoever his Monaſtery could enjoy were intirely at his Service, and he begs him to grant him his Protection.

The Eleventh is a Letter whereby he Dedicates ſeveral of his Works to the Biſhops of Sinagaglia and Engubio.

In the Twelfth he reproves a certain Biſhop, who alienated the Revenues of his Church. He asks him whether he had forgot that Pope Victor in a Council held at Florence, had prohibited it under the Pain of Excommunication? Whether he did not know that the Revenues of the Church were appropriated to the Maintenance of the Poor, and to the Relief of Widows and Orphans? This gave him an occaſion of treating concerning the Original of Church Revenues; upon which he obſerves that in the Primitive Church the Faithful brought the Price of their Lands, and laid them at the Apoſtles Feet, that ſo they might diſtribute them to the Poor: And that afterwards it was thought more proper to ſettle Eſtates on Churches, not only for the maintenance of the Clergy, but likewiſe for the Relief of the Poor. That therefore thoſe who rob the Church of the Revenues which belong to it, were guilty of a World of Homicides in depriving the Poor of their neceſſary Subſiſtence. He adds, That as Sinners by giving their Eſtates to the Church, obtain'd by this means an Abſolution of their Sins: So thoſe on the contrary who take them do bind and engage themſelves to ſuffer that Pennance from which the others are exempted by their Charity.

The Thirteenth contains nothing very remarkable: He thanks the Biſhop of Ceſena for the kind Reception he gave to a young Man whom he had recommended to him: And exhorts him to a Chriſtian watchfulneſs by ſetting before him the Hour of Death and the Day of Judgment.

The Fourteenth is referr'd to the Twenty ſixth of his Opuſcula.

In the Fifteenth he ſhews what a Guard Eccleſiaſticks ought to put over their Senſes, which are the ſource and fountain of a great many Diſorders.

In the Sixteenth he maintains that the Octave of the Feſtival of St. John Baptiſt ought to be ſolemniz'd in the ſame manner as the Feſtival it ſelf, and afterwards explains the Eight ſolemn Feſtivals of the Jews, which by way of Allegory he applies to Chriſtianity.

His Letters to the Clergy.

The Fifth Book contains the Letters directed to ſeveral of the Clergy.

In the Firſt directed to the Arch-prieſts, he maintains what he had advanc'd in one of his Sermons, that every Mans Soul ſhall appear at the Day of Judgment in the ſame State wherein it left the Body. Several Perſons were offended at this Poſition, believing that from thence it follows, that the Prayers, Oblations and Sacrifices which were offer'd for the Dead, signified nothing to them. Peter Damien denies this Inference, and makes it appear that he asserted no more than what St. Gregory had asserted before him.

Peter Damien Cardinal Bishop of Ostia.

The Second Letter is directed to his Brother Damien. He therein makes an ingenuous Confession of the Faults to which he was addicted, and especially of his Propensity to rail at others. He entreats his Brother to pray to God to give him Grace to redress his Default.

In the Third, he gives a lively Description of the Soul just upon its departure out of the Body.

In the Fourth, he makes use of a Passage out of Jeremy, to demonstrate how far the Intemperance of Clerks is an offence to God.

The Fifth is a Letter of Compliment directed to an Arch-deacon.

The Sixth is written in the name of Leo IX. to the People of Osmo, against a Custom which prevail'd in that Church of rifling the Goods of the Bishop after his Death: This Custom is therein prohibited under the penalty of Excommunication.

The Seventh is writ in the name of Alexander II. to the Clergy and Laity of Milan, whom that Pope acquaints of his Exaltation to the Popedom, and exhorts them to Labour earnestly for the carrying on of their own Salvation.

The Eighth directed to the Clergy of Florence, concerning the use of Disciplines, is one of the most Curious of his Pieces. He had writ about this Practice to a certain Monk: His Letter falling into the Hands of some secular Persons, and of some Monks of a less strict Life, they were very much offended at this new Kind of Pennance, unknown to all former Ages, and which seem'd to overthrow the Order of the Canons and the ancient Custom. Peter Damien in this Letter, undertakes to maintain it. First, from the Example of our Saviour, of the Apostles and Martys, who have been Scourg'd for the sake of JESUS CHRIST: From whence he infers, That God may very well be pleas'd with the voluntary Offering to him such a Pennance as he caus'd his Servants to endure against their Will. As to what might be objected, that indeed we do Read, that the Saints were Scourged by others, but that we never find they did it themselves: He replys, That as we ought voluntarily to imitate the Mortification of the Cross, so likewise one may imitate the other Sufferings of JESUS CHRIST; and that as no body can blame him who of his own accord Fasts at other times than those enjoyn'd by the Church: So one ought not to imagine, that he who Chastises himself with his own Hand, does a Deed less acceptable to God. That on the contrary, he undergoes a real Pennance, by mortifying his Flesh, and making it suffer for the Pleasures which it has enjoy'd; that it signifies nothing to what sort of Punishment it is Condemn'd, provided that the preceeding Pleasures be punish'd by a subsequent Punishment. He asks those who pretended that this new Custom subverted the Canons; whether the Reverend Bede did ill in enjoyning several Penitents to wear Iron Girdles? Whether the Holy Fathers did ill in putting such Austerities and Pennances into Practice, of which no mention is made in the Canons? He adds, That since the Laicks might redeem themselves from a long Pennance by bestowing a certain Sum to Charitable Uses, tho' no mention be made of these Redemptions in the Canons; the Monks who may have deserv'd a long Pennance, and cannot make compensation for it by their Alms, ought not to be hindred from doing it by this Mortification of their Flesh.

The Ninth is among the Opuscula, of which it makes the Twenty sixth.

In the Tenth he excuses himself to the Clergy and Laity of Fayence, for his not being able to come to them after the Death of their Bishop, and he advises them to put off the Election of another Bishop, till the arrival of the Emperor.

The Eleventh is referr'd to the Forty first of the Opuscula.

In the Twelfth he asks the Advice of the Treasurer of the Church of Ravenna, whether he ought to remain in that City, or return to his Solitude. He relates the Reasons that might be alledg'd on both sides: On the one side, he might be serviceable to the saving of Souls at Ravenna, but there he was had in Contempt: On the other side, he was had in esteem in his own Monastery, but he was afraid this esteem would puff him up with Pride. He refers himself wholly to the counsel of him to whom he wrote, what he ought to do in the Case.

The Thirteenth is directed to the Chaplains of Duke Godfrey who charg'd him with Avarice. The occasion of which Charge was this; one of the Chaplains had a difference with him about a Piece of Gold which the Dutchess had presented at the Offering of the Mass, which Peter Damien Celebrated: The Monk who had receiv'd it, left it upon the Altar, together with another Piece of Gold presented by a Marchioness. One of these Chaplains took away one of the Pieces which the Dutchess had order'd to be given him: But afterwards Peter Damien using his utmost endeavours to make him restore it to him again he would not, but left it with one of the Monks. This Conduct of Peter Damien's being perfectly free from any partiality, sufficiently clear'd him from the Accusation of these Chaplains; but in his turn he reprov'd them for two Errors, First because they taught, that Priests might Marry; and then because they maintain'd, that it was no Simony to give Mony for the Presentation of a Living, provided nothing was given for Ordination.

Peter Damien, Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia.

The Fourteenth and Fifteenth are directed to the Clergy of the Church of Milan, who maintain'd the Truth and Purity of Diſcipline; he exhorted them to perſevere with Conſtancy and Stedfaſtneſs.

The Two next are part, one of the Forty ſecond, and the other of the Eighth of his Opuſcula.

In the Eighteenth, he returns an Anſwer to a Prieſt who had ask'd his Advice about two Ceremonies relating to Baptiſm and the Celebration of the Maſs: And after he had intimated that no new Cuſtoms ought to be introduc'd, he determines, That only the Holy Chriſm ought to be put into the Water of Baptiſm, and not any Oyl or Wine; and that in the Celebration of the Maſs the Ablution of the Chalice ought not to be omitted, but when it was to be celebrated twice in a Day.

The Nineteenth is among the Opuſcula of which it makes the Twenty eighth.

The Sixth Book contains ſuch Letters as are written to Abbots and Monks.

The Firſt is referr'd to the Forty third of his Opuſcula.

The Second is directed to Hugh Abbot of Cluny; the Monks of that Abby as an acknowledgment of the Love which Peter Damien had for them, and of the Services which he had done them, had promis'd him, that they would ſay an Office for him every Year on the Day of his Death. He prays the Abbot of Cluny that this might be perform'd not only in that Abby, but likewiſe in others which were of the ſame Order.

The Third directed to the ſame Abbot, is only a Letter of Compliment for the kind Entertainment he had given to one of Peter Damien's Nephews.

In the Fourth, he recommends to him again the Prayers which he had promis'd to offer up for him after his Death.

In the Fifth, directed to the Monks of that Abbey, he commends the Diſcipline and the good Order which was obſerv'd in their Monaſtery; thanks them for the acknowledgment they made of the good Services he had done them, and conjures them to pray to God for him after his Death.

The Two next contain nothing in them very remarkable.

The Eighth is among the Opuſcula, of which it makes the Twenty firſt.

In the Ninth, he reproves a Monk whom he had made Superior of an Hermitage, for having quitted it, to be an Abbot of another Monaſtery; and orders him either to return to the Charge committed to him, or elſe to live only as a Monk in that Monaſtery.

In the Tenth, he retracts what he had ſaid of St. John the Baptiſt's being conceiv'd during the Feaſt of Tabernacles.

The Eleventh is among the Opuſcula, of which it makes the Forty fourth.

In the Twelfth, he anſwers to the Reproaches caſt upon him by an Abbot, for having entertain'd a Monk who came out of another Monaſtery, which ſeem'd contrary to the Rule of St. Benedict. He makes it appear, that this Rule ought only to be underſtood of the Monaſteries of the Cœnobites, and not of the Hermits, whoſe Life is moſt perfect. He pretends that St. Benedict was at firſt an Hermit, and that he always preferr'd the Life of the Hermits, before that of the Cœnobites.

The Thirteenth is directed to the Monks of a Monaſtery of Conſtantinople; but contains nothing in it remarkable.

The Fourteenth is among the Opuſcula, of which it makes the Twenty ninth.

In the Fifteenth, he admoniſhes an Abbot not to detain one of his Monks, who had deſerted him and was excommunicated, promiſing withal, That if that Monk would return, he would uſe him kindly.

The Three next make the Forty fifth, Forty ſixth, and Fifty ninth of his Opuſcula.

In the Nineteenth, he gives a deſcription of the Diſtempers, under which he labour'd; of the Patience wherewith he endur'd them; and of the extremity to which he was brought; which was ſuch; That they adminiſtred the extreme Unction to him, and laid him upon Aſhes and Hair-cloth, as the Cuſtom then was. He takes notice that his Remedy was communicated to one of his Monks in a Viſion, and procur'd by Alms, and that he had much ado to perſwade himſelf to eat Fleſh.

In the Twentieth, he adviſes a Monk not to engage himſelf upon every turn to expiate the Faults of others, and readily to perform thoſe Pennances with which he was engag'd. He moreover relates an Inſtance of another Monk, who had ſuffer'd great Puniſhments in the other World, for having not done Pennance for another, according as he undertook.

The Twenty firſt is among his Opuſcula, of which it makes the Forty ſeventh.

The Twenty ſecond is to his Nephew Damien, whom he exhorts to be zealous in the Exerciſes of the Monaſtical Life, and reproves for having gon from an Hermitage to a Monaſtery, and exhorts to return thither again.

In the Twenty third, he reproves a Monk, who delay'd turning Hermit, upon the account that he had much ado to perſwade himſelf not to drink Wine.

The Twenty fourth and Twenty ſixth, are referr'd to the Forty eighth and ninth of his Opuſcula.

In the Twenty fifth, he makes it appear, That it was upon some Grounds that he had a design of quitting his Church; he thereupon relates two extraordinary Events. Peter Damien, Cardinal Bishop of Ottia.

The Twenty seventh is directed to the Monk Cerebrosus, who had with some sharpness blam'd the practice of Discipline. Peter Damien maintain'd it by the same Arguments which he had already alledg'd. He pretended that it was a sort of Martyrdom; that it was what was very well known to the Ancients; that it is founded upon the Canons; and that it was in use before his Time in the Religious Monasteries, wherein it was Customary to buy off a whole Year's Penance, by a Thousand Stripes of a Rod. That Monk did not find fault with the Discipline, which was us'd during the reading of a Chapter for light Faults; but he blam'd those severe and long Disciplines of so many Hundred Stripes. Peter Damien says, That if one approves the lesser Discipline, one ought not to Condemn that which was more severe and mortifying.

In the Twenty eighth, he illustrates two Passages out of St. Gregory.

In the Twenty ninth, he advises a Monk, every day, to say the Rosary, and to read the Holy Scriptures.

The Two next make the Fifty first and the Fifty third of his Opuscula.

In the Thirty second, he reproves the Hermits of a Monastery near his, for having neglected the Rule which he had given them, for being too much in love with Mony, and too much given to Ease and Luxury. For their Instruction, he relates the Punishments of several Monks, who had not liv'd up to that strictness which they ought, and the Penance inflicted upon them for their Faults.

The Thirty third is amongst his Opuscula, of which it makes the Fifty fourth.

The Thirty fourth is likewise directed to several Hermits of his Congregation, whom he reprov'd for being too severe and too long in the exercise of their Discipline. He would not have any one, every day, be Disciplin'd any longer than during the reading of Forty Psalms, and in Advent and Lent, only whilst Sixty Psalms were reading.

The Thirty fifth is amongst his Opuscula, of which it makes the Twenty fifth.

In the last, he exhorts his Monks to live peaceably after his Death, and requires that all the Possessions belonging to another Monastery, which he permitted them to enjoy during his Life-time, should be restored after his Decease.

The seventh Book contains the Letters written to Princes and Princesses, the Two first of which are directed to the Emperor Henry III. In one of them he desires that Count Gister may be set at liberty, and in the other, he commends that Prince for having dispossess'd Wiquier of the Arch-bishoprick of Ravenna, who had obtain'd it by sinister practices.

The Third is directed to the young Prince Henry, the Son of the former, whom he earnestly exhorts to defend the Church, and to oppose Cadalous's Schism.

The next are directed to the Empress Agnes, the Wife of Henry III. and writte nabout different Affairs. In one of them, he gives that Princess to understand, that the Pope could not send the Pall to the Arch-bishop of Mentz, till he himself came to desire it, or till he were examin'd by his Legates. In the two others, he comforts and exhorts the same Princess to beg assistance of Jesus Christ, and in the last, he invites her to Italy.

The Ninth is written in the Name of Pope Nicolas II. to the Queen of France, whom he exhorts to continue her Bounty and pious Actions; advising her at the same time, to inspire the King her Husband with the same Principles, and to cause her Children to be educated in the same manner.

In the Tenth, directed to Godfrey Duke of Tuscany, he expresses himself how much he was concern'd, that that Prince, had given entertainment to Cadalous, and admonishes him to make amends for that Fault.

The Two next directed to the same Duke, are compris'd in the Fifty seventh Opusculum.

In the Thirteenth, he entreats that Prince to remit a certain Sum of Mony to the Abby of St. John Baptist, to pay for a Library which he had bought.

In the Fourteenth, directed to Beatrice Dutchess of Tuscany, he approves of the Resolution that she and her Husband had taken to live in perpetual Continency, and proposes many Examples of Vertue, for her imitation.

In the Fifteenth, he exhorts a certain Prince, to contemn all Worldly Possessions, and to seek after the Heavenly.

The Sixteenth, is comprehended in the eighteenth Opusculum.

In the Seventeenth, he exhorts the Marquess Renier, who had been enjoin'd, by way of Penance for his Offences, to go in pilgrimage to Rome; to set forward on his Journey, as soon as possible, and produces divers Examples, of the Protection that God has afforded to Pilgrims.

In the Eighteenth, he admonishes the Countess Gille, newly marry'd to the Marquess Renier, not to retain the Spoils of the Widows and Orphans, but to restore every thing that her Husband had got by rapine, and advises her in order to prevent him from committing thoſe outrages for the future, to cauſe the Lands to be well cultivated, and to give Alms to the Poor.

The Nineteenth, is among the Opuſcula, of which it makes the Fiftieth.

The laſt Book of Peter Damien's Letters, contains thoſe that were written by him to divers particular Perſons.

In the Firſt, directed to Cinthius Prefect of Rome, he commends him for the Exhortation that he made to the People on Twelfth-day, and adviſes him to perſevere in adminiſtring Juſtice in the City, and in maintaining the Rights of the Church.

In the Second, he admoniſhes the ſame Cinthius, that he ſhould not ſo much give himſelf up to praying as to neglect doing Juſtice.

In the Third, he exhorts the Perſon to whom he writes, to ſhew due Reſpect to his Mother, and enlarges on the Duties of Children to their Parents.

The Fourth, is a Conſolatory Letter to a Father, upon the Death of his Son. He maintains that the Death of Children is a peculiar Favour of God, and that we ought to rejoyce rather than to be troubled at it.

In the Fifth, he exhorts a Senator of the City of Rome, to compleat the building of a Church that he had begun, ſhewing by many Examples, that it is an Action, which deſerves Reward.

In the Sixth, he comforts a ſick Perſon, giving him to underſtand, that Sufferings are a mark of Predeſtination, and that a Chriſtian ought to bear them with Patience and Cheerfulneſs.

The Seventh, is compris'd in the Forty ſecond Opuſculum.

In the Eighth, he exhorts a Judge to meditate on the future State, and on the Day of Judgment, and produces a great number of Sentences of Scripture on that Subject, to the end that he might take the matter into ſerious Conſideration.

The Ninth, is amongſt the Opuſcula, of which it makes the Fifty eighth.

In the Tenth, he exhorts a certain Perſon, who was apt to forſwear himſelf to abſtain altogether from Swearing, and adviſes him to give Alms.

The Eleventh, makes the Thirtieth Opuſculum.

The Twelfth, is an Invective againſt Pride.

The Thirteenth, is contain'd in the Fifty ninth Opuſculum.

The Fourteenth, is directed to his two Siſters, to whom he gives a great deal of Advice about the Religious Life.

The Fifteenth, is a Prayer made by Peter Damien, on behalf of a Man, who was at the point of Death, and it is one of thoſe that are now us'd in the Church (i. e. of Rome) for Perſons in ſuch a Condition.

From the Letters paſs we to the Opuſcula or ſmall Tracts, which conſtitute the third Volume of Peter Damien's Works; reſerving the Account of the Second, which contains his Sermons, till we have made the Extract of his Opuſcula.

The Firſt bears this Title, Of the Catholick Faith, and is dedicated to Ambroſe. He explains therein, the Myſteries of the Trinity and Incarnation, and more eſpecially eſtabliſhes the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt from the Perſons of the Father and of the Son.

In the Second, call'd Antilogus againſt the Jews, he makes it appear by ſeveral Proofs taken out of the Old Teſtament, That JESUS CHRIST is the true Meſſiah the Son of God.

The Third is on the ſame Subject, in which he anſwers divers Queſtions propoſed in the name of the Jews, concerning JESUS CHRIST.

The Fourth, is a Dialogue between the Emperor Henry's Attorny General, and an Advocate of the Church of Rome, concerning the Right that the Emperors of Germany have to the Election of a Pope. After the Death of Nicolas II. the Romans choſe Alexander II. without the Emperor Henry's Knowledge; whereupon that Prince being highly diſpleaſed that the Election was carried on without his Authority, nominated Cadalous Biſhop of Parma to the Papal Dignity. Peter Damien ſuppoſes the Queſtion about the validity of both thoſe Elections to be debated in a Council, between the Advocate of the Church of Rome, and the Emperor's Attorny General. The latter maintains, That the Election of a Pope cannot be duly manag'd without the Prince's Conſent, and that they had apparently done him an injury in ordaining Alexander without his Knowledge. On the other ſide, the Advocate of the Church of Rome aſſerts, that the Right of chooſing a Pope, or of confirming his Election, does not belong to his Imperial Majeſty; ſince not only the Pagan Emperors, but alſo all the Chriſtian Princes to the laſt Greek Emperors, never laid claim to that Right, nor had any ſhare in the Election of a Pope, which was always perform'd by the Church of Rome. The Attorny General replies, That Henry the Father and Predeceſſor of the Prince, whoſe Right he maintain'd, enjoy'd ſuch a Privilege and that it was confirm'd by Pope Nicolas II. to the Emperor his Maſter. The Advocate of the Church of Rome acknowledges that Conceſſion, and willingly agrees, that the Emperor ſhould enjoy the ſame Privilege; but he inſiſts that as

as to the matter in debate, the Emperor Henry being under Age, the Church of Rome, acted as his Tutor in that Election, and perform'd the Office that belong'd to him, by reason that a Child is uncapable of making such a choice: That therefore what was done at Rome, was not prejudicial to the Emperor's Right, but only made it appear, that there might be some occasions, in which it cannot take place. The Attorny General averr'd, That at least it could not be deny'd, that they had done that Prince Wrong, in not making application to him: That three Months had passed from Pope Nicolas's Death to the Day of Alexander's Ordination, and that there was more time than was requisite for the obtaining of a Pragmatical Sanction from the Imperial Court. The Advocate of the Church of Rome replies, That the German Noble-men and some of the Bishops of the Empire, who were disaffected to the Church of Rome, call'd a kind of Council, in which, by an unheard of boldness, they disannull'd every thing that was ordain'd by Pope Nicolas: That they refus'd to hearken to Stephen Cardinal Priest and Legate of the Holy See, and that at the follicitation of Count Gerard, whom Pope Nicolas had excommunicated in a full Synod, they proceeded to the Election of a Person, who was altogether unworthy. Thereupon he demands, which of the two Competitors ought to be acknowledg'd as lawful Pope; either he who was unanimously chosen by the Cardinals, who was nominated by the Clergy and People of Rome, and who was fairly elected in that City, and in the Bosom of the Holy Apostolick See; or he who had no other suffrage in his favour, but that of an excommunicated Person? The Attorny General acquiesces to these Arguments, being well satisfied, that his Sovereign's Right was sufficiently secur'd, and that the Person, who was chosen, could not be unacceptable to him, because he belong'd to his Court. Then the Advocate of the Church of Rome concludes, wishing, That the Sacerdotal and Imperial Powers were inseparably united, and that they might always concur in the same end.

Peter Da-mian, Card. final Bi-shop of Ostia.

The Fifth Opusculum or small Tract, is a Relation directed to Hildebrand the Arch-Deacon, of what befel Peter Damien, during his Journey to Milan, where he was sent in quality of Legate of the Holy See, to suppress the Disorders committed by the unchaste and simoniacal Clergy of that Church. 'Tis related by him, that upon his arrival at Milan, he had no sooner given notice of the purport of his Commission, but the Clergy under colour that their Church ought not to be govern'd by the Laws, nor to submit to the Yoke of Rome, rais'd a Sedition. That the People ran in Crowds to the Episcopal Palace, threatning to cause him to be put to Death: And that afterwards appearing between the Arch-bishop of Milan, and Anselm Bishop of Lucca, he allay'd their fury by a Discourse, which he produces. In that Speech Peter Damien remonstrates to them, that he was not come to enhance the Grandeur and Authority of the Holy See; but to promote their Salvation: That that Church derives its Dignity and Primacy from the Institution of JESUS CHRIST, and that no attempt can be made on its Rights without violating the Faith: That St. Nazarius, St. Gervase and St. Protasius, the first Planters of the Church of Milan, receiv'd their Mission from the Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul: That St. Ambrose had recourse to Pope Siricius, to put a stop to the irregularities of some of his Clergy-men, and that he declar'd, that he was ready in all Points to obey the Church of Rome as his Patroness. The Cardinal of Ostia having by this means pacified the People, call'd an Assembly of the Clergy, and after having made enquiry into the manner of their Ordination, scarce found one Man, among so great a number, who was admitted into Orders without disbursing Mony, because every one upon that occasion, was oblig'd to pay a certain set rate.

This general Disorder extremely perplexed Peter Damien, in regard that it would be unjust to punish some, and to pardon others, who were no less culpable. Therefore he took a Resolution, to grant an Amnesty for pass'd Transgressions, and to make a Constitution to prevent such Enormities for the future. It was drawn up in the Name of Guy Arch-bishop of Milan, who declar'd, That he condemn'd the Custom or rather Abuse, which prevail'd in his Dioceses, and that he oblig'd himself and his Successors to exact nothing for Ordinations: That he likewise condemn'd the Marriage of Priests, Deacons and Sub-deacons, and that he promis'd to use his utmost endeavours, to hinder them from keeping Wives or Concubines: That he further engag'd both for himself and his Officers, not to take any thing, for the Benediction of Abbies and Chappels; for the Investiture and Collation of Benefices; for the Ordination of Bishops; for the Administration of the Holy Chrism, or for the Consecration of Churches. This Decree was signed by the Arch-bishop of Milan, and by the principal Clergy, who took an Oath to observe it, and did Penance for their pass'd Offences: The former impos'd on himself a Penance of a hundred Years, and nominated how much he determin'd to give for the Redemption of it. The other Clergy-men were in like manner enjoin'd Fasting, which nevertheless they might redeem by reciting the Psalter, or by giving Alms. Furthermore the Arch-bishop made a Vow to go in pilgrimage to the Sepulchre of St. James in Gallicia, and to send his Clerks to Rome or Tours, or to some other Place usually frequented by Pilgrims.

Peter Damien Cardinal Bishop of Ostia.

In the sixth Tract, directed to Henry Arch-bishop of Ravenna, Peter Damien debates this Question, viz. Whether those who were ordain'd by Priests Simoniacally promoted, ought to be re-ordain'd or not? This Question was propos'd in a Council, where it was not judg'd expedient to resolve it, till it were farther discuss'd. Peter Damien maintains the Negative, by reason that tis not the Bishop, who is only the Minister, but God, that Consecrates: That the same thing may be said of Ordination, as of Baptism, viz. That it ought not to be reiterated, altho it were administer'd by an unworthy Minister: That provided the Orders be conferr'd in the Catholick Church, and that both he who confers them, and he who takes them have Faith, the vicious Clerk is as effectually ordain'd by an unworthy Minister, as the vertuous Clerk by a worthy Minister: That there are three principal Sacraments in the Church, viz. Baptism, the Eucharist and Orders: That St. Augustin proves as to the First, and Fulgentius with respect to the Second, that those Sacraments are not made more or less efficacious by worthy or unworthy Ministers; and altho' the Question was never as yet stated in reference to Ordinations; nevertheless the Case ought to be argu'd after the same manner, according to St. Augustin's Principles, on which Peter Damien enlarges in this Book, and adds many Examples to shew, that Ordinations conferred by unworthy Ministers are valid, and that those Persons who were once admitted into Orders, ought not to be re-ordain'd, which he applies in particular to Simonists, and commends the Conduct of Pope Leo IX. who only impos'd a Penance of forty Daies on those that were ordain'd by Priests guilty of Simony, but did not lay out any Mony upon that account. He likewise commends the Emperor Henry, for opposing that Irregularity, and concludes with a Declamation against Simonists.

The seventh Treatise, call'd the Gomorrhean is dedicated to Pope Leo IX. who approv'd of it in a Letter, which is prefix'd at the beginning. In this Tract, Peter Damien proves, that Clergy-men who have committed Sins of Uncleanness, which Modesty does not permit to be named, ought to be depriv'd of the Functions of their Order for ever: He rejects the Canons of the Penitential Books, which impose too light Penances for those sorts of Crimes, of which he shews the Enormity: He inveighs against those Persons who are guilty of such notorious Offences, and exhorts them to a speedy Repentance, and to do severe Penance.

The eighth Tract, dedicated to John Bishop of Cesena and to the Arch-deacon of Ravenna, relates to the Degrees of Consanguinity in which it is forbidden to contract Marriage. He confutes the Opinion of the Lawyers who restrain'd them to the Fourth, and imagin'd that Grand-Nephews and Grand Nieces might inter-marry. He reckons up the Degrees by Generations, and maintains, That as far as any Consanguinity or Affinity can be discern'd, Matrimony ought not to be contracted, which takes place at least to the seventh Degree. He asserts in this Treatise, that in computing the Degrees of Consanguinity, the number of Persons ought always to exceed that of the Generations by one; so that there are but five Generations, where there are six Persons: But he retracts this Opinion in a Dissertation made by him on purpose to be annex'd to the same Treatise.

In the Ninth, he treats at large of Alms-giving, and shews the Usefulness of it, both for the Living and the Dead, in this World and in the future State.

The Tenth, is about the Divine Service, in which he gives an account of the number of the Canonical Hours, of the Prayers which make the Office, and of the difference between the Office of Clergy-men and that of the Monks: He shews how beneficial 'tis to recite it, and even recommends it to Laicks, as well as the small Office of the Virgin Mary. In this Tract he likewise discourses of the seven Mortal Sins, amongst which he does not reckon Gluttony, but distinguishes vain Glory from Pride.

In the Eleventh he states this Question, viz. Whether those who recite their Office alone in private ought to say, Dominus vobiscum, Jube Domine, &c. He concludes in the Affirmative, because, since the Church is one in many; it may be said, that divers Persons are comprehended in one single Member of it, and by reason of that Unity, one single Person may speak for all, and as if he join'd in Prayer with many: That one single Person often speaks in the name of many, and many in that of a single Person: That if it were requisite to renounce these Prayers, because they seem to suppose the presence of many Persons; other parts of the Divine Office, which are of the same nature, ought likewise to be omitted: That the Sacrifice of the Mass is offer'd up for all the Faithful, tho' in a special manner by the Priest, in regard that he holds in his Hands, every Thing that the Faithful offer in their Mind: That altho' only one single Person assists at the celebration of Mass; yet he does not forbear to say Dominus vobiscum, and not Dominus tecum: That the Church has no regard to Numbers, Cases or Terms, but adheres only to that which tends to Edification: That that which one omits, may be supply'd by another; and lastly, that these Words may be referr'd as well to the Absent as to the Present. He concludes with a Commendation of the solitary Life, in favour of the Hermit, to whom he wrote, and leaves the Resolution of this Question ſtion to his Judgment. It may alſo be obſerv'd in this Treatiſe, That at that time, the Biſhops were wont to ſay, Pax Vobis, whereas the Prieſts only ſaid Dominus vobiſcum. Peter Damien, Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia.

The Twelfth, is written againſt the diſorderly Lives of the Monks of his Time, and he rebukes them chiefly for four irregular Practices, viz. 1. That they enjoy'd Eſtates and hoarded up Mony, contrary to the Vow of Poverty. 2. That they ran about continually, and kept Company with Lay-men, even with excommunicated Perſons, or ſuch as deſerv'd to be ſo puniſh'd, according to the tenour of the ancient Canons. 3. That they kept rich Apparel and other Garments ſo ſorry, that they wore them only to ſhew their affectation of Vain Glory. 4. That they were too much immers'd in Worldly Affairs, and that they did not lead a Life ſufficiently retired. This Treatiſe is written with a great deal of Energy; ſo that the Author gives a very lively deſcription of the Enormities of the Monks of thoſe times, and endeavours to reform their Manners by Precepts and contrary Examples.

In the next Treatiſe that bears this Title, Of the Perfection of Monks, he inſtructs them in their Duty and in the Vertues they ought to practiſe.

The Fourteenth dedicated to his Hermits, contains an Abridgment of the Rule, and of the manner of living that they ought to obſerve.

He enlarges farther on the ſame Subject, in the Fifteenth Tract, which may be look'd upon as an entire Syſtem of the Rules of his Order.

The Sixteenth, is an Invective againſt a certain Biſhop, who aſſerted, That a Perſon who had aſſum'd the Monaſtick Habit by reaſon of the Indiſpoſition of his Body, or upon ſome other Motive without ſerving as a Novice for a conſiderable time, according to the Rule, might return to a ſecular courſe of Life. Peter Damien maintains the contrary Opinion, and eſtabliſhes it on the Tenour of the Canons, which abſolutely forbids all thoſe, who have voluntarily embrac'd the Monaſtick Life, and even Children, whom their Parents have engag'd in that Station, to quit their Profeſſion. He ſays, that the compleat Probation ſpecified in St. Benedict's Rule, does not prove that thoſe who get admiſſion without undergoing a Trial, may diſengage themſelves at pleaſure: That it is a precaution requiſite for the ſatisfaction of thoſe who have a right to admit, rather than for the benefit of the Perſons to be admitted; and that it is not ſo abſolutely neceſſary, that it cannot be diſpenſed with, when there is aſſurance, that they who preſent themſelves for that purpoſe, are endow'd with proper Qualities, and are really in a State of Grace.

The Seventeenth, is dedicated to Pope Nicolas II. whom he earneſtly exhorts to put a ſtop to the enormities committed by unchaſte and diſſolute Clergy-men and to make uſe of the ſeverity of the Canons againſt them, in imitation of Phineas's Zeal.

The Eighteenth, is compos'd of three Letters againſt the incontinency of Clergy-men, in which Peter Damien ſhews, that they are oblig'd to lead a ſingle Life; inveighs againſt thoſe who are marry'd or keep Concubines; vigorouſly oppoſes theſe Diſorders and powerfully exhorts the Perſons, to whom he writes, who are Peter Cardinal of Rome, the Biſhop of Turin and the Dutcheſs Adelaide, to interpoſe their Authority in order to prevent them for the future.

In the Nineteenth, he reſigns his Biſhoprick and two Abbies into the Hands of Pope Nicolas, and to induce him to approve of that Reſignation, he repreſents the Examples of divers Prelates, who have in like manner quitted their Biſhopricks, and gives an Account of certain Apparitions of Biſhops or other Perſons, condemned to endure the Torments of Hell, or of Purgatory, for neglecting to perform their Duty. Indeed one cannot but admire at the great number of Examples of that nature produced by him; but if any be deſirous to be inform'd of the particulars, they need only peruſe this Treatiſe; in which the Author, for his own part, alledges, as a motive to his Reſignation, that at the time of his promotion to the Epiſcopal Dignity, he was not worthy of it; and that his Life and Converſation were culpable, which induc'd him to believe, that it was much ſafer to depoſe himſelf, than to have a Sentence of Depoſition paſſed upon him at the Day of Judgment, accompanied with everlaſting Damnation.

The next Tract dedicated to the ſame Pope Nicolas; is written on the ſame Subject, and full of Examples of the like Nature: He enlarges farther on the Reaſons that oblig'd him to quit his Biſhoprick, and more particularly on this, viz. that he was no longer in a condition to take care of the two Biſhopricks, which the Holy See thought fit to commit to his Charge.

In the Twenty firſt, he commends an Abbot, for reſigning his Office, to be diſcharg'd of the Cares, Troubles and multiplicity of Buſineſs that unavoidably attended that Dignity, and exhorts him to withſtand, for the future, the Temptations, with which the Devil uſually aſſaults thoſe, who have quitted Eccleſiaſtical Preferments, by inſpiring them with a deſire to reſume them.

The Twenty ſecond, is written againſt Clergy-men who reſide at Court, and put themſelves into the Service of Princes or Potentates, to obtain Biſhopricks or Abbies. He ſhews that they are not free from the imputation of Simony, although they diſburſe no

Mony

Peter Damien Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia.

Mony, but that on the contrary, they are blame-worthy; becauſe they ſell themſelves as it were for Slaves, and part with their Liberty to get Eccleſiaſtical Livings: Beſides, that their Services are of greater Valne, than the Money that is paid by others: "For ſuppoſe (ſays "he) that two Clergy-men are poſſeſs'd of an equal Hereditary Eſtate; that they both ſell it, "and that one of them reſorts to Court, where he ſpends his Stock by degrees in the Prince's "Service, whilſt the other, on the contrary, keeps his entire. Afterwards a Benefice is be-"ſtow'd on each of them, that is to ſay, on the former, as a recompence for his Service, "and on the other, for his Money; now the Queſtion is, Which of the two bought the "Benefice at the deareſt Rate? The Value of the Money is equal, ſince it was the Pro-"duct of both their Eſtates; but one obtain'd with a great deal of Pains and Fatigues, "that which the other got without any Trouble or Difficulty; and therefore the Purchaſe "made by the former, coſt much more than that by the latter.

The Twenty third, is dedicated to Pope Alexander II. upon his return from the Council of Mantua, and contains an Anſwer to a Queſtion which he had formerly propos'd to Peter Damien, viz. Upon what account it happens that the Lives of the Popes are generally ſo ſhort? The latter reſolves it by a Moral Reflection, That God permits it ſo to fall out, to the end that the Frailty of Humane Life, may be moſt conſpicuous in thoſe, who are promoted to the Supreme Dignity; and that all Men who have regard to the Popes, may be ſtruck with terror at their Death. This gives him an occaſion to enlarge upon Providence and the Goodneſs of the Divine Majeſty.

In the Twenty fourth, he writes againſt thoſe Canons, who being maintain'd in common, by the Church-Revenues, affect to enjoy private Poſſeſſions. He exhorts Pope Alexander, to whom his Letter is directed, to make uſe of his Authority, to oblige them to quit that Claim.

In the Twenty fifth, he extols the Sacerdotal Dignity, and diſcourſes on the Obligations that accompany it.

In the Twenty ſixth, he declaims againſt the Ignorance, ſupine Negligence and Slothfulneſs of Clergy-men. He makes it appear to be the ſource of the principal Diſorders in the Church, and exhorts the Biſhops to inſpect the Lives and Converſation of the inferiour Clergy, and to take care that none be admitted into the Eccleſiaſtical State, but ſuch as are capable of performing thoſe Functions.

The Twenty ſeventh is directed to the Canons of the Church of Fano, who were at variance one with another, by reaſon that ſome of them were deſirous to live ſeparately, and the others in common. Peter Damien takes part with the latter, and maintains, that the Canons ought to live in Common, and to have no private Property, following the Examples of the Apoſtles and of the Chriſtians of the primitive Church.

The Twenty eighth is compos'd in favour of the Monks, againſt the Secular Clerks and Canons. The latter inſiſted, that the Monks ought not to adminiſter the Euchariſt or other Sacraments. Peter Damien maintains on the contrary, that the Monks ought not to be excluded from thoſe Functions; and to prove his Aſſertion, brings ſeveral Examples of Monks, who being made Biſhops or Prieſts, have actually adminiſter'd them. He extols the Monaſtick Order, deriving its original from the Prophets and Apoſtles; and in the cloſe, cites a Decretal made by Pope Boniface IV. in which Monks are authorized to adminiſter the Sacrament of Penance.

The Twenty ninth is directed to a certain Abbot, whom he reproves for wearing too ſumptuous Apparel.

The Thirtieth is written to the Inhabitants of Florence, and more eſpecially to the Monks of that City, who refus'd to communicate with their Biſhop, and to receive the Sacraments from his Hands, becauſe they ſuſpected him to be guilty of Simony. Peter Damien makes it appear, that although the Information they brought againſt him were true, yet they ought not to withdraw themſelves from his Communion, till he were legally convicted, nor to refuſe to receive the Sacraments adminiſter'd by him; by reaſon that unworthy Miniſters are capable of adminiſtring them as well as the worthy.

In the Thirty firſt, he exhorts the Cardinals to oppoſe the Coveteouſneſs and Concupiſcence of the Clergy, which was the ſource of the greateſt part of the Diſorders and Calamities that befel the Church.

The Thirty ſecond, is a Moral and Myſtical Treatiſe on Lent or the Forty days Faſt, and on the Forty Stations of the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs.

The Thirty third, is a letter directed to the Abbot of Mount Caſſin, who had threaten'd that if he did not come to him, he ſhould no longer partake of the Benefit of the Prayers put up in his Monaſtery. Peter Damien excuſes himſelf, upon account that he was ſenſible that the time of his Diſſolution drew near, and that he was afraid of going in queſt after a Monaſtery, leſt he ſhould die without the precincts of a Monaſtery. He entreats that Abbot not to deprive him of the Advantages that might ariſe from the Supplications of thoſe of his Order: He enlarges on the Devotions to be perform'd to the Virgin Mary, and produces a great number of Miracles wrought by her Interceſſion, in favour of thoſe who had a particular Reſpect for her; and amongſt others, he ſays, that ſhe appear'd to his Brother Damien a little before his Death. Afterwards he ſhews, that Alms diſtributed for the Dead, procure them Conſolation, as well as Prayers and Sacrifices. Peter Damien Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia.

The Thirty fourth, is a Collection of a great number of Miracles, Viſions, Apparitions and Hiſtorical Paſſages, relating to the Puniſhment of evil Actions, and the reward of good, the Torments of Hell, and the deliverance of Souls out of Purgatory.

In the Thirty fifth, after having alledged for a Reaſon, why the Image of St. Paul is uſually plac'd on the right Hand and St. Peter's on the left; that the former was of the Tribe of Benjamin, which ſignifies the Son of the right Hand; he enlarges on the Commendation of that Apoſtle.

In the Thirty ſixth, he treats of the Eternity, Immenſity, Purity, and more eſpecially of the Omnipotence of God.

In the Thirty ſeventh, he explains ſeveral Difficulties relating to the Holy Scripture, that were propoſed to him.

In the Thirty eighth, he confutes the Opinion of the Greeks, concerning the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt.

In the Thirty ninth, after having commended the Arch-biſhop of Beſanſon, for the good Order he had eſtabliſhed in his Church, and for having caus'd a Tomb to be prepar'd for himſelf, he finds fault with the Cuſtom of his Church and of ſome other Churches of France, in which the Clerks and even the Monks, in ſome places, were permitted to ſit, during the Celebration of Divine Service. He is of Opinion, that all thoſe who aſſiſt at it, ought to continue ſtanding, till it be perform'd.

In the Fortieth, after having congratulated a certain Biſhop, upon the recovery of his Health, he exhorts him not to give way to Paſſion for the future, and to forgive his Enemies.

In the Forty firſt, he maintains, That thoſe Perſons who make Matrimonial Contracts within the time prohibited by the Church, that is to ſay, in Lent; three Weeks before the Feſtival of St. John Baptiſt; and from Advent to Epiphany; ought to be divorc'd, and their Marriage declar'd null: But foraſmuch as ſome, made no ſcruple to marry at thoſe times, and imagin'd that it was ſufficient to abſtain from the uſe of Marriage, to avoid the Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, he confutes that Opinion, by ſhewing, that it is not carnal Copulation, but the mutual Conſent of the Parties that makes the Marriage.

The Forty ſecond contains two Letters, in which he admoniſhes two ſeveral Perſons, to perform the Vow that they had made, to enter into a Religious Order; ſhewing by divers Authorities and Examples, the Obligation they lie under, to fulfill their Vows, who have once made them.

In the Forty third, he exhorts the Monks of Mount Caſſin, to diſcipline themſelves every Friday.

In the Fourty fourth, he gives Moral Explications of the ten Plagues of Egypt.

In the Forty fifth, to comfort a tender-conſcienced Monk, who was troubled for his Ignorance; he ſhews that Learning often occaſions many Vices, more eſpecially when it is not accompanied with other Vertues, but that downright Integrity is always profitable to Salvation.

In the Forty ſixth, he exhorts that Monk, patiently and cheerfully to bear Reprimands and Corrections.

In the Forty ſeventh, he recommends Chaſtity to his Nephew Damien, and perſwades him to receive the Communion every day, to be in a condition to preſerve that Vertue. Afterwards he gives him wholſome Inſtructions to withſtand the Temptations of the Devil.

In the Forty eighth, he reproves a Monk, who had ſtill ſome inclination for delicious Fare and coſtly Apparel, and admoniſhes him to fix all his Delight and Repoſe in God.

In the Forty ninth, he gives a great deal of wholſome Advice, concerning the Spiritual Life to a young Monk his Nephew.

The Fiftieth, is a Moral Inſtruction, dedicated to the Counteſs Blanche, who had taken a Nun's Habit.

The Fifty firſt, is directed to a Monk nam'd Teuzo, who having left his Monaſtery, retir'd to a Cell in the middle of the City, and refus'd to entertain Peter Damien as well as his Abbot, when they came to Viſit him. He exhorts him with a great deal of Charity and Gentleneſs, to quit that particular way of living and to return to his Duty.

In the Fifty ſecond, he makes divers Moral Reflections, on the Qualities of ſeveral ſorts of Animals.

In the Fifty third, he ſhews the Advantages that ariſe from Afflictions and Adverſity.

In the Fifty fourth, he exhorts certain Monks to faſt on Saturdays in honour of our Saviour's Burial, and makes uſe of an Apparition to confirm that Cuſtom.

In

Peter Damien Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia.

In the Fifty fifth, he admoniſhes the Monks of his Order, to faſt on the Vigils of the Feſtivals of the Aſſumption of the Virgin Mary, of Chriſtmaſs, of the Epiphany, of Holy Thurſday, of Whitſunday, of the Nativity of St. John Baptiſt, and of thoſe of all the Feſtivals of the Apoſtles, as alſo to obſerve a Faſt on all Saturdays throughout the Year.

In the Fifty ſixth, he commends the Empreſs Agnes, upon account of the ſingular Modeſty and Humility ſhe had ſhewn in going to Viſit the Sepulchre of St. Peter and St. Paul, and makes it appear, that Potentates ought not to take a pride in their Grandeur, nor in the Riches of this World.

In the Fifty ſeventh, he admoniſhes Prince Godfrey, that he did not uſe ſufficient ſeverity in the puniſhing of Criminals, and ſhews how neceſſary it is, that Princes ſhould be very punctual in the Adminiſtration of Juſtice.

In the Fifty eighth, he demonſtrates, That there is no perfect Felicity in this World, and that all profane Sciences are not capable of making us truly Wiſe or Happy. Therefore he warns Boniface, to whom he writes, that if he has not taken a reſolution entirely to renounce worldly Wealth and Knowledge; at leaſt, he ought to make uſe of them only as means for the attaining of the real Poſſeſſions and of the true Wiſdom.

In the Fifty ninth, he treats of the laſt Judgment and Antichriſt; and ſhews that it is difficult to diſcourſe appoſitely on that Subject, but very profitable to meditate ſeriouſly upon it. He ſays, that Antichriſt ſhall reign three Years and a half; that he ſhall be kill'd on the Mount of Olives; and that forty days ſhall paſs from his Death, to the coming of JESUS CHRIST, during which the Perſecution ſhall ceaſe, and the Juſt, whoſe Faith has been ſhaken, ſhall perform Acts of Repentance: That afterwards the Earth and Air ſhall be involv'd in univerſal Flames, which ſhall purifie the Elect. Then he produces ten Signs that ought to precede the Day of Judgment, according to St. Jerom.

The Sixtieth and laſt Tract, contains Allegorical Explications on divers Paſſages of the Book of Geneſis.

We have given an account of the Opuſcula after the Letters, becauſe the greateſt part of thoſe Tracts, are in effect only of that nature, and it were more expedient to leave them among the Letters, (as in the firſt Edition) and to diſpoſe them all according to the Order of time or the Subjects they treat of, than to diſtribute them in ſuch a manner, as they appear at preſent. Let us now return to the ſecond Tome that contains Peter Damien's Sermons, which are Seventy five in number, diſpoſed according to the Order of the Feſtivals of the Year, but ſome of them do not belong to this Cardinal, particularly that of St. Martin. The ſecond Sermon of St. Andrew; that of St. Nicolas; that on Chriſtmaſs-Eve; and that of St. Stephen the Protomartyr; which are inſerted among St. Bernard's Sermons, and which were publiſh'd by Father Mabillon in the Edition of the Works of that Saint, under the Name of Nicolas Abbot of Cairvaux; as alſo, thoſe on the Feſtivals of the Aſſumption of the Virgin Mary, and of All-Saints, the firſt on Chriſtmaſs-Day, and that on the Dedication of a certain Church, appear to have been compos'd by the ſame Author.

The Sermons are follow'd by the Lives of St. Odilo, St. Maurus Biſhop of Ceſena, St. Romualdus, St. Rodulphus Biſhop of Eugubio, and the Hiſtory of the Paſſions of St. Flora and St. Lucilia. As for the other Lives of the Saints, taken out of Surius by Peter Damien, they conſtitute part of the Sermons.

In the laſt Tome, are contain'd divers Prayers, Hymns and † Proſes attributed to Peter Damien, to which are annexed certain Extracts taken out of the Works of that Father, by a nameleſs Writer who was one of his Pupils, and out of the Rule of the Canons, compos'd by PETRUS de HONESTIS, a Clerk of Ravenna, whom ſome have unadviſedly confounded with Peter Damien; ſince that Rule was dedicated to Pope Paſchal II. who was not promoted to the Papal Dignity till A. D. 1099. after the death of the latter.

Petrus de Honeſtis.

The Treatiſe of the Reformation of the Biſhops and Popes, extant in Goldaſtus, is not a Work falſly aſcribed to Peter Damien, as Poſſevinus imagin'd, but a Fragment of the twelfth Letter of the firſt Book.

The five Sermons, that Father Luke Dachery ſet forth under the Name of Peter Damien, in the ſeventh Tome of the Spicilegium, do not belong to this Author, but rather to St. Petrus Chryſologus, as it is own'd by that Father himſelf, in the end of his Preface to the eighth Tome.

Peter Damien wrote with a great deal of facility and clearneſs. His Style is Polite and Elegant, full of Figures and agreeable Varieties: He produces divers fine Notions, and gives an admirable turn to his Writings, inſomuch that ſome of his Letters are compos'd with all poſſible Art and Accuracy. He had a Genius proper for Negociations; and was ſo dextrous in the Management of Affairs, that even thoſe whom he condemn'd or reprov'd, were conſtrain'd to acknowledge, that he had reaſon to do it. He deliver'd his Mind with a great deal of freedom, to the Popes and other Perſons of Eminency; nevertheleſs, without failing to ſhew all the Reſpect that was due to their Quality. He us'd his utmoſt endeavours to revive, at leaſt a ſhadow of the ancient Diſcipline in that corrupted Age, and to put a ſtop to the Career of the Enormities committed by the Clergy and Monks of his Time. He attain'd to a profound skill in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, and more eſpecially in thoſe that relate to the Conſtitutions and Diſcipline of the Church. He was alſo well vers'd in the Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, but inſiſted on the Allegorical rather than the Literal Senſe of them. He had perus'd the Works of the Latin Fathers, and chiefly thoſe of St. Auguſtin and St. Gregory, whoſe Doctrine and Maxims he thoroughly imbib'd: He argues ſubtilly about Theological Queſtions, and Controverſial Matters. He ſhew'd a great deal of Devotion to the Virgin Mary, and was a punctual Obſerver of the Rites of the Church, and of Monaſtical Cuſtoms: But he produces a great number of Viſions and Apparitions, which he very eaſily gives Credit to.

The Works of this Author were publiſhed by Father Conſtantin Caietan, a Monk of the Order of Mount Caſſin, and printed at Rome, in three Volumes in the Years, 1606, 1608, and 1615. Theſe three Tomes were re-printed with a fourth at Lyons, A. D. 1623. in one ſingle Volume in Folio, and afterwards at Paris in 1663. not to mention an Edition of his Letters in Quarto, ſet forth by Nivelle at Paris in 1610.

CHAP. IX.

An Account of the Churches of England from King William the Conqueror, to Henry I. with the Life of St. Anſelm Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and an Abridgment of his Works.

THE Churches and Kingdom of England, which were in a flouriſhing condition, and enjoy'd a profound Peace and Tranquility in St. Dunſtan's time, were miſerably diſtreſs'd after his Death, (according to his Prediction) with innumerable Troubles and Calamities. The Countries over-run by the Barbarians; the Churches were Pillag'd and ſet on Fire; the Monaſteries were ruin'd; the City of Canterbury was Burnt; and Alphegus the Arch-biſhop was carry'd away Priſoner with the Clergy of that Province. Theſe Calamities were follow'd by the Diſſenſions and Civil Wars, between King Edward the Son of Ethelred, and Godwin Earl of Kent with his Son Harold, as well as by a general Barbarity and Corruption of Manners; till at laſt the Death of Edward the Confeſſor, who left no Iſſue, compleated the ruin of the Kingdom. Affairs being in this poſture, William Duke of Normandy paſſing over the Sea, ſubdu'd it in the Year, 1066. having kill'd Harold in Battel, who had taken poſſeſſion of the Throne after the deceaſe of King Edward; and caus'd new Laws, as well Eccleſiaſtical as Civil, to be eſtabliſh'd throughout his Dominions: He prohibited his Subjects to acknowledge any Pope without his leave, and to receive any Bulls from Rome till they were ſhewn to him: Neither would he ſuffer the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, tho' ſtyl'd Primate of all England, to make any Conſtitutions in his Councils, which were not conformable to his Inclination, and that were not before concerted with him: Laſtly, he forbid that any of his Barons, Lords, Miniſters of State, or Officers ſhould be excommunicated without his Order. In the fifth Year of his Reign, Lanfranc, Abbot of St. Stephen at Caen, was ordain'd Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and went a little while after to Rome, with Thomas Arch-biſhop of York, and Remigius Biſhop of Lincoln, to obtain the Pall of Pope Alexander II. who receiv'd them with particular marks of his Eſteem and Friendſhip. The next Day, Lanfranc accus'd both theſe Biſhops, who accompany'd him, upon account of their illegitimate Ordination; by reaſon that one was the Son of a Prieſt, and the other had given a certain Sum of Money to King William for his Biſhoprick. The effect of this Accuſation was, that the two Prelats reſign'd their Paſtoral Staves and Rings into the Hands of the Pope, who gave theſe Ornaments back again to them, upon Lanfranc's requeſt. This Arch-biſhop upon his return from Rome with the Pall, took much pains in re-eſtabliſh-ing the Churches of England, and maintain'd their Rights and Revenues against the Secular Powers with so great efficacy, that neither King William I. nor his Son William II. thought fit to make any attempt upon them, as long as he liv'd; but after his Death, the latter caus'd all the Ecclesiastical Revenues belonging to his Dominions to be registerd, and having computed what was requisite for the maintenance of the Monks; re-united the rest to the Demeans of the Crown, letting them out to Farm every Year, to those who offer'd most; but in order to get an absolute Power over the Churches, when the Bishops dy'd, he left their Sees vacant, and enjoy'd their Revenues. That of Canterbury was vacant above five Years, till King William falling dangerously Sick, sent for the Abbot Anselm, and invested him with that Arch-bishop against his Will.

St. Anselm Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

This Saint was the Son of Gondulphus and Ermemberga, and was born at Aosta on the Alps, A. D. 1033. After having compleated his Studies, and having travell'd for some time in Burgundy and France, he embrac'd the Monastick Life (at the Age of 27 Years) in the Abbey of Bec, and put himself under the Tuition of Lanfranc Prior of that Monastery: when the latter was made Abbot of St. Stephen at Caen, about three Years after, he was substituted in his room, and in like manner succeeded Herluin Abbot of Bec, who died in 1078. St. Anselm took some Journeys into England whilst he had the Government of that Abbey; by which means having given special Proofs of his extraordinary Abilities in this Kingdom, he was chosen Arch-bishop of Canterbury, March 6. A. D. 1093. and was consecrated on the fourth Day of December following. Then he went to salute the King, and offer'd him the Sum of Five hundred Pounds towards carrying on the War which that Prince undertook against his Brother Richard, to recover the Dukedom of Normandy. The King at first seem'd to be well satisfy'd with this Present, but some of his Courtiers insisted that it was not sufficient, and that if his Majesty would signify his dissatisfaction never so little to the Arch-bishop, as much more might be got from him: Therefore the King sent him word, That he was unwilling to receive the Money which was proffered by him, as being too small a Sum: The Arch-bishop after having entreated him to accept of it, refus'd to give any more, and withdrew from the Court. However, some time after, he went to meet the King at Hastings just before his departure for Normandy, and deliver'd his mind freely to him, concerning the Reformation of the Churches of England, and the necessity of calling a Council for that purpose. The King was not well pleas'd with what he said, and made another demand of Money: but the Arch-bishop refusing even to disburse what he had proffer'd at first, incurr'd his high displeasure, and was oblig'd to retire with Precipitation. Upon the return of this Prince, he begg'd leave to go to Rome, to receive the Pall from the Hands of Pope Urban II. but the King denying his Request, told him, that 'twas not customary in his Kingdom, to acknowledge any other Person as Pope, than him whom he and his Prelates should think fit to approve, and having afterwards held an Assembly of Bishops and Lords for that purpose, it was declar'd therein, that Urban II. should not be acknowledged. Whereupon St. Anselm having undertaken to vindicate that Pope, all the Prelates except the Bishop of Rochester resolv'd, as well as the King, no longer to own him as Primate or Arch-bishop: He preferr'd a Petition that he might have leave to depart out of England, but it was rejected; nevertheless a delay was propos'd till Whitsontide, which being accepted of by him, he was left at liberty to return to Canterbury; yet he was no sooner arriv'd there, but his most faithful Friends and Servants were made Prisoners or Banished.

In the mean while, the King sent two Clergy-men to Rome, to endeavour to bring over Pope Urban to his Party, and to make himself Master of the Pall: The Pope sent back the Bishop of Albano with the two Clerks, who manag'd the business so well, that he perswaded the King to cause Urban to be own'd; nevertheless this Legate could not be induc'd to consent to the deposing of Anselm. At last the King perceiving himself not to be able to accomplish his design, either to cause him to be depos'd, or to oblige him to do what he requir'd, was reconcil'd with him, by giving him the Pall which Urban's Legate had brought for his use. St. Anselm liv'd in quiet for some time, whilst the King pass over into Normandy, which Dutchy was resign'd to him by his Brother Richard; but at his return, a resolution was taken to exact a great Sum of Mony of the Arch-bishop, who to avoid the Storm, sued for a permission to go to Rome; but not being able to obtain it, notwithstanding his reiterated sollicitations at three several times, he departed without leave, and embark'd at Dover; from whence he pass'd into France, and afterwards taking a Journey to Italy, went directly to Rome in the Year, 1098. where he was joyfully entertain'd by Pope Urban, but his Residence in that City being inconvenient by reason of the excessive Heats, he retir'd to a Village near Capua, where the Pope soon gave him a Visit, upon his arrival at the Siege of Capua, which Place was invested by Roger Duke of Apulia. After the raising of the Siege, the Pope held a Council at Bari, in which St. Anselm assisting, disputed earnestly against the Greeks, about the Procession of the Holy Ghost, and entreated the Pope and the Bishops, not to excommunicate the King of England. When the Council was concluded, he accompany'd the Pope to Rome, and some Days after, the King of England, to whom Urban had had written that he ought to re-eſtabliſh St. Anſelm in his Metropolitan See, ſent thither an Ambaſſador, who obtain'd a Demurrer till the Feſtival of St. Michael. St. Anſelm being inform'd of the matter, determin'd to go to Lyons; but the Pope oblig'd him to ſtay, in order to be preſent in a Council, which was to be held at Eaſter in the Year, 1099. Thus he reſided during ſix Months at Rome, and was very highly eſteem'd in that City. The Writer of his Life obſerves, that certain Engliſh Men, who came to viſit him, being deſirous to Kiſs his Feet as it was uſually done to the Pope's, he would not ſuffer them to do it, and that the Pope admir'd his Humility in that particular: Laſtly, St. Anſelm having aſſiſted in the Council of Rome, A. D. 1099. in which Laicks who took upon them to give Inveſtitures, and thoſe Clergy-men who receiv'd them from their Hands, were excommunicated, he took leave of the Pope, and retir'd to Lyons; where within a little while after, he was inform'd of the Death of Urban II. and afterward of that of William II. King of England, which happen'd in the Month of Auguſt A. D. 1100.

St. Anſelm Arch-biſhop of Canterbury.

Henry I. his Succeſſor immediately recall'd St. Anſelm to England, where he was no ſooner arriv'd, but he had new conteſts with that Prince about the Inveſtitures and the Oaths of Allegeance and Supremacy, which he refus'd to take. Foraſmuch as this Affair was regulated at Rome, it was requiſite that the King ſhould make application to that Court, to endeavour to cauſe the Reſolution which had been taken there, to be chang'd: However, St. Anſelm refus'd to ordain the Biſhops, who had receiv'd Inveſtiture from the King, and nothing could be obtain'd from Rome. Afterward this Arch-biſhop being perſwaded by the King to take a Journey to Rome to find out ſome Expedients for the adjuſting of that Affair, went thither accompany'd with an Ambaſſador: Upon their Arrival the Matter was debated A. D. 1105. in the preſence of Pope Paſchal II. to whom the Ambaſſador peremptorily declar'd, That the King his Maſter would ſooner be prevail'd upon to part with his Kingdom, than with his right to the Inveſtitures; The Pope reply'd, That he would ſooner loſe his Life than ſuffer him to retain it. However, at laſt it was agreed upon, That the King of England ſhould enjoy certain Privileges which were in his poſſeſſion, but that he ſhould lay no manner of claim to the Inveſtitures: Therefore the Excommunication which he was ſuppos'd to have incurr'd, by granting the Inveſtiture of Benefices, was taken off; but it was ordain'd, That thoſe Perſons who had receiv'd them from his Hands, ſhould remain excommunicated for ſome time, and that the giving them Abſolution for that Offence ſhould be reſerv'd to St. Anſelm. The Affair being thus determin'd, the Ambaſſador and St. Anſelm ſet forward in their Journey, but when they were arriv'd near Lyons, the Ambaſſador declar'd to him in his Maſter's name, that he was forbidden to return to England, unleſs he would promiſe him to ſubmit to the Cuſtom which prevail'd in that Kingdom, without having any regard to what had been ordain'd to the contrary by the Pope. St. Anſelm refuſing to enter into ſuch an Engagement, ſtay'd ſome time at Lyons, and having paſs'd from thence into Normandy, at laſt came to an Accommodation with the King of England, on condition that the Churches which King William II. had firſt made ſubject to the Payment of a certain Tax, ſhould be exempted from it, and that his Majeſty ſhould reſtore what he had exacted of the Clergy, and every thing that was taken from the Church of Canterbury, during the exile of the Archbiſhop. After this Agreement, which was concluded, A. D. 1106. between the King and the Arch-biſhop at Bec Abbey, St. Anſelm return'd to England, was re-eſtabliſh'd in his Archbiſhoprick, and enjoy'd it peaceably till his Death, which happen'd three Years after, in the 16th ſince his advancement to that Dignity, and the 76th of his Age, A. D. 1109.

St. Anſelm is no leſs famous for his Learning, and the great number of his Writings, than for his Conduct and the Zeal he ſhew'd in maintaining the Rights of the Church. The largeſt Edition of his Works is the laſt, publiſhed by Father Gerberon, and it is that which we ſhall follow, being divided into three Parts: The Firſt of theſe containing Dogmatical Treatiſes, bears the Title of Monologia; that is to ſay, a Treatiſe of the Exiſtence of God, of his Attributes, and of the Holy Trinity: It is ſo call'd, by reaſon that it is compos'd in form of the Meditations of a Man, who reaſons with himſelf to find out Divine Truths, and who explains them accordingly as they are diſcover'd by him. It is a very ſubtil Work, and contains a great Number of Metaphyſical Arguments,

He continues to Treat of the ſame Subject, and obſerves the ſame method of Writing in the Proſlogia, where the Perſon who reaſon'd with himſelf in the firſt Work, making his Addreſſes to God, Diſcourſes of his Exiſtence, Juſtice, Wiſdom, Immenſity, Eternity, and of his being the Summum Bonum or Soveraign Good. A certain Monk nam'd Gaunilon, having perus'd this Treatiſe, could not approve the Argument which St. Anſelm makes uſe of therein, to prove the Exiſtence of God, taken from the Idea of a moſt perfect Being: We have (ſays he) at leaſt the Idea of a moſt perfect Being; therefore this Being of neceſſity Exiſts. Gaunilon not being able to comprehend this Argument (which ſeems to be a Sophiſm or meer Fallacy to thoſe who are not endu'd with a ſound and penetrating Judgment to diſcern the force of it) wrote a ſmall Tract on purpoſe to refute it, in which he objects every thing that is moſt ſubtil and plauſible, to overthrow this Ratiocination. St. Anſelm return'd a very ſolid Anſwer, in which he enervates his Adverſary's Objections, and makes it appear, that his Argument is Rational and Convincing.

St. Anſelm Arch-biſhop of Canterbury.

The Treatiſe of Faith, of the Holy Trinity, and of the Incarnation Dedicated to Pope Urban II. was written againſt a French Clergy-man nam'd Roceſlin Tutor to Abaelard, who undertook to prove, That the three Perſons of the Trinity are three different Things; becauſe otherwiſe it might be ſaid, That the Father and the Holy Ghoſt were Incarnate. St. Anſelm being as yet Abbot of Bec, began a Treatiſe to confute this Error; but the Maintainer thereof having abjur'd it in a Council held by the Arch-biſhop of Rheims in his Province, he left the Work imperfect; yet compleated it afterward in England, being there inform'd, that he who broach'd this Error, perſiſted therein, and declar'd that he abjur'd it, only for fear of being Aſſaſſinated by the People. St. Anſelm at firſt lays down for a Maxim, That we ought not to argue againſt that which the Church believes, nor againſt that which Faith Teaches us, and that we ought not to Reject that which we cannot Comprehend; but that we ought to acknowledge, that there are many things which are above our Underſtanding. Afterward he relates Roſcelin's Propoſition expreſſed in theſe Terms: If the three Divine Perſons be one and the ſame Thing and not three Things conſider'd every one apart, as three Angels or three Souls, nevertheleſs in ſuch a manner, that they are the ſame Thing in Will and Power; it follows, That the Father and the Holy Ghoſt were Incarnate with the Son. St. Anſelm declares that this Man admits three Gods, or elſe that he does not know what he ſays: He asks him what he means by three Things, and acknowledges, that in one ſence it may be ſaid, That the three Perſons of the Trinity are three Things, if their Relation one to another be underſtood by that Term; but that it cannot be ſo ſaid, if their Subſtance be underſtood, which ſeems to be Roſcelin's meaning, ſince he ſays, That they are Three diſtinct Things, as three Souls and three Angels: He confutes this Opinion, and ſhews, that the diſtinction of the Perſons is ſufficient to the end that it may be ſaid, That the Son is Incarnate, without inferring, That the Father and the Holy Ghoſt are ſo. Afterward he reſolves this Queſtion, Why the Son was Incarnate rather than the Father or the Holy Ghoſt; ſhews that there is but one Perſon and two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt; and explains the Proceſſion of the Divine Perſons.

The Treatiſe of the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt againſt the Greeks, is no leſs Theological than the former: For the Arch-biſhop proves therein, That the Holy Ghoſt proceeds from the Son as well as from the Father, and diſcuſſes the principal Queſtions relating to his Proceſſion.

His Treatiſe of the Fall of the Devil, is written in form of a Dialogue and the Subject of it is leſs obſcure. He ſhews, That altho' the Good Angels receiv'd from God, all the Good that was done by them, and even the Gift of Perſeverance; yet it cannot be ſaid, That the Bad did not perſevere, becauſe God deny'd them that Gift, but becauſe they would not perſevere: That the Good Angels were in a capacity of Sinning as well as the Bad; but that having freely preferr'd Righteouſneſs to Unrighteouſneſs, they had as a recompence, the aſſurance of never ſwerving from the former: And that the Bad on the contrary, having voluntarily fallen from Righteouſneſs, loſt for ever the Good which they had, and put themſelves out of a Capacity of ever becoming Righteous. Afterward he treats of the nature of Evil, and proves that it conſiſts only in a privation of Good, and debates ſome other ſubtil Queſtions.

The Treatiſe which ſhews, Why God was made Man? Diſcovers its Subject in the very Title, and is more particularly explain'd in the Preface. This Treatiſe (ſays he) is divided into two Books; the firſt of which contains the Objections rais'd by the Infidels, who imagine it to be contrary to Reaſon, That a God ſhould become Man, with the Anſwers of the Faithful to their Arguments; and it is ſhewn therein, That 'tis impoſſible for any Man to be Sav'd without the Mediation of a God Incarnate. In the ſecond Book 'tis prov'd, That Humane Nature is deſign'd to enjoy everlaſting Life, both in reſpect of the Soul and of the Body; and that this advantage cannot be obtain'd but by the means of a God-Man.

The Treatiſe of Original Sin, was compos'd immediately after the preceeding, and in it are diſcuſs'd many Queſtions about the nature of Sin, and the manner how it is communicated to all the Poſterity of Adam.

The Treatiſe of Truth, of the Will, and of Liberty, contains variety of Metaphyſical Principles concerning thoſe Matters, to explain their Nature and Kinds. Theſe Diſcourſes are written, in form of Dialogues as well as the preceeding.

In the following Treatiſe, he enquires into the means of reconciling Free-will with Foreknowledge, Predeſtination and Grace. As for Fore-knowledge and Predeſtination, all his Diſcourſe on thoſe Matters is rambling, and in ſome places very obſcure.

The Subject of the Three next Treatiſes is leſs intricate, and the firſt of them Dedicated to Valeran Biſhop of Naumburg, is about the uſe of Unleavened Bread; in which the Author maintains againſt the Greeks, that altho' the Euchariſt may be adminiſtred with Unleavened and Leavened Bread, yet 'tis moſt expedient to make uſe of the former. The ſecond is a Letter written by the ſaid Valeran, complaining of the great number of Ceremonies uſed in the adminiſtration of the Sacraments, and entreating St. Anſelm to reſolve this Queſtion, viz. Why the ſign of the Croſs is made on the Bread, and on the Chalice; and why the Chalice is uſually cover'd with a Vail or † Pale before the Conſecration? In the end he gives him to underſtand, that he was reconcil'd with Pope Paſchal II. St. Anſelm returns him an Anſwer in the following Treatiſe, That the variety of Cuſtoms and Ceremonies, does not hinder the Unity of the Faith, and alledges certain Myſtical Reaſons for making the ſign of the Croſs on the Hoſt, and on the Chalice, and for covering the latter with a Vail.

† A Square Paſt-board cover'd with fine Linnen.

To theſe Treatiſes is annex'd another ſmall Tract, in which he aſſerts, That Clergy-men, who make Confeſſion of Sins of the Fleſh committed privately, may be re-eſtabliſh'd in the Functions of their Order, after having done Pennance. This Piece is only an extract of St. Anſelm's Letter to the Abbot William.

In the Treatiſe of Marriages forbidden between near Relations, he enquires into the Reaſons of that Prohibition, which he extends only to the ſixth degree of Conſanguinity.

There is nothing relating to Divinity in his Treatiſe of the Grammarian.

In that of the Will of God, being the laſt of the Dogmatical, of which the firſt Part of his Works is compos'd, he explains the different Senſes, in which the Term of the Will of God is taken, and the different kinds of Wills that may be diſtinguiſh'd in him.

To theſe Works is to be added a Treatiſe of Peace and Concord, which is inſerted in the end of the Volume; a Piece that is well worthy of St. Anſelm and which is altogether written in his Style.

The ſecond Part of the Works of this learned Prelat contains the Parænetick and Aſcetick Treatiſes, viz. 1. Sixteen Homelies, the Firſt of which is on the 24th Chapter of Eccleſiaſtes, and the others on divers Goſpels: Indeed the firſt is only found in the ancient Editions of his Works, and the reſt were ſince added; but they are all of the ſame Style, and ſome of them bear St. Anſelm's Name in certain Manuſcripts; ſo that 'tis very probable, that they all belong to him. 2. An Exhortation to the contempt of Temporal Things, and to the deſire of Eternal, publiſh'd by Father Theophilus Renaudæus, which contains wholſom Admonitions compris'd in ſhort and pathetical Sentences. Altho' there be no proof, that this Piece is St. Anſelm's; nevertheleſs it is very conformable to his manner of Writing. 3. Advice to a dying Perſon, which is a Form of aſſiſting Perſons at the Hour of Death, bearing St. Anſelm's Name in certain Manuſcripts. 4. A Poem in Hexameter and Pentameter Verſes, on the Contempt of the World, which altho' Printed under this Arch-biſhop's Name; yet does not bear it in the Manuſcripts, but that of Bernard of Cluny, and in another, that of Roger Monk of Bec: This Poem is follow'd by two other very ſhort Pieces on the ſame Subject, which appear to be written by the ſame Author. 5. A Collection of 21 Meditations on different Subjects. 6. Seventy four Prayers. 7. A Pſalter in honour of the Virgin Mary; that is to ſay, certain Stanza's of Hymns on the Pſalms of her Office, with other entire Hymns for the Canonical Hours, and the Feſtivals of the Bleſſed Virgin. This Piece does not bear St. Anſelm's Name in any Manuſcript, and ſeems to me to be unworthy of ſo great an Author.

The third Part comprehends St. Anſelm's Letters diſtributed into four Books, in the Firſt of which are contain'd thoſe that he wrote whilſt he was a ſimple Monk, which are 77 in Number; in the Second, thoſe that were written by him being Abbot of Bec, to the Number of 53; in the Third, thoſe that he compos'd when Arch-biſhop; and in the Fourth, 106 Letters which never were as yet Printed. There are alſo Nine others in the Supplement taken out of Tome IX. of the Spicilegium by Father Luke Dachery. We ſhall not here produce the Extracts of all theſe Letters, it being ſufficient to hint, That they are either ſuch as relate to Compliments or particular Affairs, or to Morality and Piety, or to the Monaſtick Diſcipline and that of the Churches of England. Beſides theſe Letters but now recited, there are Eight others in the ninth Tome of the Spicilegium, which are not compris'd in the four Books of Letters belonging to the Works of this Arch-biſhop.

The Works falſly attributed to St. Anſelm are reſerv'd for the Appendix, and the Firſt of theſe is call'd, An Illuſtration or Dialogue concerning Theological Points; being a Body of Divinity by way of Queſtion and Anſwer, which bears St. Anſelm's Name in ſome Manuſcripts, but neither is of his Style, nor conformable to his Doctrin. Trithemius attributes a Piece under this Title, to Honoratus of Autun.

The Second is a Dialogue concerning the Paſſion of our Lord, in which the Virgin Mary is introduc'd diſcourſing with St. Anſelm: It is a ſuppoſititious Piece and forged at pleaſure.

The Third is the Treatiſe of the Meaſure of the Croſs, which is a Moral Explication of theſe Words of Jeſus Chriſt: If any one will follow me, he muſt deny himſelf, and take up his Croſs. 'Tis a Book full of very devout Expreſſions, in which the Author cites St. Bernard, and therefore it cannot belong to St. Anſelm, who died before that Saint was in a Capacity to write.

The Fourth is a Treatiſe of the Conception of the Virgin Mary, the Author of which explains the Solemnity of the Feſtival of the Conception: The State of the Queſtion plainly ſhews, that this Piece is of a later date than the time of St. Anſelm; ſince the Author treats of that Feſtival, which he ſuppoſes to be of conſiderable Antiquity, and yet did not begin to be inſtituted till St. Bernard's time. There is a certain Manuſcript, in which this Treatiſe is attributed to Hervæus, a Monk of the Monaſtery founded by Ebbo, in the Village of Dol near Bourges, who liv'd in the XII. Century.

The Fifth is another Tract in the ſame Feſtival of the Conception of the Virgin Mary, which is more viſibly ſpurious.

The Sixth is an Hiſtory of the Paſſion of St. Guigner and his Companions, which is rather a Romance, than a pious and true Narration.

The Seventh is a ſmall Tract on the Monaſtick Stability, of which St. Anſelm may well be reputed to be the Author.

The Eighth is a Dialogue about Matters of Religion between a Chriſtian and a Jew, compos'd by Giſlebert a Monk of Weſtminſter, and dedicated to St. Anſelm.

The Ninth is another Dialogue of the ſame Nature, compos'd by the Abbot Rupert.

The Tenth is a Collection of certain uſeful Sentences, that are attributed to St. Anſelm and which are very ſuitable to his Genius, as well as two other ſmall Tracts that follow them.

The laſt is a Fabulous Relation of two Miracles falſly aſcrib'd to St. James the Apoſtle.

This Edition does not contain the Treatiſe of the Sacrament of the Altar, imputed in ſome Manuſcripts to St. Anſelm, which cannot be his, in regard that it comprehends certain Extracts of the Book of Divine Offices, by the Abbot Rupert; and which belongs to William of St. Thierry, according to the Manuſcript of Longpont, under whoſe Name it was Printed in the Bibliotheca Ordinis Ciſtercienſis. Neither do we find in the ſame Edition, the Treatiſe of the Parts and Actions attributed to God, which are extant among St. Bonaventure's Works, and among the ſuppoſititious Works of St. Auguſtin and St. Jerom; becauſe it does not bear St. Anſelm's Name in any Manuſcript, no more than the Tracts of the Image of the World, that are inſerted among the Works of Honoratus of Autun, and of which the Authors are unknown.

We do not meet with any Eccleſiaſtical Writers before St. Anſelm, who wrote after ſo Scholaſtick a manner, nor who have ſtarted ſo many Metaphyſical Queſtions, and argu'd ſo ſubtlely, as he has done: He is alſo the Firſt who compos'd long Prayers in form of Meditations: His Letters are written in a plainer Style, but they are leſs accurate: His Exhortations are ſimple Homelies, full of myſtical Notions, in which there is not much Eloquence, and very little Morality. He does not ſeem to have been well vers'd in poſitive Divinity, nevertheleſs he had perus'd St. Auguſtin's Works, and took out of them many Principles, which he makes uſe of, in his Theological Ratiocinations.

There are two Gothick Editions of his Works, viz. one A. D. 1491. at Nuremberg, and the other at Paris in 1544 and 1549. They were alſo Publiſh'd at Venice in the laſt of theſe Years, and at Colen in 1573. Father Picard a Regular Canon of St. Victor at Paris, ſet forth an Edition much larger than the former, Printed at Colen in 1612. Some time after, Father Theophilus Renaudæus a Jeſuit caus'd one to be Printed at Lyons in 1630. And at laſt Father Gerberon a Benedictin Monk of the Congregation of St. Maur, Publiſh'd a new Edition much finer and more correct than the preceeding, Printed at Paris in 1675. which is a ſignal Proof of his accurate Induſtry and ſound Judgment, whoſe Merit is well known in the Common-wealth of Learning.

Eadmer St. Anſelm's Pupil.

To St. Anſelm's Works are annex'd thoſe of Eadmer a Monk of Canterbury and his Pupil; the Firſt of which is the Life of his Tutor, written very largely, and in a very plain Style.

The Second is call'd, The Hiſtory of Novelties, and divided into ſix Books, of which the firſt Four contain a Relation of the Conteſts which St. Anſelm had with the Kings of England about the Affair of the Inveſtitures, and of the Perſecutions he ſuffer'd upon that Account; and the Two laſt, the Hiſtory of the Tranſactions in the Church of Canterbury under Radulphus his Succeſſor, who was tranſlated from the Biſhoprick of Rocheſter to the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury, five Years after St. Anſelm's Death, and govern'd that Church till A. D. 1122.

The Third is a Treatiſe of the excellent Qualities of the Virgin Mary, in which he extols her Nativity, Annunciation, Aſſumption, the Love that ſhe had for her Son, and the Advantages ſhe procur'd for Men, and ends with a Prayer made to her.

The Fourth is a particular Tract of the four Cardinal Vertues obſervable in the Bleſſed Virgin.

The Fifth is a Diſcourſe of Beatitude, or rather of the State of the Bleſſed in Heaven, which he had heard deliver'd by St. Anſelm.

The Sixth is a Collection of divers Similitudes and Compariſons that were taken out of St. Anſelm's Works, or which he had heard from his Mouth.

The Same Author likewiſe compos'd a Treatiſe of Eccleſiaſtical Liberty, and wrote the Lives of St. Wilfrid and St. Dunſtan, and many Letters which are not as yet Publiſhed. He died A. D. 1121.

CHAP. X.

Of the Eccleſiaſtical Writers of the Eleventh Age, who compos'd Treatiſes of Church-diſcipline or Commentaries on the Holy Scripture.

Burchard Biſhop of Worms.

BURCHARD a German by Nation, a Monk of Lobes and the Pupil of Olbert Abbot of Gemblours, ſucceeded Franco his Brother in the Biſhoprick of Worms A. D. 996. He aſſiſted in the Council of Selingenſtadt held by Aribo Arch-biſhop of Mentz in 1023. and died in 1026. He compil'd by the help of Olbert a Collection of Canons, diſtributed according to the Matters, and divided into twenty Books, call'd Decrees; in which he has copy'd out and follow'd Regino, but he has added many things and even committed ſeveral Errors which Regino never fell into. This Work was Printed at Colen in 1548. and the next Year at Paris, and at the end of it are annex'd the Canons of the Council of Selingenſtadt: 'Tis compos'd very Methodically, but without a due choice of Matters; being full of Quotations of the falſe Decretals of the Popes, according to the Cuſtom of that Time.

Godehard Biſhop of Hildeſheim.

GODEHARD Abbot of Tergernſee, and afterwards Biſhop of Hildeſheim, flouriſh'd in the beginning of the Century: Father Mabillon has Publiſh'd five Letters written by him, in the fourth Tome of his Analecta.

Gosbert Abbot of Tergernſee.

GOSBERT was in like manner Abbot of Tergernſee, and Contemporary with the former: Four of his Letters are Publiſh'd by Father Mabillon in the ſame Place.

Guy Aretin Abbot of La Croix-St. Leufroy.

GUY ARETIN, Abbot of La Croix-St. Leufroy, flouriſh'd from the Year, 1020. to 1030. and compos'd a new Method for Learning the Art of Muſick, call'd Micrologus. He likewiſe wrote a Treatiſe of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST againſt Berenger, which is loſt.

Aribo Arch-biſhop of Mentz.

ARIBO, the nineteenth Arch-biſhop of Mentz is plac'd by Sigebert and Trithemius in the Claſs of the Eccleſiaſtical Writers: The former only attributes to him a certain Commentary on the Fifteen gradual Pſalms, and the other adds a Letter to Berno Abbot of Richenaw and ſome others. He ſays, That that Arch-biſhop held in the Year, 1023. a Council at Selingenſtadt, with Burchard Biſhop of Worms, and the other Biſhops and Abbots of his Province, in which were made very uſeful Conſtitutions, and that he died under the Emperor Conrad, A. D. 1031.

Berno Abbot of Richenaw.

BERNO, a Monk of St. Gall, and afterward Abbot of Richenaw, who was contemporary with, and the familiar Friend of Aribo, is likewiſe recommended by Trithemius, as a Perſon not inferiour in Knowledge to any of the learned Men of his Time: He was more eſpecially Skilful in the Art of Muſick, which was much ſtudy'd in that Age, and compos'd many Works, as well in Proſe as in Verſe. We ſhall here mention thoſe that Trithemius has taken notice of, viz. A very elegant and uſeful Treatiſe, Dedicated to Pilgrin Arch-biſhop of Colen, but he does not declare the Subject of it; A Treatiſe of Muſical Inſtruments; Another of the coming of our Lord, Dedicated to Aribo; A Book of the Office of the Maſs; one of the Faſt of the Ember-weeks; one of Saturdays Faſt; another of the Time of the Monocord, and ſeveral Letters. But Trithemius has forgotten to make mention of the Life of St. Ulric Biſhop of Augsburg, compos'd by that Author, and ſet forth by Surius; as alſo of the Life of St. Meginrad Biſhop and Martyr, which Father Mabillon Publiſh'd in the ſecond Part of the fourth Benedictin Century. Berno flouriſh'd under the Emperor Henry II. from A. D. 1014. till 1048. when he died, after having been Abbot during forty Years.

His principal Work is the Treatiſe of the Office of the Maſs, in which he enquires into the Authors of it, and the Original of the Prayers of which 'tis Compos'd. He ſuppoſes that in the beginning of the Church, the Maſs was not ſaid after the ſame manner as afterwards; that in the time of the Apoſtles, no other Prayers were recited but the Lord's Prayer; and that for that Reaſon St. Gregory Pope ordain'd, that the Lord's Prayer ſhould be ſaid over the Hoſt after the Conſecration: He adds, That the Canon was not made by a ſingle Perſon, but that it was augmented from Time to Time; and that the other Parts of the Maſs were Eſtabliſh'd by Popes or by Holy Fathers: Laſtly, he Treats in particular, of the Gloria in Excelſis, and of the times when it ought to be ſaid; of the Solemnity of the Octaves, of Pentecoſt, of the Office for the Sundays in Advent and other Sundays of the Year; of that of the four Ember-weeks; and of other Rubricks of the Divine Office. But it ought to be obſerv'd, That in this Book, as in other Works of the ſame Nature, divers Matters of Fact are advanc'd, without ſufficient Ground, and even contrary to the Truth of Hiſtory.

Bruno Biſhop of Wurtzburg.

BRUNO Duke of Carinthia, Uncle by the Father's ſide to the Emperor Conrad II. was ordain'd Biſhop of Wurtzburg, A. D. 1033. He wrote a Commentary on the Pſalms, taken out of the Works of the Fathers, with certain Annotations on the Songs of the Old and New Teſtament, on the Lord's Prayer, and on the Apoſtles Creed, as alſo on thoſe of St. Athanaſius and St. Ambroſe. He died, A. D. 1045. being cruſh'd to Pieces under the Ruins of a Houſe which fell upon him, as he accompany'd the Emperor Henry III. who was going to carry on the War in Hungary. His Works were Printed at Colen in 1494. and inſerted in the Bibliotheca Patrum of the Colen Edition, and in the laſt at Lyons.

Father Mabillon, Publiſh'd in the firſt Tome of his Analecta, the Preface belonging to a Treatiſe of Prayers, taken out of the Fathers, and Dedicated (as he proves it) to the Empreſs Agnes, the Wife of the Emperor Henry III. with certain Extracts of theſe Prayers, Copied out of an ancient Manuſcript of the Monaſtery of St. Arnulphus at Metz. The Preface bears the Name of John Abbot, and Father Mabillon ſhews that he is apparently John ſirnam'd Jeannelin by reaſon of the lowneſs of his Stature, who was ſometime Monk of St. Benignus at Dijon, afterwards Prior of Fecamp under William Abbot, and at laſt nominated Abbot of Erbreſtein, by the Emperor Henry III. A. D. 1052. This Author makes mention in that Preface, of four or five other Treatiſes which he had compos'd, viz. one of the Inſtitution of a Widow; another of the Life and Manners of Virgins; a third of Alms; and a fourth of the Heavenly Jeruſalem or of Contemplation; the greateſt part of thoſe Prayers are alſo contain'd in the Book of Meditations, attributed to St. Auguſtin.

John or Jeannelin Abbot of Erbreſtein.

There are likewiſe in the ſame Place, Letters of the ſame Abbot, written by him when Prior of Fecamp: In the Two firſt, he conſents to the Propoſal made him by William I. King of England, that Vitalis Abbot of Bernay, ſhould be tranſlated to Weſtminſter, and that his Brother Osbern, a Monk of Troarn, ſhould be ſubſtituted in his room. By the Third, directed to Warin Abbot of St. Arnulphus at Metz, he requires a certain Monk, nam'd Benedict, to be ſent back again, who was then in his Abbey.

Warin Abbot of St. Arnulphus at Mets.

WARIN returns him a large Anſwer, complaining of his rude Manner of treating him; and declares, That the Monk whom he demanded, did not belong to his Juriſdiction, by reaſon that after having taken upon him the Vows of Religion, under the Abbot William, he was plac'd by that Abbot in the Monaſtery of Gorze, which he left to go to that of St. Arnulphus, with the Permiſſion of the Priors of Gorze, and even of the Abbot William.

William Abbot of St. Arnulphus at Mets.

Warin had for his Succeſſor, in the Abbey of St. Arnulphus at Metz, WILLIAM, who was choſen by Manaſſes Arch-biſhop of Rheims, to be alſo Abbot of St. Remy. William wrote to Pope Gregory VII. about the Affair, proteſting that he did not accept of that Office without a great deal of Reluctancy and Trouble, and ſo much the rather, in regard that he had no proſpect of diſcharging it with good ſucceſs, by reaſon of the Irregularities that were then Predominant among the Monks of that Monaſtery. The Pope did not approve that this Abbot ſhould have the Government of two Abbies at once, yet left him at Liberty to retain both: However, William himſelf ſoon repented of having had any thing to do with the Abbey of St. Remy; for Manaſſes, who only nominated him, to the end that he might Pillage the Revenues of the Monaſtery, with greater impunity, perceiving that the Abbot would not ſuffer it, treated him ſo rudely, that at laſt he forc'd him to leave it; which William did, ſeverely reprehending the Arch-biſhop for his Tyrannical and Exorbitant Practices, as it appears from the two Letters which he wrote to him, publiſh'd by Father Mabillon in the firſt Tome of his Analecta, with that Abbot's Letter to Pope Gregory VII. four other Letters, and a Prayer by the ſame Author.

Robert de Tombalene, Abbot of St. Vigor at Bayeux.

At the ſame time liv'd Robert de Tombalene, a Monk of St. Michael's Mount, and afterwards Abbot of St. Vigor at Bayeux, who wrote a Commentary on the Canticles, the Prolegomena, to which was ſet forth by Father Mabillon, with an Extract of the Work it ſelf, in the firſt Tome of his Analecta. This Extract makes it appear, That the Commentary is not much different, from that which is attributed to St. Gregory the Great. There is a certain Manuſcript without the Author's Name, in the Library of St. Victor, and it was publiſh'd under that of Radulphus Abbot of Fontanelle, by Father Homey of the Order of the Hermits of St. Auguſtin, and Printed by Peter de Laune at Paris, A. D. 1684. This good Frier apparently had no other Ground to aſcribe it to Radulphus than the Letter R. which he found in his Manuſcript, which denoted Robert and not Radulphus, as he imagin'd.

Anſelm Biſhop of Lucca.

ANSELM born at Mantua, of a noble Family, ſucceeded Alexander II. in the Biſhoprick of Lucca: He receiv'd the Inveſtiture from the Emperor Henry IV. and repenting of it ſome time after, retir'd to the Monaſtery of Cluny, from whence he was re-call'd by Gregory VII. to govern his Biſhoprick in 1073. Afterwards he was always extremely wedded to the Intereſts of that Pope, and ſtifly maintain'd them againſt the Emperor and Guibert the Antipope: He wrote two Letters againſt Guibert, in Vindication of Gregory; and made a Collection of certain Sentences, to ſhew, That Kings have no Right to be Maſters of the Church-Revenues. Theſe Works are referr'd to by Caniſius, in the ſixth Tome of his Antiquities. To him likewiſe is attributed a large Collection of Canons, of which there are ſome Manuſcript-Copies in divers Libraries; but although it bears his Name in a certain

Manu-

Manuſcript of the Barberine Library, nevertheleſs 'tis not probable that it belongs to him; as M. Baluſius has prov'd, in his Preface to Antonius Auguſtinus: 1. Becauſe the Author of the Life of St. Anſelm, Sigebert and Trithemius, have not made any mention of it. And 2. By reaſon that it contains ſome Decrees of Popes of a later Date than the Year 1086. which was that of the Death of Anſelm of Lucca. Antonius Auguſtinus aſcribes this Collection to Hildebert Arch-biſhop of Mans.

Deus-Dedit Cardinal.

Some in like manner attribute to DEUS-DEDIT Cardinal, with the Title of St. Eudoxia, who liv'd under Pope Victor III. a Collection of Canons divided into four Books, a Manuſcript Copy of which is to be found in the Vatican Library. There is alſo a third Collection, bearing the ſame date, and call'd Polycarp; which was made by another Cardinal of the Church of Rome, nam'd GREGORY, and of which there are ſome Manuſcript Copies in M. Colbert's Library.

Benno Cardinal.

BENNO, a German by Nation and Cardinal of the Church of Rome, was one of the greateſt Adverſaries of Pope Gregory VII. and wrote two Books againſt him, full of Reproaches and Invectives, which are compris'd in the Collection made my Orthuinus Gratius, under the Title of, Faſciculus rerum Expetendarum & Fugiendarum, Printed in 1535. and afterwards ſet forth by Goldaſtus, in a Collection of Pieces, compos'd in favour of the Emperor Henry IV. againſt Pope Gregory VII.

Conrad Biſhop of Utrecht.

In this Collection, by Goldaſtus, is likewiſe contain'd a Treatiſe by Conrad, Tutor to Henry Biſhop of Utrecht, call'd; An Apology for preſerving the Unity of the Church, and putting an end to the Schiſm between the Emperor Henry, and Pope Gregory VII. which is alſo Printed among the Hiſtorians of Germany, publiſh'd by Freherus. Indeed ſome Perſons attribute this laſt Treatiſe to Waldramus of Naumberg, and others to Weneric Biſhop of Verceil, who flouriſh'd at the ſame time. Trithemius ſays, That the latter wrote a Letter in the Name of Thierry Biſhop of Verdun, to Pope Gregory VII. in which he admoniſhes him, as a Friend, of every Thing that (as it was reported) he had acted or alledg'd contrary to the Rules of Juſtice and Equity, and conjur'd him to put a ſtop to thoſe Irregularities.

Weneric Biſhop of Verceil.

Ulric a Monk of Cluny.

ULRIC, deſcended of a Family of Bavaria at Ratisbon, a Monk of Cluny, made a Collection of the ancient Cuſtoms of that Abbey, in three Books, at the requeſt of William Abbot of Richenaw. This Collection is contain'd in the fourth Tome of the Spicilegium, by Father Luke D' Achery.

Bernard Monk of Cluny.

Bernard Monk of Corby in Saxony.

BERNARD, a Monk of the ſame Monaſtery, was likewiſe employ'd about that time, in writing on the ſame Subject; but his Work being not ſo compleat, Father Dachery did not think fit to publiſh it. But care muſt be taken, not to confound this Writer with another of the ſame Name, a Monk of Corby in Saxony, who flouriſh'd ſome time after, and wrote a Book in a very fine Stile, but very Satyrical againſt the Emperor Henry IV. which is mention'd by Sigebert and Trithemius.

Bernard Clerk of the Church of Utrecht.

There is alſo a third Author of the ſame Name, who was a Clerk of the Church of Utrecht, and wrote Commentaries on Theodulus's Eclogues, of which mention is made in Sigebert. To theſe Authors may be added, certain Writers, of whom Trithemius takes particular notice, and whoſe Works are not as yet come to our Hands.

Egilnothus Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

ÆGILNOTHUS, Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, famous for his extraordinary Charity, to whom he attributes a Piece in Commendation of the Virgin Mary, certain Letters and ſome other Works, flouriſh'd (according to his Account) under the Emperor Conrad the Young, A. D. 1030.

Campanus of Lombardy.

CAMPANUS OF LOMBARDY, a renown'd Philoſopher and Aſtronomer, was a Man of a ſubtil Wit, an able School-Divine, well vers'd in the Holy Scriptures and very skilful in the Art of Arithmetick, more eſpecially in the Calendar: For all theſe commendable Qualities are attributed to him by Trithemius, who adds, That he ſet forth many ſmall Tracts, the reading of which might be of very great uſe to Biſhops, and among which he himſelf had perus'd the following, viz. a Treatiſe of Eccleſiaſtical Numbers; another of the manner of making Sun-dials; a Calendar; and ſome other Aſtronomical Works. This Author flouriſh'd, A. D. 1040.

Sigebert of Gemblours, makes mention of another Scholaſtick Philoſopher of Liege, nam'd FRANCO, who liv'd in the Year 1060. He compos'd a Treatiſe of the Quadrature of a Circle; another of the Calendar; and certain Commentaries on the Holy Scripture.

Franco a Philoſopher of Liege.

BERTHORIUS, Abbot of the Monaſtery of Mount Caſſin, joyn'd (according to Trithemius) the Study of the Holy Scriptures, to that of the Profane Sciences; and after having written, before his Converſion, certain Works relating to Philoſophy and Phyſick; he compos'd, when Abbot, divers Diſcourſes for the Edification and Benefit of the Monks under his Tuition.

Erard a Benedictin Monk.

ERARD, a Benedictin Monk, ſpent his Time in Preaching and Explaining the Holy Scriptures. Trithemius met with certain Commentaries on the whole Pentateuch, and divers Homilies written by this Author.

Adam Abbot of Perſeme.

ADAM, Abbot of Perſeme, in the like manner apply'd himſelf to Preaching: He compos'd many Diſcourſes for the uſe of his Monks, with ſeveral Homilies on the Feſtivals of the Saints, and on different Subjects, and ſome Commentaries on the Holy Scripture, of which Trithemius makes mention, without having ſeen any of them. M. Baluſius has publiſh'd in the firſt Tome of his Miſcellaneous Works, five Moral Letters by this Author, directed to Oſmond a Monk of Mortemer in Normandy.

CHAP. XI.

Of the Authors who wrote Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, or the Lives of the Saints in the Eleventh Century.

Megenfroy Monk of Fulda.

MEGENFROY, MEGINFROY or MEGINFRED, a Monk of Fulda, wrote in the Year 1010. the Life of St. Emmeran Biſhop of Ratisbon, directed to Arnulphus Count of Vogburg, and afterwards a Monk of the Monaſtery of St. Emmeran at Ratisbon, and referr'd to by Caniſius in the ſecond Tome of his Antiquities. The ſame Author compos'd Twenty four Books of Hiſtory, cited by Trithemius, in the Life of St. Maximus Biſhop of Mentz, which is in Surius's ſixth Tome, November 18.

Syrus Monk of Cluny.

SYRUS, a Monk of Cluny, and the Pupil of St. Maiol, wrote about the ſame time, the Life of his Tutor, dedicated to Odito; which was publiſh'd with great accuracy by Father Mabillon, in the fifth Benedictin Century, and with Aldebaldus's Addition by the Bollandiſts, in May 11.

Osbern Monk of Canterbury.

OSBERN or OSBERT, a Monk and Chanter of Canterbury, wrote in the beginning of the Century, the Life of St. Dunſtan, with thoſe of St. Odo and St. Alphegus. The Life of St. Dunſtan, was ſet forth by Surius, under the Name of Osbert; but that Narration belongs to a later Author, ſince it was written in Lanfranc's Time, and Father Mabillon has publiſh'd the genuine Life of that Arch-biſhop by Osbert, as well as that of Odo of Canterbury, and the Life of St. Alphegus, referr'd to by Bollandus in April 19.

Tangmarus Dean of Hildeſheim.

TANGMARUS, a Saxon, Dean of Hildeſheim, compos'd a Relation of the Life of St. Bernard Biſhop of that City and his Pupil, which was publiſh'd by Browerus and afterwards inſerted in the laſt Edition of Surius. This Author wrote in the Year of our Lord, 1023.

Arnold Canon of Herfeldt.

ARNOLD, a Canon of Herfelde, wrote the Life of St. Godehard Abbot of that Monaſtery, who ſucceeded St. Bernard in the Biſhoprick of Hildeſheim, A. D. 993. and died in 1036. This Author was Meginfroy's Pupil, and had ſeen Godehard in his Youth, but he was inform'd of the Paſſages which he committed to Writing, by a certain old Man, who had ſpent his Life with that Saint. This Piece was ſet forth by Browerus, with the Life of St. Bernard; and theſe two Lives may well be reckon'd among the moſt accurate, that were written at that time.

Eberard St. Harvic's Pupil.

EBERARD, made a Narrative of the Life of St. Harvic Biſhop of Saltzburg, who died in 1024. He was his Pupil, and wrote a little while after his Death. This Work is inſerted in the ſecond Tome of Caniſius's Collection.

Arnulphus Monk of St. Emmeran.

ARNULPHUS, Count of Vogburg, and afterwards a Monk of St. Emmeran at Ratisbon, compos'd two Books in form of Dialogues, of the Life of St. Emmeran, which were publiſh'd by Caniſius, in the ſecond Tome of his Antiquities.

Erchinfroy Abbot of Melck.

ERCHINFROY or ERCHINFRED, Abbot of Melck in Auſtria, wrote A. D. 1012. an Account of the Life and Miracles of St. Colman a Scotch Man, which is cited by Lambecius, in his Bibliotheca.

Rupert Abbot of Mount Caſſin.

Trithemius reckons among the Eccleſiaſtical Writers, of the beginning of this Century, RUPERT, Abbot of Mount Caſſin, whom he much commends; and ſays, That he compos'd certain Sermons, and ſome other Works, but we have none of his Pieces in our Poſſeſſion.

Dithmar Biſhop of Merſburg.

DITHMAR, the Son of Count Sigefroy and of Cunegonda, born in Saxony, A. D. 976. became a Monk of St. John at Magdeburg, under the Abbot Riddagius; was afterwards made Provoſt of Walbeck, and at laſt Biſhop of Mersburg after Wigbert, whom he ſucceeded in 1008. He compil'd ſeven Books of Hiſtorical Chronicles, containing the Occurences and Tranſactions under five Emperors, viz. Henry the Fowler, the Otho's, and Henry II. He intermixes in ſeveral places, a great deal of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, and enlarges in the Commendation of many reverend Biſhops of his Time. He died A. D. 1018. and his Works were Printed at Francfort in 1580. as alſo among thoſe of the German Hiſtoriographers.

ADE-

ADEMAR, or AIMAR DE CHABANOIS, a Monk of the Monaſtery of St. Cibar at Angouleſme, compos'd a Chronicle of the Hiſtory of France, which begins A. C. 829. and ends in 1029. with a Catalogue of the Abbots of St. Martial at Limoges; publiſh'd by Father Labbe in his ſecond Tome of his Library of Manuſcripts: He took care to procure the Writing of the Treatiſe of Offices by Amalarius, and ſome attribute to him the Supplement to that Work, relating to St. Benedict's Rule, which Father Mabillon inſerted in the ſecond Tome of his Analecta, tho' 'tis more probable, that it belongs to Amalarius himſelf. We have alſo Ademar's Acroſtick Verſes, taken out of an Extract that he made of the Lives of the Popes, attributed to Damaſus, by the Order of Rohon Biſhop of Angouleſme, which Verſes were ſet forth by the ſame Father, in the firſt Tome of his Analecta. M. Baluſius has in his Poſſeſſion, a certain Manuſcript Letter, (which he has thought fit to communicate to us) written by this Author, after the firſt Council of Limoges, held A. D. 1029. in which he aſſiſted, and directed to Jourdain Biſhop of Limoges, and to the Abbots and other Clergy-men of that Dioceſs; as alſo, to Arnulphus Biſhop of Rhodez, to Thierry Biſhop of Metz, to the Empreſs Cunegonda the Widow of the Emperor Henry, to Conon, to the Emperor Conrad, to William Duke of Guienne, and to Pope John, who is branded therein, as a bruiſh, cholerick and cruel Man. In this Letter, he relates many remarkable Paſſages that happen'd during the Conteſt about the Apoſtolical Dignity of St. Martial Biſhop of Limoges, chiefly in reference to Benedict, Prior of the Abbey of St. Michael at Cluſe in Piemont, who a little while after the Seſſion of that Council, being arriv'd at a certain Place call'd La Buſſiere, in the Province of Limouſin, on the Feſtival of the Nativity of the Virgin Mary, publickly gave it out, with a great deal of Heat and Paſſion, That St. Martial ought not to be reckon'd among the Apoſtles, and that the Inhabitants of Aquitaine, who look'd upon him to be ſo, were Aſſes and ignorant Doters.

Ademar or Aimar de Chabanois, Monk of St. Cibar in Angouleſme.

This being reported in the Monaſtery of St. Cibar, by two Monks of that Convent, who were then preſent at La Buſſiere, made ſo great an impreſſion on the Minds of the Friers, that all, except Aimar and Gosbert, embrac'd Benedict's Opinion; which gave occaſion to this Letter, in which Aimar treats Benedict very rudely, who nevertheleſs, (even according to Aimar's Report) was a judicious and learned Perſon, but extremely Paſſionate, if we may give Credit in that reſpect to Aimar, in his own Cauſe: For it appears, That the Prior inveigh'd againſt him moſt bitterly at La Buſſiere; accuſing him as the Author of that Innovation, which he alſo term'd Hereſie, and affirming that 'twas deviſ'd by him through Flattery, on purpoſe to gratifie the Abbot and Monks of Limoges, who had corrupted him with Mony. Benedict added, That having diſputed with Aimar upon that Point, he had baffl'd him, and had oblig'd him to hide himſelf. Now Aimar wrote this Letter to refute the Prior's Arguments, declaring what had paſs'd at Limoges, between himſelf and Benedict, whom he cenſures as an Impoſtor and Profligate Wretch: He likewiſe gives an account of the Conteſt that he had at Angouleſme, about the ſame Affair, with a certain Monk of Ravenna, being alſo an able Phyſician, nam'd Bernard, who came to La Buſſiere with Benedict, and had learnt of him all the Arguments againſt the Apoſtleſhip of St Martial. But it ought to be obſerv'd, that this Benedict ſaid, That the Diſpute could not be determin'd, but by a general Council of France and Italy, held in the Pope's preſence: Quis auſus fuit Martialem prædicare Apoſtolum, niſi prius grande generale Concilium omnium Epiſcoporum Galliæ & Italiæ, una cum Papa Romano congregaretur, & ibi eſſet probatum, ſi eſt aut non eſt Apoſtolus? And foraſmuch as Benedict and a Monk of St. John d' Angely, who likewiſe maintain'd that Saint Martial was not an Apoſtle, peremptorily declar'd, That 'twas requiſite to make application to the Pope, and to cauſe the Monks of St. Martial to be forbidden to place him in the Rank of the Apoſtles, for the future; Aimar replies, " That if the Pope being ſurpris'd by " the Inſinuations of envious Perſons, ſhould publiſh ſuch a Prohibition, it would be more " expedient to obey God, rather than the Pope of Rome; by reaſon that no Pope has re- " ceiv'd Power to abſolve or excommunicate the Holy Apoſtles, nor to hinder the Church " of God from doing well and ſpeaking well: Si Papa ſubripiente conſilio invicdorum hoc prohibet, tamen obedire oportet Deo magis quam Papæ Romano. Nulli etenim Papæ data eſt poteſtas vel abſolvendi, vel excommunicandi ſanctos Apoſtolos Dei, vel prohibendi Eccleſiam Dei a benefaciendo & recte loquendo. M. Baluſius has alſo divers Sermons made in the Council of Limoges, relating to the Apoſtolical Dignity of St. Martial, which he ſuppoſes to have been written by the ſame Author.

HUGH, Arch-deacon of Tours, compos'd a ſmall Dialogue between him and Fulbert Biſhop of Chartres, containing an Account of an Apparition of St. Martin, ſeen by Herveus Treaſurer of St. Martin at Tours, in the beginning of this Century, which was Publiſh'd by Father Mabillon, in the ſecond Tome of his Analecta.

Hugh Arch-deacon of Tours.

ODORAN, a Monk of St. Peter Le Vif at Sens, is the Author of a Chronicle, which begins at the Year of our Lord, 675. and ends in 1032. It was Printed in M. Du Cheſne's Collection of the Hiſtorians of France.

Odoran Monk of St. Peter Le Vif.

AN-

Anſelm Dean of Namur.

ANSELM, a Canon of Liege, and afterwards Dean of Namur, wrote, upon the Requeſt of Ida Abbeſs of St. Cecilia at Colen, the Hiſtory of the Biſhops of Liege, from St. Theodard, who liv'd, A. C. 666. to Waſcn, who ſucceeded Richard in 1041. and died in 1048. It was ſet forth by Chapeaville, in his Collection of the Hiſtorians of Liege.

Hermannus Contractus, Monk of Richenaw.

HERMANNUS, ſirnam'd CONTRACTUS, by reaſon that his Limbs were ſhrunk, the Son of the Count of Weringen in Suevia, who was Educated in the Monaſtery of St. Gall, and afterwards became a Monk of Richenaw, flouriſh'd in the middle of the Century, and acquir'd much Skill in divers Languages and liberal Sciences. He compos'd a Chronicle, from the Creation of the World, to A. D. 1052. continu'd by Bertulphus of Conſtance, to 1065. It was Printed at Francfurt, in 1583. in the Edition of the Hiſtorians of Germany, by Piſtorius; in Caniſius's Antiquities; and in the laſt Bibliotheca Patrum. To him are alſo attributed, certain Anthems in honour of the Virgin Mary; the Veni Sancte Spiritus; and ſome other † Proſes or Hymns. Trithemius likewiſe makes mention of the following Works of this Author, viz. a Treatiſe of the Science of Muſick; another of the Monochord; three Books of the manner of making the Aſtrolabe; one of its uſefulneſs; one of the Eclipſes; another of the Calendar; a Treatiſe of the Quadrature of a Circle, one of the Diſcord of Sounds, one of Phyſiognomy; and the Lives of divers Saints.

Glaber Radulphus Monk of Cluny.

GLABER RADULPHUS, a Monk of St. German at Auxerre, and afterwards of Cluny, compos'd in the Year, 1045. an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory dedicated to Odilo Abbot of Cluny, which begins at A. C. 900. and ends in 1045. This Hiſtory being very accurately and faithfully Written, was Printed at Franefurt in 1596. and is contain'd in M. Du Cheſne's Collection of the Hiſtorians of France. He likewiſe wrote the Life of St. William Abbot of St. Benignus at Dijon, who died in 1031. which is referr'd to by Bollandus in January 1.

Gualdo Monk of Corbie.

GUALDO, a Monk of Corbie, wrote in Verſe, the Life of Anſcharius Biſhop of Hamburg, dedicated to Adalbert Arch-biſhop of Bremen. It is compris'd in the ſecond Tome of the fourth Benedictin Century, by Father Mabillon.

Drogo Monk of St. Winoch.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Greek Eccleſiaſtical Writers who flouriſh'd in the Eleventh Century.

Leo the Grammarian.

LEO, the Grammarian, is the Author of a Continuation of Theophanes's Chronicle, from A. C. 813. to 1013. which is apparently the Year when he wrote. It was publiſh'd by Father Combefis, in the end of Theophanes's Works; Printed at Paris, A. D. 1655.

Alexius Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

ALEXIUS, a Monk of the Monaſtery of Studa, and afterward Patriarch of the Church of Conſtantinople, which he govern'd from A. D. 1025. to 1043. compil'd certain Conſtitutions relating to Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, which are referr'd to in the Collection of the Greek and Roman Law.

Eugeſippus.

EUGESIPPUS, an Author very little known, compos'd a Geographical Treatiſe of the Holy Land, publiſh'd by Allatius, in his Collection of the Greek and Latin Writers. 'Tis reported that this Treatiſe was written about A. D. 1040.

Theophanes the Cerameaan, Archbiſhop of Tauromenium.

THEOPHANUS the Ceramean, Arch-biſhop of Tauromenium in Sicily, liv'd in this Century, although we have already made mention of him in the Ninth Age, to which he is generally referr'd; but two Reaſons invincibly prove, that he belongs to the Eleventh: The firſt is, That he cites Metaphraſtes; and the other, that 'tis expreſs'd, That the Homely on Palm-Sunday, was made in the Preſence of King Roger, who could be no other Perſon but the Count of Sicily, whom he ſtiles King and Emperor, according to the uſual Cuſtom of the Greeks. The Homelies attributed to Gregory the Ceramean, in ſome Manuſcripts, are not different from thoſe of Theophanes; inſomuch, that it muſt either be an Error of the Tranſcribers, or elſe Theophanes had two Names. Let the Caſe be how it will, theſe Homelies being 72 in Number, are not Contemptible; in which the Author explains the literal Senſe of the Goſpels, and afterwards enlarges on the Allegorical and Moral; but his Style is plain, without any manner of Ornament, or loftineſs of Expreſſion.

Nilus Doxopatrus, Archimandrita.

At the ſame time likewiſe flouriſh'd NILUS DOXOPATRIUS, Archimandrita or Abbot of his Convent; who by Count Roger's Order, compos'd a Treatiſe of the five Patriarchal Sees, and of the Arch-biſhopricks and Biſhopricks under their Juriſdiction; as alſo concerning the Inſtitution of thoſe Patriarchs, their Ranks, Titles, Rights and Privileges. Allatius has produc'd many Fragments of this Piece; and it was publiſh'd entire by M. Le Moine, in the firſt Tome of his Sacred Varieties.

Nicetas Pectoratus Monk of Studa.

NICETAS PECTORATUS, beſides the above-mention'd Treatiſe againſt the Latins, compos'd alſo ſome other Works; particularly a Treatiſe of the Soul, of which Allatius ſet forth a Fragment; an Hymn in Honour of St. Nicolas; and another in Commendation of Metaphraſtes, referr'd to by the ſame Author.

Michael Pſellus Senator.

MICHAEL PSELLUS, deſcended of a noble Family in Conſtantinople, made ſo great Progreſs in the Studies to which he apply'd himſelf, that he became one of the moſt learn'd Men of that Age: He exercis'd the Office of a Senator, and was highly eſteem'd by the Emperors: He was one of thoſe Deputies whom Michael ſirnam'd Stratioticus, ſent to Iſaac Comnenus to treat with him, and the latter made uſe of his Service againſt Michael Cerularius; larius; afterward he was choſen Tutor to Michael Ducas, who was advanc'd to the imperial Throne by his means, A. D. 1071. He follow'd the Fortune of that Emperor; and was oblig'd, when the ſame Prince was depos'd in 1078. to retire to a Monaſtery, where he died a little while after. The Greek Writers, who ſucceeded him, made many Encomium's on his profound Skill in all manner of Sciences; more eſpecially Allatius, who gives us a very particular Character of him; and ſays, That none in that Age nor in the following, was ever more ſucceſsful in inventing; nor obſerv'd a more regular Method; nor wrote with ſo admirable Eloquence, and diſcuſs'd Matters ſo thoroughly; and laſtly, that there is no Science, in which he has not written Commentaries, Abridgments or Treatiſes.

The Printed Works of Michael Pſellus, are a Paraphraſe in Verſe on the Canticles, dedicated to Nicephorus Botoniata, which was publiſh'd in Greek by Meurſius, and Printed at Leyden, A. D. 1617. and in Latin at Venice in 1573. A Commentary on the ſame Book, taken out of St. Gregory Nyſſen, St. Nilus and St. Maximus, which is extant among Theodoret's Works: Certain Queſtions about the Holy Trinity and the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt, Printed at Augsburg in 1608. Iambick Verſes on the Vertues and Vices: Moral Diſcourſes on Tantalus and Circe, and an Allegory of Sphinx, Printed at Baſil in 1545. A Dialogue of the Operation of Demons, Printed at Paris in 1615. with M. Gaulmin's Notes: A Scholion or brief Commentary on the Chaldaick Oracles, Printed at Venice in 1593. and at Paris in 1599. A Treatiſe of the Faculties of the Soul, Printed at Paris in 1624. with Origen's Philocalia: Annotations on ſome Paſſages of St. Gregory Nazienzen, publiſh'd by Billius: The Panegyrick and Office of Simeon Metaphraſtes, ſet forth by Allatius: And a Treatiſe of the Seven general Councils, publiſh'd with ſeveral Poems by M. Boſquet, and Printed at Paris in 1632. Not to mention a great number of Books of Philoſophy and Commentaries on Ariſtotle, which bear the Name of this Author, and are Printed at ſeveral Places.

Allatius likewiſe produces a Catalogue of many other Treatiſes written by Pſellus, which are only extant in Manuſcript; particulary, a Treatiſe againſt Eunomius; an Epitome of the Books of Moſes; certain Theological Queſtions; divers Tracts about the Myſteries of Jeſus Chriſt; many Homilies and ſome Letters: Notwithſtanding the high eſteem that Allatius has for this Author, his Works do not appear to be very uſeful, nor very learn'd, in reſpect of Eccleſiaſtical Matters, nor very eloquent. Although he was no Friend to Michael Cerularius, yet he maintain'd the Opinion of the Greeks concerning the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt.

In the end of the ſame Century liv'd SIMEON ſirnam'd the Younger, Abbot of the Monaſtery of Xerocerce, of whom we have 33 Orations or Sermons on Faith, and on the Chriſtian and Monaſtick Manners; as alſo a Pious Treatiſe call'd, Hymns of Divine Love, in meaſur'd Proſe, which the Greeks call Politick or Blank Verſe; and 228 moral Maxims, which Jacobus Pontanus tranſlated into Latin from the Manuſcripts of the Libraries of Bavaria and Augsburg, and caus'd to be Printed at Ingolſtadt in Quarto, A. D. 1603. Allatius gives us a Catalogue of 79 Homilies, 58 Hymns, and ſome Inſtructions by this Author, with the Titles and Beginings of them: Of the Homilies there are only Fifteen among thoſe of Pontanus, and of the Hymns there are Twenty, which Pontanus has not publiſh'd, no more than the Inſtructions of which he makes mention. Theſe Works are full of Moral and Aſcetick Precepts; but there are alſo certain Maxims of the Heſychaſts or Quietiſts: So that perhaps it may not be amiſs, here to ſhew after what manner he lays down thoſe Principles of Quietiſm, in his third Diſcourſe of Prayer.

Simeon the Young, Abbot of Xerocerce.

" In the firſt place (ſays he) three Things are to be Practis'd, in order to attain to what " you deſire, viz. the Contempt of all Rational and Irrational Creatures, Mortification, " and a pure Conſcience, free from all manner of Paſſions and particular Intereſts. After- " wards ſitting alone in Tranquility in a Corner of your Cell, do what I am now about to tell " you: Keeping your Door ſhut, lift up your Mind above all Vanities; that is to ſay, " above all temporary and tranſitory Things, and bowing your Head to your Belly, hold " your Breath; ſeek your Heart in Mind: At firſt you'll find thick Darkneſs, but by con- " tinuing this practice Day and Night, you will diſcover Wonders and meet with endleſs " Conſolation: For when the Mind has once found out the place of the Soul, it clearly per- " ceives things which it never comprehended before; it diſcerns Air round about the Heart, " and becomes altogether Luminous and full of Wiſdom: And when a Man is arriv'd to " that height of Perfection, if any evil Thought intervenes, it is expell'd and immediately " diſ-appears, before it can make any Impreſſion; ſo that the Mind being exaſperated drives " away the Devil: You may learn the reſt with God, by preſerving Jeſus Chriſt in your Heart.

This is the Model of Quietiſm fram'd by that Monk, who talks of nothing for the moſt part in his Syſtem of Divine Love, but Divine Illuminations and Lights, Divine Unions, Eſſential Unions with God; the Transformation of our Members into thoſe of Jeſus Chriſt, and other Matters of the like Nature. However it muſt be acknowledg'd, That otherwiſe the Works of this Author are full of moſt excellent Maxims, ſolid Principles, and very uſeful Inſtructions for promoting the Spiritual Life. There are alſo two other ſmall Tracts by the ſame Author, viz. one of the alteration and impreſſions which the Elements make on the Bodies and Souls of Men; and the other, of the manner of God's Omnipreſence in all Places, and how his Light is diſpers'd every where. The ſame Method of Writing, and the ſame Principles are obſervable in theſe Pieces: But Simeon was caſt into Priſon in the end of his Life, for reproving the Emperor too freely (as ſome ſay) or as others will have it, upon account of his Erroneous Doctrins. He is alſo reputed to have firſt broach'd the Error of thoſe Greek Monks, who imagin'd, That the Light which appear'd on Mount Tabor, was the uncreated and eternal Light of the Divine Majeſty; and that all Happineſs conſiſted in the Contemplation of it.

John Arch-biſhop of Euchaita.

JOHN, Arch-biſhop of Euchaita in Paphlagonia, compos'd in the middle of this Century, certain Poetical Pieces in Iambick Verſe, on the principal Hiſtories of the Feſtivals of the Year, Printed at Eton, A. D. 1610. As alſo a Relation of the Lives of St. Euſebius and St. Dorotheus the Younger; ſome Extracts of which are produc'd by Allatius, in his Book of the Agreement of the Greek and Latin Churches, concerning Purgatory.

Joannes Thraceſius Scylitzes, Curopalata.

JOANNES THRACESIUS SCYLITZES, † Curopalata, who flouriſh'd under Alexis Comnenus, wrote a Continuation of Theophanes's Hiſtory, from the Year 813. to 1081. when Alexis Comnenus was advanc'd to the imperial Dignity. It was Printed at Venice in Latin, of Gabius's Tranſlation; and Peter Goar publiſh'd it in Greek, at the end of Cedrenus's Chronicle, part of the ſame Hiſtory by Scyletzes, which begins at A. D. 1057. and ends in 1081.

Georgius Cedrenus.

GEORGIUS CEDRENUS, a Monk, flouriſh'd in like manner in the end of the Century, and wrote Annals or an Epitome of Hiſtory, from the beginning of the World to the Year 1057. It is only a Collection of divers Authors, more eſpecially of George the * Syncellus, whoſe Chronography he Copied out from the Creation of the World, to the Reign of Diocletian; of Theophanes, from Diocletian to Michael Curopalata; and of Joannes Thraceſius Scylitzes, afterward Curopalata, to his time. In a word, his whole Hiſtory is taken out of the Works of ſeveral Writers, the Extracts of which he has drawn up without much Judgment or Skill, in the Art of Critick. Theſe Annals were Tranſlated by Xylander, and Printed at Baſil, A. D. 1566. and afterward at Paris in the Royal Printing-Houſe, with the Notes of Fabrot and James Goar, in 1647.

* A certain Officer under the Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

CONSTANTINUS LICHUDES, who ſucceeded Michael Cerularius, A. D. 1058. in the Patriarchal See of Conſtantinople, compil'd certain Synodal Conſtitutions, which are contain'd in the Collection of the Greek and Roman Law, as well as a Synodal Deciſion of Michael Cerularius about Marriages, to the ſeventh Degree of Conſanguinity; and ſome other Fragments of Conſtitutions by the ſame Patriarch, relating to forbidden Marriages.

Conſtantin Lichudes, Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

JOHN XIPHILIN, of Trebiſond or Trapezut, a Monk of Mount Olympus, ſucceeded Conſtantin Lichudes, A. D. 1066. and died in 1078. We have ſtill in our Poſſeſſion his Homily on the Croſs, or on the third Week of Lent, cited by Gretzer, and certain Decrees about Marriage inſerted in the Collection of the Greek and Roman Law. 'Tis alſo reported, That there are to be ſeen in ſome Libraries, certain Homilies by this Patriarch, on all the Sundays of the Year; and ſome have imagin'd him to be the Author of the Epitome of Dion Caſſius's Hiſtory, but the latter aſſures us himſelf, That he was his Nephew, and that he compos'd that Abridgment under the Emperor Michael Ducas.

John Xiphilin Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

SAMONAS, Arch-biſhop of Gaza, flouriſh'd (as 'tis ſuppos'd) in the end of this Century, and wrote a ſmall Tract in form of a Dialogue, between Himſelf and a Saracen; in which he proves, That the Bread and Wine in the Euchariſt, are chang'd into the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt. This Piece is extant in the Bibliotheca Patrum; but 'tis more probable, that that Arch-biſhop did not live till the Thirteenth Century.

Samonas Arch-biſhop of Gaza.

Nicolas Biſhop of Metone.

NICOLAS, Biſhop of Metone, is alſo referr'd to the Eleventh Century: He compos'd a Treatiſe of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, like that of Samonas, againſt thoſe who doubted that the Conſecrated Bread and Wine, were really his Body and Blood: But there is yet a much greater probability that this Author belongs to the Twelfth Century. He likewiſe compos'd three Treatiſes of the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt againſt the Latins, of which ſome Manuſcript-Copies (as we are inform'd by Allatius) are preſerv'd in the Vatican Library: His Treatiſe of the Euchariſt is in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

Theophylact Biſhop of Acris.

THEOPHYLACT, Arch-Biſhop of Acris in Bulgaria, flouriſh'd under the Emperors Romanus Diogenes, Michael Ducas and Nicephorus Botoniata. He took a great deal of pains in explaining the Holy Scripture, by making an Abridgment of St. Chryſoſtom's Commentaries, and after that manner compos'd his Commentaries on the four Goſpels, on the Acts of the Apoſtles, on St. Paul's Epiſtles, and on four of the leſſer Prophets, viz. Habakkuk, Jonas, Nahum and Hoſea.

Theſe Commentaries were Printed in Latin at Paris, A. D. 1554. and at Baſil in 1570. The Commentaries on the Goſpels were Printed in Latin at Antwerp in 1564. in Greek at Rome in 1542. and 1568. and in Greek and Latin at Paris in 1562. The Commentaries on the Acts, were Printed in Greek and Latin at Colen in 1568. The Commentaries on St. Paul's Epiſtles, were Printed in Latin at Rome in 1469. at Antwerp in 1564. at Colen in 1531. and at Paris in 1552. as alſo in Greek and Latin at London in 1536. Laſtly, The Commentaries on the

the four leſſer Prophets were Printed at Paris in 1549. and 'tis reported that there is extant an entire Manuſcript Commentary on all the leſſer Prophets, in the Library of Augsburg; Meurſius has publiſh'd 75 Letters by this Author in Greek, Printed at Leyden in 1617. which were afterward tranſlated into Latin by Marinerius, and Printed at Colen in 1622. Gretſer likewiſe ſet forth under Theophylact's Name, a Diſcourſe of the Croſs, and Father Pouſtin another Treatiſe, which is an Inſtitution dedicated to Conſtantin Porphyrogenneta. Joannes Veccus has cited certain Paſſages of the ſame Arch-biſhop, relating to the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, againſt the Latins; and 'tis reported that there is to be ſeen in the Library of the Duke of Bavaria, a Manuſcript Treatiſe by him, concerning the Differences between the Greeks and Latins, and a Diſcourſe on the Emperor Alexis Comnenus. Theophylact's Commentaries are very uſeful for the Literal Explication of the Holy Scriptures.

Nicetas Serron, Arch-biſhop Heraclea.

NICETAS SERRON, a Deacon of the Church of Conſtantinople, and afterward Arch-biſhop of Heraclea, Cotemporary with Theophylact, wrote a Commentary on St. Gregory Nazianzen's Homilies, which is inſerted in Latin among the Works of that Father: To him likewiſe is attributed a Catena on the Book of Job, Printed in Latin at Venice in 1587. and at London in 1637. which nevertheleſs may be rather appropriated to Olympiodorus, than to this Author; but 'tis probable that the Commentary on the Poems of St. Gregory Nazianzen, Printed at Venice in 1563. under the name of Nicetas the Paphlagonian, belongs to this Nicetas of Heraclea.

Nicolas the Grammarian, Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

NICOLAS, Sirnam'd the Grammarian, choſen Patriarch of Conſtantinople, in the Year 1084. wrote a large Letter to the Emperor Alexis Comnenus to prove, That 'tis not lawful to take away Biſhopricks from the Metropolitans. He likewiſe made certain Conſtitutions about Marriage, which are to be found with this Letter, in the Collection of the Greek and Roman Law.

Peter Chartophylax, of the Church of Conſtantiople.

PETER, Deacon and Chartophylax or Keeper of the Records of the Church of Conſtantinople, made, A. D. 1090. his brief Anſwers to certain Caſes that were propos'd to him: They are in like manner compris'd in the Collection of the Greek and Roman Law.

Samuel of Morocco, a converted Jew.

Among all theſe Authors may be reckon'd, a certain Jew of Africa, nam'd Samuel of Morocco, converted to the Chriſtian Religion; who compos'd a ſmall Tract to prove, That the Meſſiah was come; in which he gives us to underſtand, that he wrote a thouſand Years after the Deſtruction of the Temple of Jeruſalem: This Piece was Printed at ſeveral times ſeparately, and is extant in ſome Collections of Authors.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the COUNCILS held in the Eleventh Century.

HAVING already given an Hiſtorical Account of divers Councils, treating of other Eccleſiaſtical Affairs tranſacted in this Century, we ſhall now proceed to do the ſame thing, in reference to thoſe of which we have not hitherto had occaſion to make mention.

The Councils of France.

The Council of Orleans, 1017.

IN the Year of our Lord, 1017. certain concealed Hereticks were diſcover'd, who ſpread abroad deteſtable Doctrins and committed no leſs infamous Actions; and this Diſcovery was firſt made by a Norman Lord nam'd Arefaſtus: He had a Clergy-man in his Houſe, who going to Orleans to hold Conferences with the Learned of that City, met two other Clerks, one nam'd Stephen, Profeſſor of School-Divinity in St. Peter's Monaſtery, and the other Liſoius, Clerk of the Convent of St. Croix, who were then in great repute for their Learning and Piety. He Convers'd with them for ſome time, till they communicated their Errors to him, and afterward returning to Normandy, acquainted his Patron with their Tenets, who diſclos'd the matter to Duke Richard. Whereupon the Duke gave notice of it to King Robert, and at the ſame time ſent Arefaſtus with his Chaplain in order to diſcover and convict the Hereticks. Arefaſtus paſs'd through Chartres, to know of Fulbert what Meaſures were moſt expedient to be taken in this Caſe; but not meeting with him, he conſulted Evrard, a Doctor of Divinity and Prebend of the Church of Chartres, who adviſ'd him to give himſelf up to Prayer, to receive the Holy Communion, and to fortify himſelf every Day with the ſign of the Croſs, before he enter'd into Conference with thoſe Hereticks; not to contradict what he heard them ſay, and feigning to be their Diſciple, to make a Diſcovery of all their Errors. He follow'd this Advice, and having aſſociated himſelf with them

ſeveral times, was inform'd by them, " That they did not believe that JESUS CHRIST " was born of the Virgin Mary, nor that he died for the Salvation of Mankind, nor that " he was bury'd and roſe again: And that they maintain'd, That Baptiſm did not procure " the remiſſion of Sins; that the Conſecration by the Prieſt did not conſtitute the Sacra- " ment of the Body and Blood of our Lord; and that it was unprofitable to make Prayers " to the Holy Martyrs and Confeſſors. Afterward Arefaſtus having interrogated them about the Salvation which they hop'd to be partakers of, they inform'd him, That at certain Hours of the Night, they were wont to meet together in a particular Place, every one being furniſh'd with a Lamp, where after having invok'd the Demons, they perpetrated infamous Villanies, and even burnt the Children born of their inceſtuous Copulations, whoſe Aſhes they reſerv'd to be given to ſick Perſons as a kind of Viaticum.

King Robert being arriv'd at Orleans with ſome Biſhops, caus'd this Herd of Miſcreants to be apprehended and Arefaſtus among them, by whoſe Teſtimony they were Convicted, and their Errors were refuted by the Biſhops: But upon their refuſal to abjure their Hereſy, they were depriv'd of their Eccleſiaſtical Habits and all burnt in a Houſe, except one ſingle Clerk and a Nun, who were Converted. Theſe Circumſtances are thus related in an ancient Hiſtory of the Council of Orleans, referr'd to by Father Luke Dachery, in the ſecond Tome of his Spicilegium; and Glaber a Cotemporary Hiſtorian, relates them almoſt after the ſame manner as to the matter of Fact, except that he makes no mention of Arefaſtus; but he attributes to them ſome other Errors, viz. " That they deny'd the Holy Trinity, " affirm'd the World to be Eternal, and believ'd that ſenſual Pleaſures are not to be puniſh'd " in the future State, and that good Works are unprofitable. This Author adds, That the Perſons burnt upon that Account, were thirteen in Number.

The Synod of Arras, held in the Year, 1025.

The Synod of Arras, in 1025.

SOME time after there appear'd in Flanders another Sect of Hereticks, which was likewiſe Condemn'd in a Synod held at Arras, A. D. 1025. on the Feſtival of Chriſtmas, by Gerard Biſhop of Cambray and Arras; for both theſe Cities had then but one Biſhop. Gerard reſiding ſome Days in the latter, News was brought him, that certain Perſons were arriv'd from Italy, who introduc'd a new ſort of Hereſy, which ruin'd the Goſpel Ordinances, and the Diſcipline of the Church; and that theſe Miſcreants making profeſſion of perfect Righteouſneſs, gave it out, That that alone was ſufficient for the Juſtification of a Perſon, and that there was no other Sacrament in the Church for the attaining of Salvation.

Upon this Report, Gerard caus'd a ſtrict ſearch to be made after thoſe, who were ſuſpected to be maintainers of this Hereſy; inſomuch, that they were apprehended by the Governor's Order, and even brought before the Biſhop, who being taken up at that inſtant with other Affairs, after he had examin'd them for ſome time concerning their Doctrin, and perceiv'd them to be in an Error, caus'd them to be confin'd during three Days, and order'd a Faſt to be kept the next Day, by the Clerks and Monks who were there preſent, that Almighty God might be implor'd to give Grace to thoſe Miſcreants to acknowledge their Errors. On the third Day, being Sunday, he held a Synod compos'd of the Abbots, Archdeacons, Monks and other Clergy, and caus'd the Priſoners to be brought forth in the preſence of the People: Then, after having made a Speech to the Aſſembly, he demanded of the Priſoners, what their Doctrin was, and who were their Teachers: They reply'd, That they were the Diſciples of an Italian nam'd Gandulphus, who had inſtructed them in the Commandments of the Goſpel, and of the Apoſtles; that they receiv'd no other Scripture, but that they obſerv'd that very ſtrictly. The Biſhop having heard it reported, That they abhorr'd Baptiſm; that they rejected the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST; that they gave it out, that Pennance was altogether unprofitable; that they deſpis'd the Churches; that they condemn'd lawful Marriages; that they did not acknowledge any Eminency in the Confeſſors; and that they affirm'd, That none ought to be honour'd except the Apoſtles and Martyrs; he thought fit to interrogate them, and to give them Inſtructions about thoſe Points. As to the firſt, they own'd, " That their Maſter " had Taught them, That provided that they practis'd the Precepts of the Goſpel; that " they renounced the Vanities of the World; that they did not follow their Paſſions; that " they got their Livelihood by the Labour of their Hands; that they did no injury to " any; and that they exercis'd Charity toward thoſe, who were animated with the ſame " Zeal; it was not neceſſary to receive Baptiſm; that if the performance of theſe Duties " were neglected Baptiſm would be unprofitable, and that altho' 'twere granted that it had " ſome efficacy; yet it was now become altogether uſeleſs and of none effect for theſe three " Reaſons, viz. 1. Upon account of the irregular Practices and Converſation of the Mini- " ſters. 2. Becauſe the Sins which might have been remitted by Baptiſm, are committed " again by Profeſſours during the whole Courſe of their Lives. 3. In regard that Infants " are Baptis'd, who have neither Faith nor free Will; who cannot deſire Baptiſm, nor

" know

" know what is meant by Faith or Free Will; neither can the Profeſſion of others avail them " any thing.

The Biſhop reply'd upon that Article, " That altho' JESUS CHRIST was perfectly " Righteous, yet he condeſcended to receive Baptiſm from St. John; That he inſtituted it " for the regeneration and the remiſſion of Sins; That in this Sacrament the Holy Ghoſt ope- " rates inviſibly in the Soul, what is done outwardly by the Water, on the Body: That " altho' it be adminiſter'd by worthy or unworthy Miniſters, nevertheleſs it is always effectual; " becauſe it is the Holy Ghoſt who Sanctifies, and the Iniquity of a Man cannot hinder the " effect of the operation of God: That whilſt the Miniſter outwardly ſprinkles the Body, " the Soul is inwardly purify'd by the operation of the Holy Ghoſt: That afterward Holy " Unction is adminiſtr'd to the Infant, for its farther Sanctification after Baptiſm; by reaſon " that as Sin is remitted by Baptiſm, ſo Unction ſanctifies the Perſon after Baptiſm: That " the Impoſition of Hands was alſo added, to procure the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt: That " the neceſſity of Baptiſm is prov'd by the Doctrin of the Goſpel and of the Apoſtles: That " how Holy or Innocent ſoever, the Life of a Man may be, yet he cannot be Sav'd without " receiving this Sacrament: That Baptiſm takes away both original and actual Sins, and re- " eſtabliſhes Man in the ſame State of Uprightneſs, in which he was created, altho' it does " not render him immortal: That the Example of the Man Sick of the Palſey, whom our " Saviour cur'd, having regard to the Faith of thoſe Perſons, who brought him into his Pre- " ſence; and that of the Canaanitiſh Woman, who by Faith obtain'd a Cure for her Daughter, " give us to underſtand, that the Faith of thoſe who preſent an Infant to be Baptis'd, may " ſtand it in ſome ſtead. Laſtly, he demanded of them, for what reaſon, they expreſs'd ſo great contempt of the Sacraments of the Church, who were ſo punctual in obſerving the Ceremony of waſhing their Feet? Neither does he inſiſt leſs on the ſecond Article, concerning the Myſtery of the Euchariſt, of which he explains the Effects, proving the real Preſence of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, and anſwering the Objections that was made about the impoſſibility, that the ſame Body ſhould be preſent in divers Places, to which purpoſe he relates a great number of Miracles.

Theſe Hereticks being convinc'd by his Diſcourſe, acknowledg'd their Error, and ſued for a Pardon: The Biſhop gave them ſome hopes of obtaining their Requeſt, and proceeded to the other Points of Diſcipline, to which they had no regard, viz. thoſe that related to the Churches, Altars, Sacred Orders, Unction, Exorciſms, Bells and Funeral Rites. After having vindicated the Cuſtoms of the Church as to theſe Matters, he endeavour'd to prove againſt them, the uſefulneſs of Pennance for the Living, and that of Prayer, good Works and Sacrifices for the Dead. He ſhews, " That lawful Marriages is not forbidden by the Or- " dinances of the Goſpel: That the Confeſſours ought to be honour'd as well as the Mar- " tyrs: That the ſinging of Pſalms is not only allow'd of, but alſo commendable: That a " due Veneration ought to be had for the Croſs, by referring that Worſhip to JESUS " CHRIST: That the uſe and adoration of the Images of our Saviour, and of the " Saints is profitable; becauſe the ſight of them repreſents their Actions, and puts us in mind " of their Vertues. He concludes with diſcourſing of the uſefulneſs and diſtinctions of Sacred Orders, and about the neceſſity of the Grace of JESUS CHRIST.

Upon the concluſion of this Diſcourſe, the Hereticks, who were preſent, declar'd, That they acknowledg'd the Truths, which the Biſhop of Arras had explain'd to them; inſomuch that a Form of a Confeſſion of Faith contrary to the Errors which were refuted by that Prelate, was immediately drawn up and recited by him and the reſt of the Clergy: Afterward they caus'd it to be explain'd in the Vulgar Tongue, by an Interpreter in favour of theſe Hereticks, who did not well underſtand the Latin: Then they approv'd and ſign'd it, and were diſmiſs'd in Peace after having receiv'd Benediction from the Biſhop. The ſaid Gerard himſelf compil'd the Acts of this Synod, and Dedicated them to one of his neighbouring Biſhops whoſe name is mark'd by the Letter R prefix'd at the beginning of the Epiſtle which he wrote to him, and who is apparently Reginald of Liege. Theſe Acts were publiſh'd by Father Luke Dacchery, in the thirteenth Tome of his Spicilegium, and may well be eſteem'd as one of the fineſt Monuments of thoſe times.

The Council of Bourges, held in the Year, 1031.

AIMO, Arch-biſhop of Bourges, held a Council on the firſt day of November, A. D. 1031. in that City, in which aſſiſted the Biſhops of Puy en Velay, Clermont, Alby, Cahors and Mande, with the Abbot of Micy and ſeveral others. Pope John's 18th Letter was read concerning the Affair of St. Martial's Apoſtleſhip; proper means were ſought for, to put a ſtop to the Civil Wars and to eſtabliſh Peace in the Kingdom, and the following Conſtitutions were rectify'd. The Council of Bourges in 1031.

The Firſt ordains, That the Commemoration of St. Martial ſhall be made among the Apoſtles, and not among the Confeſſors.

The

The Second, That the Prieſt ſhall not keep the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, conſecrated under the ſame Hoſts longer, than from one Sunday to another.

The Third imports, That the Biſhops ſhall not receive any Preſents upon account of Ordinations, nor even their Officers, who were wont to take ſomewhat for Regiſtring the Names of thoſe Perſons, who were propos'd for Ordination.

The Fourth, That none ſhall obtain an Arch-deaconry, who is not a Deacon.

The Fifth, That Prieſts, who cohabit with their Wives, ſhall only be Readers or Chanters for the future; and that Deacons and Sub-deacons ſhall not be ſuffer'd to keep either Wives or Concubines.

The Sixth, That the Biſhops ſhall oblige them to take an Oath to that purpoſe, at their Ordination.

The Seventh enjoyns, That all thoſe who are employ'd in the Miniſterial Functions, ſhall have Eccleſiaſtical Tonſure; that is to ſay, their Beards ſhav'd, and the Crown made on their Heads.

The Eighth, That the Sons of Deacons and Sub-deacons, ſhall not be admitted into the Clergy.

The Ninth, That Slaves ſhall not be ordain'd Clerks, till they have obtain'd Freedom of their Maſters.

The Tenth, That ſuch Perſons ſhall not be look'd upon as the Sons of Clergy-men, as were born after their Fathers quitted the Eccleſiaſtical State, and return'd to that of Laicks.

The Eleventh, That the Biſhops ſhall declare at the time of Ordination, that they excommunicate thoſe who ſhall preſume to preſent to them any Sons of Clergy-men or Slaves to be ordain'd, and that Perſons under ſuch Circumſtances, who have got their Ordination by ſurpriſe, ſhall be depos'd.

The Twelfth, That nothing ſhall be exacted for the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm and Pennance, nor for burying the Dead; nevertheleſs that it ſhall be permitted to receive whatever the Faithful ſhall think fit to beſtow Voluntarily upon thoſe Occaſions.

The Thirteenth orders, That the Prieſts ſhall have the Offerings, and the Funeral Torches, which are preſented to them, but that the Paſchal-Taper ſhall remain to give Light to the Altar.

The Fourteenth, That Linnen Cloths which have ſerv'd to cover dead Bodies, ſhall not be laid on the Altar.

The Fifteenth, That no publick Meetings ſhall be held on Sundays for the Management of Secular Affairs, unleſs they be call'd to perform Works of Charity, to oppoſe the Inſults of Enemies, in caſe of danger, or to tranſact Buſineſs upon ſome other emergent Occaſion.

The Sixteenth ordains, That thoſe Perſons who leave their Wives, except upon account of Adultery, ſhall not marry others as long as the former are living, nor the Women other Husbands in the like Caſes.

The Seventeenth, That no Man ſhall take to Wife a Relation to the ſixth or ſeventh Degree of Conſanguinity.

The Eighteenth, That none in like manner ſhall be permitted to Marry his Kinſman's Wife.

The Nineteenth, That no Man ſhall give his Daughter in Marriage to any Prieſt, Deacon or Sub-deacon, nor to their Sons.

The Twentieth, That none ſhall Marry their Daughters.

The Twenty firſt imports, That Lay-men ſhall not enjoy Eccleſiaſtical Benefices.

The Twenty ſecond, That Laicks ſhall not put Prieſts in their Churches without the approbation of the Biſhop.

The Twenty third, That thoſe Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, who renounce their Clerkſhip or Miniſterial Functions, ſhall be ſeparated from the reſt of the Clergy.

The Twenty fourth, That Monks, who quit their Habit, ſhall be depriv'd of the Communion of the Church, till they have reſum'd it; and if the Abbots or Monks refuſe to readmit them, they ſhall reſide with the Clerks in Churches or in other Monaſteries, wearing the Habit of Monks and obſerving the Monaſtick Rule.

The Twenty fifth, That neither the Canons nor Monks ſhall paſs from one Church or from one Monaſtery to another, without a Licenſe from the Biſhop or Abbot.

After the Seſſion of this Synod, Aimo made a Declaration, That St. Martial ſhould be ſtil'd an Apoſtle in all the Church-Offices.

The Council of Limoges held in the Year, 1031.

The Council of Limoges in 1031.

THE ſame Queſtion was debated at large in the Council of Limoges, aſſembled eighteen days after in the Church of that City, where the greateſt part of the Prelates who had aſſiſted in the Council of Bourges, were preſent, with Jourdain Biſhop of Limoges, Iſambert of Poitiers, Arnold of Perigueux, Rohon of Angouleſme and ſome others. There were only two Seſſions, viz. the firſt on the 18th day of November, and the other on the 19th. In the former after many Debates, the Apoſtolical Dignity was confirm'd to St. Martial.

In

In the ſecond, after having obſerv'd, that different Cuſtoms might be in uſe in ſeveral Churches, the Conſtitutions made in the Council of Bourges were read; and the ſecond concerning the renewing of the Hoſt every Sunday was alter'd, becauſe 'twas judg'd ſufficient that they ſhould be renew'd Twelve times a Year. Afterward the Affair of the Abbey of Beaulieu was propos'd, which was poſſeſs'd by a ſecular Abbot: He was Summon'd to the Synod, and after he had conſented that it ſhould be reform'd according to the Rule, 'twas ordain'd that the Biſhop of Limoges ſhould place a regular Abbot therein, before the Feſtival of Chriſtmas. This gave occaſion to treat of the Monaſtick Regularity in the Council: The Biſhop of Limoges was very well ſatisfied with the Conduct of the Abbots and Monks of his Dioceſs, and only complain'd of one Abbot, who had ſuffer'd a certain Vicount, excommunicated by the Biſhop and deceaſed without Abſolution, to be interr'd in his Church: The Abbot vindicated himſelf; alledging, That it was done without his Knowledge by the Souldiers of that Vicount, who bury'd him themſelves; but that as ſoon as he was inform'd of the Matter of Fact, he caus'd his Corps to be dug up, and to be laid without the conſecrated Ground. The Biſhop of Cahors related an Accident of the like nature, which happen'd in his Dioceſs. Then the Prelates of the Council proceeded to find out Means to oblige the great Lords and Noblemen to make Peace one with another, and Excommunication and Suſpenſion from Divine Service were propos'd to that end. The Monks of St. Martial had their Cuſtom confirm'd of Adminiſtring Baptiſm on the Feſtivals of Eaſter and Whitſuntide; and the Abbots had a Privilege granted them to have a Chaplain and three Deacons aſſiſting at their Celebration of Maſs, on the ſolemn Feſtivals: The Canons againſt incontinent Clergy-men and Simoniacal Practices were reviv'd; and the time of Ordination was fix'd on the four Ember-Weeks. Upon a Remonſtrance, that divers Perſons excommunicated by their Biſhops for notorious Crimes, went to Rome and receiv'd Abſolution from the Pope; the Biſhop of Puy en Velay reported, that ſome Years ago, the Count of Clermont being excommunicated by the Biſhop, for leaving his lawful Wife to Marry another, made a Journey to the Court of Rome, where he obtain'd Abſolution of the Pope, who had no notice of the Sentence of Excommunication paſs'd againſt him: That the Biſhop having made a Complaint, the Pope return'd for Anſwer, That he ought to blame himſelf for what had happen'd, by reaſon that he never gave him any Information that the Count was excommunicated; the Pope added, That if he had known it, he would have confirm'd the Biſhop's Sentence, becauſe he makes Profeſſion to aſſiſt his Brethren in every thing, and not to oppoſe them; that he ſhould be very ſorry, to hear of any Schiſm or Miſ-underſtanding between him and them; and that therefore he abrogated and made void the Pennance and Abſolution, which he had granted to that excommunicated Perſon, by whom he was ſurpriz'd, and who ought to expect nothing but a Curſe, till he has made Satisfaction and has been duely abſolv'd by his Dioceſan.

This Narrative makes it appear, That theſe ſorts of Abſolutions were often ſurreptitiouſly got of the Popes, as it may be further evinc'd from another Paſſage of the like nature, which happen'd at Angouleſme; where a certain excommunicated Perſon, who could not obtain Abſolution, by reaſon that he was unwilling to make Satisfaction, preſented to his Biſhop a Letter from the Pope, in which he intreated him to admit the ſaid Perſon to the Pennance which he had enjoyn'd: The Biſhop, without being ſurpriz'd, reply'd, That he did not believe that that Order came from the Pope, and that it ſhould not be ſerviceable to the Offender, who ſhould remain under the Sentence of Excommunication, till he had accepted of and done the Pennance, that ſhould be impos'd on him by himſelf or by his Arch-deacon by his Order. Upon theſe conſiderations, the Biſhops unanimouſly declar'd, That the Pope had indeed a Right to confirm, augment or diminiſh the Pennance enjoyn'd an Offender by his Dioceſan, or even to impoſe it on thoſe, whom the Biſhops ſhould nominate for that purpoſe; but that he had no Power either to impoſe Pennance or to grant Abſolution, in reſpect of an excommunicated Perſon, without conſulting the Dioceſan. And that it was his Office, rather to confirm than to diſannul the Sentences of the other Biſhops; in regard that if the Members ought to follow their Head, the Head alſo ought to take care not to oppreſs the Members: The Acts of this Council are very large, and contain a great number of Matters of Fact, Authorities and Arguments, relating to the Affair of St. Martial, which are of no very great Moment.

Divers Councils held in France, A. D. 1040.

MANY other Councils were conven'd at the ſame time in divers Provinces of France, particularly in Aquitaine, Burgundy and Lyonnois for the re-eſtabling of Peace and Church-Diſcipline. Effectual Means were chiefly ſought for therein, to put a ſtop to the Civil Wars, publick Robberies and Outrages that were committed, more eſpecially in reference to the Church-Revenues and Clergy. It was ordain'd in all theſe Councils, that the People ſhould abſtain from eating Fleſh on Fridays and Saturdays, and from drinking Wine on Fridays; that thoſe who were deſirous to be exempted, for ſome lawful Cauſe, ſhould be oblig'd to maintain their indigent Perſons on thoſe days; and that in conſideration of this Abſtinence, Divers Councils held in France, in 1040.

Offenders ſhould be diſcharg'd from other Pennances, provided that they bound themſelves by an Oath to obſerve it. However ſome Biſhops oppos'd this Conſtitution, and among others Gerard Biſhop of Cambray, who maintain'd, That that Yoke ought not to be laid equally on all People, becauſe there were ſome who were not able to undergo it, by reaſon of the weakneſs of their Bodies; neither perhaps did their Tranſgreſſions deſerve ſo ſevere a Chaſtiſement, and there were others, in reſpect of whom, this Satisfaction is not proportioned to the haynouſneſs of their Offences: That it were more expedient to follow the Canonical Rules in the impoſing of Pennances; and that much leſs ought the People to be conſtrain'd by an Oath to obſerve this Abſtinence; ſince that were by ſuch means to expoſe them not only to the hazard of breaking a Commandment, but alſo of incurring Perjury. The ſame Prelate did not think fit that the Biſhops ſhould be concern'd in Military Affairs, and the bearing of Arms; ſaying, That it is the Province of Kings to take cognizance of thoſe matters, and not that of Clergy-men.

'Tis a thing very obſervable, that a great number of Bodies of Saints and abundance of Relicks were brought into thoſe Councils, and that 'twas generally believ'd, that many Miracles were wrought therein: There were alſo held at the ſame time divers other particular Councils, either for the dedicating of Churches, or for the granting of Privileges to Monaſteries, or for the determining of private differences among the Biſhops, about the limits of their Dioceſſes, or to put an end to other Conteſts, which are mention'd by the Writers of that Time, but do not deſerve to be inſiſted upon in this Place.

The Council of Rheims held in the Year, 1049.

The Council of Rheims in 1049.

HERIMAR, Abbot of St. Remy at Rheims, having invited over Leo IX. to conſecrate his new Church, that Pope arriv'd there in the Month of October A. D. 1049. accompany'd with the Arch-biſhops of Trier, Lyons and Bezanſon, and the Biſhop of Porto, and after having perform'd the Ceremony, and that of the Tranſlation of the Body of St. Remy to this new Church, he held a Council therein, which continu'd during ſome Days: It was compos'd of the Arch-biſhops of Rheims, Trier, Lyons and Bezanſon; of the Biſhops of Soiſſons, Terouane, Senlis, Mets, Langres, Coutances, Liſieux, Bayeux, Auranches, Verdun, Nevers, Angers, Nantes and Porto, and of a Biſhop of England, with divers Abbots and other Clergy-men, to the number of Fifty. Peter Deacon of the Church of Rome open'd the Council, declaring, That it was requiſite to treat about the reformation of many Abuſes which had crept into the Churches of France, particularly Simony, the ſeizing of Churches by Laicks, forbidden Marriages, the Apoſtacy of Clerks and Monks, &c. But above all things, he admoniſh'd the Biſhops to declare under pain of an Anathema, whether they were ordain'd for Mony or otherwiſe: The Arch-biſhops of Trier, Lyons and Bezanſon, proteſted that they were not, but the Metropolitan of Rheims deſired time to return an Anſwer: Among the Biſhops there were only Four, who were not able to clear themſelves, viz. thoſe of Langres, Nevers, Coutances and Nantes. The Abbots being ask'd the ſame Queſtion, many of them proteſted themſelves innocent, and others own'd their Fault by their ſilence. The Abbots of Poitiers was accuſed of Incontinency by the Biſhop of Langres, and not having ſufficiently clear'd himſelf, was depos'd. In the end of this Seſſion, it was prohibited under the penalty of an Anathema to attribute the Title of Univerſal Primate of the Church to any but the Biſhop of Rome.

The next Day, the Arch-biſhop of Rheims after having had a private Conference with the Pope and ſome other Prelates, entreated the Biſhop of Senlis to ſpeak in his favour, who accordingly declar'd that the Arch-biſhop was not guilty of Simony; but the Pope order'd that he ſhould clear himſelf by Oath; whereupon he ſued for longer time, which was granted, on condition that he ſhould appear in a Council to be held at Rome in the middle of April in the following Year. The determination of the Cauſe that was depending between that Arch-biſhop and the Biſhop of Toul, about the Abbey of Monſtier-Randy, was refer'd to the next Day. Afterward certain Clerks of the Church of Tours, brought an Accuſation againſt the Biſhop of Dol for aſſuming the Quality of Arch-biſhop, and withdrawing himſelf with the ſeven Biſhops of Bretagne from the Juriſdiction of the Metropolitan of Tours: It was order'd that he ſhould be ſummon'd to the Council of Rome, in the Month of April following. Then the Biſhop of Langres was accuſed of Simony, of bearing Arms and committing Murders, of tyrannizing over his Clergy, and of perpetrating other more notorious Crimes: One of his Clerks depos'd that the ſaid Biſhop took away his Wife, whom he had whilſt he was as yet a Lay-man, and after having abus'd her, made her a Nun: A certain Prieſt gave in evidence, that he caus'd him to be kept in Cuſtody under a Guard and to endure much hardſhip, on purpoſe to extort Mony from him. The Biſhop of Langres demanded Counſel, and made application to the Arch-biſhops of Lyons and Bezanſon: The latter going about to plead for him, falter'd in his Speech, and the other acknowledg'd, that the Biſhop had expos'd the ſacred Orders to Sale, and exacted a Sum of Mony of that Prieſt, but deny'd that he caus'd him to be miſus'd.

On

On the third Day, the Biſhop of Langres not daring to appear, and being ſummon'd thrice, and ſought for to no purpoſe, was at laſt excommunicated. The Biſhop of Nevers own'd, that his Relations had given a Sum of Mony for his Biſhoprick, but that he was altogether ignorant of what they had done; nevertheleſs he declar'd, that he deſign'd to leave it, and even at the ſame time laid down his Croſier-Staff at the Pope's Feet, who caus'd him to take it up again, after he had taken an Oath, that that Mony was paid without his knowledge. Then an ancient Copy of a Privilege granted to the Church of Rheims was read, which made it appear, that the Abbey of Monſtier Randy belong'd to its Juriſdiction, and it was accordingly adjudg'd to that Church. The Biſhop of Coutances confeſs'd, that his Brother had laid out a Sum of Mony to get him advanc'd to the Epiſcopal Dignity; but having taken an Oath, that it was done without his knowledge, he was declar'd innocent. The Biſhop of Nantes was not ſo favourably treated; for having own'd that he ſucceeded his Father in his Biſhoprick, after having diſburs'd a certain Sumn of Mony, he was depos'd, and only permitted to exerciſe the Office of a Prieſt. Laſtly, a Sentence of Excommunication was denounc'd againſt the Prelats who were ſummon'd to this Council but did not appear, and the following Conſtitutions were agreed upon, viz.

1. That none ſhall be promoted to Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, but by the election of the Clergy and People. 2. That none ſhall buy or make Sale of the Sacred Orders, Eccleſiaſtical Offices or Altars. 3. That Laicks ſhall not retain Spiritual Livings. 4. That none but the Biſhop or ſome Perſon deputed by him ſhall be empower'd to levy any Sums of Mony within the Precincts of the Churches. 5. That nothing ſhall be exacted for Burying the Dead, or for adminiſtring the Sacraments of Baptiſm and the Lord's Supper. 6. That Clergy-men ſhall not bear Arms, nor go on Warfare. 7. That no Clerk nor Lay-man ſhall lend Mony upon uſe. 8. That the Monks and Clerks ſhall not quit their Profeſſion. 9. That none ſhall offer violence to Clergy-men as they are Travelling. 10. That there ſhall not be ſuffer'd any manner of oppreſſion of the Poor. 11. That no Man ſhall take to Wife any of his near Relations. 12. That it ſhould be prohibited to leave a lawful Wife, in order to marry another. Laſtly, all thoſe Perſons were excommunicated, who ſhould protect or hold correſpondence with the new Hereticks of France, the Sodomites and certain Lords, who had contracted forbidden Marriages and aſſaulted ſome Biſhops and other Clergy-men.

The Council of Tours, held in the Year, 1060.

THE Cuſtom being now introduc'd that the Councils for the reformation of Church-diſcipline, ſhould be held in the preſence or by the authority of the Legats of the See of Rome; Stephen Cardinal and Legat of Pope Nicolas II. call'd one A. D. 1060. at Tours, in which it was ordain'd, The Council of Tours in 1060.

1. That all thoſe Perſons who give Mony for any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, ſhall be depriv'd of it for ever.

2. That if any Biſhop or Patron confer Benefices for Mony, the Clerks ſhall be allow'd to oppoſe their Proceedings and to have recourſe to the Arbitration of the neighbouring Biſhops; nay, even to Appeal from them to the See of Rome.

3. That no new Benefice can be ſold, nor any Church-Revenues alienated.

4. That none ſhall purchaſe any Spiritual Livings of Lay-men.

5. That the ſame Perſon cannot enjoy two Benefices in different Churches.

6. That the Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, who knowing the Prohibition made by Pope Nicolas, do not forbear the Exerciſe of their Miniſterial Functions, when they have been engag'd in a ſcandalous Converſation with Women, or who ſhall refuſe to deſiſt for the future, after having receiv'd information of that Prohibition, ſhall be depos'd without a poſſibility of reſtauration.

7. That Clergy-men, who bear Arms, ſhall be depriv'd of their Benefices and Dignities.

8. That Laicks, who preſume to ſell or diſpoſe of the Church-Revenues ſhall be excommunicated.

9. That thoſe Men who marry their Kinſwomen, or thoſe Women who keep an unchaſt Correſpondence with their Kinſmen, and refuſe to leave them, or to do Pennance, ſhall be excluded from the Communion of the Faithful and turn'd out of the Church.

10. That thoſe Monks who quit the Monaſtick State, ſhall likewiſe be ſeparated from the Communion of the Church as Apoſtats.

The Council of Soiſſons, held in the Year, 1092.

ROSCELIN, a Clerk of the Church of Compiegne, and a very able Logician, gave it out in the end of the Eleventh Century, That the three Divine Perſons of the Holy Trinity were three Things: This Opinion was condemn'd in a Council held at Soiſſons, A. D. 1092. The Council of Soiſſons in 1092.

THEOBALD, a Clerk of the Church of Etampes likewiſe wrote a Letter againſt him, on another Subject, viz. to ſhew, That the Sons of Prieſts may be admitted into the Clergy.

MAUGIER, Arch-biſhop of Rouen, held a Council in that City, A. D. 1050. with Hugh Biſhop of Eureux and Robert of Coutances, in which he drew up a Letter directed to the Biſhops and Faithful of his Province, containing the following Conſtitutions, viz.

1. That the Articles of Faith, compris'd in the Creed of the Catholick and Apoſtolick Church, ought to be firmly adher'd to.

2. That no Preſents ſhall be made to Princes, nor to their Officers for the obtaining of Biſhopricks.

3. That the Biſhops ſhall not covet to be tranſlated from one See to another, out of a Principle of Ambition.

4. That the Monks ſhall not cauſe themſelves to be made Abbots for Mony.

5. That one Biſhop ſhall not diſpoſſeſs another, nor one Abbot another.

6. That the Biſhops ſhall not exact any thing for Ordinations.

7. That their Officers, that is to ſay, their Arch-deacons or Secretaries ſhall not in like manner demand any thing upon that account.

8. That no Perſon ſhall be ordain'd who is not of a competent Age, and who has not made a ſufficient progreſs in Learning.

9. That a Biſhop ſhall not ordain a Clerk of another Dioceſs without the permiſſion of his Dioceſan.

10. That the Biſhops ſhall not beſtow the Revenues, Lands and Benefices of the Clergy on Laicks.

11, 12 and 13. That Clergy-men ſhall not endeavour to ſupplant one another.

14, 15 and 16. That nothing ſhall be exacted for the Holy Chriſm, nor for the Conſecration of Churches, nor for the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm.

† A ſort of Veſtments worn by Popiſh Prieſts.

17. That on the eight days, during which new Baptized Perſons wear the † Albe, they ſhall be obliged only to offer their Wax-Tapers and the Linnen with which their Heads were cover'd, by reaſon of the Holy Chriſm.

18. That the Pennance impos'd on Offenders, ſhall neither be augmented nor diminiſh'd for Money.

19. That the new Baptized Perſons ſhall ſpend eight days in wearing the Albes, and holding lighted Tapers in the Church, where they were baptized.

The Council of Liſieux, held A. D. 1055. and that of Rouen in 1063.

The Council of Liſieux in 1055.

THE Arch-biſhop of Rouen, under whom the preceding Council was held, was depos'd, A. D. 1055. in another Council conven'd at Liſieux, in the preſence of Stephen Biſhop of Sion in Switzerland, the Pope's Legat, which conſiſted of the Biſhops of that Province. He was accus'd of having robb'd his Church, of conſuming its Revenues in unprofitable Expenſes, and of diſſipating part of them to Largeſſes only to ſatisfie his Ambition: He was alſo ſuſpected to be guilty of infamous Crimes, and was cenſur'd for not ſhewing a due Reſpect to the See of Rome: He was apparently culpable, but that which chiefly brought upon him this Condemnation, was the Diſpleaſure of Duke William his Nephew, who was incens'd againſt him, becauſe he had excommunicated that Prince upon account of his Marriage with the Princeſs Mathilda his Kinſwoman, the Daughter of Baldwin Count of Flanders, and favour'd the Party of Duke Arques his Brother: Therefore the Duke baniſh'd him immediately after his Condemnation, to the Iſle of Guernſey, and caus'd Maurillus, a Monk of Fecamp, to be ſubſtituted in his room. The latter was zealous in endeavouring to re-eſtabliſh the Church-Diſcipline and to reform the Corruption of Manners: To which purpoſe he call'd divers Synods, and made ſome Conſtitutions. In that which was held by him at Rouen, A. D. 1063. for the Dedication of the Cathedral Church, the building of which was compleated at that time, he publiſh'd a Confeſſion of Faith againſt Berenger's erroneous Opinion, of which we have made mention elſewhere.

The Council of Rouen held, A. D. 1072.

MAURILLUS, dying A. D. 1069. Duke William caus'd John de Bayeux, Biſhop of Auranches, to be choſen to ſupply his Place, and ſent Lanfranc on purpoſe to Rome, to get that Election confirm'd by the Pope. This Arch-biſhop held a Council at Rouen in 1072. with his Suffragans; in which after having reviv'd the Creeds of the Councils of Nice, Conſtantinople, Epheſus and Chalcedon, they ſet forth Twenty four Canons, relating to Church-Diſcipline. The Council of Rouen, in 1072.

The Firſt imports, That the Biſhop ſhall perform the Conſecration of the Holy Chriſm and of the Oils, after the Hour of † None, having at leaſt twelve Prieſts for his Aſſiſtants. † One of the Popiſh Canonical Hours.

The Second, That the Arch-deacons ſhall not content themſelves, only with receiving ſome few Drops of the Chriſm and conſecrated Oil, to be mixt with the other Oil; as it is commonly practis'd in ſome Places by an Abuſe, but that they ſhall preſent all their Chriſm and Oil to the Biſhop to be conſecrated by him.

The Third, That the Deans, being cloathed with Albes, ſhall diſtribute the Chriſm and conſecrated Oil with Reverence, and keep them in well ſtopt Veſſels.

The Fourth ordains, That none ſhall celebrate Maſs without the Communion.

The Fifth, That the Prieſts ſhall remain Faſting and Cloath'd with the Albe and Stole, when they go about to adminiſter Baptiſm, unleſs in Caſe of neceſſity.

The Sixth, That the Viaticum or Holy Water, ſhall not be kept above eight days; and that Hoſts already conſecrated, ſhall not be conſecrated a ſecond time.

The Seventh, That to confer Confirmation, 'tis requiſite that the Biſhop and thoſe Perſons who receive it ſhould be Faſting, and that Tapers be lighted.

The Eighth, That ſacred Orders ſhall be conferr'd in the Evening on Saturdays or Sunday Morning, if Saturday's Faſt were not broken.

The Ninth, That the Faſts ſhall be exactly obſerv'd during the Ember-Weeks.

The Tenth, That Clerks who have caus'd themſelves to be ordain'd by ſurprize, ſhall be depos'd.

The Eleventh, That thoſe who have receiv'd Crowns with Benediction, and preſume to quit them, ſhall be excommunicated, till they have made Satisfaction; and that Clerks who are deſirous to be ordain'd, ſhall repair to the Biſhop on Fridays for that purpoſe.

The Twelfth enjoyns, That vagabond Monks, or ſuch as have been turn'd out of their Monaſtery for ſome Miſdeameanour, ſhall be conſtrain'd by the Biſhop's Authority to return to them; but if the Abbots refuſe to re-admit thoſe whom they have expell'd, they ſhall be oblig'd to give them Alms, and to maintain them.

The Thirteenth, That no Merchandiſe ſhall be made of Spiritual Livings.

The Fourteenth, That no Marriages ſhall be ſolemniz'd privately, nor after Meals; but that the Bride-groom and Bride being Faſting, ſhall be bleſs'd by a Prieſt in like manner Faſting; and that before he proceed to marry them, enquiry ſhall be made, whether the Parties be not Relations in the ſeventh Degree of Conſanguinity.

The Fifteenth declares, That Prieſts, Deacons and Sub-deacons, who are marry'd, cannot enjoy any Church-Revenues, nor diſpoſe of them themſelves, or by others.

The Sixteenth, That a Man cannot marry a Widow, with whom he is ſuſpected to have convers'd ſcandalouſly, in her Husband's Life-time.

The Seventeenth, That a Man, whoſe Wife is vail'd a Nun, cannot take another, as long as ſhe is living.

The Eighteenth, That a Woman cannot marry again, till ſhe be certainly aſſur'd of her Husband's Death.

The Nineteenth orders, That Clerks who have committed enormous and publick Sins, ſhall not be reſtor'd to their Dignities, till after a long courſe of Pennance.

The Twentieth, That if any Clergy-man be guilty of a Crime, for which he ought to be depos'd, his Dioceſan ſhall ſummon ſuch a number of his Collegues, as is requir'd by the Canons; that is to ſay, ſix for the depoſing of a Prieſt, and three for that of a Deacon; and that thoſe who cannot aſſiſt in Perſon, ſhall be permitted to ſend their Deputies to ſupply their Place.

The Twenty firſt, That during the time of Lent, none ſhall take any Repaſt before the * Hour of None. * One of the Canonical.

The Twenty ſecond, That on Saturday the Vigil of Eaſter-Feſtival, the Office ſhall not be begun before the Hour of None, by reaſon that it is the Nocturnal Office, which belongs to Eaſter-Sunday, and that no Maſs ought to be ſaid during the two preceding days.

The Twenty third, That if any Feſtival happens to fall on a day, when it cannot be celebrated, it ſhall be transferr'd to another within the Octave.

The Twenty fourth, That the ſolemn and general Baptiſm of adult Perſons, ſhall be adminiſtred only at Eaſter and Whitſontide, and not even on the Feſtival of the Epiphany, unleſs in Caſe of neceſſity; but as for Infants, they may be Baptiz'd at all times.

In

A Quarrel between the Arch-biſhop of Rouen, and the Monks of St. Owen.

In the following Year, there happen'd a notable Quarrel between John de Bayuex the Arch-biſhop, and the Monks of the Abbey of St. Owen at Rouen: It was a Cuſtomary thing for the Metropolitan of that City, to celebrate a ſolemn Maſs in their Church on the Patron's Feſtival: Arch-biſhop John having made them ſtay ſomewhat longer than ordinary, they began the Office without him; but he arriv'd when the Hymn call'd Gloria in excelſis was ended; and being incens'd, becauſe they did not wait for him, he excommunicated all the Monks, caus'd the divine Service to ceaſe, and the Abbot of Sees, who was officiating, to depart from the Altar. By this means a great Tumult was rais'd, during which one of the Monks or one of their Servants got up into the Steeple, rung the Alarm-bell, and cry'd out from the top of the Tower, That the Arch-biſhop was come to take away the Relicks of St. Owen: Whereupon the People were gather'd together; ſome with Hatches, and others with Staves; ran in crowds to the Church; and broke in furiouſly; whilſt others climb'd upon the Vaults: The Arch-biſhop terrify'd with the danger, retir'd toward the Church-doors, caus'd them to be ſhut, and made a Rampart of Seats and Benches againſt thoſe who were in the Church. In the mean while his Attendants fell foul upon the Monks with Candleſticks and Staves, and the Monks on the other ſide, defended themſelves as reſolutely; till at laſt the Sheriff of the City being inform'd of this Tumult and of the danger, to which the Arch-biſhop was expos'd, came with his Guards and reſcu'd him out of the Hands of the Rabble: The latter immediately wrote to King William about the Affair, and the Monks did the like on their ſide. This Prince order'd, that the Arch-biſhop ſhould reconcile the Church, and upon his refuſal, caus'd it to be done by the Biſhop of Auranches; nevertheleſs, to give Satisfaction to the Arch-biſhop, ſome of the Monks were put into Priſon, and others were diſpers'd in divers Monaſteries.

The Council of Rouen, held, A. D. 1074.

The Council of Rouen, in 1074.

IN the Year 1074. the ſame Arch-biſhop John, held another Council at Rouen with his Suffragans, in which he publiſh'd Fourteen Canons.

The Firſt imports, That to extirpate Simony, 'tis forbidden to buy or ſell any ſort of Benefice, whether it be an Abbey, Arch-deaconry, Deanery or Cure of Souls, and to exact any thing for admiſſion into Orders.

The Second, That Abbeys ſhall only be beſtow'd on thoſe who are well vers'd in Matters of Church-Diſcipline, by the means of a continu'd practice of it for ſeveral Years.

The Third, That the ancient Conſtitution ſhall be obſerv'd, which prohibits to entertain any Clerk, without a Letter of recommendation from his Dioceſan.

The Fourth, That ſeveral Orders ſhall not be receiv'd on the ſame day.

The Fifth, That the Sub-deacons, Deacons and Prieſts, ſhall not be ordain'd but upon making a ſolemn Profeſſion, according to the Injunctions of the Council of Toledo.

The Sixth, That Monks or Nuns, who have fallen into any publick notorious Enormity, ſhall be excluded for ever from the exerciſe of their Functions.

The Seventh enjoyns, That the Monks and Nuns take care exactly to obſerve St. Benedict's Rule.

The Eighth, That Clergy-men who are ordain'd, ſhall be inſtructed in thoſe things which are expreſs'd in the Eighth Canon of the Eighth Council of Toledo.

The Ninth, That Chriſtian Burial ſhall not be deny'd thoſe Perſons who die ſuddenly, if they do not actually lie under the guilt of ſome notorious Crime: nor to Women with Child, or newly brought to Bed.

The Tenth, That no Credit ſhall be given to the Depoſitions of thoſe Perſons, who under a colour of a ſcruple of Conſcience, declare that they have had to do with the Siſters or Relations of their Wives, to have a pretence to leave them, unleſs they bring ſufficient Proof of the Matter of Fact.

The Eleventh, That they ſhall likewiſe be oblig'd to the ſame thing, who give it out that they did not receive all the inferiour Orders, when they were ordain'd Prieſts, on purpoſe to get an opportunity to quit the Sacerdotal Functions.

The Twelfth, That Clergy-men degraded for their Miſdeameanours, ſhall not have the liberty to lead a ſecular Life, as Laicks.

The Thirteenth, That thoſe Perſons whoſe Marriage is declar'd Null, becauſe it was contracted with near Relations, ſhall live continently till they be married to others.

The Fourteenth, That the Chriſtians ſhall not have any Jews for their Slaves, nor any Jewiſh Women for their Nurſes.

Some time after, this Arch-biſhop of Rouen falling Sick of a Palſey, King William the Conqueror demanded a Licenſe of Gregory VII. to ſubſtitute another Clerk in his room. This Pope gave orders to Hubert Sub-deacon of the Church of Rome his Legat, with the Biſhops and Abbots of the Province, and the Clergy of the City of Rouen, to enquire whether John de Bayeux their Metropolitan were really capable any longer to perform the Epiſcopal Functions, and in caſe it appear'd ſo, that they ſhould exhort him to conſent to the Election of another

Arch-

Arch-biſhop; but if his Diſtemper hindred him from giving ſuch Conſent, they might proceed to the Choice of a Perſon worthy of being advanc'd to that Dignity. Upon mature deliberation, John being found uncapable was oblig'd to make a Reſignation in due form, and retir'd to one of his Country-Houſes: The King caus'd William Abbot of St. Stephen at Caen, the Son of Radbodus Biſhop of Sees to be choſen to ſupply his place. Pope Gregory diſapprov'd this Election, becauſe he was the Son of a Prieſt; but notwithſtanding his Prohibition, William was ordain'd, A. D. 1079. whilſt John was as yet living, who died ſome time after.

The Council of Lillebonne, held, A. D. 1080.

WILLIAM I. ſirnam'd the Conquerour, King of England and Duke of Normandy, caus'd a Council of the Prelats of Normandy to be held at Lillebonne in his preſence, A D. 1080. William Arch-biſhop of Rouen preſided in this Synod, and divers Conſtitutions were made therein, againſt thoſe who married their Relations; againſt Clergy-men, who had Wives; to prohibit Simoniacal Practices and Exactions for the performance of Eccleſiaſtical Functions; concerning the reſtitution of Revenues uſurp'd from the Churches; the Rights of Biſhops and Arch-deacons; the maintenance of Prieſts to ſerve the Churches that belong to Monks; and about the Puniſhments to be inflicted on Criminals and the Infringers of the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Laws.

The Council of Narbonne, held in the Year, 1054.

GEFFREY, Arch-biſhop of Narbonne held in that City, A. D. 1054. a Council conſiſting of ten Biſhops, and made a large Ordinance concerning the Laws of Peace and Truce; in which he marks the Days on which it is forbidded to make War, as alſo the Perſons and Goods that ought to be free from Inſults, even in the time of War, who are more eſpecially Clergy-men, Husband-men and Merchants; with the Effects belonging to their reſpective Qualities,

The Council of Narbonne in 1054.

The Council of Toulouſe, held, A. D. 1056.

POPE Victor II. having given Orders to Rambaldus Arch-biſhop of Arles, and to Pontius Arch-biſhop of Aix, his Vicars, to call a Council for the extirpation of Simony, and the reſtauration of Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline: They met together, A. D. 1054. at Toulouſe, with the Arch-biſhop of Narbonne, and divers other Biſhops of France, and drew up thirteen Canons.

The Council of Toulouſe in 1056.

In the Firſt it is Decreed, That thoſe Perſons who receive Ordination for Mony, ſhall be degraded from their Dignity, as well as they who ordain'd them.

In the Second, That a Biſhop, Abbot or Prieſt ſhall not be ordain'd till the Age of thirty Years, nor a Deacon till he has attain'd to that of Twenty five.

In the Third, That nothing ſhall be taken for the Dedication of Churches.

In the Fourth, That nothing ſhall be given to obtain Eccleſiaſtical Benefices.

In the Fifth, That they who turn Monks with a deſign to get the Government of an Abbey, ſhall never be promoted to that Dignity.

In the Sixth, That the Abbots ſhall govern their Monks according to St. Benedict's Rule, and that they ſhall not ſuffer them to enjoy any private Eſtate, nor to hold a Provoſtſhip or Superiority without their conſent.

The Seventh enjoyns Prieſts and Deacons to lead a ſingle Life.

The Eighth, That Lay-men ſhall not have any Spiritual Livings.

The Ninth, That the Eſtates and Goods of deceaſed Perſons ſhall not be pillag'd, but that they ſhall be diſpos'd of, according to their laſt Will and Teſtament.

The Tenth ordains, That the Churches ſhall be oblig'd to pay the accuſtomed Duties to the Epiſcopal See, and that thoſe that do not pay any, ſhall allot the third part of their Tithes and the Oblations, for the uſe of the Biſhops and Clerks.

The Eleventh, That in the Churches which belong to the Juriſdiction of Noble-men, the third part of the Tithes, and the Offerings ſhall be reſerv'd for the Prieſts and Clerks, who officiate therein.

The Twelfth denounces a Sentence of Excommunication againſt Adulterers and inceſtuous Perſons, as alſo againſt thoſe who are found guilty of Perjury.

The Thirteenth orders the like Sentence to paſs upon thoſe who hold Correſpondence or Converſe with excommunicated Perſons, unleſs to reprove or admoniſh them.

The Council of Dortmund, held in the Year, 1005.

The Council of Dortmund in 1005.

IT is related by Dithmar the Hiſtorian, that a great Council was held at Dortmund in Weſtphalia July 7. A. D. 1005. in which the Emperor Henry II. complaining of the Irregularities in reference to Church-Diſcipline, induc'd the Biſhops to revive the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, and to endeavour to reform the Exorbitances and corrupt Manners of the Clergy and Laity, by making divers uſeful Canons: But the Acts and Conſtitutions of this Council are loſt.

The Council of Selingenſtadt, held, A. D. 1023.

The Council of Selingenſtadt in 1023.

ARIBO, Arch-biſhop of Mentz, held in the Year, 1023. a Council at Selingenſtadt, compos'd of Burchard Biſhop of Worms, Vernarius Biſhop of Straſburg, Bruno of Augsburg, Eberhard of Bamberg and Meginhard of Wurtzburg, in which theſe Biſhops made the following Conſtitutions, viz.

The Firſt ordains, That Abſtinence from eating Fleſh ſhall be obſerv'd fourteen Days before the Feſtival of St. John, as many before that of Chriſtmas, and on the Vigils of the Epiphany, of the Feſtivals of the Apoſtles, of the Aſſumption of the Virgin Mary, of St. Laurence and of all the Saints.

The Second fixes the Ember-Weeks.

The Third denotes the time, when the ſolemnization of Marriages is forbidden, viz. from Advent till after the Epiphany, and from Septuageſima till after Eaſter, as alſo on the above ſpecified Days of Abſtinence, as well as the Vigils of the ſolemn Feſtivals.

The Fourth imports, That a Prieſt who has drunk plentifully after the Cock-crowing in the Summer, or even in Winter, ſhall not be allow'd to ſay Maſs the next Day, unleſs in caſe of neceſſity.

The Fifth prohibits Prieſts to celebrate above three Maſſes in one Day.

† A Conſecrated Linnen Cloth on which the Chalice and Hoſt are ſet in the Popiſh Churches.

The Sixth forbids under pain of an Anathema that † Corporals ſhould be thrown into the Fire to put a ſtop to the Conflagration.

The Seventh ordains, That if two Perſons ſuſpected to have committed Adultery together, one confeſſes the Crime, and the other denies it, the Party who owns it ſhall be put to Pennance, and the other ſhall clear himſelf by taking his Trial.

The Eighth forbids the carrying of Swords into the Church, except the Sword of State.

The Ninth prohibits Meetings in the Church-yards.

The Tenth condemns the Cuſtom of ſome Laicks, and more eſpecially of certain Ladies, who contented themſelves only to hear every Day the Goſpel In principio, or to cauſe the Maſſes of the Trinity and of St. Michael to be ſaid in their preſence; and ordains, That this ſhall not be done for the future, but in the proper time: Otherwiſe if any Perſons be deſirous to hear a particular Maſs, being mov'd by a ſingular Veneration for the Holy Trinity, and not by any ſuperſtitious Conceit; they ſhall hear a Maſs for the Day, or one for the conſolation and ſafety of the Living, or one for the Dead.

The Eleventh imports, That the firſt degree of Conſanguinity ſhall be reckon'd from the Coſins German.

The Twelfth, That the Houſes of Laicks which are contiguous to Churches ſhall be pull'd down, and that none ſhall be built in the Courts belonging to them, except thoſe of Prieſts.

In the Thirteenth, Lay-men are forbidden to conſign their Churches to Prieſts, without the conſent and approbation of the Biſhop or of his Grand Vicar.

The Fourteenth imports, That two Perſons being accus'd of having committed Adultery together, which they deny; if either of the Parties deſire that they may both undergo a Trial, and if one be caſt, they ſhall both be reputed guilty.

The Fifteenth enjoyns, That the publick Faſts appointed by the Biſhops ſhall be obſerv'd, or elſe that they ſhall be redeem'd by allotting a certain Largeſs for the ſuſtenance of poor People.

The Sixteenth, That none ſhall take a Journey to Rome, without a Licence from the Biſhop or his Grand Vicar.

The Seventeenth, That no Prieſt ſhall retrench any thing from the Forty Days Faſt impoſed on Penitents.

The Eighteenth is againſt thoſe who being guilty of enormous Crimes, refuſe to receive Pennance from their Dioceſan, upon a preſumption, that going to Rome, the Pope will forgive all their Sins: The Council declares, That this Indulgence ſhall ſtand them in no ſtead,

and

and that they ought at firſt to receive a Penance proportioned to the heinouſneſs of their Offences, after which they may go to Rome with the permiſſion and recommendatory Letters of their Dioceſan.

In the Nineteenth, Penitents are prohibited to Travel during the forty Days of their Faſt.

The Twentieth forbids Prieſts to admit into the Church, ſuch Perſons as are not allow'd to enter therein, by reaſon of their Crimes, without having receiv'd an Order from the Biſhop.

Theſe Canons are follow'd with a Form of Ceremonies to be obſerv'd, and Prayers to be ſaid during the Seſſion of a Synod.

The Council of Mentz, held, A. D. 1069.

SIGEFROY or SIGEFRID Arch-biſhop of Mentz ſucceeded Luitbold, A. D. 1059. and govern'd that Church till 1084. He held a Council in 1069. at Mentz, in which the Emperor Henry IV. made a Propoſal to divorce his Wife, by reaſon that he could not have any Iſſue of her Body. Sigefrid inclin'd to his Opinion; but Peter Damien the Pope's Legat being arriv'd, and having prevented the Divorce, the Arch-biſhop wrote to Alexander II. that he had prohibited the Emperor from divorcing his Wife, under pain of Excommunication; but that this Prince having alledg'd, that he could not have carnal Copulation with her, and the Empreſs having own'd her impotency, he found himſelf oblig'd to conſult the Holy See, about ſo extraordinary a Caſe; that he was unwilling to paſs Judgment on the Affair in a Council, which was call'd upon that occaſion, till he had receiv'd his Anſwer; and that he entreated him to ſend his Legats to examine and decide the matter in Germany. The Council of Mentz in 1069.

The Council of Mentz, A. D. 1071.

THE ſame Arch-biſhop held another Council at Mentz, A. D. 1071. to enquire into the Ordination of Charles nominated to the Biſhoprick of Conſtance: He was accus'd of Simony, and the Pope forbid Sigefrid to ordain him Biſhop; nevertheleſs the Emperor peremptorily requir'd it, and wrote to the Pope about the Affair, who referr'd the examination of it to the Arch-biſhops of Colen and Mentz. Whereupon they ſummon'd a Council, but the Emperor would not ſuffer it to be held, and took a reſolution to ſend Charles to Rome, to the end that the Pope might take cognizance of the matter and ordain him Biſhop. Sigefrid prevented the Pope, and entreated him not to conſecrate Charles, but if he found him Innocent, to ſend him back to him and to his Collegues, to receive Ordination from them. The Pope refuſing to determine this Affair at Rome, ſent him back to be examin'd in his own Country, and it was referr'd to the Council which Sigefrid held at Mentz in the Month of Auguſt, A. D. 1071. The Arch-biſhops of Saltzburg and Trier with nine Biſhops of Germany aſſiſted in this Synod, in which, Matters were debated during four Days between Charles and his Adverſaries, till at laſt Charles fearing leſt he ſhould not be able to carry the Point, declar'd that he would not be Biſhop contrary to the Inclination of thoſe whom he was to govern, and deliver'd up his Ring and Croſier into the Emperor's Hands. The Acts of this Council, which were ſent to the Pope and Sigefrid's Letters are ſtill extant. The Council of Mentz in 1071.

The Council of Erford, A. D. 1073.

IN the Year, 1073. there happen'd a difference between Sigefrid and the Clergy of Thuringen, about the Tithes of that Province, which this Arch-biſhop claim'd as his Right, and which were conteſted with him by the ſaid Clergy, more eſpecially by the Abbots of Fulda and Herfeldt. The matter was debated in an Aſſembly held at Erford in the ſame Year, and determin'd by the Emperor to the advantage as Sigefrid, who wrote about it to Hildebrand, and to Pope Alexander. The Hiſtory of this Council is written by Lambert, and we ſtill have Sigefred's two Letters, in the laſt of which, he makes mention of the Outrages committed againſt the Arch-biſhop of Trier, declaring that he was taken away by force, extremely abus'd, and at laſt ſhamefully put to Death. The Council of Erford in 1073.

The Council of Aenham, held in the Year, 1010.

KING Ethelred call'd a Council about the Year, 1010. in which Elphegus Arch-biſhop of Canterbury and Ethelred Arch-biſhop of York aſſiſted, and made a great number of Conſtitutions concerning the Reformation of Manners and Church Diſcipline; Rules The Council of Aenham.

that ought to be follow'd by the Clerks and Monks; the Celebacy of Prieſts and other Clergy-men; againſt ſuperſtitious Practices and Incontinency; about the Rights of Churches, particularly St. Peter's Pence, the Tribute of funeral Torches, which was paid thrice a Year, that of Burials, &c. concerning the Feſtivals and Faſts that ought to be obſerv'd, viz. the great Feſtival of the Virgin Mary, preceeded by a Faſt; and the Feſtivals of the Apoſtles in like manner preceeded by their reſpective Vigils, except that of St. James and St. Philip, when a Faſt is not to be kept, by reaſon of the Paſchal Solemnity; the Faſt of the four Ember-Weeks, and that on all Fridays: Concerning the time, in which Marriages are forbidden to be ſolemniz'd, that is to ſay, the ſolemn Feſtivals; the Ember-Weeks; from Advent to the Octave of the Epiphany, and from Septuageſima, to the end of the Fortnight after Eaſter: About the Interval that ought to be obſerv'd by Widows before they marry again, which is the ſpace of a Year: Laſtly, concerning frequent Confeſſions; the receiving of the Communion; and divers other Points of Morality. For the Ordinances of this Council contain many excellent Inſtructions and very prudent Exhortations: Foraſmuch as it was held under Elphegus Archbiſhop of Canterbury, it muſt needs be between the Year of our Lord, 1006. and 1013. There are two different Editions of the Acts of the Council of Aenham.

King Ethelred and King Canut's Laws.

THE ſame King Ethelred publiſh'd A. D. 1012. certain Laws, among which are ſome relating to Eccleſiaſtical Affairs; particularly, about the payment of Peter's Pence; to oblige all the Faithful to Faſt three Days before the Feſtival of St. Michael; concerning the Prayers which ought to be ſaid in the Churches for the State, and about Alms-giving.

King Canut in like manner in the Year, 1032. caus'd divers Laws to be proclaim'd which relate to Church-Affairs, viz. concerning the exteriour Religious Worſhip; the Peace of the Churches; the reſpect due to Clergy-men; unlawful Marriages; the payment of Tithes, Peter's Pence and other Tributes; the obſervation of Feſtivals, Sundays and Days of Abſtinence; the Functions and Manners of the Clergy and of the Faithful; and againſt Irregularities, Abuſes and Miſdemeanours. Theſe Laws are full of moral Maxims and pious Exhortations: There are alſo ſome others of the like nature enacted by King Edward III.

The Council of London, held in the Year, 1075.

The Council of London in 1075.

'TWAS a long time ſince any Councils were held, or any Conſtitutions made relating to Church-diſcipline in England, when Lanfranc was ordain'd Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, neither could ſuch an Aſſembly be ſummond'd for ſome time after, becauſe the King would not ſuffer any to be conven'd without his permiſſion. At laſt he held a National Synod at London, A. D. 1075. in which Thomas Arch-biſhop of York aſſiſted and eleven Biſhops of England, with the Biſhop of Coutances, who was admitted to the Council, becauſe he had a conſiderable Eſtate in this Kingdom: There were alſo preſent 21 Abbots in this Council, in which it was firſt ordain'd, That all the Biſhops ſhould take their Places according to the antiquity of their Ordination, except thoſe who had a peculiar Privilege upon account of the Dignity of their Sees; and after having ſought for thoſe who might lay claim to ſuch a Privilege in England, it was determin'd that the Arch-biſhop of York ſhould be plac'd on the right Hand of the Metropolitan of Canterbury; the Biſhop of London on the left, and the Biſhop of Wincheſter next the Arch-biſhop of York; and that in the abſence of the latter, the Biſhop of London ſhould ſit on the right Hand of the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of Wincheſter on the left. Afterward it was decreed, That all the Monks ſhould live according to St. Benedict's Rule; that they ſhould take care to inſtruct the Youth, and that they ſhould not have any private poſſeſſions: Then three Epiſcopal Sees which were erected in Towns, were tranſlated to Cities, according to the Tenor of the third Conſtitution, and the ancient Injunctions were reviv'd, which prohibited to receive a Clerk who was ſubject to the Juriſdiction of another Biſhop, without Letters of recommendation from his Dioceſan, and to marry a near Kinſwoman. Simoniacal Practices, Witchcraft and Pagan Superſtitions were likewiſe forbidden, and the Celebacy of the Clergy was ſtrictly enjoin'd.

The Council of Wincheſter, held, A. D. 1076.

The Council of Wincheſter in 1076.

IN a Council held the next Year at Wincheſter, Lanfranc caus'd divers Canons to be drawn up againſt Perſons guilty of Simony; for the celebration of Provincial Councils; the ſubjection of Clerks to their Biſhops, and the payment of Tithes; concerning the adminiſtration of the Sacraments and divers other Points of Diſcipline, among which the following are more eſpecially remarkable, viz.

That

That the Altars ought to be made of Stone: That the Maſs cannot be celebrated with Beer or Water: That Divine Service ſhall not be perform'd in Churches till they be Conſecrated by the Biſhops: That none ſhall be bury'd in the Churches: That the Bells ſhall not be Rung during the Canon of the Maſs: And that the Chalices ſhall not be made of Wax nor Wood. Conſtitutions were alſo made about the time of Penance for divers Crimes.

The Council of London, held, A. D. 1102.

ARch-biſhop Lanfranc continu'd to celebrate divers other Councils in England in his Lifetime, the Canons of which are not as yet come to our Hands; but after his Death, much time paſs'd ere any could be conven'd, and St. Anſelm his Succeſſour in vain importun'd the Kings of England to that purpoſe, till at laſt he held a ſolemn Synod at London, A. D. 1102. the Conſtitutions of which were tranſmitted to us by Eadmer: The Arch-biſhop of York and twelve Biſhops of England aſſiſted in this Council, and made the following Conſtitutions. The Council of London, in 1102.

By the firſt, they condemn'd Simony, and depos'd ſeveral Abbots, who were convicted of that Crime.

The Second forbids Biſhops to exerciſe the Functions of Civil Magiſtrates, and enjoyns them to wear Habits ſuitable to their Profeſſion.

In the Third, it is prohibited to let out Arch-deaconries to Farm, or to confer them on any other Perſons than Deacons.

The Fourth revives the Conſtitutions about Celibacy.

In the Fifth, Clergy-men are forbidden to undertake the Management of ſecular Affairs, or to ſit as Judges in Criminal Cauſes, and to drink in Victualling Houſes or Places of publick Reſort: They are alſo enjoyn'd to wear Habits of one ſingle Colour, and to have their Crowns ſhav'd.

The Seventh declares, That Tithes ought only to be paid to the Churches.

The Eighth is a Prohibition to build new Chappels without the conſent of the Biſhops, and without raiſing a ſufficient Fund for the Maintenance of the Prieſt and Church.

In the Ninth, Abbots are prohibited to bear Arms, and enjoyn'd to reſide in their Monaſteries, with their Monks.

The Tenth prohibits that Monks ſhould adminiſter Penance without the conſent of their Abbot, and that Abbots ſhould impoſe it on other Perſons than thoſe, who are under their Tuition.

In the Eleventh, Monks are forbidden to hold Farms; to ſtand as God-fathers; to get Churches into their Poſſeſſion without the conſent of the Biſhops; or to take the Revenues of thoſe that are granted to them, without allowing a competent Maintenance for the Prieſts who ſerve in them, and a ſufficient Fund for the keeping them in repair.

The Twelfth declares the Promiſes of Marriage, made without Witneſſes, to be Null, if it be deny'd by one of the Parties.

The Thirteenth enjoyns the Cutting of the Hair ſhort, ſo that part of the Ears and the Eyes may be diſcover'd.

The Fourteenth prohibits Marriages, to the ſeventh Degree of Conſanguinity.

The Fifteenth forbids to bury the Dead without the Bounds of their Pariſh, unleſs the accuſtomed Duties be paid to the Curate; and to honour their Memory, without the Biſhop's Authority.

In the Sixteenth, it is prohibited to make Merchandiſe of Men, by ſelling them for Slaves as it was often practis'd. Laſtly, Sodomy is forbidden under very ſevere Penalties, and this Caſe is reſerv'd to the Cognizance of the Biſhops. Theſe Conſtitutions were confirm'd by the Authority of the See of Rome.

In the Year 1108. St. Anſelm held another Council at London, in which he made Ten very rigid Canons againſt Prieſts and Deacons, who were marry'd or liv'd incontinently. The Council of London, in 1108.

FEW Councils were call'd in Spain in this Century, by reaſon that part of that Kingdom was then under the Dominion of the Moors. However, King Alphonſus held a notable Aſſembly at Leon, A. D. 1012. in which the Biſhops drew up Seven Canons. The Council of Leon, in 1012.

The Firſt imports, That Eccleſiaſtical Affairs ſhall be firſt treated of, at the opening of the Synods.

The Second, That the Churches ſhall peaceably enjoy ſuch Revenues as are left them by laſt Wills and Teſtaments, and that the Clergy-men ſhall paſs Judgment as to their validity.

The Third, That Abbots, Abbeſſes, Monks and Nuns, ſhall be ſubject to the Juriſdiction of their Dioceſan Biſhop.

The Fourth ordains, That none ſhall ſeize on the Church-Revenues.

The Fifth, That the King's Officers ſhall Proſecute thoſe who have kill'd a Clergy-man.

The Sixth, That after having diſpatch'd Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, the Biſhops ſhall proceed to the Examination of thoſe of the Kingdom.

The Seventh, That none ſhall buy the Eſtate of a Vaſſal of the Church, and he who has done it, ſhall loſe the Mony he gave for the Purchaſe.

Theſe Decrees are follow'd with Forty others for the advantage of the State, ſome of which nevertheleſs have reference to the Preſervation of Eccleſiaſtical Revenues.

The Council of Coyaco, held, A. D. 1050.

The Council of Coyaco, in 1050.

SINCE the time of King Alfonſus, we do not find that any Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions were made in Spain, till the Reign of Ferdinand I. King of Caſtille, who being deſirous to revive the ancient Church-Diſcipline, which was for ſo long time diſus'd, call'd a Council in the Year 1050. at Coyaco, a Caſtle in the Dioceſs of Oviedo, where the Biſhop of that City aſſiſted, together with Eight other Biſhops of Spain; and the following Conſtitutions were ratify'd by them.

The Firſt ordains, That the Biſhops ſhall govern their Dioceſſes, and perform their Eccleſiaſtical Functions with their Clerks, according to the Order of the Church.

The Second, That the Abbots and Abbeſſes ſhall likewiſe govern their Monaſteries according to St. Benedict's Rule, and ſhall be ſubject to the Biſhops; and that they ſhall not admit any Religious Perſons of another Monaſtery, without the permiſſion of their Abbot or Abbeſs.

The Third, That the Churches and Clergy ſhall be under the Juriſdiction of the Biſhops, and not under that of Laicks: That the Churches ſhall not be divided, but that they ſhall be ſupply'd with Prieſts and Deacons, and furniſh'd with Service-Books and Ornaments; ſo that there may be no need of Wooden or Earthen Chalices: That the Habits of the Prieſts during the Celebration of the Maſs, be the Amict, the Albe, the Cincture, the Stole, the Chaſuble and the Maniple; and thoſe of a Deacon, the Amict, the Albe, the Cincture, the Stole, the Dalmatick and the Maniple: That the Altar be intirely made of Stone, and conſecrated by the Biſhop: That the Hoſt be altogether of pure Wheat and without any Defect: That the Wine be likewiſe Pure, and the Water Clean; the Altar decently adorn'd and cover'd with a white Linnen Cloth, with a Corporal above and below the Chalice: That the Prieſts and Deacons ſhall not bear Arms; but that they ſhall always have the Crown of their Head and Beards ſhav'd: That they ſhall not keep any Women in their Houſes; unleſs their Mother, Siſter, Aunt or Mother-in-Law: And that they ſhall teach Children the Creed and the Lord's Prayer.

The Fourth imports, That Perſons guilty of Murder, Adultery, or any other ſort of Uncleanneſs, ſhall be oblig'd to do Penance; and if they refuſe to ſubmit to it, they ſhall be ſeparated from the Church and the Communion.

The Fifth, that thoſe whom the Arch-deacon preſents for Ordination, in the Ember-Weeks, ſhall be well vers'd in the Pſalter, the Hymns, the Canticles, the Epiſtles, the Goſpels, and the Prayers: That the Prieſts ſhall not be preſent at Weddings to eat among the Gueſts, but only to give the Benediction: That the Clerks and Lay-men, who partake of the Funeral Banquets, eating the Bread of the Deceaſed, ſhall do ſome good Work for their Souls, and that they ſhall invite the Poor and the Sick to theſe Banquets.

The Sixth, That all the Chriſtians ſhall go to Church, on Saturday Evening and on Sunday Morning; that they ſhall aſſiſt on that day at the Maſſes and the whole divine Service; that they ſhall do no ſervile Work, nor undertake any Journeys except for Devotion ſake, or to bury the Dead and viſit the Sick, or to put in Execution ſome private Order receiv'd from the Prince, or to defend themſelves againſt the Saracens: And that the Chriſtians ſhall not keep any Correſpondence with the Jews.

The Seventh, That the Counts or chief Magiſtrates ſhall govern the People with Juſtice; ſhall admit upon a Tryal, only the Evidence of Eye or Ear Witneſſes; and ſhall ſeverely puniſh falſe Witneſſes.

The Eighth, That Juſtices ſhall be adminiſter'd in the Kingdoms of Leon, Gallicia, Aſturia and Portugal, according to Alphonſus's Law, and in Caſtille, according to thoſe of Sanchez.

The Ninth declares, That the Triennial Preſcription ſhall not take place, in reference to the Churches.

The Tenth, That he who has manur'd Land or cultivated a Vineyard, ſhall gather the Fruits with a Priviſo, till the Point be debated by the Parties concern'd about the Propriety.

The

The Eleventh imports, That all the Chriſtians ſhall Faſt on Fridays.

The Twelfth, That thoſe who have taken Sanctuary in the Churches; nay, even within thirty Paces of the Church, cannot be taken away from thence by Force.

The Thirteenth, That the Subjects of the Kingdom ſhall be obedient to their Prince, as they were to Alphonſus and Sanchez. Theſe Conſtitutions were made in the Preſence, and by the Authority of King Ferdinand and Queen Sanchia.

The Council of Elna in Rouſſillon, held, A. D. 1065.

The Council of Elna in Rouſſillon.

TO theſe Councils may be join'd an Aſſembly of Biſhops and Counts, held in the Year 1065. at Elna in the County of Rouſſillon, where the Epiſcopal See of Perpignan was formerly fix'd: Divers Conſtitutions were made in this Council, for the Preſervation of Church-Revenues, and more eſpecially that which was call'd, The Truce of God.

CHAP. XIV.

Obſervations on the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of the Eleventh Century.

The Study of Divinity in the Eleventh Century.

THE Study of Divinity, which was neglected in the preceeding Age, was reviv'd in this Century; and many Perſons made publick Lectures of it in the Schools of the Cathedral Churches or of the Monaſteries. In the beginning, they contented themſelves (according to the ancient Method) to relate the Explications of the Fathers on the Holy Scriptures, and Points of Doctrin were only treated of by the way, and when ſome remarkable Occaſion induc'd them to do it. But in the end of this Century, they began to make Divinity-Lectures on the Doctrinal Points of Religion; to propoſe divers Queſtions about the ſacred Myſteries; and to reſolve them by the Principles of Ratiocination and according to the Logical Method. This was the Original of Scholaſtick Divinity, which became in a little after, the principal and almoſt only Employment of thoſe, who ſtudied Matters of Religion.

Some of thoſe, who follow'd this Method, relying too much on their nice Ratiocinations, and departing from the plain manner of Diſcourſing us'd by the ancient Fathers of the Church, advanc'd ſome erroneous Propoſitions. In this Century, Roſcelin, who was Profeſſor of Divinity at Compiegne, ſtarted a Propoſition about the Holy Trinity, which gave offence to every Body; viz. That the three Divine Perſons were three Things; nevertheleſs 'tis not probable, that he deſign'd to maintain the Error of the Tritheites, or to admit three different Subſtances in God; and one may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that by thoſe three Things, he underſtood only three ſubſiſting and diſtinct Perſons, altho' of the ſame Nature.

But altho' no new * Hereſie ſprung up in this Age about the Myſteries of the Trinity and the Incarnation, yet there were divers in reſpect of the Sacraments and Church-Diſcipline. We have ſhewn that in the beginning of the Century, certain Hereticks were diſcover'd at Orleans in Flanders, and at Toulouſe, who deny'd the real Preſence of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt in the Euchariſt; the neceſſity of Baptiſm, and the efficacy of the Sacraments; who rejected the Worſhip of Saints and Croſſes, and the Uſe of Images; who condemn'd lawful Marriages, and cenſur'd the moſt part of the Ceremonies of the Church. Some time after, Berengarius divulg'd his Opinions about the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, which were condemn'd in divers Councils. The Controverſies that were debated in this Century, between the Greek and Latin Churches, have regard only to Points of Diſcipline, and particularly to the uſe of Unleavened Bread in the Communion. Lutheric Archbiſhop of Sens, is wrongfully accus'd of having deny'd the real Preſence of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt in the ſame Sacrament, in the beginning of this Century; and 'tis falſly ſuppos'd that he was reprov'd by King Robert upon that account: For Helguad does not ſay, that he embrac'd that Opinion, but only that he was wont to make uſe of the Euchariſt, to try whether Perſons were unworthy or not, by ſaying to thoſe to whom he was ready to adminiſter that Sacrament, If you are worthy to receive it, draw near and take it: And that King Robert found great Fault with this Expreſſion, and reprov'd him very ſharply for it; but that Leutheric turn'd the Reprimand to his own Advantage.

* We have not thought fit in this Tranſlation, any where to omit the Words of the Author; who being of the Church of Rome, relates many things as Hereſies, which the Proteſtants eſteem not ſo: Wherefore we doubt not but the diſcreet Proteſtant Reader will always uſe his own Judgment.

The

Of the Rights of the Popes and of the Church of Rome.

The Quarrels that broke forth between the Popes and the Emperors, caus'd very great Confuſions and Diſorders in the Church and the Weſtern Empire. During theſe Commotions, the Popes took an occaſion to eſtabliſh their Temporal Sovereignty in Rome, and endeavour'd to make themſelves independent of the Emperors. Gregory VII. extended his Pretenſions yet farther, and us'd his utmoſt Efforts to perſuade the World, that he was rightful Sovereign of the whole Univerſe, as well in Civil as in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs: He was the firſt of the Popes, who attempted directly to diſpoſſeſs the Emperor and the Kings of their Dominions, and imagin'd that he had a right to diſpoſe of them in favour of whomſoever he ſhould think fit to advance to that Dignity. As for the Spiritual Supremacy, he carry'd it beyond its due Bounds, and abrogated almoſt the whole Authority of the Biſhops, and the Liberties of particular Churches. The great number of Legats of the See of Rome ſent abroad on all ſides, and the Power which they aſſum'd to themſelves, did not a little contribute to ruine the Authority of the Ordinaries, and was extremely chargeable to the reſpective Churches: The Dignity of the Cardinals was augmented to the detriment of that of the Biſhops, and they began to have the greateſt ſhare in the Election of Popes, and in the Management of the Affairs of the Church: The Arch-biſhops were oblig'd to receive the Pall, before they were permitted to exerciſe the Functions of their Order; and to conclude, the Court of Rome, under divers Pretences, got the Cognizance and Determination of all manner of Eccleſiaſtical Affairs.

Divers Points of Diſcipline concerning the Clergy.

The Simoniacal Practices, Marriage and Concubinage of Clergy-men were expreſs'd, and their Career at laſt quite ſtopt by the means of a vaſt number of Decrees: Some to palliate Simony, thought fit to diſtinguiſh the Temporal Revenue of Benefices from the Spiritual; and maintain'd, That in giving Mony for a Benefice, they did not commit Simony, becauſe they purchas'd only the Temporalities. This gave occaſion to determine, That it was Simony, to buy the Revenues annexed to Church Livings, the Functions of which were Spiritual: The famous diſtinction of three ſorts of Simony, ab officio, a manu, a lingua was in vogue at that time: St. Gregory was the firſt who made the Remark, and it was reviv'd by Gregory VII. The Laicks who had Tithes in their Poſſeſſion, were mov'd by a ſcruple of Conſcience to reſtore them; but they often beſtow'd them on Monks, and apply'd them to the Founding of Monaſteries: The Biſhops oppos'd this Practice, and ordain'd that they cannot be given to Monaſteries without the permiſſion of the Dioceſans and of the Pope: However, the Monks did not forbear to retain thoſe that they had in their Poſſeſſion, nor even to accept of others, when offer'd to them. The Elections of Biſhops were ſtill in uſe; but the Princes often nominated them, or caus'd thoſe to be choſen whom they thought fit to promote, and ſometimes the Popes took care to provide them, or ordain'd thoſe who were elected, when the Metropolitan refus'd to do it.

The Emperors and Kings ſtill had the Power of granting the Inveſtiture of Biſhopricks and Abbeys; and this Right was not conteſted with them till about the end of the Eleventh Century: The Plurality of Benefices began to be in uſe, and was condemn'd by divers Conſtitutions: A great number of Monks were promoted to the Epiſcopal Dignity, and ſome Biſhops left their Biſhopricks to retire to Monaſteries, after having obtain'd a Licence from the Pope. Many Biſhopricks were made Metropolitan Sees, and many others were newly erected. The Arch-biſhop of Lyons was inſtituted Primat of France: In the end of the Century, the Biſhopricks of Arras and Cambray were ſeparated, and the Epiſcopal Sees of Gaſcogne, which had lain for a long time vacant, were fill'd up again. The Sons of the Clergy were declar'd unworthy to be admitted into Holy Orders; but this Decree was not generally receiv'd, nor without oppoſition: For in many Places, the admiſſion into the Monaſtick State, or into the Order of Regular Canons, remov'd that Obſtacle. A great number of Churches, Abbies and Monaſteries were then founded, and almoſt all the old Churches were demoliſh'd, to build new ones.

The Diſcipline of the Church, relating to Penance, was not ſo ſtrict nor ſo ſevere as in the preceding Century; for the Pilgrimages, the Abſolutions fetch'd from Rome, the Redemptions, the Diſciplining Whip and the Cruſades, contributed much to the Aboliſhing of that Injunction: Private Confeſſion was more eſpecially recommended. The Sentences of Excommunication were ſo frequent, that they became contemptible; and they were extended not only to Perſons actually excommunicated, but alſo to thoſe who convers'd or kept correſpondence with them, even to the third Generation; a Practice which can ſcarce be met with in any other Age of the Church. The ancient ſeverity of the Canons, which ordain, That Clergy-men guilty of notorious Offences, more eſpecially of Simony, ſhould be ſuſpended from their Office for ever, was no longer obſerv'd; but they were generally reeſtabliſh'd in the Functions of their Orders, and reſtor'd to their former Rights, by the means of certain particular Ceremonies.

Remarks on the Scourging, Diſcipline and Faſts.

The uſe of the Diſciplining Whip, unknown to all Antiquity, began in the end of this Century, having had its Oppoſers and Maintainers; the Cuſtom of doing Penance for another, was likewiſe introduc'd at that time. The Faſts on the four Ember-Weeks were ſtrictly obſerv'd; but the Ember-Week of the Summer-Quarter, was not as yet fix'd; for ſome took it to be the ſecond Week of the Month of June, and others referr'd it to the Week immediately mediately following Whit-Sunday. Divers Councils ordain'd abstinence from Flesh on Saturdays, and from Flesh and Wine on Fridays: In the former Ages of the Church, 'twas customary to fast on Fridays and Saturdays, till the Hour of † None: The Church of Rome was wont to keep a Fast on Saturdays instead of Wednesdays: The Churches of France for a long time, observ'd the Fasts of Wednesday and Friday, but that Custom was abolish'd; neither was any regard had even to abstinence on those days. A Constitution was made to that purpose in this Century, for Friday and Saturday, although it met with some Opposition.

† One of the Canonical Hours.

Observations on the Mass.

The Priests were forbidden to celebrate above on Mass in a day, unless in case of necessity, or when 'twas requisite that one should be said for a deceased Person; for then they were allowed to say such a Mass, and that of the day: Some sorts of Penance were impos'd on Priests who let fall an Host through Carelesness: In some Churches, 'twas customary to give a consecrated Host to the Priests on the day of their Ordination, with which they communicated during forty days. This Question was debated at that time, viz. Whether it were lawful for a Priest to celebrate Mass, without being attended with divers Assistants, and when he officiated in that manner, whether he ought to say, Dominus vobiscum? All the Faithful were obliged to receive the Holy Communion at Easter, and it was still usually administer'd in all the Churches, under both Kinds: However, in some, the consecrated Bread was steept in the Wine; and perhaps the Canon of the Council of Clermont, which ordains, That both the Species should be receiv'd separately, was made against that Custom.

The general Commemoration of all the Dead, the next day after the Festival of all Saints, was instituted in the end of this Century: Odilo Abbot of Cluny, enjoyn'd it to his whole Order; and this Custom was introduc'd into the Church a little while after. It was ordain'd in the Council of Clermont, That the Office of the Virgin Mary should be said every Saturday, and there arose Disputes about the Festival of her Annunciation, viz. whether it ought to be celebrated on March 25. or on December 18. but it was usually referr'd to the former; Some other Questions of less importance were likewise started, and hotly debated, particularly, That about the Apostolical Dignity, attributed to St. Martial. The Benedictins of the Abbey of Fleury, and those of Mount Cassin, had a long Contest for the Body of St. Benedict, the Founder of their Order, and the Monks of St. Dennis and of St. Emmeran at Ratisbon, in like manner contended for that of St. Dionysius or Dennis the Areopagite.

Observations on the Monastick Life.

The Monastick State, receiv'd very considerable Accessions and advantages in the Eleventh Century. The Congregation of Cluny was much augmented by a vast number of Monasteries newly founded, and by the great Revenues, with which it was endow'd; but the encrease of Riches occasion'd Remisness of Discipline; caus'd Ambition to be predominant, and immers'd the Monks in Secular Affairs. A serious reflection on these Irregularities induc'd many Persons to embrace a more austere sort of Monastick Life, and more conformable to that which is enjoyn'd in St. Benedict's Rule, and gave occasion to the founding of several new Orders, who all made profession to follow the same Rule made by St. Benedict; altho' they had their peculiar Customs. Thus St. Romuald founded that of the Camaldolites in Italy, in the beginning of the Century. He became a Monk, A. C. 971. at the Age of 20 Years in the Abbey of Classe in the Diocess of Ravenna, but perceiving the Disorders in which his Monastery was involv'd, and considering that the engagement of the Monks in Secular Affairs, was the cause of their Irregularity, he put himself under the tuition of a certain Reverend Hermit nam'd Marinus, who resided in the Territories of Venice, and embrac'd the Hermetick Life, which he re-establish'd in the Western Countries. Thir Institution was not to live alone, as the ancient Hermits, but to dwell together in the same place separated from other Men, and in distinct Cells, under the Government of the same Superiour, and observing the same Rule: These sorts of Monasteries were anciently call'd Laur, and St. Romuald founded a very great number of them in Italy: One of the most famous, was that which was built on Mount Apennin near Arezzo, in a Place which was given them by a certain Person nam'd Mandol, from whence the Order took the name of Camaldoli: St. Romuald liv'd 100 Years after he had taken upon him the Vows of Religion, and saw his Order in a flourishing Condition. Peter Damian in like manner instituted a Congregation of Hermits of the same kind: These Hermits practis'd great Austerities, and are reputed to have done very extraordinary things. John Gualbert of Florence having likewise quitted his Monastery to lead a more regular course of Life, retir'd to Vall'Ombrosa, and their laid the Foundation of a new Religious Society.

The Order of Camaldolites.

The Order of the Carthusians was instituted, A. D. 1086. by Bruno, a Native of Colen, and Canon of Rheims, who repair'd, with Six of his Companions to the Solitude of Chartreuse, which was assign'd to them by Hugh Bishop of Grenable. Some time after, two Gentlemen of Vienne nam'd Gaston and Girond, having devoted their Persons and Estates to the relief of those who being seiz'd with the Distemper commonly call'd St. Antony's Fire, came to implore the Intercession of St. Antony at Vienne, where the Body of that Saint was translated from Constantinople by Jocelin D'Albon, in the time of King Lothaire the Son of Lewes D'Outremer, gave occasion to the Institution of the Order of St. Antony, which was compos'd at first of certain Lay-men, and afterward of Monks, who made Profession of St. Au-

St. Auguſtin's Rule. In the Year, 1098. Robert Abbot of Moleſme retired to Ciſteaux in the Dioceſs of Challon ſur Saone, with 21 Monks of his Convent, to practiſe St. Benedict's Rule with greater ſtrictneſs: His deſign being approv'd by Gautier Biſhop of Challon, and by Hugh Arch-biſhop of Lyons, he built a Monaſtery in that Place, which was endow'd by Eudes Duke of Burgundy; but he had not long the Government of it, for Pope Paſchal II. enjoin'd him, the next Year, to return to Moleſme. The other Monks continu'd at Ciſteaux, under the tuition of Alberic, and this Reform was approv'd by the Pope, A. D. 1100. Stephen Hardingue, who ſucceeded Alberic in 1109. brought this Order to its full perfection, inſomuch, that it became very numerous and obtain'd great Reputation. About the ſame time Robert D'Arviſelles Arch-deacon of Rennes, having receiv'd a Miſſion from Pope Urban II. to Preach to the People, by that means gather'd together a great multitude of Perſons of both Sexes, and caus'd many Cells to be built for them in the Foreſt of Frontrevrault, at the diſtance of three Leagues from Saumur. Afterward he ſhut up the Nuns in a ſeparate Apartment, and in the Year of our Lord, 1100. made a great Monaſtery, which was govern'd by him till the end of his Life; but before he died, he caus'd Petronilla de Chemille to be choſen Abbeſs, A. D. 1115. and conferr'd on her, both the Government of the Nuns, and of the Monks of that Order.

Of the regular Canons.

The regular manner of living in common, peculiar to the Canons, which was inſtituted in the Ninth Century, was now almoſt every where aboliſh'd; nevertheleſs ſome Biſhops reviv'd it in their Chapters, and it was re-eſtabliſh'd in the end of the Century in another form: For then certain Religious Houſes were founded, in which Clergy-men, who were deſirous to lead a more regular courſe of Life, retir'd thither, to live in common, without having any manner of private Property. Theſe laſt Canons were different from thoſe of the Ninth Century. 1. In regard that the former had Benefices annex'd to Churches, and were oblig'd to officiate in them; whereas there were many among theſe who had not any peculiar Church-Living. 2. Becauſe the former were wont to live in common, of the Church-Revenues, but they might alſo retain thoſe of their private Patrimony; whereas theſe were oblig'd to renounce them, as well as the Monks. 3. Upon account that the others were at liberty to quit that courſe of Life; whereas theſe laſt profeſs'd to live always after the ſame manner, and they were poſitively forbidden to do otherwiſe. The latter Canons liv'd in common, under an Abbot, Superiour or Provoſt, and made profeſſion, as the Monks, of Poverty, Conſtancy and Obedience; altho' they were not as yet bound by an expreſs Vow; neither were they only employ'd in ſerving the Church or Monaſtery, where they reſided, but they were alſo taken ſometimes out of their Houſe, to receive a Cure, and to exerciſe other Eccleſiaſtical Functions. Ives afterwards Biſhop of Chartres, eſtabliſh'd this ſtrict Reform in the Monaſtery of St. Quentin, A. D. 1078. Afterward that Religious Houſe ſupply'd France, with many other Convents of regular Canons, and in the beginning of the following Century, the Congregations of St. Rufus and St. Norbert were inſtituted; inſomuch, that the Order of regular Canons, became very numerous, and extended very far within a ſhort ſpace of Time.

THE PREFACE.

THis Tenth Volume contains the entire Hiſtory of the Twelfth Century, tho' that be larger than the Preceeding, by reaſon it contains a greater Number of Authors than the Ages before it, ſome whereof may be Compared to the greateſt Lights of the Church. We here find the Empire and the Church at Difference; The Church of Rome diſturb'd by Obſtinate Schiſms; The Popes at War with the Emperours; The Kings and Biſhops in Diſpute about their Rights. The Dignity of the Sacraments, and the External Worſhip in Religion, as alſo its Principles are attack'd by Monſtrous and Ridiculous Hereſies. Scholaſtick Divinity becomes the common Study, and the Body of the Canon Law, ſuch as it is at Preſent, was form'd and eſtabliſh'd in this Twelfth Century. The Church is ſtock'd with abundance of Monaſtick and Regular Orders. The Immunities and Exemptions of the Revenues of the Church and Eccleſiaſtical Perſons are vigorouſly ſupported by the Biſhops, and maintained by the Decrees of Councils. And Finally, the Manners of Eccleſiaſticks and the External Ceremonies of the Church are reform'd in this Age by ſeveral very uſeful Regulations. This is what the Reader will find in the Hiſtory and Extracts of the Authors and Councils of the Twelfth Century, which we Publiſh in this Volume.

AN

AN Hiſtorical Account OF THE CONTROVERSIES IN RELIGION AND OF OTHER Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, IN THE Twelfth CENTURY.

CHAP. I.

Of the Life and Writings of Ivo, Biſhop of Chartres.

IVO, Biſhop of Chartres, (though Born in the XIth. Age of the Church,) not Dying till the Year 1115. ſhall begin our Catalogue of the Writers of this XIIth. Century; and his Life and Works have ſo many things remarkable in them, as to deſerve a Chapter by themſelves.

He was the Son of Hugo de Altylo and Helemburga, and was Born at Beauvais; where, he alſo began his Studies; but, removing afterwards to the Abbey of Bec, he applied himſelf to Divinity under Lanfranc, and chiefly to the Reading and Studying of the Eccleſiaſtical Canons. Guy Biſhop of Beauvais made choice of him for Abbot of the Monaſtery of St. Quentin, which he had Founded in the Year 1078. He gave all his Eſtate to this Foundation; wherein, by his Care and good Government, Religion and Learning did mightily flouriſh, and by ſome of the Members of this, were ſeveral other Monaſteries of Canons Regulars Erected in divers parts of France.

Geofry, at this time Biſhop of Chartres, was ſummon'd to anſwer before Pope Gregory VII. to the Charge of Simony, laid againſt him, which, nevertheleſs there appear'd not ſufficient Evidence at that time to make out; but being afterwards Cited before Urban II. he was found guilty of divers Crimes and depoſed by that Pope from his Biſhoprick. The Clergy and People of Chartres Elected Ivo into his place, and preſented him to King Philip, who gave him the Inveſtiture:

ſtiture: but Richerius, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, being enrag'd that Geofry was turn'd out, without acquainting him with it, refuſes to Conſecrate Ivo, though the Clergy and People of Chartres demanded it with much earneſtneſs. The Arch-Biſhop perſiſting in his Temper, Ivo Addreſſes himſelf to Pope Urban II. and from him receives his Conſecration, with an expreſs to Richerius to acknowledge him, and by vertue of it was ſoon put in poſſeſſion of the Biſhoprick of Chartres, and Geofry obliged to retire to that part of the Dioceſs which lay in Normandy, which for ſome time after he retain'd by the favour and intereſt of the Duke of that Province. Richerius, in revenge of the affront put upon him, and to aſſert his own rights and privileges, Summons Ivo before the Council he was to hold at Stampæ, to anſwer for his having ſeiz'd himſelf of the Church of Chartres, while Geofry was yet living: Ivo not thinking it ſafe for him to appear there, the Arch-Biſhop, together with the Biſhops of Paris, Meaux and Troyes, declar'd him guilty of High-Treaſon againſt the King and the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, in having gotten himſelf Conſecrated by the Pope, and reſolv'd to reſettle Geofry in his Dioceſs, but Ivo appealing once more to Rome, the Pope Interdicts Richerius the uſe of the Pallium, in caſe he ſhou'd any longer oppoſe the Eſtabliſhment of Ivo; upon which, Geofry was at laſt intirely driven out of the whole Dioceſs. The great zeal Ivo always expreſs'd for maintaining Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, the obſervation of the Canons and purity of Manners, and his undaunted Courage in aſſerting the liberties of the Church, in oppoſing all Innovations and Irregularities, and in diſcouraging and diſcountenancing all remiſneſs and neglect of duties, as it engag'd him in many differences with others, and involv'd him in much trouble, ſo it gave occaſion to the World to perceive and admire his great Learning and Knowledge, and his mighty Wiſdom and Conſtancy. He died at Chartres, the 23d. of December, in the Year 1115.

His Works.

THere are yet extant, 287. Letters written by Ivo Biſhop of Chartres, which, being full of remarkable Obſervations concerning the Diſcipline and Hiſtory of the Church, and containing many excellent Leſſons of Morality, judicious determinations of ſeveral Caſes of Conſcience and Law-Queſtions, propoſed to him by others, are of no ſmall value, and it will be well worth our while to give the Reader a ſhort and exact abridgement of each of them.

The two Firſt in the Collection, are from Pope Urban II. one to the Clergy and People of Chartres, the other to Richerius Biſhop of Sens, in which, he advertiſes them of his having Conſecrated Ivo Biſhop of Chartres: at the end of them follows the Pope's advice to him after his Conſecration.

The IIId. Letter is from Ivo to the Pope regreting his having been by him drawn from his ſolitudes and retirement to be made a Biſhop, and recommending to him the Biſhop of Beauvais.

In the IVth. he admoniſhes Bernard, Abbot of Marmoutier, not to entertain any Monks of his Dioceſs, and in particular, demands of him one Walter, who had been Abbot of Bonneval, and quitted his Station for that retirement.

The Vth. Letter to Adela Counteſs of Chartres, ſeverely reprimands her for countenancing the Marriage of her Kinſwoman Adelaida with William, and adviſes that they forbear having Carnal knowledge of each other, till the matter be determined in Conſiſtory.

The VIth. is a Letter of Thanks for a Preſent he had receiv'd from Girard; (ſuppos'd to have been a Regular Canon of St. Quentin at Beauvais, and afterwards Abbot of the Monaſtery of St. Loup in Troyes) He gives him alſo ſome account of the contrivances of his Enemies againſt him, and invites him to his Houſe. He tells him in the Concluſion, that Geofry was forc'd to quit the whole Biſhoprick, except a ſmall corner of it, which he yet held by the Duke of Normandy's aſſiſtance.

The VIIth. is directed to Roſcelin, a Prieſt of the Church of Compiegne, who had been Condemn'd of Hereſie, in the Council of Soiſſons, and forc'd to a recantation, which he afterwards abjuring, was turn'd out of his Benefice, and not knowing, in that condition, where to find a retreat, had Addreſs'd himſelf for relief to Ivo Biſhop of Chartres. Our Prelate anſwers, that he would willingly grant his requeſt and afford him entertainment, were he ſure he had ſincerely renounc'd his former errors; but having reaſon to believe the contrary of him, and fearing the People of Chartres would not endure him among them, muſt refuſe what he asks of him; that the beſt advice he can give him is to bear his condition patiently, and to reſolve on a publick and authentick abjuration of his errors in Religion.

The VIIIth. Letter of Ivo's is to Richerius Arch-Biſhop of Sens, who had ſeverely inveigh'd againſt him, in a Letter, by which he Cited him to appear and anſwer before him, for having uſurp'd the See from Geofry. Ivo, in this Letter, remonſtrates to him, how injuriouſly he dealt, and what inconveniencies he would draw upon himſelf, by undertaking the cauſe of one who had been found guilty of the moſt notorious Crimes, and ſtood condemn'd by the Holy See: that for his part, he was ſo far from aſpiring to the Biſhoprick of Chartres, that after the Clergy of that Church had Elected him and forc'd him to take Inveſtiture of the King, he had ſtill declin'd entring upon that Charge, till he was fully certified of the depoſition of Geofry, and that it was the Pope's pleaſure he ſhould ſucceed him: that upon the Arch-Biſhop's refuſing to admit admit him, he had recourse to the Pope, who oblig'd him to accept the Bishoprick and Consecrated him himself. He reminds the Arch-Bishop, likewise that the Pope had written to him, and commanded him to receive him as his Suffragan, that he had ever since endeavour'd to behave himself according to the respect and obedience due from him to his Metropolitan: he adds, that he is willing to attend the Council at Stampe, if a safe Conduct may be granted him, and that Stephen Earl of Chartres should be ready there, on the King's side, to answer to all that shou'd be objected against him, without prejudice to the Authority of the Holy See, before which this matter might one day be brought.

The IXth. Letter is Address'd to Philip King of France, and gives His Majesty an account how Ivo had Accommodated the differences between the Monks of Bec and those of Molesme, with which the King was not satisfied.

In the Xth. he gives several Instructions to the Nuns of St. Avita near Châteaudun, and advises them in particular, to take care of their Reputations.

In the XIth. he Congratulates Gonthier, upon his return to his duty, orders him to retire into the Church of Sancta Maria de Gournay, where he should have the Charge of some Monks, and exhorts him to live there peaceably and orderly.

In the XIIth. he consults Pope Urban, about an odd practice of some in his Dioces, who would live by the Altar, but not serve at the Altar, and offer'd Money to him for Altars, as they were wont to purchase them of his predecessors, under the title of Personnats: Of this matter, Ivo intreats the Pope's Opinion, and his Advice how to deal with these Traders. He informs him also, that the Arch-Bishop of Sens, assisted by the Bishops of Paris, Meaux, and Troyes, had pronounc'd his Consecration void, and intended to reinstate Geofry. He appeals therefore to the Holy See, and judges it necessary that the Pope write to them, and oblige them either to give him no farther disturbance, or else to appear at Rome, and give an account of their proceedings. Lastly, he delivers his Opinion, that 'twould be convenient the Pope should send a Legate into France, to endeavour the Reformation of the Churches: and prays the Pope, that if any persons banish'd out of his Dioces for notorious Crimes, shall repair to Rome, he will not decree any thing concerning them, till he have fully inform'd himself of the whole merits of their causes.

The XIIIth. and XIVth. Letters are to the Arch-Bishop Richerius, and the other Bishops invited by the King to his Marriage with Bertrade, whom Ivo disswades from going to Court, and exhorts to do all they can to hinder that Marriage.

In the XVth. he freely declares his mind to King Philip, that he neither can nor will assist at his intended Marriage with Bertrade, till his former Marriage be pronounced void in a General Council.

The XVIth. is an Answer to Walter Bishop of Meaux's, upon this Question, If it be lawful for a Man to Marry his Concubine? He tells him that some Laws have forbid it, and others have permitted it, and leaves the whole matter to the discretion and judgment of the Bishops; after which, he exhorts the Bishop of Meaux, not to approve of King Philip's Marriage with Bertrade.

The XVIIth. to the regular Canons of St. Quentin, at Beauvais, does with a great deal of Eloquence set forth the troubles he is involved in, since he was made a Bishop; admonishes them to continue to observe the Rules of their Institution and to make choice of a Superiour in his place.

In the XVIIIth. Ivo highly blames Cardinal Roger, the Pope's Legate, for being inclin'd to Absolve Simon Count of Nioste, whom he had Excommunicated for Adultery. This Count, after the Death of his Wife, Marries one with whom he had formerly been too familiar, and now demands Absolution; Ivo absolutely refuses it, and sends him to the Pope with a Letter, setting forth the whole affair: the Count makes his suit to Roger, hoping to meet with more gentle treatment from him than at the Pope's hands; Ivo hereupon declares to the Cardinal that he cannot absolve him, nor will he admit him to the Communion, till he has an answer from the Pope, either in writing or by word of mouth.

The XIXth. Letter is written to William, Abbot of Fécamp, who had compar'd him to St. John and to Elijah, for his boldness, in declaring his dislike of the King's Marriage. Ivo acquaints him how great inconveniences that liberty of his had brought him under, and desires the Prayers of him and his Monks. He cannot grant the Abbot's requeſt in behalf of a Canon Regular, who would have leave to quit his Rule and enter into the Monastery of Fécamp; he tells him, if he knew the Man, he would not be concern'd for him, that he is a proud and idle Fellow, that for ten years together he had never as he ought observ'd his week for reading Mass, but was at any time for reading out of his turn, when there was an occasion of serving his vanity by it; however, if the Canons his Brethren, would consent he should leave their House, he would not hinder him, and gave him full leave to ask them.

Ivo being taken into Custody for opposing King Philip's Marriage, the Clergy and people of Chartres threatned to assault the Count, unless he would release him: to them, therefore Ivo writes, disswading them from all thoughts of taking Arms, which would be a means not of procuring his liberty, but prolonging his Confinement, that it would moreover offend the Divine Majesty, that it was not fit for a Bishop to recover his Rights by violence, that he was resolv'd rather to Dye, than that any Man should lose his Life to rescue him, that that would much sooner be obtain'd by their Prayers, which was all he had to beg or expect from them. These are the Contents of his XXth. Letter.

In the XXIſt. he pays his thanks to Hoel Biſhop of Mans, for the Prayers he had put up to God for his deliverance. He deſires of him the Relicks of St. Julian's Body, which had been lately tranſlated to Mans.

The XXIId. to King Philip, acknowledges that having been by that Prince advanc'd to a Biſhoprick, he owes to him under God the higheſt reſpect and obſervance: but that having had the misfortune to fall under his diſpleaſure, for offering him as a true and faithful Servant neceſſary and wholſome advice, he had been ill treated, and the goods of his Biſhoprick embezled by his Enemies; that therefore he pray'd His Majeſty to excuſe his not coming to Court, and to allow him ſome time to breath, and to put his affairs into order again. He hopes God will one day convince him by experience of the truth of that Maxim of Solomon's, that the wounds and harſh uſage of our friends who love us, are to be prefer'd before the kiſſes of our enemies and flatterers. He concludes with aſſuring the King, that he is ready to anſwer his accuſers, when he may know what they have to object againſt him, and that he will defend himſelf in the Church, if his crimes fall under the Eccleſiaſtical Cognizance, or before His Majeſty's Council, if he be charg'd with any againſt the State.

The XXIIId. is to Guy, Chief Maſter of the King's Houſhold, who had interceded with the King, in favour of Ivo: he returns him thanks for his good offices, and aſſures him 'tis impoſſible they ſhould come to any good terms, till the King have totally quitted Bertrade; that he had ſeen a Letter of Pope Urban's to all the Prelates of the Kingdom, Commanding them to Excommunicate him in caſe he continued to live with her, and that this Letter had been long ſince publiſh'd, if he had not conceal'd it out of the true love he bore His Majeſty, and his unwillingneſs that his own people ſhould riſe up againſt him.

The XXIVth. is to Hugh, Arch-Biſhop of Lyons; he acquaints him how great joy it was to him to hear that Pope Urban had appointed him Legate of France, in which employment he had ſo well acquitted himſelf under Gregory the VIIth. but, that he was now not a little griev'd to underſtand he had by the advice of ſeveral of his friends refus'd to accept of that Office again, by reaſon of the too great buſineſs which muſt lie upon him, at the preſent juncture of affairs, while the Church labour'd under ſuch troubles as would not eaſily admit of being compos'd. Ivo tells him, he had been ill counſel'd, and ought not to be ſway'd by his friends perſwaſions, that though in Italy a ſecond Ahab was ariſen, and France had another Jezabel, who endeavour'd to overthrow the Altars and kill the Prophets of the Lord, yet he ſhould remember the ſaying of Elijah, that God had yet left him Seven Thouſand Servants, who had not bow'd their knees to Baal: that though their Herodias ſhould requeſt the Head of John, and Herod ſhould grant her what ſhe ask'd, yet John ſhould not be afraid to tell him, 'tis not lawful for thee to put away thy own Wife, and to Marry another Man's Wife or Concubine. Theſe and the like inſtances are urged by Ivo, to induce Hugh to take upon him the Legatine Authority, which he hopes he will ſoon acquaint him he has yielded to, and deſires to know where he may meet him about the beginning of Lent.

His XXVth. Letter is addreſs'd to Pope Urban; and lays before him an account of the troubles and difficulties he was daily oblig'd to encounter with, which made him often reſolve to quit his Biſhoprick. He then intreats the Pope not to hearken to what ſhould be alledg'd, in his own defence, by one of the Clergy of Chartres, who had been degraded for Simony, Money-Coining, and other irregularities.

The XXVIth. is to Walter, Abbot of St. Maur des Foſſez, who had thoughts of leaving his Monaſtery, by reaſon of the great corruptions and diſorders amongſt his Monks. Ivo diſſwades him from purſuing that reſolution, if he have yet any hopes of doing good upon and reforming but ſome of them; but in caſe they continue all incorrigible, thinks he may leave them.

The XXVIIth. is to Eudes, Chief-Juſtice of Normandy, who had ask'd his Opinion, how he ought to proceed againſt a certain Biſhop; who, being formerly accus'd of Simony and other miſdemeanours, had gotten himſelf Conſecrated before the day appointed for his tryal. Ivo adviſes this Magiſtrate not to regard him as a Biſhop, but to treat him as an Heretick and an Intruder; and that if he could not have Juſtice done upon him by the Biſhops of the Province, he ſhould Cite both him and his Judges before the See of Rome, without whoſe determination ſuch cauſes were ſeldom brought to a due iſſue.

The XXVIIIth. to King Philip, carries his excuſes for not appearing with his Soldiers at Pontoiſe, or Chaumont, according to the King's Orders. 1. Becauſe Pope Urban having forbid the King to keep Company with Bertrade, under pain of Excommunication, he could not have forborn publickly admoniſhing his Majeſty of it. 2. Becauſe moſt of the Guards and Militia of his Dioceſs lying under Excommunication for being concern'd in a Rebellion, he could not, till they had undergone a Penance, receive them into the Communion of the Church, nor ſend them againſt the Enemy while they were under her Cenſures; and 3. becauſe he thought it not ſafe for him to be at Court, where he was hated by the Sex that ſeldom pardon even their beſt friends.

The XXIXth. Severely reprimands Roger the Prieſt, for his ill conduct and behaviour.

The XXXth. contains Ivo's advice to Fulk, Biſhop of Beauvais, not to perſiſt in oppoſing Hugh the Pope's Legate, and communicates to him the Letters ſent him by the Pope, relating to King Philip's affair.

By the XXXIſt. to the ſame Prelate, he reſigns up into his hands the Provoſtſhip of St. Quentin in Beauvais, conjuring him to ſee that his Succeſſor be choſen by the majority and ſoundeſt part

part of that ſociety. And in the XXXIId. he ſends his advice to them, to Elect a fit and able perſon for their Governour.

The XXXIIId. and XXXIVth. Letters have nothing remarkable in them.

The XXXVth. is addreſs'd to Richerius, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, and the other Prelates aſſembled with him at Rheims, and ſets forth his reaſons why he would not obey their Citation of him before that Council: 1. that he was Cited by Biſhops of other Provinces, who had no power to be his Judges. 2. Becauſe they intended to try him out of the juriſdiction of the Province he was under; and 3. becauſe the accuſations laid againſt him proceeded only from their malice and hatred of his perſon: that therefore he appeal'd to the Holy See of Rome, where he ſhould be ſure to meet with the favour allow'd to all others in his condition, of being heard by the Pope himſelf, or by his Vicars: that he did take this method to avoid a Tryal, being able enough to defend himſelf againſt their charge of Perjury, by bringing proof that he had not ſo much as taken any Oath, but that he did it to prevent his giving an ill example to others and expoſing himſelf to apparent hazard of his Life, ſince he could not by any means obtain the King's Paſs-port: that beſides all this, he well enough foreſaw he ſhould not be allow'd liberty of ſpeech in their Aſſembly, ſince they had already accus'd him of diſloyalty to the King, and of being an Enemy to His Majeſty, only for having had the courage to tell him his duty, as he thought all of them in Conſcience bound to do; whereas His Majeſty's real Enemies were thoſe who diſſembled with him, and dar'd not ſearch his wounds with fire and ſword; that the King might deal with him as His Majeſty ſhould think fit, but that he was firmly reſolv'd never to approve of his Marriage.

In the XXXVIth. Letter to the Biſhop of Beauvais, he ſhews him the reaſons he had to complain of him; particularly, that having requeſted him to ſend a Canon Regular to be prefer'd to a vacancy in his Dioceſs, that Biſhop would have had him put in a Monk, contrary to the conſtitutions of that Church ordained by the Pope. Hereupon, Ivo takes occaſion to ſhew the dignity of the Regular Clergy above that of the Monks, and cites, to this purpoſe, a paſſage of St. Auſtin, wherein that Father ſays, he ſcarce ever knew a Monk prove a good Clerk, and ſome places out of St. Jerom, preferring the Clergy before the Monks. He proteſts however, that he does not intend all this to reproach and diſparage the Monaſtick way of living, but to put them in mind that they ought to continue truly Monks, and be content to lead a retir'd life. "We praiſe their Inſtitution, (ſays he) and believe their ſtate to be as perfectly hap-"py as any on Earth, while they confine themſelves within the bounds aſſign'd them by their "Founders; but we think them fitter to be Subjects than Governours, and would have them "be humble and obedient, not proud and aſpiring.

In the XXXVIIth. he exhorts a certain Canon Regular to go on as he had begun, in all due ſubmiſſion to his Superiours, and in the practice of vertue and Religion.

The XXXVIIIth. is a Letter of thanks to the Biſhop of Winchester, for a Chalice he had made him a Preſent of, to hold the Holy Chriſm.

In the XXXIXth, he acquaints St. Anſelm, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, That he had ſhewn what kindneſs he could to the Monks of Bec, in taking their part againſt thoſe of Moleſme, and that he had long ſince done them Juſtice, in their demands upon the Abbey of Poiſſy, if they had not reſolv'd to wait firſt of all for the King's Conſent.

There is nothing obſervable in the XLth. Letter.

The XLIſt. Written to Geofry Abbot of Vendome, Treats of the following Queſtion, viz. Whether a Monk taking the Vow upon him, and receiving the Benediction from another Monk, ought again to receive it from his Abbot? Ivo determines, that it may be either repeated or omitted, without any prejudice either to the one or the other of the parties, becauſe the Benediction of a Monk is not by impoſition of hands, nor the Adminiſtration of any Sacrament of Apoſtolical Tradition, and that it has no other vertue in it than what is in the Abſolution of a Penitent, or the Prayers of a Prieſt for his People; that a private Monk having no body but himſelf to take care of, may, by his own act, dedicate himſelf to that ſtate of Life, without the Benediction of any Monk or Abbot, ſince that which conſtitutes him a Monk, is not any new Dignity conferr'd on him, but only his Contempt of the World and Love of God; that this is ſo, appears from conſidering the practice of the firſt Inſtitutors of the Monaſtick Orders, who neither receiv'd nor us'd any Benedictions; that indeed, when the Communities of Monks began to be numerous, Vows were exacted of them, and they were admitted by Benedictions, which cuſtom, was prudentially taken up, to oblige them the firmer and more ſolemnly, in the preſence both of God and Men, to Diligence and Conſtancy in the way of Life they had choſe and undertaken; which if they ſhould afterward offer to renounce, they would have the more Witneſſes to Condemn them; that theſe Ceremonies were the beſt ſecurity could be found out againſt the fickleneſs of Mens minds and reſolutions; and that therefore, 'twere convenient it ſhould be left to the diſcretion of every Abbot to oblige his Monks, if he thought fit, to renew the Vows they had come under before Witneſſes, and to repeat the Benedictions they had receiv'd from others, or wholly to omit them; ſince theſe were not Sacraments, which ought not to be repeated; but if the Benediction were look'd upon as ſuch, it ought not to be adminiſtred a ſecond time, as Biſhops were not to Conſecrate anew the Nuns that had been already Conſecrated by Prieſts.

The XLIId is a Letter of Moral Advice, to the Biſhop of Soiſſons.

The XLIIId, Congratulates Pope Urban, upon the Reſtitution of Peace to the greateſt part of Italy; and acquaints him, that one William, a Clergy-man of his Dioceſs, was Elected Biſhop of Paris.

The

The XLIVth. is an Admonition to all the Biſhops of France, to put in Execution a Law which prohibits all manner of War, four days in the week.

The XLVth. forbids the whole Clergy of the Archdeaconry of Poiſſy to marry the Count de Meulan to the Daughter of the Count de Crépy, they being within the Degrees of Conſanguinity, as he proves from the Genealogy of the two Families.

The XLVIth. Letter to Pope Urban, adverti'ſes him that the King of France was diſpatching a Deputation of ſome Courtiers to him, to obtain from him, either by threatnings or fair offers, an Abſolution; and exhorts him not to be prevail'd on by them to grant it.

In the XLVIIth. he tells Guy, the Chief Maſter of the King's Houſhold, that 'tis in vain for that Prince to think of procuring a Diſpenſation of his Marriage with Bertrade, by his promiſes of beſtowing great Endowments on the Church; that it can never be granted him, nor can he Attone for his great Sin by ſo good a Work, or ever hope for Remiſſion of it, while he reſolves to keep to her.

In the XLVIIIth. he acquaints Pope Urban with the promotion of Manaſſes IId, to the Arch-Biſhoprick of Rheims.

The XLIXth. is Written to Stephen, Earl of Chartres and Blois, denying him the Exemption of the Cloyſter of the Canons, from the Biſhops's Juriſdiction, and refuſing to Swear Homage to him, out of the bounds of the City of Chartres.

In the Lth. he makes his excuſes to Richerius, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, for not waiting upon him, without the King's Paſſ-port: He interpoſes his Advice, concerning the Diſpute for Primacy, between the Arch-Biſhop of Lions and Richerius, that if he have good Authorities to produce, he ſhould do it, and deſires he would ſend him the Copies of them; but, if no ſuch can be found, thinks he had beſt refer the matter to the Pope's Deciſion: He acquaints him, that William is Elected Arch-Biſhop of Paris, praying that he would Conſecrate him before the Feaſt of St. Remy, letting him alſo know, that he had obtain'd leave for him of the Pope, to make uſe of his Pallium on this occaſion, though otherwiſe, it had been forbidden him.

The LIſt. Letter is written to Sanction, Dean of Orleans, who had been Elected Biſhop of that Church, in the Year 1099. John, the Sub-Dean, had us'd underhand meaſures to get himſelf into that Biſhoprick, and ſome of the Clergy of his Faction, had, by Letters to Ivo, accus'd Sanction of Simony: Ivo, hereupon, endeavours to diſſwade him from aſpiring after that Dignity, and from getting himſelf Conſecrated, till he had the Pope's Order for it, and had clear'd himſelf of the Aſperſion caſt upon him. In the mean while, the Clergy and People of Orleans, had prevail'd on the Arch-Biſhop of Sens, to Command Ivo to Conſecrate him; he refus'd to do it at Châteaulandon, bordering on the Dioceſs of Sens, by reaſon of the difference between the Arch-Biſhop of Sens and the Pope, about the Primacy of Lions; but the Clergy having intereſs'd the King to confirm their Election, Ivo ſends forth his Citation for Sanction's Adverſaries to appear at Chartres, which they not obeying, and Sanction having purg'd himſelf by Oath, of what they had alledg'd againſt him, he was Conſecrated by Ivo Biſhop of Chartres, William Biſhop of Paris, and Walter Biſhop of Meaux, as is fully related by Ivo, in his LIVth. Letter, written on this occaſion, to Hugh Arch-Biſhop of Lions. No ſooner was Sanction ſettled in his new Dignity, but he began to abuſe and inſult over thoſe of his Clergy who had oppos'd him, which drew from Ivo the LIIId. Letter in this Collection, wherein, he ſeverely taxes him for his indecent Behaviour. The Arch-Biſhop of Lions was highly diſpleas'd at Sanction's Conſecration, and took care to let Ivo know how ill he reſented it at his hands: To him, therefore Ivo proteſts, (in his LIXth Letter) that he had not taken any Money for performing that Office; that he knew nothing of the Crimes Sanction was accus'd of; that Sanction had denied them all upon Oath; that he did not give him notice of that ſolemnity, becauſe 'twas not cuſtomary to do ſo; nor did he conceive that the Arch-Biſhop could by vertue of his Legatine Authority, challenge ſuch Juriſdiction over the Biſhops of France, as that they ſhould not have power of Conſecration, without his leave and Licence.

In the LIId Letter, Ivo writes to Gaufroy, Dean of Mans, about one Everard a Canon-Regular, who had entred himſelf a Monk, in the Abbey of Marmoutier, and had a mind to return to his former Order, that he ought by no means to ſuffer him to quit his Monaſtery, nor receive him again among the Clergy.

In the LVth. he requeſts the Arch-Biſhop of Lions to confirm the Election of one who had been choſen Biſhop of Beauvais, notwithſtanding ſome Objections he had againſt him.

In the LVIth, he Anſwers King Philip, that he could not hear, that Hugh Arch-Biſhop of Lions intended to call another General Council this Year, the Pope having already held two within His Majeſty's Dominions; and that if he ſhould Summon one, 'twould be contrary to the Apoſtolical Inſtitutions and the practice of the Church; that if the Pope's Legates ſhall after any reaſonable diſtance of time, think fit to Convene the Biſhops, they are to obey their Orders; but, if they ſhall begin to impoſe a new and intolerable Yoke upon the Biſhops, he hopes His Majeſty will think it his duty to put a ſtop to their encroachments.

In the LVIIth, he tells Geofry, Abbot of Vendome, That he ought to deny the Rite of Burial, among his Monks, to one of them, who had four times quitted his Monaſtry; becauſe, at his laſt Return thither, he had not brought back with him, the Goods he had ſacrilegiouſly carried away from the Monaſtry.

Richerius, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, dying in the beginning of the Year 1096, the Clergy elected Daimbert, and ſent to Ivo, to Ordain him both Prieſt, and Biſhop; who anſwers them, in the

LVIIIth

LVIIIth Letter, That he could not do it, but within the Times appointed for Ordinations; and, that before his Election could be confirm'd, he muſt conſer with the reſt of his Brethren the Biſhops, about an Obſtacle that offer'd itſelf. This Obſtacle, was, the Oppoſition of Hugh, Arch-Biſhop of Lions, who gave out, That no Biſhops could be Ordain'd in France, without his Permiſſion; and that he would, in particular, do all he could to hinder Daimbert's ſucceeding to the Arch-Biſhoprick of Sens, 'till he ſhould acknowledge the Primacy of Lyons. Ivo, therefore, in the LIXth Letter, demands of Hugh, If he may Ordain him? And prays his Anſwer with all ſpeed. Hugh abſolutely refuſing to give him Leave to do it, Ivo lets him know by the LXth Letter, That he will obey his Pleaſure therein, and had communicated it to the Biſhops of his Province; but he intreats and adviſes him, to be more moderate, and reſerv'd, for the future, in the Exerciſe of his Authority, and not to inſiſt ſo rigorouſly, in exacting their Obedience, to all the Commands of the Holy See; leaſt, by impoſing on them Burdens too heavy for them to bear, he force them to diſown her Power, through an impoſſibility of performing what ſhe lays upon them; or out of ſome neceſſity, and expediency, of acting contrary to it: That tho' they are all very well inclin'd to pay due Obſervance to the Orders, or Prohibitions of the Holy See, in Matters relating to Faith and Morality, either concerning the Defence of Religion, the Puniſhment of wicked Men, the preventing Dangers, and Evils, and the like; and tho' they are ready to ſuffer any thing, in Obedience to what ſhe ſhall Command, and Appoint, to any ſuch Good Ends and Purpoſes; yet, as to indifferent Matters, the obſerving, or not obſerving of which, has no Influence upon our Salvation: And as to the Endeavours of the Court of Rome, to alter ancient Cuſtoms, eſtabliſhed by the Holy Fathers, he intreats him to conſider with himſelf, Whether they ought not rather to adhere to what they have eſtabliſhed, than to receive her new Conſtitutions? The ancient Canons (he tells him) do conſtantly order, that Metropolitans be Conſecrated by the Biſhops of the Province; and therefore, he wonders, that Hugh ſhould go about to introduce another Cuſtom, and pretend to oblige the New-elected Arch-Biſhop of Sens, to come to him before his Conſecration, and to promiſe Submiſſion, and Obedience to him; which is contrary to what was ever practiſed in the Province of France, or in any other Country; and, that ſince Daimbert had not been accuſed of any Crimes, and had been elected duly, and without Simony, he had no Authority to Cite him before him: And whereas, Hugh complains, in his Letter, that Daimbert had receiv'd Inveſtiture from the King's Hands; Ivo tells him, he knew of no ſuch Matter; and that tho' it were ſo, he could not ſee how that Ceremony ſhould concern Faith and Religion, ſince, upon a Canonical Election, their Kings had always aſſum'd a Right of Conferring Biſhopricks, and the Popes themſelves had written to them, to give Inveſtiture to ſuch as had been duly Elected; and, ſometimes, had ſent Orders to defer the Conſecrations of Biſhops, who had not obtain'd the King's Conſent. He urges, moreover, That Pope Urban oppos'd only the real Inveſtitures, and did not exclude their Kings from Electing, or Confirming Elections: And tho' the Eighth General Council prohibited their being preſent at Elections, yet it allow'd them to admit the Perſon Elected, to the Poſſeſſion of his Biſhoprick; that it matters not, whether that Ceremony be adminiſtred by the Hand, or ſome other Sign; whether by pronouncing any Form, or giving the Paſtoral Staff; ſince Kings pretended not to convey any thing Spiritual, but only to ſhew their Approbation of the People's Choice of a Paſtor, and to give him Poſſeſſion of ſuch Lands, and other Eccleſiaſtical Profits and Advantages, as the Churches were entituled to, from the Liberality of Princes; that the putting a ſtop to the Practice of ſuch Inveſtitures, had occaſion'd many Evils in the Church, which could not be prevented, or remedied, but by permitting again the Exerciſe of them: Not that he ſpeaks this out of any Diſreſpect to the Authority of the Holy See, but to ſhew how much he wiſheth, that the Miniſters of the Church of Rome, would apply themſelves to the Correcting the greateſt Evils, and Diſtempers, and not lay out themſelves, ſo much, upon ſuch ſmall and inſignificant Matters: And therefore, Ivo demands, again, with much Earneſtneſs, That he, and his Brethren, may be permitted to Conſecrate the Arch-Biſhop of Sens; which, if Hugh will grant them, he promiſes to prevail on him, to own the Primacy of Lions; but if he deny this their Requeſt, tho' they did not, at preſent, think of doing it without his Leave, yet, if a Schiſm ſhould, hereupon, break out in the Church, the Blame would not lie at their Doors. Ivo ends this large Epiſtle, by letting Hugh underſtand, That he had Reaſon to demand Satisfaction of him, for the Wrong done to himſelf, and his Church, by thoſe of Puiſet, who lay under an Excommunication, which Hugh had taken off, without his knowledge; whereby they had been encourag'd to farther Sacrilegious Attempts, preſuming to get off ſo again for the future.

But this was not the only Inſtance of the ſtrange Carriage of Hugh, Arch-Biſhop of Lions: For he pretended, alſo, to oblige the New-elected Biſhop of Nevers, to wait upon him for his Conſecration, at Autun. And herein Ivo oppos'd him again, and tells him, in the LXIſt Letter, That the Privilege he aſſum'd, was a Violation both of the Laws, and Cuſtoms, of the Church, by which Biſhops were to be Conſecrated by their Metropolitan; or, when that could not be, by the Biſhops of the ſame Province.

Ivo, having accommodated Matters with Adelecia, Counteſs of Puiſet, writes the LXIId Letter to Sanction, Biſhop of Orleans, letting him know, That the Agreement made between them, did not at all meddle with the Difference that Biſhop had with the Clergy, and Monks, of Puiſet; that he may ſtill execute the Sentence of the Canon upon them, for Celebrating Divine Service, while they lay under an Interdict from him; tho' he would adviſe him, not to meddle with them, but by the Arch-Biſhop of Lions's Conſent, without which he would not get Juſtice done upon them. He tells him alſo, He need not wonder at his having receiv'd Gervaſe, (Count of Chiteau- neuf, in Thimerais) into the Communion of the Church; being oblig'd ſo to do, out of Reſpect to the King, by the Canon, which enjoyns, That if the King admit any Excommunicated Perſon to eat at his Table, the Biſhops are to reſtore him to Eccleſiaſtical Communion.

In the LXIIId Letter, he proves, That none but ſuch as are in Holy Orders, can Conſecrate, and Adminiſter the Sacraments.

The LXVth, to Pope Urban, acquaints him, That the Biſhop of Paris is on his Journey toward Rome; recommends him to the Pope, and prays, he will give him ſo good Inſtructions, and wholeſome Advice, that he may return wiſer, and of a more manageable Temper, than he had formerly been: He petitions, alſo, in the ſame Biſhop's behalf, for an Inhibition, to prevent the Abbot, and Monks, of Lagny, from withdrawing themſelves from under his Juriſdiction; and laſtly, intreats the Pope to determine what ſhould be done, in the Affair of the New-elected Arch-Biſhop of Sens, whom the Arch-Biſhop of Lions would not Conſecrate, 'till he would ſubmit to his Primacy.

Sanction had not been long in poſſeſſion of the Biſhoprick of Orleans, before he was depoſed by the Arch-Biſhop of Lions, at the Requeſt, and Inſtigation of the Arch-Biſhop of Tours, to make room for John, one of his Creatures; but a very infamous Perſon, who had been Arch-Deacon of that Church, under Sanction's Predeceſſor: To bring this Matter about, the Arch-Biſhop of Tours had Crown'd King Philip, at Chriſtmas, and obtain'd his Grant, that John ſhould be Conſecrated Biſhop of Orleans: But as ſoon as Ivo underſtood it, he wrote to Hugh, Arch-Biſhop of Lions, conjuring him to put a ſtop to it, and accuſing John of many notorious Crimes, particularly of having procured the Biſhoprick by Simony. Theſe are the Contents of the LXVIth Letter.

In the LXVIIth, Ivo writes to Pope Urban likewiſe, to interpoſe his Authority, that ſo ſcandalous a Wretch may not be ſuffer'd to get into the Epiſcopal Order: And in this Letter, he offers his Apology to the Pope, who was incens'd againſt him, on Account of what he had written to the Arch-Biſhop of Lions, touching the Election, and Conſecration of Daimbert, to the Arch-Biſhoprick of Sens: Ivo proteſts, he had no other Deſign in it, but to induce the Arch-Biſhop of Lions to cut off all occaſion of thoſe Complaints that were daily made againſt him, by the Biſhops of France; and to take Care, that the Churches of that Kingdom be not oppreſs'd, and overburden'd by the Regulations, and Decrees, of the Holy See; that if any thing he had ſaid, relating to the Primacy claim'd by the Arch-Biſhop of Lions, had been diſpleaſing to him, he thought he might take leave to ſpeak his Opinion freely upon that Subject, to one, eſpecially, for whom no Man, on this ſide the Alps, had ſo entire a Reſpect, and by devoting himſelf to whoſe Intereſts he had been a great Sufferer: However, if his Holineſs were offended at any Expreſſion that had dropt from him, he would retract it, and would reſign his Biſhoprick, rather than bear his Anger, whether he had deſerv'd it or not: And if by this Means he might make Satisfaction, for any thing his Holineſs might have taken amiſs, he would willingly ſtand to his Offer, and prays him to accept it: Adding, moreover, that if the Pope would not permit him to quit his Dioceſs, he fear'd he muſt ſhortly be conſtrain'd to do it, by the King's violent Hatred of him, and the miſerable Contempt of God's Word, among the People under his Care. This Letter is dated nine Years after he came to his Biſhoprick, which ſhews it was written in the firſt Year of this Twelfth Century.

Hugh, Arch-Biſhop of Lions, making no Account of theſe Remonſtrances of Ivo, Cites him to bring Proof of what he had to alledge againſt the Perſon, and Election of John: But, Ivo, inſtead of obeying this Summons, anſwers him, by the LXVIIIth Letter, That the Crimes being ſo notorious, 'twas needleſs to ſearch after farther Evidence; and if there were occaſion for it, he could produce ſufficient Witneſs, that John had already diſtributed Moneys among the Queen's Servants, and had promis'd them a farther Sum, to procure for himſelf the Biſhoprick of Orleans: That, beſides, his being Elected by the King only, made his Title void by the Canons; and, that however the Examination of this whole Affair, ought to be made in the Province, to which his Accuſers were ſubject, and where the Evidence lay that was to be brought againſt him, and not in any other.

The LXIXth Letter, is, to the Provoſt of the Canons Regulars of Eſtreppe, in the Dioceſs of Limoges, who complain'd, That the Biſhop had iſſued out a Prohibition againſt their taking upon them the Cure of Souls, and the Adminiſtration of the Sacrament of Penance. Our Prelate tells him he is of Opinion, That the Biſhop had done better, if he had endeavour'd to bring all the Clergy to a regular Way of Living, rather than to have refus'd the Paſtoral Office to thoſe who were already oblig'd to it: However, they might make a good Uſe of this Exemption, in having the better leiſure to look after the State of their own Souls. The Regular Clergy, he thinks, ought not to be univerſally forbid undertaking the Cure of Souls; nor ought it to be permitted to all of them, ſince it would be an Injury to the Order it ſelf, and tend to the Diſſolution of it, tho' the Correction, and Inſtruction of others, may more ſafely be truſted in the Hands of ſuch as have been long train'd, and carefully exercis'd, in examining, and well-ordering their own Lives and Manners; therefore that Charge is not to be impos'd upon, and enjoyn'd to all the Regular Clergy: For, by that means, their Diſcipline will ſoon be deſtroy'd; and inſtead of learned and able Champions in the Cauſe of Religion, the Monaſteries will afford us but weak Defenders, and Betrayers of it: To prevent which fatal Miſchief, the moſt prudent, and beſt approv'd among them, ſhould be pick'd out for this weighty Employment, and be preſented to the Biſhop, as fit to be entruſted by him, with the Care of other Mens Souls.

The

The LXXth Letter, is an Admonition to the Biſhop of Meaux, to Reform the Monaſtery of Marmoutier; which was ſcandalous for very great Irregularities.

In the LXXIſt, he lays before William Rufus, King of England, the Reaſon why he had abſolv'd Nivard, of Septeuil, from the Oath he had taken to that King, viz. Becauſe it was contrary to the Obligations of his former Oaths, to his own natural and lawful Princes.

The LXXIId to Girard, Abbot of St. Vandrille, contains this Deciſion; That the chief Stone, or Altar-piece of an Altar that has been demoliſh'd, or pull'd down, tho' it had been formerly Conſecrated, is to be Conſecrated again, when laid upon another Altar: And whereas it is objected, That the Portable Altars do not loſe their Conſecration, by being carried from one place to another, he anſwers, That there is a Difference between the moving theſe Altars from place to place, and taking the Stones from an old Altar, becauſe the Stones of theſe Portable Altars are faſtned upon a Plank of Wood, or ſome other Pedeſtal; and ſo to whatever place you remove them, they remain ſtill as they were when firſt Conſecrated.

The LXXIIId Letter is ſent to Bernard, Abbot of Marmoutier, whom ſome of the Monks refus'd to ſubmit to, as their lawful Abbot; becauſe, as they pretended, he had been Conſecrated by an Excommunicated Biſhop. Ivo, in anſwer to this, maintains, That the Promotion of an Abbot depends, rather upon the Election of the Monks, than the Biſhop's Benediction; which, in the preſent Caſe, is not given by Impoſition of Hands, nor is it properly a Conſecration, but only a Formulary of Prayer.

The LXXIVth Letter is to Hildebert, Biſhop of Mans; who is in a great Streight, Whether, or no, he ſhall put himſelf upon the Trial of Ordeal, or walking Blindfolded, and Bareſoot, over red-hot Plowſhares, to juſtifie his Innocence to the King of England, who accuſed him of having treacherouſly ſurrendred the Town of Mans. Ivo tells him, That the Eccleſiaſtical Laws having utterly condemn'd that Practice, he ſhould endure any thing, rather than undergo it.

The LXXVth is to John, who was Conſecrated Biſhop of Orleans, notwithſtanding all the Efforts of Ivo to prevent it. The Counteſs of Puiſet, and her Adherents, continuing to give Diſturbance to the Church of Chartres, Ivo was oblig'd to ask Leave of the Pope, to Excommunicate them; which was granted him: John, out of ſpight to Ivo, pretended, 'twas his own Right to pronounce the Excommunication againſt them, being of his Dioceſs, and offer'd to try the Matter with Ivo, at Orleans. Ivo inſiſts upon the Pope's having Commiſſioned him to do it; and, that the Caſe ought to be decided at Chartres, not at Orleans; ſince it was the Church of Chartres that had received the Affront, and that all Differences ought to be tried upon the place where they began.

The LXXVIth Letter is written to Daimbert, whom the Pope himſelf had Ordain'd Arch-Biſhop of Sens, (tho' Hugh, Arch-Biſhop of Lions, had refus'd to do it) and who had thereupon ſubmitted to the Primacy of Lions. Ivo lets him hereby know, That he intends to come and aſſiſt at the Provincial Council he had invited him to; prays him, to defer the Ordination of the Biſhop of Nevers, (becauſe of a Scruple about the Election) and to excommunicate the Lady of Puiſet, her Son Hugh, and all that aſſiſted, or belong'd to them.

The LXXVIIth is written to Hugh, Dean of Beauvais, and to the Chapter of that Church, upon occaſion of a Trial they had had about a Mill belonging to them, but rendred uſeleſs, by ſome Bridges, and other Buildings, that cut off its Supply of Water: Ivo adviſes them to complain to the Metropolitan, or the Pope's Legate, in caſe the Biſhop of Beauvais will not remedy that Inconvenience.

The LXXVIIIth is a Letter of Advice to the Monks of the Monaſtery of Dol, in the Dioceſs of Bourges, to put an end to their Quarrels, and Diviſions, about the Election of Bernier, (formerly a Monk of Bonneval) for their Abbot. Ivo aſſures them, he had had a very good Account of his Life and Converſation; that whereas ſome had thought ill of him, for quitting his Monaſtery without leave from his Brethren, he had been forc'd to do it by the Scandalous Irregularities that were therein, which had likewiſe occaſion'd their Abbot himſelf and ſeveral others of the Monks who abhorr'd the Villainies of the reſt to take the ſame courſe.

The LXXIXth Letter is written in the Name of Ivo Biſhop of Chartres, William Biſhop of Paris, John Biſhop of Orleans, Walter Biſhop of Meaux, and Humbaud Biſhop of Auxerre, Aſſembled in Synod at Stampæ, to Philip Biſhop of Troyes, who was Summon'd to this Council, but had not made his Appearance: They tell him, they might have paſs'd Sentence againſt him, but would allow him time, till the Sunday before Chriſtmas, and then he muſt not fail to defend himſelf, if he could, for this Contempt of their Authority. This Letter appears to have been written in the Year, 1100.

The LXXXth to William Abbot of Fecamp, confirms the deciſion of the LXXIId Letter, about the re-Conſecration of Altars that have been remov'd out of their places.

The LXXXIſt is a Congratulatory Letter to Pope Paſchal II. upon his Elevation to the Pontifical Chair.

In the LXXXIId he Counſels Geofry, Abbot of Vendôme, to forbear his ſeverities againſt a certain Monk of his Convent, and either to confine him to a Cell by himſelf, or elſe ſuffer him to retire to ſome other Monaſtery.

The LXXXIIId Letter is Addreſs'd to the Biſhops of the Province of Rheims, adviſing them, in regard to their own honour, and that of the Biſhop of Soiſſons, not to ſuffer the inſults of their Metropolitan; for that if the Arch-Biſhops ſhall thus take upon them to do what they pleaſe in the Churches of their Provinces, and, without the Ordinaries Conſent, to Judge and Suſpend any of the Clergy, as they ſhall think fit; they will quite overthrow the Credit of the Epiſcopal Dignity and the Orders in the Church, Eſtabliſh'd by the Canons: That therefore, they ought to oppoſe any ſuch Innovations, and if the Clergy of Soiſſons are ready to juſtifie themſelves by their Biſhop, the Metropolitan has no power to Condemn them for Hereſie or Sacrilege.

The LXXXIVth is to Manaſſes Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, upon the ſame ſubject. He lets him know, that he thought his Letter a little too ſevere, and exhorts him to uſe gentler methods to bring the Church of Soiſſons to their duty, and to accept of the ſubmiſſion and ſatisfaction they tendred him.

The LXXXVth Letter to John, Prieſt, Cardinal-Legate for Pope Paſchal in France, highly commends him for refuſing to Communicate with the King, though ſome Biſhops of the Belgick-Province had dar'd to put the Crown upon that Prince's Head, at Whitſuntide, contrary to the Pope's expreſs prohibition to them all.

Ivo approves likewiſe his intentions of Aſſembling a Council in the Province of Aquitain, but wiſhes, he would defer it till the beginning of Autumn.

In the LXXXVIth he demands ſatisfaction of Stephen Earl of Chartres, for having abus'd ſome of his Clergy.

By the LXXXVIIth he advertiſes John and Benet, Legates of the Holy See, that Guarland, Elected Biſhop of Beauvais, is an ignorant and debauch'd ſot, altogether unworthy of that preferment; and obſerves to them farther, that the Church of Beauvais has a long time had the misfortune to be govern'd by very ill Biſhops.

By the LXXXVIIIth he acquaints Pope Paſchal, that Hilgode, heretofore Biſhop of Soiſſons, was not Depos'd for any Miſdemeanours, as his Holineſs had been inform'd, but that he voluntarily retir'd into a Monaſtery, to avoid the inconveniencies all Prelates are expos'd to, chooſing rather to live in meanneſs and obſcurity, to ſecure the ſtate of his own Soul, than to hazard the Salvation of it, in the heights of Honour and Preferments: And whereas, ſome were now againſt his being made an Abbot, 'twas not out of any diſlike of him, but becauſe they thought it not ſeemly that a Biſhop ſhould come to receive Benediction from an Abbot, which Ivo thinks needs not be made a ſcruple of, but that the Ceremony may be well enough quite omitted, or may be us'd to one of his Character, without any prejudice, ſince it is not a Sacrament reiterated.

The LXXXIXth Letter is to the ſame Pope, and admoniſhes him not to give credit too eaſily to any complaints that ſhall be brought to him, againſt the Biſhops, or any private Perſons of France, not to proceed to cenſures againſt them, but upon good evidence given in by credible Perſons, and ſuch as live near them: He acquaints him moreover, that the Biſhop Elect of Beauvais is very undeſerving of his Preferment, and that he had been already driven out of the Church, for his Scandalous Behaviour, by Hugh Arch-Biſhop of Lions.

In the XCth to Daimbert, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, he examines this caſe; if a Man who had kill'd another, excepted out of the Articles of Peace agreed and Sworn to, were to be deem'd a violater of God's Laws and ſubject to the Puniſhments due to ſuch a one! and concludes, That though he be guilty of Manſlaughter, yet, he has not thereby Offended God.

By the XCIſt he Congratulates Adela Counteſs of Chartres, upon the recovery of her Health, and exhorts her to protect the Churches.

The XCIId Letter is written to Pope Paſchal, at the requeſt and in behalf of Stephen, Biſhop Elect of Beauvais, praying his Holineſs to confirm his Election, though he have not yet taken Orders, aſſuring him there is no other Objection can lie againſt him; that the Accuſations that had been brought againſt him were found to be falſe and groundleſs; that Liſiard Arch-Deacon of Beauvais, the chief promoter of them has acknowledg'd as much, by being fully reconciled to Stephen, and vindicating him on all occaſions, and that if any be yet diſſatisfied, he is ready to give them all full and Canonical ſatisfaction.

Notwithſtanding this Letter, Pope Paſchal would not allow of Stephen's Election, but ſeverely reprimanded Ivo for offering one to him ſo unworthy of any favour or preferment as every body elſe repreſented him to be; at which Ivo was ſo far from being diſpleas'd, that he lets the Pope know, by the XCVth Letter, how glad he is that Stephen had miſs'd of his aim; and aſſures his Holineſs, he had extorted the former Letter from him, by his importunities, and that he did not think when he wrote it, 'twould prove a help to his deſired advancement, or be taken for a ſerious recommendation of him, by his Holineſs, or any intelligent perſon that ſhould obſerve the Stile of it. He likewiſe minds the Pope, that his Holineſs had proceeded too far in approving of Drogo's pretenſions to the Treaſurerſhip of Châlons, becauſe the Merits of them having been examin'd in the Council of Poitiers, it appear'd that the late Biſhop of Châlons had not power to beſtow the place upon him, unleſs, as was required by the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, he were firſt Canon, (or Prebend) of that Church; which Drogo could never pretend to, becauſe he was Canon and Arch-Deacon of another: and that therefore they had decreed his Inſtitution to the Treaſurerſhip of Châlons null and void, following therein the Opinion of his Holineſs himſelf, and of his Predeceſſors, who have determin'd that no Man ſhall have preferment in two Churches at the ſame time: And therefore Ivo intreats the Pope to conſider well of this matter, and the ill conſequences that may enſue, if he do not revoke what he has order'd in it, contrary to the Opinion and reſolution of the Council.

The XCIIId Letter, after having Complimented Daimbert, (or rather, Dagobert) Patriarch of Jeruſalem, recommends to him ſome of Ivo's Dioceſs, who were travelling to that City.

By the XCIVth Ivo Requeſts Pope Paſchal to grant his Bull to the Clergy of Chartres, empowering them to Excommunicate all ſuch as ſhould at any time hereafter pretend to renew the Claim which the preſent Earl had quitted, in his own and his Succeſſor's Name, to the Goods and Houſes belonging

belonging to the Biſhop and to that Church; and to proceed to the like ſeverity againſt any Biſhop of Chartres, who ſhall connive at, or conſent to any Attempts of that nature.

In the XCVIth Letter, he aſſerts that Chriſtian-Burial is not to be denied to any one who Dies in the Communion of the Church.

In the XCVIIth, he deſires Lambert Biſhop of Arras, and John Biſhop of Teroüane, to write to the Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, to take care that a new Biſhop be Choſen at Beauvais, in the room of Stephen, whoſe Election Pope Paſchal would not allow of.

The XCVIIIth is an Exhortation to the People of Beauvais, to chooſe for their Biſhop one who is Eminent for Piety and Learning.

The XCIXth is the reſolution of a Queſtion propos'd to him by Gualon, Abbot of St. Quintin, in Beauvais, viz. if Children under Six years of Age, can be Contracted or Married with one another, and in caſe there be only a Contract between them, and one of the parties die, whether the ſurviving party may Marry the Brother or Siſter of the other? To which Ivo anſwers, that none can actually Marry till the Age of Fourteen, but that Children may promiſe Marriage to each other aſſoon as they are at years of Diſcretion, which he determines they are at Seven years of Age, and that a Contract agreed on at that Age ſhall hinder either Party, if one of them Die before they are compleatly Married, from Marrying with the Brother or Siſter of the Deceaſed.

In the Cth Letter, he demands of John Biſhop of Orleans, the reſtitution of an Altar, (or Church) which had been adjudg'd by the Council of Poitiers, to belong to the Dioceſs of Chartres.

In the CIſt Letter, to Adela Counteſs of Chartres, he Complains of her having aſſum'd Authority to Cite before her Judges Ralph, a Chief Clergy-Man of his Dioceſs, to anſwer for his having ſeiz'd the Goods of a Counterfeit Nun: Ivo puts her in mind, that it has ever been the undiſputed Right of his and of all the other Churches of France, that none but the Eccleſiaſtical Judges ſhall take Cognizance of, and inflict Puniſhments on diſorderly Clergy-Men and Monks, unleſs their Crimes are ſuch as deſerve Death, in which caſe only, they are to be deliver'd over to the Juſtice of the Civil Magiſtrate.

In the CIId, he preſſes Manaſſes Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, to proceed to the Conſecration of the new Elected Biſhop of Beauvais, without waiting any longer for leave from the King: The Election of Biſhops (he tells him) is the Churches Prerogative, and has been yielded to them by the Capitulars or Grants of Charlemain and Louis le Debonnaire.

By the CIIId, he acquaints Pope Paſchal, that the Biſhop of Senlis, who had been forc'd out of his Dioceſs for adhering to his Holineſs's Intereſts, could not regain poſſeſſion of it, though he had produc'd his Holineſs's Letters in that behalf to the King, and to his own Metropolitan; but that moreover, the Dean of Paris had alſo ſeiz'd to his own uſe the Prebend this Biſhop had in that Church.

In the CIVth, he adverriſes the ſame Pope, that the ſoundeſt and moſt judicious of the Clergy of Beauvais, having Elected for their Biſhop one Gualon, a perſon of excellent Learning and Morals, ſome who were ſtill zealous for Stephen, had ſlily inſinuated to the King, that the other being a Diſciple of Ivo and nominated by the Pope, his Majeſty had reaſon to fear he would prove no very good Subject of his: upon which ſuggeſtion, the King abſolutely refus'd to Conſent to the Election of Gualon, and to give him Inveſtiture. Ivo tells the Pope, he had e'er this been Petition'd on that occaſion, but the Metropolitan kept the Clergy from it, under pretence of ſpeedily compromiſing the matter, perhaps to pleaſe the King by delaying it as long as he can in hopes of terminating it to his ſatisfaction; and therefore conjures his Holineſs to interpoſe his Authority, for the Confirmation of what he has begun, and to ſtop his Enemies mouths. He acquaints him, that the King has declar'd he will go ſhortly to Rome, but he ſcarce believes it; though whether he go or ſend thither, 'twould be requiſite his Holineſs ſhould be cautious of Abſolving him, or do it only conditionally, for fear of a return to his beloved Sin, and ſhould ſignifie as much to all the Churches of France.

In the CVth Letter, he farther informs the Pope, that the King had taken a Solemn Oath, that Gualon ſhould never be Biſhop of Beauvais, in his Reign; and humbly remonſtrates, that if his Holineſs take any notice of this Oath, and do not reſolutely ſhew his power to the contrary, there ſhall never any more regard be had for Elections in France. Ivo concludes this Letter with Praying the Pope's direction what courſe he ſhall take, if the King after obtaining his Holineſs's Abſolution, ſhould re-aſſume his former ill practices, as he much fear'd he would.

The CVIth and CVIIth Letters are to Henry the I. King of England, and his Queen Mathilda, exhorting them above all things, to promote Religion, and take Care of the Churches in their Dominions, recommending alſo to their bounty the neceſſitous ſtate of the Church of Chartres, of which they would be more fully inform'd by two of the Canons of it, whom he had ſent on purpoſe to their Majeſties.

In the CVIIIth he gives Pope Paſchal an Account of the Quarrels between Ralph Arch-Biſhop of Tours, and the Abbot of Marmoutier, whom the former had accus'd of divers miſdemeanours: Ivo thinks the Arch-Biſhop ought not to be heard againſt him; 1. becauſe he was not himſelf Legally Ordain'd; 2. becauſe the Abbot was never guilty of what is laid to his Charge; or, 3. if he were, the Arch-Biſhop ſhould then have Objected them againſt him, while he was concern'd in Church-Affairs, and not now he is retir'd into a Cloyſter. 4. The ground of the Arch-Biſhop's malice againſt him, is, that he cannot have leave to read Maſs publickly, in the Church of Marmoutier, to inſult over the Monks, and embezzle the Goods of the Monaſtery; and therefore, to ſhow his ſpite againſt it, he had lately in Synod, Prohibited any of his Dioceſs from entring into that Abbey: 5. All the Witneſſes he had to produce againſt the Abbot, were either his own Kindred, or Men of a Scandalous Reputation, or ſuch as he had brib'd and ſuborn'd; all which, he prays his Holineſs to take into his Prudent Conſideration, and do what he thinks requiſite thereupon.

In the CIXth Letter, to the ſame Pope, he intreats him to Conſtitute for his Legate in France, ſome Biſhop whoſe Dioceſs lies on this ſide of the Alps; for that the Cardinals who were wont to be ſent from the other ſide could not ſtay there long enough to put the Affairs of the Church in order, which miniſtred occaſion to the Enemies of the Holy See, to ſay that they were not ſent to regulate abuſes, but to ſcrape up Money for their own pockets, or the uſe of the Court of Rome: to prevent ſuch clamours, Ivo propoſes Hugh, Arch-Biſhop of Lions, as the fitteſt perſon he can think of for this employment, in which he had heretofore acquitted himſelf with great applauſe, and done excellent ſervice to the Church of Rome, and to thoſe of France.

In the CX, he acquaints the Pope, that having almoſt reſolv'd to reſign his Biſhoprick, by reaſon of the exceſſive wickedneſs of his people, and his deſpairing of doing any good among them, he was got as far as the Alps, on his way towards Rome, to conſult his Holineſs on this occaſion, when he was inform'd of a Treacherous deſign his Enemies had againſt him, which oblig'd him to return home and ſend Gualon, who could better paſs unſuſpected, and by whom he deſires to know his Holineſs's Opinion and Pleaſure.

By the CXIth he requeſts Daimbert, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, to Excommunicate Hugh, Lord of Puiſet, as he had already done, for his violent and unjuſt practices againſt the Church of Chartres, and to interdict the uſe of Divine Service in the Village of Merville, which ſided with him.

In the CXIIth he tells the Dean and Chapter of Paris, that they have power to Excommunicate any under their Juriſdiction, as has the Church of Chartres, and ſeveral others: But he blames them for receiving into their Church Hugh Earl of Puiſet, and his followers, whom he had Excommunicated.

By the CXIIIth, he ſends word to Daimbert, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, that he is glad of the Election of Manaſſes to the Biſhoprick of Meaux, and is ready to aſſiſt at his Ordination, if it be at any place whither he may ſecurely come, or obtain a Paſs-port for his ſafety; otherwiſe, he would conſent and approve of it by Letters under his own hand. The CXVth Letter is to the ſame purpoſe.

In the CXIVth, he aſſures John Biſhop of Orleans, that his Conſcience cannot in the leaſt accuſe him of having done any thing that ſhould Offend King Lewis; (the Son of Philip, Surnamed le Gros,) and as to Hugh Earl of Puiſet, and his Companion, he cannot receive them into the Church, till they have given good ſatisfaction for their Offences.

In the CXVIth, he intreats Adela, Counteſs of Chartres, not to give credit to, nor encourage any malicious and falſe Stories that ſhall be brought to her againſt him.

By the CXVIIth Letter, he acquaints Pope Paſchal, that he had publiſh'd the Injunctions ſent him by his Holineſs, for the reforming ſome abuſes in the Church, which were ſo well receiv'd by his Brethren, the Clergy of his Dioceſs, that few ſhow'd any diſlike of them; but that ſome additions were thought neceſſary for the Honour and Liberty of the Churches, which he prays the Pope to confirm, that Poſterity may be oblig'd to obſerve them.

The CXVIIIth Letter to Henry King of England, requeſts him again, to beſtow ſomewhat on the Church of Chartres.

In the CXIXth, he tells Daimbert, that though the oppoſition made againſt the validity of Manaſſes's Election was without any juſt ground, yet, to leave no room for ſuſpicion or calumny, he thinks it convenient that ſome of the Clergy of Meaux vouch for him upon their Oaths, and that then he may proceed to Conſecrate him publickly.

The CXXth Letter is to Robert Earl of Ponthieu and Bellême, whoſe Territories were put under an interdict, by the Biſhop of Sées. This Earl had ſent to Ivo for ſome of the Conſecrated Chriſm, which he tells him, he muſt be forc'd to refuſe him, becauſe the Canons abſolutely forbid a Biſhop's Communicating with any perſon Excommunicated by another Biſhop: He aſſures him nevertheleſs, that he is heartily ſorry for his ſufferings, and ſhould be glad if he might have an opportunity of doing him any ſervice.

In the CXXIſt, he expoſtulates with Adela Counteſs of Chartres, concerning the outrages committed by her Servants upon his Eccleſiaſticks, and aſſures her, he is ready to aſſiſt them in obliging her to do them Juſtice, if ſhe ſhall not think fit to endeavour it upon this third admonition from him.

The CXXIId to Volgrin, Arch-Deacon of Paris, aſſerts, that a Jewiſh Woman marrying with a Chriſtian Husband, and afterwards returning to Judaiſm, is not freed from her Conjugal Vow, nor, though ſhe leave him, can the Man marry with any other Woman during her Life.

In the CXXIIId to Gaultier, Library-Keeper of the Church of Beauvais, he gives his Opinion of a difficult caſe he had conſulted him upon, viz. how he ſhould proceed againſt a Prieſt, who had in a prophane manner, made uſe of other Ceremonies and words than are preſcribed in the Form of marriage? Ivo tells him, he had never yet heard of ſo foul a Sacrilege, nor was there any proviſion againſt it in the Canons; and therefore, this being a Crime wholly new and unparallell'd, ſome more than ordinary puniſhment ought to be inflicted on the Author of it: However, not to deal too ſeverely without Warrant and Authority from Scripture or the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, he thinks it ſufficient that ſuch Puniſhment be laid on him as the Canons order to be inflicted upon thoſe that violate the Sacraments and holy things.

In the CXXIVth, Ivo acquaints Daimbert, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, that Hugh Earl of Puiſet having reſtored to the Church of Chartres their Goods he had detained, and given ſecurity for what he had taken from himſelf and his Domeſticks, he deſires he may be Abſolv'd from the Excommunication he lay under: But, as to King Lewis (le Gros,) he tells him, that Prince will not be yet reconcil'd to him, becauſe he refuſes to beſtow Preferment on one who had begun a cruel Schiſm in the Church of Chartres.

In the CXXVth to the ſame Arch-Biſhop, he gives his Opinion, that thoſe whoſe Wives had Committed Adultery while they were abſent in the Holy-Land, ought either to be reconciled to their Wives, or, remain unmarried to any others during their Lives.

In the CXXVIth, he returns his thanks to the ſame Arch-Biſhop, for adviſing him to be reconcil'd with the Counteſs of Chartres, to which he tells him, he is very well inclin'd, but that he cannot releaſe his Clergy from an Oath they had oblig'd themſelves by, not to admit into their Church any but the Sons of Free-men.

By the CXXVIIth to King Lewis, he excuſes himſelf for not waiting on his Majeſty, becauſe he was not in a condition to take a Journey, when His Majeſty's Orders came to him: And beſides, having agreed with the Counteſs of Chartres, to refer the difference between them to the Biſhop of Albane, he thought it would look unfair or ſuſpicious in him to go to Court before the Arrival of that Biſhop.

In the CXXVIIIth, he ſends word to Odon, a Regular Canon of St. Quintin in Beauvais, that he does not care to enter into Conference, or to have any thing to do with the perſon he was ſending to him, who had been his bitter Enemy.

In the CXXIXth, he writes to Geofry, Earl of Vendôme, not to marry with the Vicounteſs of Blois, whoſe firſt Husband was his Kinſman, and threatens him with Excommunication if he venture to do it.

In the CXXXth, he ſends the ſame meſſage to the Vicounteſs of Blois, and adviſes her to defer the Marriage, at leaſt, till the ſcruple about their Conſanguinity be cleared and tried before him.

In the CXXXIſt, he adviſes Volgrin, Arch-Deacon of Paris, not to ſuffer a Prieſt who had reſign'd his Benefice to him, to re-enter it again by force; and if he attempt it to Excommunicate him and all that ſhall dare to aſſiſt him.

In the CXXXIId, he prays Daimbert, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, to puniſh a Prieſt of Stampæ, in his Dioceſs, who had abus'd a Clergy-man of the Church of Chartres; and asks his Advice about a Diſpute among the Clergy of that Church about Moneys that had been expended out of the common Stock, to defray the charge of a deputation to the King, to demand Juſtice againſt the bold enterprizes of the Counteſs of Chartres.

The CXXXIIId Letter is to Richard, Biſhop of Albane, the Pope's Legate, who had accus'd him of conniving at Simony in his Dioceſs: Ivo clears himſelf from this Aſperſion, and tells him, if the Dean and Chanter, and the other Church Officers demand a Fee of every one that is admitted to a Canonry, 'tis what he cannot prevent, and has endeavour'd to remedy, but a Cuſtom they plead Authority for, from the Example of the Church of Rome, where the Chamberlains and the other Officers of the Sacred Palace, exact of the Biſhops and Abbots that come for Conſecration exceſſive Sums, under the Specious names of Oblations, or Benedictions; and that though he has endeavoured, with all his might, to Baniſh this wicked cuſtom out of his Church, yet he is forc'd to yield to the practice of it by the iniquity of the Times.

In the CXXXIVth Letter, to Daimbert, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, he aſſerts, and proves from good Authorities, that a Daughter promiſed in Marriage by her Father, to another Man's Son, is not bound thereby when ſhe comes to Years of Diſcretion, though her Father be then Living. Ivo acquaints the Arch-Biſhop likewiſe, that William, Son of the Counteſs of Chartres, notwithſtanding, the Accommodation between them, and without any provocation given, had himſelf Sworn, and compell'd others to take an Oath at the Altar, to deſtroy him and his whole Clergy, if they will not yield to his unreaſonable pretenſions; that, thereupon, he had refus'd to Celebrate Divine Service, when they are in the Church, and to give them the Epiſcopal Benediction, daily us'd; but that he defer'd pronouncing them Excommunicate, till he had the advice and aſſiſtance of the Arch-Biſhop, and the reſt of his Brethren.

The CXXXVth, is ſent to Pope Paſchal, by a Knight, who came from the Siege of Jeruſalem: This Knight had caus'd a Prieſt of Bonneval to be Gelt, for detecting his Servants in a Robberry; for this unparallell'd preſumption, Ivo had caſhier'd him and enjoyn'd him a ſevere penance for Fourteen Years; to which he readily ſubmitted; but, his Enemies taking advantage of his misfortunes, and Beginning to be very troubleſom to him, the Knight begs leave of Ivo to permit him to uſe his Arms again, in his own defence; Ivo, upon great interceſſion made for him, recommends him to the Popes mercy for abſolution.

The CXXXVIth Letter is to Adela, Counteſs of Chartres, telling her that, if his inclinations were for War and broils, he had the offer of ſuch potent ſuccours, as might Enable him to create her great diſturbance; but, Peace he had always deſir'd, and thought it had been firmly ſetled between them, till he had the News of her Son William's raſh Oath, to ruin him and his Church; that, out of reſpect to her, he had, hitherto, forborn to Excommunicate him, and hoped ſhe would contrive ſome means to prevent all ſuch irregularities for the future.

The CXXXVIIth is to the Chapter of Beauvais, concerning one of their Canons, who was proſecuted by an Action of Law in the King's Court of Juſtice: Ivo minds them, that by the orders of the Church, no Clergyman is to be Cited before any but the Eccleſiaſtical Judges, and that if they have Courage enough, they ought to endure any thing rather than the loſs of their Rights and Privileges; but if they cannot reſolve to ſuffer in defence of them, he can only adviſe them to ſubmit to what they cannot remedy, and aſſiſt them by his Prayers, for their prudent Behaviour and good Succeſs.

The

The CXXXVIIIth Letter, to Volgrin and Steven, Arch-Deacons of Paris, is occaſion'd by the great conteſts among the Clergy of that City, about the Election of a Biſhop: Ivo declares, he will never conſent to any Election that is not made by the unanimous conſent of the Clergy, and People, and Confirmed by the Metropolitan and his Suffragans: he admoniſhes them not to be ſway'd by hatred or Ambition, and wonders at their conſenting to a hearing of this cauſe before the King.

In The CXXXIXth, he puts Daimbert, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, in mind, that the conteſt, about the Election of a Biſhop of Paris, ought to be determined by him in Conſiſtory, and that he ſhould Convene the Biſhops his Suffragans, for that purpoſe, when and where he pleas'd.

In The CXLth, he Aſſerts, that no Man ought to Scruple aſſiſting at Divine Service, or receiving the Sacrament from the hands of a Prieſt ſuſpected of Scandal, or notorious for an ill Life.

In The CXLIſt, he aſſures Richard, Biſhop of Albane and Legat of the Holy See, that he ſhould as heartily rejoyce at King Philip's abſolution, as he had griev'd at his being Excommunicate, if it might be for the Honour of God and of the Holy See, to grant it; that, though he ſomewhat doubts of the Sincerity of the King's Converſion, yet he will not oppoſe his being Abſolv'd; but adviſes that the Ceremony be perform'd as publickly, and Solemnly as is poſſible, and rather at any other place than at Sens: He tells him, moreover, he would willingly appear at the Council he Summons him to, if he will obtain for him the King's Paſſport, without which he dares not venture abroad, his Majeſty having been incens'd againſt him for theſe Ten Years paſt. This Letter was written in the Year 1104.

The CXLIId is a Letter of Thanks to Mathilda, Queen of England, for the Bells ſhe had given to the Church of Chartres, and her promiſe of repairing and New-Adorning that Church.

The CXLIIId carries Ivo's acknowledgments, to Robert Earl of Meulan, for the kind reception he gave to Richard Abbot of Preaux, and Prays him to haſten the Reſtitution of the goods of his Monaſtery.

The CXLIVth informs Pope Paſchal of what was done in the Aſſembly of Biſhops, call'd together at Baugency, by his Legat, Girard, Biſhop of Albane, to be witneſſes of the Separation of King Philip and Bertrade. He tells him, they were both ready to Swear, upon the Holy Evangeliſts, that they would Forbear all Carnal knowledge of each other; the Legate would have had the Biſhops have given judgment upon them, but they declin'd it, and ſo the whole came to Nothing: Ivo therefore, prays the Pope to put an End to this matter and diſpenſe with the King as far as he can. He acquaints the Pope, alſo, that Gualon not finding it poſſible to get poſſeſſion of the Biſhoprick of Beauvais, becauſe of King Louis's Oath againſt admitting him, he hopes he may be Transfer'd to the See of Paris, to which he has been alſo Elected by the Clergy and People of that City.

In The CXLVth, he intreats Manaſſes Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, to determine, as ſpeedily as may be, whether Gualon ſhall continue Biſhop of Beauvais, or not.

In The CXLVIth, he acquaints Daimbert, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, that the Clergy and People of Paris have unanimouſly Elected Gualon, for their Biſhop, and that ſince no Biſhop can be Tranſlated to another See without Leave from his Metropolitan, and the Popes Diſpenſation, he prays him to uſe his intereſt at Rome, to obtain one for Gualon.

In The CXLVIIth, he intercedes with Pope Paſchal to diſpenſe with the Oath taken by the Chapter of Chartres, not to admit into their Fraternity, the Sons of ſuch as had been Servants to any one, ſo that they may hereafter be allow'd to admit the Sons of any of the Earl of Chartres Domeſticks, or the Officers of the King's Revenues; and aſſures his Holineſs that without abating of the Rigour of that Oath, the Church of Chartres could never enjoy any Peace.

In The CXLVIIIth, to Hildebert, Biſhop of Mans, he determines, that a certain Man who (as he writes) had promiſed Marriage to his Concubine in her Sickneſs, was bound by the Law of God, to acknowledge her, afterwards for his Wife.

In The CXLIXth, he exhorts William Arch-Biſhop of Rouen, to Expel out of the Dioceſs of Liſieux the Sons of Count Ranulf Flambard, who had ſeiz'd upon it, and to ſubſtitute in their place the Arch-Deacon of Eureux.

In the CLth, he excuſes himſelf to Pope Paſchal, for not coming to the Council held by him in the Month of March, of which he had not Notice time enough before hand.

In The CLIſt, he complains to Walter Biſhop of Beauvais, of his having Conſecrated Odo, Abbot of St. Quintin, in that City, without his conſent, and contrary to the Opinion and deſires of the Fraternity of that Houſe.

In The CLIId, he Stirs up Ledger, Arch-Biſhop of Bourges, to Vindicate a certain Earl of his Country, who had formerly ſhewn himſelf his true Friend, from the abuſes he ſuffers under.

In the CLIIId, he Earneſtly exhorts William, Arch-Biſhop of Rouen, and Gilbert Biſhop of Eureux, to drive out of the Biſhoprick of Liſieux, Ranulf, Biſhop of Durham, in England, and his two Sons, who had poſſeſs'd themſelves of that Dioceſs.

In The CLIVth, he adviſes Robert Earl of Meulan, to petition the King of England not to countenance the uſurpations of Ranulf.

In the CLVth, to Odo, Arch-Deacon of Orleans, Ivo Treats of this Queſtion; if a Woman who has commited Fornication, and is great with Child may Marry? and concludes that, in ſtrictneſs, no great Bellied Woman, ought to have Carnal knowledge of any Man; but conſidering the infirmity of the Fleſh, St. Paul adviſes Men to uſe their own Wives, for avoiding Fornication, although they are with Child; and therefore, by conſequence, a Man may Marry a Woman in that condition.

In the CLVIth, to Ulric, he ſolves another difficulty, viz, if, in Confeſſion to a Prieſt, a man have own'd himſelf guilty of a Crime deſerving Excommunication, the Prieſt ought publickly to refuſe him the Communion of the Church? to which Ivo anſwers, That unleſs the fault be publickly Known, the Prieſt is not to take Notice of it, before others, but only to abhor it in his own heart, and to give publick Notice to his People, in general Terms, that thoſe who are guilty of ſuch Crimes are already Excommunicate in the ſight of God.

In the CLVIIth, he gives Pope Paſcal an Account of what had hapned in the Dioceſs of Liſieux; that, after Ranulf Flambard was driven out, who had kept it ſeveral Years by violence, William, Arch-Deacon of Eureux, was Canonically Elected Biſhop, who deferring being Conſecrated, upon Account of his Metropolitan's (the Arch-Biſhop of Rouen's) being under Suſpenſion, Flambard had prevail'd with the Duke of Normandy to put one of his Clergy into that See. Ivo having, thereupon, Counſell'd William to appeal, in perſon, to the Pope, intreats his Holineſs to Confirm his Election, and to Conſecrate him at Rome.

In the CLVIIIth, he acquaints Hugh, Arch-Biſhop of Lions, that King Philip and his Son are reſolv'd to make void the Marriage of Conſtance, the King's Daughter, and Hugh Earl of Troyes, becauſe of their being too nearly Related, and deſires the Arch-Biſhop to ſend ſpeedily to all the Biſhops, ſummon'd to Court on this occaſion, the Genealogy of both Families.

In the CLIXth, he writes to Pope Paſchal, that, when any complain to him of Judgments given againſt them in the Court of Rome, he adviſes them to have recourſe again to the Holy See, for relief, not thinking it fit to remove into any other Court a Cauſe that has been determin'd there: This Method he has perſwaded the Monks of St. Maur des Foſſez to take, who had been forc'd by the Council of Tours, held, by Pope Urban, to Surrender to the Earl of Angers the Juriſdiction they had held for 300 Years, over the Monaſtery of St. Maur de Glanfeuil; and prays the Pope to examine, again, the Rights of their pretenſions.

The CLXth, to Odo, Abbot of Jumieges, prays him to receive kindly a Monk who had left his Monaſtery, and deſires to be admitted into it again.

The CLXIſt, to the Provoſt of the Church of Rheims, aſſerts, that, a Man, who promiſes Marriage to a Woman, and afterward Marries another, ought to be Divorc'd and return to his firſt Engagement.

In the CLXIId, he prays John Biſhop of Orleans, to degrade, in as publick and ſevere a manner as may be, a certain Prieſt, who profanely Treated the Sacraments of the Church, before a Womans Statue.

In the CLXIIId, he perſwades Geofry, Abbot of Vendôme, not to ſuffer one of his Monks to hold a Benefice he was poſſeſs'd of.

In the CLXIVth, Ivo reprimands Geofry, Abbot of Blois, for repenting of his having reſign'd his Abbey into the hands of the Pope's Legate, and giving his voice for Maurice to ſucceed him.

The CLXVth, is a Letter of Thanks and Friend-ſhip, to Sampſon Biſhop of Worceſter.

The CLXVIth, is to Humbald, Biſhop of Auxerre, acquainting him that Hugh le Blanc having made his complaint to Bruno, Biſhop of Signi, that Pontius, Nephew to the Biſhop of Troyes, had Married his Daughter Mathilda, by Force, who had been promiſed by her Parents to Galeran, the King's Chamberlain, and that the Legate having given Orders to the Biſhop of Paris to cite Pontius and Mathilda before him, to anſwer for themſelves, that Biſhop had Summon'd them to appear before a Council held by him, for that purpoſe, at Paris: There, Mathilda affirm'd that Pontius Married her without her conſent, or that of her Parents; Pontius could not anſwer any thing in his own Defence, but ſtole out of Court: Then, Mathilda brought Ten witneſſes to Swear ſhe had been eſpouſed to another Man, and was Married to Pontius againſt her will; upon which the Biſhops declar'd the Marriage Null, and that ſhe was free to Marry any other Man. Ivo acquaints the Biſhop of Auxerre with theſe particulars, underſtanding that one of his Dioceſs had a mind to Marry her, which he aſſures him he may doe without Scruple. This Letter was written in the Year, 1106.

In the CLXVIIth, he writes to the Biſhop of Mans, to hinder the Marriage of one who had already Engag'd himſelf to another Woman.

In the CLXVIIIth Letter, to Daimbert, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, he ſpeaks of the difference that [illegible] been between the Viſcount of Chartres and Count Rotroc, about a Farm, in the Dioceſs of Char-

The former of them had given it to Ivo, Lord of Courbeville, whom the party of Rotroc ſeiz'd [illegible] kept priſoner, though he were one of thoſe appointed to go to the Holy Land: The Viſcount of Chartres having complain'd of this matter to the Pope, his Holineſs appointed the Arch-Biſhop of Sens, the Biſhops of Chartres and Orleans, Commiſſioners to ſettle it.

Ivo Biſhop of Chartres, after he has, by this Letter, inſtructed Daimbert in the merits of the cauſe adviſes him to take care how he proceeds in it, and to conſider if it will be moſt adviſable for them to Excommunicate Rotroc, or to cite both parties before them: Daimbert is of opinion that they are oblig'd, by the Popes Letter to them, immediately to Excommunicate Rotroc; but Ivo, thinking this too hard meaſure, conſults Gualon, Biſhop of Paris, about it, in the 169th Letter; and in the 170th Letter, tells Daimbert, again, that he cannot joyn in ſo unjuſt an action, as cutting off one from the Communion of the Church, before he be found, upon fair Tryal, to deſerve it, eſpecially, ſince Rotroc is willing to ſtand to the Examination and Sentence of their Court, which his Adverſaries decline doing as much as they can. In his Letter, alſo, he determines that a Woman that Marries her Husband's Murderer ought not to be ſeparated from him, if ſhe can juſtify her ſelf from having a hand in the Murder, and the Man can offer reaſonable proof, that he had never Carnal knowledge of her during her Husband's Life, nor contriv'd his Death, to have the enjoyment of her to himſelf.

In the CLXXIſt Letter, he tells Daimbert, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, that he ſcarce knows how to adviſe him to deal with ſome he had Excommunicated for ſtealing the goods of the Church, and violating violating the obſervation of Holy-Days; if he receive them to the Communion again, before they have made reſtitution, 'twill be directly contrary to the Laws; if he perſiſt in keeping them out, he muſt, of neceſſity, incur the King's diſpleaſure: And though, if he have Courage enough, he ought to ſee that the Rigour of diſcipline be obſerv'd; yet, becauſe ſuch ſeverity may occaſion diſmal inconveniences, he adviſes him to uſe moderation; chiefly becauſe the adminiſtration of temporal Affairs naturally belongs to Kings, who are not, unadviſedly, to be exaſperated, if they ſometimes go beyond the bounds of their Authority, but muſt be left to God's Judgment, when they will not yield to the humble admonitions and Remonſtrances of the Clergy. for his part, Ivo proteſts, that were he oblig'd, in obedience to his Superiors, to readmit an Excommunicate perſon in to the Church, without penance or ſatisfaction, he would do it by ſome ſuch Form as this; "Do "not deceive your Self; I admit you into the viſible Church, notwithſtanding the Crimes you are "guilty of; but I cannot open to you the Gates of the Kingdom of Heaven, and therefore I abſolve "you, no farther than I have power to do it; thoſe of more Courage and Piety, may find out bet-"ter methods in ſuch caſes. This ſeems to me proper enough; not that I hereby preſcribe to others, but to prevent farther miſchiefs to the Church, think it beſt to ſubmit, thus far, to the neceſſity of the Times.

The CLXXIId Letter contains a judgment given by Ivo, in Favour of the Monks of St. Laurner at Blois, againſt the Abbot and Monks of Vendôme concerning a Chappel, near Baugency, which he adjudges to belong to the Juriſdiction of the former, notwithſtanding the Abbot of Vendôme's having appeal'd to the Holy See.

In the CLXXIIId, he relates to Pope Paſchal, what had paſs'd at the Tryal of Rotroc, who, he tells him, has now appeal'd to his Holineſs.

In the CLXXIVth, he aſſures Mathilda, Queen of England, that he will pray for the Soul of her Brother (Edgar, King of Scotland, who died, without iſſue, in the Year 1107.) for though he doubts not but his Soul is in Abraham's boſom; yet ſince we cannot be certain of the State of Souls in the other World, it is a piece of commendable Devotion to pray even for thoſe in Heaven, that their happineſs may be augmented; and for thoſe in Purgatory, that their ſins may be forgiven them.

In the CLXXVth, he excuſes himſelf to Pope Paſchal, for not appearing at the Council he cites him to, (held at Troyes, Anno 1107.) by reaſon of his being very much indiſpos'd; but tells his Holineſs, he has ſent his three Arch-Deacons in his ſtead.

In the CLXXVIth, to the ſame Pope, he prays him not to oblige Volgrin Chancellor of the Church of Chartres to accept of the Biſhoprick of Dol, to which he was Elected by the Deputies of that Church in the Council of Troyes; and.

In the CLXXVIIth Letter, he acquaints the Clergy of Dol, that Volgrin will not accept of that Biſhoprick.

In the CLXXVIIIth, he Counſels Geofry, Biſhop of Beauvais, to puniſh one of his Clergy, who had admitted to Divine Service and conſorted with an Excommunicated perſon.

In the CLXXIXth, to Adela, Counteſs of Chartres, he complains of her denying the Clergy of his Church the privileges of Travelling the Roads and of buying Bread and Wine, and threatens her, in caſe ſhe do not Revoke the Orders ſhe has publiſh'd to this Effect, that the whole Clergy of the Province ſhall dayly curſe her at the high Altar.

The CLXXXth Letter gives Ledger, Arch-Biſhop of Bourges, advice to abate ſometimes the Rigour of juſtice; and not to be ſo wholly govern'd by ſome of his Clergy, as not to doe any thing but according to their Pleaſures, even in judicial matters; as hapned lately, in the caſe of Arnoulf of Vierſon, who was ſo exaſperated by his hard uſage, that he was forc'd to appeal to Rome, upon the very firſt hearing before them.

The CLXXXIſt is to Richard, Biſhop of Albane, the Popes Legate, upon a diſpute between the Monks of Vezelay and thoſe of St. Lucian at Beauvais, about a Church they both of them laid claim to.

The CLXXXIId is to Daimbert, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, concerning a difference between Ivo and the Chapter of Chartres, who had oppos'd and violently affronted him, for conferring the Office of Sub-Dean upon Fulk: The Arch-Biſhop is agreed upon to be Judge between them, and Ivo prays him to appoint the day and place, where their cauſe ſhall be heard, which he wiſhes may be at Chartres.

In the CLXXXIII, to William, Biſhop of Paris, he aſſerts, that if a Man challenge a Woman for his Wife, upon pretence that her Father promis'd her to him, he muſt bring witneſſes of ſuch promiſe, and that the Tryal by ſingle combat is not to be allowed in caſes of this Nature.

The CLXXXIVth, to Walter, Library-Keeper of Beauvais, maintains, that all Actions about Goods belonging to the Church are to be brought before Eccleſiaſtical Judges.

In the CLXXXVth, he gives anſwer to what William, Arch-Biſhop of Rouen had written him about one who had gotten himſelf Ordain'd Sub-Deacon, before he had paſs'd the inferior degrees of Holy Orders: In ſtrictneſs of Law, Ivo acknowledges, that he ſhould not be permitted to exerciſe the functions of the Order he has obtain'd, nor to Riſe to the higher Orders; however, if his Life and Converſation be unexceptionable and the good of the Church require it, he thinks the Arch-Biſhop may give him the Clerical Benediction, and let him aſſiſt at Ordinations, not to be Re-Ordain'd, but to Confirm him in his Orders.

In the CLXXXVIth Letter, he Anſwers ſeveral Queſtions propos'd to him by Laurence, a Monk of the Monaſtery of Charity: 1. He aſſerts that we are oblig'd to avoid only thoſe that are Excommunicated for the moſt notorious and abominable faults; 2. That of ſuch we are not to receive any thing, but in extream neceſſity, nor, are we to give them any thing but for their relief, in utmoſt want want and miſery; 3. That thoſe of the Clergy who buy of Lay-men, goods that formerly belong'd to the Church, or receive ſuch from them by way of Gift, are much to blame, if they doe it with any other deſign but of reſtoring them to the Church: 4. That, they who, in private Confeſſion, diſcover themſelves to be guilty of the greateſt crimes are not, therefore, to be Excommunicated, nor put to publick penance, as publick offenders; however, they are to be admoniſh'd to abſtain from the Sacrament, and from the Functions of their Orders, if they are Eccleſiaſticks: 5. That the Sacraments are not the leſs profitable for being adminiſtred by wicked Prieſts, nor (6.) by Simoniacal ones, or ſuch as are Married: 7. That the People ought not to abandon their Prelate, nor fail in their obedience to him, though in many reſpects blameable, till he is publickly Condemn'd or Excommunicated: 8. That Confeſſion of common and ſmall ſins may be made to any Chriſtian, but that great faults are to be confeſs'd only to thoſe who have the power of binding and looſing: 9. That one may entertain an Excommunicated Perſon, provided he doe not Eat with him, nor ſalute him.

In the CLXXXVIIth, he admoniſhes the Counteſs of Chartres, to leave troubling the Abbot and Monks of Bonneval on Account of the murder of Hugh the Black.

In the CLXXXVIIIth, to Ralph, Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, he delivers his opinion, That a Woman who is deliver'd of a Child within two or three Months after her Marriage, is not to be divorced from her Husband.

The CLXXXIXth contains Ivo's anſwer to the complaints of the Arch-Biſhop and Clergy of Rheims, againſt the Arch-Biſhop of Sens, for having Conſecrated King Louis le Gros: Ivo remonſtrates that the Conſecration could not be longer deferr'd, that it could not be perform'd at Rheims, becauſe Ralph was not then fully poſſeſs'd of that Archbiſhoprick, and the City of Rheims was under an Interdict; that, beſides, he knows no Law that Orders that Office to be perform'd there, but can prove that ſeveral of the Kings of France have been Conſecrated elſewhere, and by the Biſhops of other Cities.

In the CXCth, Ivo gives Pope Paſchal an Account of the Accommodation agreed to between the King and Ralph Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, on condition that Ralph take an Oath of homage to the King for his Archbiſhoprick: This he ſays they were oblig'd to conſent to, not as a thing neceſſary in it ſelf, but to procure Peace, and prevent farther diſtraction in the Nation.

In the CXCIſt, he intercedes with Hugh Abbot of Cluny in behalf of one of his Monaſtery, whom he had degraded, upon an accuſation brought againſt him of having procur'd abortion to a Woman great with Child, before he took the vow of a Monk upon him. Ivo thinks his puniſhment too ſevere, and that though the fact were clearly prov'd againſt him, as it is not, he ſhould not ſuffer for ever, for a fault he may have long ſince repented of.

In the CXCIId, to the Monks of Colombs, near Nogent le Roi, he diſſwades them from hearkning to the advice ſomebody had been giving them of quitting their Monaſtery, becauſe their Superiors had taken away ſome Tithes, belonging to the Biſhop's Juriſdiction; he ſhews them, that they ought rather to remain in ſubjection to their Superiors, and live upon ſuch Tithes as the Church ſhall in Charity allow to the Monaſteries, as ſhe does to Hoſpitals, than turn Sarabaïtes and live upon the goods of the poor, or the gain of uſury: nevertheleſs, he blames the Abbots and Superiors of Monaſteries for buying Tithes of Lay-men for their own uſes, to the damage of the Church, though this be no reaſon for the Monks to withdraw themſelves from the Monaſteries and the Subjection they have ſworn to them: he approves well enough of the Lives of ſuch Anchorets as, after having been train'd up in Monaſteries, retire wholly into Solitudes; but highly blames thoſe who make it their buſineſs to run from Town to Town to be admir'd at themſelves, and proudly deſpiſe all that are not of their profeſſion, deſiring to be thought Maſters, before they have been Scholars.

In the CXCIIId, he adviſes Geofrey, Biſhop of Beauvais, not to infringe the Privileges granted to the Monaſtery of St. Quintin, by the Biſhops his predeceſſors, and confirm'd to them by the Authorities of the Holy See and the King's Majeſty.

In the CXCIVth, he ſends Notice to Hugh Dean of Orleans, and Volgrin, his Arch-Deacon, that he has Excommunicated Chenard, belonging to his Dioceſs, and therefore, according to the direction of the Canon, they are not to entertain him.

The CXCVth, is a very ſevere Anſwer to a diſpleaſing Letter he had received from Geofrey, Abbot of Vendome, with whom, for the future, he renounces all correſpondence, till he behave himſelf better.

In the CXCVIth, to King Louis le Gros, he begs that Prince not to order proceſs againſt the Abbot of St. Denys for what he is charg'd with by a certain Monk, who having own'd himſelf a Criminal, his Teſtimony againſt the innocence of others is not to be receiv'd.

In the CXCVIIth to William Abbot of Marmoutier, he agrees with him that a Prieſt, who, to fright his Enemies, ſet fire to his own houſe, and thereby unhappily Burnt a Neighbours Child, ought to undergoe the penalties appointed by the Canons.

The CXCVIIIth, the CXCIXth, and the CCIſt Letters are about a difference, between Giſlebert, Nephew to the Arch-Biſhop of Tours, and Geofrey Canon of that Church, concerning the Government of Syeurre, the determination of which matter the Pope had put into the hands of Ivo Biſhop of Chartres, and the Biſhops of Paris and Soiſſons: By the two firſt Letters, he cites Giſlebert, to appear before them and by the laſt, he acquaints the Pope, that, upon his refuſing to own their Authority he had ſent Geofrey to his Holineſs for juſtice.

In the CCth Letter, he admoniſhes Daimbert, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, to correct two Scandalous practices in his Church; one, of the Chaunter's holding another preferment, contrary to his Oath; the other, in one of the Chapter's keeping in his houſe two Women of very ill fame.

The CCIId Letter is a notable inſtance of the Liberty us'd by Ivo, in dealing with the greateſt Princes King Louis had ſent to him for ſome Outlandiſh Furrs; Ivo tells him, 'tis not decent for a King to ask ſuch vanities of a Biſhop, nor is he bound to obey any ſuch Orders from a King; that he could not believe, at firſt, the Letter came from his Majeſty, and ſends this Anſwer, that he may not any more, make ſuch requeſts to him, or any other Biſhop, if he deſire they ſhould retain a due eſteem for his Majeſty.

In the CCIIId, to Liſiard, Biſhop of Soiſſons, he ſhews him, from good Authority, that he has a Right to demand of the Arch-Deacons of his Dioceſs, part of the profits due to the Biſhop, which they have taken upon them to receive for themſelves, both before and ſince his acceſſion to the Biſhoprick.

By the CCIVth, he informs Pope Paſchal, that he had Excommunicated Guy of Puiſet, for his Sacrilegious and outragious attempts againſt the Church of Chartres, and petitions his Holineſs to Confirm the Excomunication, and to Order the Arch-Biſhop of Sens and the Biſhops of Paris and Orleans, to publiſh it in their Churches: he informs the Pope, likewiſe, of a difference between the Dean and Sub-Dean of Chartres, and prays him to compoſe it.

The CCVth Letter is written to a Knight, who ſuſpected his Wife to have been with Child by another man, becauſe he had been abſent from her ſeven days longer than is uſual between the times of conception and bringing forth, and becauſe the perſon whom he ſuſpected of being too familiar with her had been Burnt in paſſing the Tryal of Ordeal: As to the computation of Time, Ivo tells him, that ought not to ſway him, ſince many Women goe much longer with Child, and, for the Tryal by fire, no heed is to be given to it, ſo that theſe two Reaſons prove nothing againſt the honeſty of his Wife, whoſe Oath and the good word of her Neighbours and Acquaintance ought fully to ſuffice in Vindication of her.

In the CCVIth Letter, to Hildebert, Biſhop of Mans, he Examines, by what Method an Eccleſiaſtick accus'd of Crimes or Mildemeanors is to purge himſelf; and ſays that, heretofore, his ſingle Oath was ſufficient, but that for better Security, the Oaths of ſix or ſeven other Clergymen have been requir'd, together with that of the party's.

The CCVIIth is a Letter of Thanks to the Biſhop of Worceſter.

In the CCVIIIth Letter, Ivo reproves Geofrey, Abbot of Vendôme, that, having quitted that place and retir'd into a private Cell, he entertains there Monks that are diſobedient to and abuſe their Abbot, and that he hinders thoſe who hold Eſtates of the Abbot from doing homage to him.

In the CCIXth he repreſents to Hugh, Earl of Troyes, that the Conſultation intended to be held at Sens about the validity of the King's Marriage with the Marqueſs Boniface's Daughter, the Earls Kinſwoman, will neither be honourable, nor of any advantage to her: It will be to no purpoſe, becauſe the Marriage will certainly be declar'd Null by the Biſhops and Lords of the Realm; nor will it be for her honour, becauſe it will occaſion the illegitimacy of her Birth to be talk'd of; ſo that, Ivo adviſes the Earl to hinder, if he can, all debates about that matter.

In the CCXth he writes Pope Paſchal word that Odo, Biſhop of Cambray, complains of his Holineſs, for turning out of the Arch-Deaconry of his Church, one who was a zealous friend of the Holy See, and putting in one who is an Enemy to it.

In the CCXIth, to Ralph, Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, he deduces the Genealogies of the Earl of Flanders, and the Daughter of the Earl of Rennes, to ſhew they are nearly Related.

The CCXIIth to Geofrey Biſhop of Beauvais, is about the validity of a Donation granted to the Monaſtery of St. Simphorien.

In the CCXIIIth, to John Biſhop of Orleans, he proves that the Regular Clergy may have Cure of Souls and Pariſhes committed to them.

In the CCXIVth, to Bruno, Arch-Biſhop of Treves, he bemoans the ſad State of Religion, under the unhappy diviſions between the Church and the Civil Government.

The CCXVth is a Letter of compliment and friendſhip, to Thomas, Arch-Biſhop of York.

In the CCXVIth, and CCXVIIth Letters, he give Richard, Biſhop of Albane, Legate of the Holy See, an account of the diſpute between the Monks of Bonneval and thoſe of Blois, which he tells him he had us'd his beſt endeavours to accommodate, but could not yet effect it.

In the CCXVIIIth, he writes, to Gualon, Biſhop of Paris, that the Canon of that Church, who had lately been Married, ought to looſe his preferment and be degraded from being a Clergy-man, but that his Marriage muſt remain good and valid.

In the CCXIXth, he juſtifies himſelf, to Pope Paſchal, for having divided part of a Prebend of his Church among the Canons, by dayly diſtributions, for the Encouragement of ſuch as aſſiſted, conſtandy, in performing Divine Service.

In the CCXXth, to Hildebert, Biſhop of Mans, he ſhews, that when an appeal is made from one Judge to another, the party concern'd is, within five days after he appeals, to get a Letter from the firſt Judge to the other he appeals to, who is not elſe oblig'd to take cognizance of the Matter. He aſſerts, alſo, in this Letter, that it is not in the power of any Biſhop, to give up the Eſtate of a Religious Society to the ſole diſpoſal of the Abbot.

In the CCXXIſt Letter, to John Biſhop of Orleans, concerning a free-man's having Married a Slave, without knowing her to be ſo; Ivo ſays that, by the Civil Law, the Marriage is void, and he may quit her and marry another Woman; but that, by the Laws of God and of Nature, they ought to keep together, or at leaſt, if he put her away he may not marry again.

In the CCXXIId, to the Clergy of Autun, he inquires, if a Woman that has been guilty of Adultery, muſt neceſſarily be Divorc'd from her husband, and concludes that in ſtrictneſs, ſhe ought; but, by the wiſdom of the Goſpel, ſuch a Temper was preſcrib'd as may reconcile her to her husband.

In the CCXXIIId, to Owen, Biſhop of Eureux, he perſwades him to Excommunicate and deny Chriſtian Burial, to ſuch as embezil the Patrimony of the Church.

In

In the CCXXXIVth, he tells Guy, Abbot of Molême, that one of his Monks having been with him and acknowledged with great Sorrow, that he took Orders for the sake of Temporal gain only; though by the Rigour of the Canons he ought for ever to be turn'd out of the Clergy, yet having expres'd true Repentance for his Sin, he thinks he may be permitted to retain his Orders, and to Exercise the Functions of them.

In the CCXXXVth, to Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, he delivers his judgment, that a certain person who came and confess'd that, before he was Married, he had Carnal knowledge of his Wife's Sister, ought to be deem'd ever after, infamous, and his evidence not to be heard against any man; that he ought also to be Divorc'd from his Wife and live the rest of his Life unmarried; but that his Wife should have her Portion back again.

CCXXXVIth, he requests Bernier, Abbot of Bonneval, to receive kindly one of his Monks, who was sorry for having left his Monastery, and beg'd leave to come into it again.

The CCXXXVIIth is a Letter of Condoleance to Pope Paschal; and acquaints him that being desirous of bestowing a Prebend, in his Church, upon Guarin, he is oppos'd therein by the Dean and Chapter.

In the CCXXXVIIIth, to Goubier, a Priest, Ivo answers a Scruple he had propos'd to him, viz. How to reconcile these words of the Prophet Ezechiel, (At what time-soever a sinner shall Repent, and turn from the Evil of his ways, he shall save his Soul alive, or be forgiven,) with the Sentence and discipline of the Ecclesiastical Canons, which suspends, for some time, even penitents from the Sacrament of the Lords Supper? and how it comes to pass, that those whom Christ, who is the head, immediately releases, the Church who is the body should detain under the Penalty of sin: This difficulty, Ivo says, 'tis Easie to solve, if we consider the manner of God's remitting sins and the frailty of Mankind; that God, who knows the heart, forgives the sin as soon as he sees the heart is converted, but that the Church, which knows not the inward thoughts of a Man, cannot absolve a sinner till his Conversion be made evident by Publick Signs of it.

In the CCXXXIXth, to Lisiard, Bishop of Soissons, he declares that a Man who defames a Married Woman, to any of her Relations, by saying he had Carnal knowledge of her before her Marriage, ought not to be admitted in Court as an evidence against her, because he is criminal himself by his own Confession.

In the CCXXXXth, to Hildebert, Bishop of Mans, he asserts that a Jewish Woman who turns Christian may not quit her husband, nor Marry another, at least unless her husband were her near Relation.

In the CCXXXXIst, to Pontius, Abbot of Cluny, after giving some mystical reasons of the Elevation of the Chalice and the Host and the Signs of the Cross made upon those occasions, he delivers his opinion that a Monk who was forc'd to make himself an Eunuch, to prevent Epileptick fits he was subject to, may notwithstanding be allow'd to take Orders.

In the CCXXXXIId, to Hildebert, Bishop of Mans, he maintains that a Man who had been too familiar with his Wife's Mother before his Marriage, ought not to be Divorc'd from his Wife, but upon good proof of his having been carnally joyn'd to the Mother.

In the CCXXXXIIId, to Henry Abbot of St. John d' Angeli, he declares that he adheres to the opinion of the Popes, Gregory and Urban, touching Investitures given by Lay-men, and believes that they who allow them the power of bestowing Church-preferments are Schismaticks; nor is he affraid of hereby offending Pope Paschal, who has own'd in several Letters to him that what he had done with Relation to the Investitures, he had been constrain'd to do by the violence of others, but was still in his heart of another opinion.

In the CCXXXIVth, he perswades William, Abbot of Marmoutier, to end his quarrels with Ralph, Arch-Bishop of Tours; and in the CCXXXVth, he tells that Arch-Bishop, he is glad that the Bishops of Mans and Angers Labour to procure Peace between him and the Abbot.

The CCXXXVIth Letter is written in the Name of Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, and his Suffragans, to John, Arch-Bishop of Lions, who had summon'd them to a Council, call'd at Anse, near Lions, to consult about matters of Faith and the dispute of Investitures. They assure him, though they have a great respect for him, yet they will not go beyond the limits set them by their Ancestors, and that the Holy Fathers allow'd no Authority to the Bishop of the Chief See to call the other Bishops to any Council, out of their peculiar Provinces, unless by the Express command of the Holy See, or that, upon some Controversy, which could not be Terminated within the Province, any of the Bishops of it should appeal to the Primate. As to the matter of Investitures, propos'd to be Treated of in this Council, they tell him it cannot be done without discovering the nakedness of their Father the Pope; and besides, 'twould be needless to have any thing prov'd against persons they dare not pass Sentence upon; that the Pope may be excus'd for granting Investiture since he did it only by force and in cases of necessity; that 'tis foolishly done of some to bestow the name of heresie upon Investitures, since heresie can be only in matters of Faith, not in the Practice and Discipline of the Church; or at most, those only can be reckon'd guilty of error who suppose some Sacrament or Grace conferr'd by the Investiture, if ever any were so weak as to think so; that however, Investitures are an Invasion upon the Rights and Liberties of the Churches, and ought to be abolish'd in all places, where it may be Effected without endangering a Schism.

The CCXXXVIIth is the Arch-Bishop of Lions's answer to the foregoing Letter, wherein he protests he did not mean to force them out of their Province, to a Council, but only desir'd to Confer with them, and ask their advises about the State of the Church; not but that the Church of Lions has such Authority over the other Churches of France: As to the persons he would have Treated about, he says, there is not one of them but ought to submit to the pleasure of a Council, even Kings and Emperors being subject to the Authority of the Bishops; that he did not design to uncover, but to hide the nakedness of their Father the Pope; that no dangers nor obstacles ought to hinder them from courageouſly defending the cauſe of the Church; that thoſe who approve of Inveſtitures remaining in the hands of the Laity are Heretiks in their hearts; that he will not uſurp any undue Authority over the Dioceſs of Sens, but prays them to remember, 'twas always Subject to the Primacy of the Arch-Biſhop of Lions.

In the CCXXXVIIIth Letter, to Pope Paſchal, Ivo endeavours to diſſwade him from conſtituting a Biſhop over the Church of Tournay, and exempting it from the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Noyon, it has been under theſe 400 Years; leaſt his Holineſs, by ſo doing, create a miſunderſtanding between the King and the Clergy, and raiſe ſuch a Schiſm as hapned in Germany.

In the CCXXXIXth, he Complaiments King Loüis le Gros, upon his intended Marriage with a Niece of the Earl of Flanders.

In the CCXLth, he warns a certain Monk of the Scandal he occaſions by his too great familiarity with a Nun.

In the CCXLIſt he writes to Humband, Biſhop of Auxerre, not to ſuffer a Cauſe, already determin'd in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts, to be brought again before the Earl, or any Secular Judge.

In the CCXLIId, to Owen, Biſhop of Evreux, he explains himſelf concerning his having given his opinion that a Free-man, who had Married a Slave, without knowing her to be ſuch, ought to be Divorc'd from her; and adds that this is not diſſolving a Lawful Marriage, but only declaring that 'tis unlawful for them to live together any longer, their Marriage being Null by Law.

In the CCXLIIId, to Gualon, Biſhop of Paris, he ſays that a Matriage concluded on by the Parents, betweeen two Children in their Cradles, is of no force.

The CCXLIVth is written to Pope Paſchal, in favour of Hubert, Biſhop of Senlis, accus'd by ſome of his Clergy, to the Metropolitan, of ſelling Holy Orders. He had met with hard uſage from the Biſhops of his own Province, and therefore appeals to the Pope, to whom Ivo recommends his Caſe.

The CCXLVth is to Hugh, Earl of Troyes, who having Liſted himſelf for the Holy Land, deſign'd to put away his Wife and live in Celebacy. Ivo commends his Reſolution, but adviſes him to do it with his Wife's conſent and to lead a Regular Life.

In the CCXLVIth to Liſiard, Biſhop of Soiſſons, he declares that 'tis not allowable for a Man to Marry two Siſters, ſucceſſively, though the Marriage with the former of them were not conſummated.

In the CCXLVIIth, to John Biſhop of Orleans, Ivo highly blames him that, upon a quarrel between the Earl of Orleans and Ralph Lord of Baugency, he and his Church had conſented that they ſhould decide it by ſingle Combat: And,

In the CCXLVIIIth, he adviſes the latter to carry himſelf reſpectfully towards the Earl of Orleans.

In the CCXLIXth, to Gilbert, Arch-Deacon of Paris, he affirms, that thoſe who had been aſſiſtant and conſenting to an Adultery, cannot be receiv'd as witneſſes againſt the Adultereſs.

In the CCLth, he intercedes with Pope Paſchal, that he will grant to Ralph, Biſhop of Rocheſter, Elected to the See of Canterbury, the Confirmation of that Dignity, and alſo the Pallium which he is not able to come and ask in perſon of his Holineſs.

In the CCLIſt to Manaſſes, Biſhop of Meaux, he tells him, he did well to refuſe adminiſtring the Viaticum (or laſt Sacrament) to a dying perſon, who was troubled with a conſtant vomiting.

In the CCLIId, he writes to Ralph, Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, that he thinks it unreaſonable that a Woman ſuſpected of Adultery by her husband, ſhould undergo the Tryal of Ordeal, but that it is ſufficient for her to purge her ſelf upon Oath.

In the CCLIIId, he recommends to King Loüis's favour and protection Godfrey, Biſhop of Amiens, who had met with ill uſage in his Dioceſs.

In the CCLIVth, he vouches for Geofrey, Arch-Biſhop of Roüen, to Pope Paſchal, that it was not in his power to wait upon his Holineſs at Rome, as he would otherwiſe have done.

The CCLVth is a Letter of Conſolation to Ralph Abbot of Fuſein, in his ſickneſs; exhorting him to bear his afflictions patiently, and to ſee one choſen in his ſtead to govern the Monaſtery, if he find himſelf uncapable of doing it: telling him alſo, that the Extream Unction being a Sacrament needs not be Repeated.

In the CCLVIth, he diſſwades Raimaud, a Monk, from turning Hermite.

In the CCLVIIth, he gives Philip, Biſhop of Troyes, an Account of the Accommodation made by the Regular Canons of St. Quintin, at Beauvais between Odo Prior of St. Georges, and ſome of his Canons.

In the CCLVIIIth, he recommends to Pope Paſchal the Affairs of Hubert, Biſhop of Senlis.

In the CCLIXth, he expoſtulates with Ralph, Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, concerning a Judgment he had given againſt the Church of St. Quintin, at Beauvais with Relation to a Mill they claim'd Right to, and ſays before him the wrong he conceives done to them.

In the CCLXth, he aſſures Steven of Guarland, the King's Chancellor, that he may with a ſafe Conſcience, be Elected to ſucceed Gualon, Biſhop of Paris, who is to be remov'd to Beauvais.

In the CCLXIſt, he diſſwades Henry, King of England, from Marrying his Daughter to Hugh, an Earl in the Dioceſs of Chartres, there being too near a Relation between them.

In the CCLXIId, to Pontius, Abbot of Cluny, he ſhews him the reaſon, why in the Conſecration of the Cup, at the Lord's Supper, the words [Myſtery of Faith] are added, which were not us'd by our Saviour, at the Inſtitution of this Sacrament? and ſays, (among other things) that this is done becauſe we judge of the greatneſs of the Myſtery contained in it not by the Senſes but by Faith.

By

By the CCLXIIId, he represents to the Clergy of Beauvais, how much he is griev'd for their sufferings.

In the CCLXIVth, he intercedes with King [illegible] the Clergy and People of that City.

In the CCLXVth, he acquaints that Prince, how much he had been misinform'd by some, who had suggested to him that the Clergy of the Church of Chartres, do invade the Rights of the Chapter and represents to him, that they only hinder them from some exactions prohibited by the Holy See.

In the CCLXVIth to Conon, Bishop of Palestine, and Legate of the Holy See, in France, after giving him an Account of his having Excommunicated Hugh, for a breach of Peace, he prays him to make choice of wise and Religious Persons to be judges at the Tryal he is to have with the Monks of Marmoutier, for the Church of St Nicholas de Courbeville.

The CCLXVIIth Letter is to the same Legate, about the same Affair: Ivo, therein sends his excuse, that he could not wait on him in person to plead for himself.

In the CCLXVIIIth, he writes to the Bishops of Beauvais, Chalons, Amiens and Senlis, Commissioners for hearing this Cause, letting them know that judgment had already been given, in favour of the Bishop of Chartres, by Hugh, Bishop of Die, in a Council held at Issoudun.

In the CCLXIXth, he tells Bernier, Abbot of Bonneval, that he ought not to hinder one of his Monks from turning Hermite.

In the CCLXXth, to Turgedas, Bishop of Auranches, he advises him to submit to the decision of the Pope's Legate, or to send deputies to Rome, to plead there in his own behalf.

In the CCLXXIst, he thanks Pope Paschal, for granting to the Clergy of Chartres a Confirmation of their Privileges, to shelter them from the exactions of the Chapter: And whereas two of that body had disputed the Authority of the Popes Decree, and complain'd of it to the King, he prays his Holiness to do what he thinks farther necessary to enforce the Execution of it.

In the CCLXXIId, he exhorts Reginald, Bishop of Angers, to be reconciled to one Mathilda, of his Diocese, and to endeavour to reclaim her from ill courses.

In CCLXXIIId, he intercedes with Conon, the Pope's Legate, to moderate the Sentence of Excommunication, issued out by him against the Bishops of Normandy, in favour of the Bishop of Bayeux.

In the CCLXXIVth, he writes to Pope Paschal, concerning a Controversy he has with the Monks of Marmoutier, who to create him trouble, had appeal'd to Rome and cited him to appear there, though living at a great distance and very ill: he intreats the Pope to appoint some to judge between them at home, and wishes him not to grant any Clergy-man a dispensation to hold two Benefices.

In the CCLXXVth, he informs Conon, the Pope's Legate, that he has acquainted Count Theobald with the Sentence of Excommunication he had published against all that had a hand in taking the Earl of Nevers, and which would have its course against him, if he did not set the Earl at Liberty, by a time therein prefix'd him: He says the Count was somewhat surpriz'd that the King had refer'd this matter to the Ecclesiastical Judicature; since he is very ready to appear before the King's Judges, and doubts not but he can make it appear to them that not he but the Earl of Nevers is to blame, and offers, if they shall require it, to deliver him up to them.

By the CCLXXVIth, he recommends to Pope Pascal Turstin Arch-Bishop of York Elect.

In the CCLXXVIIth to Aubert, Bishop Elect of Mans, he tells him, he hears he was guilty of several irregularities, while he was an Arch-Deacon, and that he was not Canonically Elected to the Bishoprick. He refers him therefore to the witness of his own Conscience, and exhorts him not to take the Government of others upon him while he himself lies under any such guilt.

The CCLXXVIIIth is a Letter of Compliment, to Robert, Bishop of Lincoln.

In the CCLXXIXth to Lisiard, Bishop of Soissons, he perswades him to receive one of the Clergy of his Church, upon his submitting to Penance, or to give him leave to remove to some other Church.

In the CCLXXXth, to the same Bishop, Ivo determines, that a Married man may not be suffer'd to accuse his Wife of Adultery, upon suspicion only, nor to force her to pass the Tryal by red-hot irons.

In the CCLXXXIst, he writes to Anselm, Bishop of Beauvais, that he is ready at any time to attest, that the Clergy of St. Peters, in Beauvais, had granted to the Regular Canons of St. Quintin, in that City, the inheritance of a piece of Land they now lay claim to again.

The CCLXXXIId is an Instrument in Form, by which Ivo takes into the protection of the Church of Chartres an Hospital for poor People, lying at Châteaudun.

The CCLXXXIIId is an Act, for Consecrating a piece of ground near Tiron, for a Church-yard and putting it under the Jurisdiction of the Church of Chartres.

The CCLXXXIVth is a Deed making over, for ever, to the Monastery of Bonneval the Church of St. Peter, at Châteaudun, which some of the Clergy had redeem'd from a Lay-man, in whose possession it was before.

The CCLXXXVth is a Confirmation of the Gift of the Church of St. Nicasius, at Meulan, by Robert Earl of Meulan, to the Monks of Bec.

The CCLXXXVIth is the Charter of the Foundation of the Abby of St. John du Val, in the Suburbs of Chartres.

The CCLXXXVIIth is concerning the Eucharist, of which we have already given an Extract. It was written by Ivo, while he was a Regular Canon of St. Quintin at Beauvais.

The CCLXXXVIIIth is a Confirmation of a Grant, formerly made, to the Monastery of Marmoutier, of the Church of Hanche and a Chappel annex'd to it.

The Last is a Letter to the Abbot of the Monastery of Marmoutier, written in very pressing Terms, to perswade him and his Monks to stand to the Arbitration made by himself and the Earl of Chartres, of the difference between them and the Church of Chartres.

Of the Pannormia of Ivo.

Ivo, Bishop of Chartres, has left us two Collections of the Ecclesiastical Canons; one of them intituled Pannormia, which makes but a small Volume; the other pretty large commonly known by the Name of the Decretal; the former in Eight Books, the Decretum is divided into seventeen. The same Preface is prefix'd to both of them.

The Pannormia is suppos'd by some to have been written by Hugh Bishop of Chalons: and indeed, Vincent, Bishop of Beauvais, mentions an abridgment of the Decretum of Ivo, drawn by him: but that must be different from this we are speaking of, which is not an Epitome of any other Book, but an Original work. In all the Manuscripts, that can be found, it bears the Name of Ivo's Pannormia; particularly, in that in the Library of St. Victor, which was written before the time Hugh Bishop of Chalons liv'd in; which is an evident proof that the Pannormia cannot be his. The Decrees of Innocent IId, who was Pope since Ivo's death, though added in the Editions, are not in the antient Manuscript, nor in several others, as has been observ'd by Antonius Augustinus. The Pannormia was compos'd before the Decretal.

Of the Decretum of Ivo.

THe Decretum is a Collection of Rules and Constitutions in Church-Affairs, taken out of the Letters of the Popes, the Antient Canons and Councils, the writings of the Fathers of the Church and the Laws of Catholick Princes. In the Preface, Ivo gives notice, that he has rang'd them under general heads, or Titles, for the easier finding out any Canon the Reader has occasion to consult. And admonishes that if one Canon shall seem to have a different meaning from that of another, we are not presently to conclude they are contradictory; but to remember that some are to be understood according to the Rigour of their import, others are to be taken with allowances; for that all Ecclesiastical Discipline aiming only at that Edification which is founded upon Charity, every Rule and Order of the Church is intended for the same End; upon which Account, the Spiritual Physicians, the Guides of Souls, Accommodate their Remedies and Prescriptions to the quality of the distempers and the condition of their patients: that moreover, we are to distinguish between what is laid down by way of advice, and what is deliver'd as a precept or command, what is forbid from what is permitted or tolerated only: and among those things that are commanded or forbidden, we must carefully consider that some of them are so, by an Eternal and Immutable Law; others, by the Laws of Men, which may be either changed, repealed, or dispensed with: Of all which distinctions, exceptions, restrictions and allowances he gives very pertinent instances and illustrations out of the Writings of the Fathers.

The Contents of the XVII Parts of the Decretal.

THe Ist Part treats of Faith, and of the Sacrament of Faith called Baptism, of the qualifications requir'd in those that are to be Baptiz'd, of the Ministration, the Ceremonies, the vertues and effects of Baptism and of Confirmation.

The XXth, upon Whitſunday.
The XXIſt, upon the day of St. Peter's being made Biſhop of Rome, (as is ſuppoſ'd.)
The XXIId, upon the Lord's Prayer.
The XXIIId, upon the Apoſtle's Creed.
The XXIVth, of the indecent apparel of Men and Women.

THere is alſo a ſhort Chronicle, of the Kings of France, from Pharamond to Philip the firſt, reckoned by ſome, to be written by Ivo, Biſhop of Chartres; but neither does this ſeem to be his, nor another much larger (aſcrib'd to him by ſome) from Ninus King of Aſſyria, to Louis le Debonnaire, which was written by Hugo Floriacenſis.

The Panormia of Ivo, Biſhop of Chartres, was printed at Baſil, in 1499. and at Louvain in 1557.

The Decretum was printed at Louvain, in 1561. And at Paris, in 1647, with the Letters and Sermons correctly publiſhed by Father Fronto, a Regular Canon of St. Genevieve: In which Edition are added the Learned Notes of Juretus Canon of Langres, and of Souchet Canon of Chartres upon the Letters of our Biſhop.

CHAP. II.

The Hiſtory of the Church of Rome under the Popedom of Paſchal II. Gelaſius II. and Calixtus II. Containing the Riſe, Progreſs, and Concluſion of the Conteſts between the Holy See and the Empire, about the Right of Inveſtitures.

Paſchal II. call'd, before he was Pope, Rainier, was a Tuſcan, the Son of Creſcentius and Alſatia. He embrac'd the Monaſtick Life, and practis'd it in the Abbey of Cluny, under the Abbot Hugh. He was Created Cardinal Prieſt of St. Clement, by Gregory VII. and made Abbot of the Monaſtery of St. Stephen, and St. Lawrence of Rome. After the Death of Urban II. the Cardinals caſt their Eyes upon him to advance him to the Papal Chair. When he had intimation of this, he abſconded for ſome time; but being afterwards diſcovered, he was Proclaimed Pope by all the Cardinals, with the loud Acclamations of the People, and Conſecrated the 14th day of Auguſt, in the Year 1099. The Election of Paſchal II.

The firſt thing he did was entirely to drive out the Anti-pope Guibert. He declar'd War againſt him, and forc'd him to fly to the Mountains of Abruzzo, where he Died, in the Year 1100. His Death did not put an end to the Schiſm which had laſted 20 Years already; for after him came three more Anti-popes, who ſucceeded one after another, but fell within a ſhort time. The firſt was Albert of Atella, whom Richard Duke of Campania, the great ſupporter of Guibert, caus'd to be Elected in his ſtead. At the end of four Months he was taken by Pope Paſchal's Friends, and ſhut up in the Monaſtery of St. Lawrence. After this the people of Cava a ſmall Town near Paleſtrina, undertook to beſtow the Pontificate on a Roman nam'd Theodoric, who enjoy'd the Title of Pope only three Months, and thought himſelf very happy in relinquiſhing it and becoming an Anchoret. Maginulphus who was Elected at Ravenna, by the name of Silveſter IV. ſeem'd to have a greater intereſt, The Death of Guibert. The Anti-popes who ſucceeded him.

intereſt, but he Dy'd within a ſhort time after. By this means Paſchal being freed from all his Rivals, retook Caſtellano and Benevento from the Prince of Capua, and the Town of Ceva, on which Peter Collona Abbot of Farfa had ſeized, and driven Stephen Corſo out of Rome, who having ſeiz'd upon St. Paul's Church, annoy'd the Romans by his continual Incurſions.

The Deſigns of Paſchal II. againſt the Emperor Henry.

Having thus quieted Italy, his deſigns were aim'd againſt the Emperor Henry. Conrad the Son of that Emperor, who was Governor of Italy, Dying in the Year 1101. Henry had a deſign of paſſing into Italy, going to Rome, and holding a Council there the beginning of the Year 1102. to adjuſt the differences that had been between him and the Holy See. The Pope made no open oppoſition to it, nay, he invited the Emperor thither: But foraſmuch as they could not truſt each other, the Emperor would not venture to rely on the Italians, and Paſchal was not very ſorry that Henry did not come into Italy.

The Council of Rome under Paſchal II. againſt the Emperor Henry.

However, he held a very large Council at Rome about the end of Lent, where, Henry not appearing in Perſon, nor having ſent any Ambaſſadors thither, was Excommunicated with all his Adherents. And becauſe ſeveral maintain'd that there ought to be no regard had to ſuch kind of Anathema's, the Pope in this Council drew up a Form in theſe Terms: "I Anathematize all Hereſie, and "chiefly that which diſturbs the State of the preſent Church, which teaches and maintains that "no regard is to be had to Anathema's, and that one may lawfully contemn the Eccleſiaſtical Sanctions. I promiſe to obey Pope Paſchal and his Succeſſors; I approve and condemn what the Holy Catholick Church approves and condemns. The Pope exacted this Oath of all that aſſiſted at the Council, and on Holy-Thurſday publiſhed the Excommunication againſt Henry, drawn up in theſe Words: "Whereas Henry has not ceaſed from rending the garment of Jeſus Chriſt, that is, has not "ceas'd from ravaging the Church by Fire and Sword; from diſhonouring it by his Perjuries, Incontinence, and Homicides; he has been Excommunicated and Condemn'd for his Contumacy and "Diſobedience, by Pope Gregory of Bleſſed Memory, and by our Predeceſſor, Urban II. and we alſo "have anathematiz'd him for ever in our laſt Synod by the Judgment of the whole Church, which "we deſire may be notified to the whole World, and eſpecially to the people reſiding beyond the Mountains, that they may have no hand in his Iniquity.

The Rebellion of Henry V. againſt his Father.

Henry to avoid the ſtroke of this Excommunication, about the end of that Year order'd publication to be made that he intended to reſign the Empire to his Son Henry, and to Travel to the Holy-Land. He not only caus'd this to be publiſhed by Biſhop Eginard, but likewiſe engag'd himſelf by a Vow to undertake this Journey. This propoſal engag'd the affection of the Princes and Clergy of the Empire to him; and ſeveral of his Subjects made preparations to accompany him in this Expedition. But when they perceiv'd that he had no deſign to perform his Vow, they began to change their inclination towards him; which gave his Son Henry an occaſion of Rebelling againſt him, when by his Father's ſtay he ſaw his hopes of very ſuddenly enjoying the Empire fruſtrated. Having enter'd upon this Deſign by the wicked Counſels of three great Lords, he left his Father at Mentz, where he had ſpent the Chriſtmas Holy-days in the Year 1104. and withdrew to Bavaria, Religion being the cloak to cover this unatural Diſloyalty. He began by anathematizing the Hereſie of his Father, and by promiſing Obedience to the Pope. The Nobleſs of Auſtria, Germany, and the Eaſtern parts of France declaring for him, he enter'd into Saxony, where he was very well received; and having ſpent the Eaſter Holy-days at Quiedlingburg, he was acknowledg'd Emperor by all the Towns of that Countrey. Rothard Arch-Biſhop of Mentz, and Gebehard Biſhop of Conſtance, the Pope's Vicars in Germany entred into this Confederacy, and adviſ'd young Henry to reconcile all Saxony to the Holy See.

The Aſſembly of Northuſa in the Year 1105.

Young Henry to eſtabliſh his Power appointed a general Aſſembly of the Biſhops and Clergy to be held on the 29th of May, in the Year 1105. at Northuſa, a Royal Seat; wherein, they made ſeveral Orders with reſpect to the Diſcipline of the Church. They reform'd upon the Spot what they thought they might ſafely do; and what appear'd to be of the moſt conſequence they referr'd to the determination of the Holy See. They therein condemn'd the Hereſie of the Simoniacal, and that of the Nicolaitans, namely of ſuch Clerks as would not live in Celibacy. They therein fix'd the Summer Ember-week, which was to be the Whitſon-week; and order'd that thoſe perſons who had been Conſecrated by falſe Biſhops ſhould be reconcil'd the next Ember-week. Henry V. would not appear at that Council till after he had been invited thither; and when he came he ſeem'd to behave himſelf with a great deal of Modeſty, Humility, and Wiſdom. He declar'd to them, that he did not covet his Father's Throne, and was ready to reſign it to him, if he would but ſubmit to St. Peter and his Succeſſors. The Biſhops of Hildeſheim, Paderborne, and Halberſtat, throwing themſelves at the Feet of the Arch-Biſhop of Mentz their Metropolitan, declar'd, that they would ſubmit to the Holy See; whereupon their Cauſe was referred to be tried by the Pope.

The War between the two Henries.

No ſooner did this Aſſembly break up, but Henry V. marched towards Mentz at the Head of ſome Troops, in order to render himſelf maſter of that City, and to re-eſtabliſh the Arch-Biſhop thereof. The Emperor his Father being within the place, Henry would not venture to inveſt it, but drew his Forces off to Wirtsburgh, which he took by ſurprize, drove out thence Biſhop Erlong, and put Robert in his place. Afterwards he inveſted the Caſtle of Nuremberg, which Surrendred to him at the end of two Months; and being come to Ratisbonn, he was ſet upon by his Father who defeated him and retook that City. Young Henry without being ſhocked at this Overthrow rally'd up more Forces, and having been joyn'd by the Saxons, he encamped over againſt his Father's Army, being ſeparated from each other only by the River Regen. After ſeveral ſlight skirmiſhes, Young Henry found a way of winning over the Princes and Great Men who were in his Father's Army. They would not fight, ſo that the Emperor was forc'd to fly, and left his Son Maſter of the Field, who ſeiz'd on his Father's Treaſures that were at Spires.

About

About the end of the Year it was agreed that a Convention should be held at Mentz, to adjust the difference then on foot between the two Emperors. The Father came upon the Rhine with an intention of being there; but the Son being afraid he should not obtain all that he desir'd from this Convention, had recourse to Fraud and Treachery. He waited upon his Father, protested to him that he was very sorry for what had passed, accompanied him towards Mentz; but in the Road some body acquainted the Old Emperor that a very great number of Lords of Suabia and Saxony his Enemies were Arrived there: Upon this, his Son shew'd him that it would not be safe to trust himself in their hands, and perswaded him to retire to the Castle of Binghen near Mentz. He no sooner enter'd the place, but the Gates were shut upon him, where he was kept close Prisoner. Afterwards they sent to him requiring him to deliver up the Ensigns of his Imperial Dignity, that they might forthwith be conferred on his Son Henry. The Bishops of Albany and Constance, the Pope's Legates in this Assembly, repeated the Excommunication issued out against him. At last, they took him out of the Castle of Binghen, and carry'd him to Ingelheim, where they forc'd him to renounce the Empire, to confess that he had been in fault, and on his Knees to ask Absolution of the Bishop of Albany, who deny'd it him, and referr'd him to the Pope. Young Henry was Crown'd Emperor, and acknowledg'd as such by the Assembly of Mentz. He dispatched Six Bishops in the Quality of Deputies to Rome with several persons of Quality, to obtain a Confirmation of all that had been done at Northusa and Mentz.

Henry IV. is cast into Prison and Dethron'd.

However, Old Henry having made his Escape from Ingelheim, was receiv'd by Henry de Limbourg, Duke of the Lower Lorrain, and by Obert Bishop of Liege who held out several places upon the Rhine for him. The City of Liege was the place he made choice of for his Residence, from whence he wrote Letters to the King of France, to his Son, to the Bishops, and to the Princes of Saxony and Germany. Wherein he makes loud Complaints of the manner wherein he had been us'd, and protests against all that they had forc'd him to do by constraint. In the last Letters, he declar'd that he was ready to pay all manner of Respect to the Pope, to regulate all the Affairs of the Empire by the Advice of Henry Abbot of Clugny, and appeals to the Pope's Determination of all that had been done against him in Germany.

Henry IV. retires to Liege, and issues forth a Declaration.

His Son caus'd an Answer to be return'd to him in the Name of the Lords, to this Effect; "That "the miseries which he had brought upon both the Church and State had oblig'd them to depose him, "and set up his Son on the Throne in his stead: That he had acknowledg'd himself that he was "unworthy of the Empire, and had resign'd it into his Son's hands: That the promises he at present "made signified nothing, since they could not tell how to give any Credit to them: That however, "that he might have no reason to complain, they would consent to have the business examin'd over "again in an Assembly of the Lords and Commons.

The Reply of his Son Henry.

Notwithstanding this Young Henry pursued his Father, and after he had been beaten off from the Bridge of Visel, he invested Cologne, designing afterwards to march to Liege. But the Besieged held out more vigorously than he expected; and after two Months Siege, he was ready to break up, when he received the News of his Father's Death at Liege, the 7th of August, in the Year 1106. The people of Liege obtain'd their Pardon, upon Condition, that they would dig up the Body of the Late Emperor, which was carry'd to Spires, and put into a Sepulchre of Stone, where it remained without the Church unburied for five Years together: The Pope's Partisans were of Opinion, that since he Died Excommunicated, they could not give him Ecclesiastical Burial. Guibert the Antipope was us'd after the same manner, whom they dug up Six Years after his Burial, and cast his Bones to the Common-Shore to insult over his Memory.

The Death of Henry IV.

After the Death of the Emperor Henry IV. those Princes and people who had continu'd firm to his Interests were oblig'd to submit to the New Emperor. The Pope was invited into Germany, and left Rome with that Design. In the way, on the 19th of October, in the Year 1106. he held a Council at Guastalla, a Town of Lombardy, situated on the Po, therein to regulate what concern'd the Churches of Germany and Lombardy, which had been engag'd in the Schism. He therein declar'd that the Bishops, the Priests, and the other Clerks who had been Ordain'd during the Schism, should still keep their Orders, provided, they had not procur'd them by Simony or by force, nor were conscious to themselves of being guilty of any other Crimes. He therein renew'd the Decrees of his Predecessors against Investitures, and prohibited the Alienation of the Church Revenues. He took away from the Metropolis of Ravenna the Towns of Æmilia, that is, Placenza, Parma, Reggio, Modena, and Bologne, to punish it for its Rebellion.

The Council of Guastalla, in the Year 1106.

The Decree against Investitures was disliked by the Emperor, whereupon Paschal instead of going to Mentz, as he had design'd, retir'd into France; and after he had spent the Christmas Holy-days in the Abbey of Clugny, he went to implore the Protection of King Philip. However, the German Nobles and Bishops being conven'd at Mentz, resolv'd upon sending Deputies to the Pope, to let him know that the power of Creating Bishops had been granted by the Holy See to Charlemagne and his Successors; and that therefore he could not divest that Prince of it. These Deputies enter'd into a Conference with the Pope at Chalons, and the Arch-Bishop of Treves being their Prolocutor, after he had told the Pope that the Emperor wish'd him all manner of Prosperity, and profer'd to serve him to the utmost of his Power so long as it did not prejudice the Rights of the Empire, he declar'd that from the time of St. Gregory the Great, the Emperor had notice given him of the person to be chosen; that after he had given his Consent, the Election was publickly made; that then he who was Elected was Consecrated; and that after the Consecration he waited upon the Emperor, to receive from him the Investiture for the Royalties, by the Ring and Pastoral Staff, by which at the same time he did Homage and swore Allegiance to the Emperor: That this custom seem'd to be very reasonable, because without it the

The Reasons alledg'd by the Emperor's Deputies for the Investitures.

Biſhops could not enjoy the Cities, Caſtles, Territories, Fiefs, or any other Revenues depending on the Empire.

The Reaſons alledg'd by the Pope's Deputies for the Inveſtitures.

The Pope reply'd by the Biſhop of Placenza, that the Church being redeem'd by the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt was free, and therefore ought not to be put into Bondage: That if it could not chuſe its Prelates without the Conſent of the Emperor, it would become his Vaſſal; and that if theſe Prelates after their Election were oblig'd to receive the Inveſtiture from him by the Ring and Paſtoral Staff, this would be an Uſurpation on the Prerogative of God himſelf: That laſtly, it was unbecoming and beneath the Sacerdotal Order and Unction, that Hands Conſecrated by the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt ſhould be put into Hands ſtain'd with Blood-ſhed.

The breaking up of the Conference about Inveſtitures.

The Emperor's Deputies withdrew, being very much diſſatisfied at this reply, threatning to put an end to this Debate at Rome, with their Swords in their Hands. The Pope would willingly have renew'd the Buſineſs with Adelbert the Emperor's Chancellor; but they could not come to an agreement in any one point, and the Emperor's Deputies return'd back into Germany.

The Council of Troyes in the Year 1107.

The Pope on his part Aſſembled a Council at Troyes in Campagne, about Aſcenſion-day, in the Year 1107. wherein after he had made ſeveral Inſtitutions about Church Diſcipline, he propos'd to renew the Decrees of his Predeceſſors againſt Laicks concerning themſelves with Eccleſiaſtical Dignities. The Emperor who had ſpent the Eaſter Holy-days at Mentz, made his approaches towards the Council, and ſent thither his Ambaſſadors to acquaint them that the Popes had formerly granted to Charlemagne, the Right of making Biſhops; and that if they would not conſent thereto, to declare that he would prevent the determining of that Affair in a ſtrange Countrey. Upon this remonſtrance the Council granted the Emperor a Years time, that he himſelf might come in perſon to Rome, there to plead the Cauſe in a general Council which ſhould determine it.

The Emperor's Journey into Italy.

The Emperor put off his Journey till ſuch time as he had fully regulated the Affairs of the Empire; after which, in the beginning of the Year 1110. he held a Convention at Ratisbone, wherein he declar'd that he had reſolv'd to go to Rome, there to receive the Imperial Crown, and to adjuſt the differences betwixt the Pope and him. He order'd the Princes of the Empire to prepare to wait upon him, and to raiſe an Army by Auguſt. At that time he ſet out according to his former reſolution. His Army conſiſting of 30000 Horſe, was divided into two Bodies; He put himſelf at the Head of the one at Yurea, and the other ſtay'd for him at Novara, and joyn'd him near Milan, where he was Crown'd King of Lombardy, by Arch-Biſhop Chryſolaus. Afterwards he croſs'd the Po and came to Placenza, where and at Parma he ſtay'd for ſome time, whilſt he ſent his Deputies to adjuſt matters with the Princeſs Mathildis, whom he continu'd in her Dominions, upon Condition, that ſhe ſhould not oppoſe his paſſage. The Seaſon being very far gone, he loſt a great many Sumpter Horſes in croſſing the Appennine Mountains, which oblig'd him to ſtay ſome time at Florence, where he ſpent the Chriſtmas Holy days. From thence he marched to Suzri, after he had in his Paſſage demoliſh'd the Town of Arezzo, which oppos'd his March.

The Treaty between the Pope and the Emperor.

The Embaſſadors which he had ſent to the Pope, waited upon him at this place, with the Legates of his Holineſs; and they agreed that the Pope ſhould Crown Henry, and that this Prince ſhould allow the Churches their Liberty, and grant no more Inveſtitures to Biſhops, upon condition that he ſhould retain the Dutchies, Counties, Marquiſates, Territories, the Rights of Money, Juſtice, and Marches, the Revenues, Fiefs, and other Eſtates which they held of the Empire. This agreement ſeem'd at firſt ſight to be very advantageous to the Church; but in reality ſtripp'd the Biſhops of their Eſtates and Dignities, for a Chimerical Honour, and reduced them to extream Poverty. The Emperor foreſeeing that one of theſe two things would happen, either that this Agreement ſhould be Executed, and he be a great gainer thereby; or that if the Pope could not prevail upon the Biſhops of Germany to quit their pretenſions to thoſe great Eſtates, he ſhould re-enter upon the Rights of Inveſtitures, made no ſcruple to ratify this Treaty, upon condition that the Pope would prevail upon the Biſhops to approve thereof. The Pope for his part, who loſt nothing by it, and was ſatisfied that by this means he ſhould humble the Biſhops of Germany, was likewiſe very well pleas'd with this Treaty. Whereupon it was ſign'd and ſworn to, and Hoſtages exchang'd on both ſides.

The Pope and Cardinals apprehended by the Emperor's Order.

After the Concluſion of this Treaty, the Emperor marched towards Rome, and on the 11th of February in the Year MCXI, arriv'd at the Town Leonina, where he was receiv'd by the Clergy and Laity, who came to wait upon him, and Conducted him with loud Acclamations to St. Peter's Palace, where he met with the Pope and the Cardinals who attended his coming on the Top of the ſtairs. He kiſs'd the feet of his Holineſs, and afterwards his forehead, Eyes and Mouth, and went into the Church on the Pope's Right hand, who celebrated Maſs. When they came to the Ceremony of the Coronation, the Pope ask'd the Emperor whether he was willing to obſerve the Treaty to which they had agreed, and remit his Right of Inveſtitures: The Emperor reply'd that he was ready to do it, provided the Biſhops of Germany would Conſent thereto; and that it was requiſite to know their Sentiments of the matter. The Biſhops of Germany oppos'd it all they could, and complain'd that the Pope was minded to diſpoſe of that which did not belong to him. The Pope in vain remonſtrated to them that theſe Eſtates were committed to them by way of Truſt, and that they needed not ſcruple to reſign them back to the Emperor; for they would never conſent to ſo diſadvantageous a Propoſition. Upon theſe debates, Henry ſummon'd the Pope to Crown him, and upon his Refuſing to do it, order'd his Guards to apprehend him and ſeveral Cardinals. The News of this being noiſ'd about the City, the Romans ran to their Arms, animated thereto by the Cardinals of Freſcate and Oſtia, kill'd ſeveral Germans ſtragling in the City, and ſet upon the Emperor's Forces very vigorouſly. The Engagement was very obſtinate on both ſides, the Emperor was in great danger of his Life, but at laſt repuls'd the Romans, and marched out of the City two days after, carrying along with him the Pope and Cardinals Priſoners.

He

He quartered near two Months about Rome, till at last the Pope to put an End to the War which was ready to break out, and to get his Liberty, resolv'd to grant him the Right of Investitures and to Crown him. Being thus agreed with the Emperor, they reenter'd Rome the thirteenth of April, and coming to St. Peter's Palace, the Emperor receiv'd the Imperial Crown at the hands of the Pope. They say that the Pope communicated to him a moiety of the Host which he had Consecrated, protesting that he gave it him as a Seal and Pledge of the Peace which he had made with him, and of the Concord that was between them; and that whoever of them should break this Concord or Violate this Peace, should have no part or portion in the Kingdom of Jesus Christ. The Pope likewise granted him a Bull of Confirmation of the Right of Investitures, importing that he granted and confirm'd the Privilege which the Emperors his Predecessors had of giving Investitures by the Ring and Crosier to the Bishops and Abbots of his Dominions Elected without Simony or Violence: That they should not be consecrated till after they had receiv'd Investiture, excepting such as were us'd to be invested by the Arch-Bishops or the Pope. This Concession is founded on these two Reasons; First, because the Predecessors of Henry had considerably enriched the Churches, by the Revenues of the Crown which they had bestowed on them: and Secondly because it was necessary that the Dissentions and Disturbances which might happen upon Elections, might be appeas'd by the Royal Authority. Lastly the Pope in this Bull denounc'd an Anathema against those who should oppose this Concession.

The Pope grants the Right of Investitures to the Emperor.

The Emperor having thus compass'd his design, departed from Rome being attended by the Pope. They parted very good Friends in appearance, by shewing to each other a Reciprocal Good Will and Affection. The Pope returned to Rome, and the Emperor as he went through Lombardy, took an Oath of Fidelity from all the Towns, and arriv'd at Spires August IV. Where he interr'd his Fathers Corps with great Magnificence, according to the Leave he had from the Pope, upon the Testimony given that he dy'd a Penitent.

Notwithstanding this, Pope Paschal at his Return, found a great many Cardinals offended that he had granted the Right of Investitures to the Emperor, and he excus'd himself as well as he could, upon the Account of the Extremity he was in, and the Miseries which threatned Rome, if he had not made this Condescention. These Reasons did not satisfy the more Resolute, who took an occasion from the Pope's going into the Country, to call an Assembly, wherein they cancell'd all that the Pope had done, renew'd and confirm'd the Decrees of his Predecessors against Investitures. The Pope having heard of it sent them Word, that though their intention might be good, yet their way of Proceeding was not to be tolerated: That he hop'd for the future to make amends for what he had done amiss, only to divert the Ruin of Rome and all the Country; but that they ought to have patience, and to take care that the Zeal they have for the Welfare of the Church does not prove prejudicial to it.

The Grant of Investitures disapprov'd by the Cardinals.

Bruno Bishop of Signi, Abbot of Mount Cassin, was one of those who was the freest in speaking against Investitures; and who solicited the Pope most to revoke what he had done, and to Anathematize the Emperor. The Cardinals who had been taken Prisoners with the Pope, were divided in their Sentiments; some were for what he had done, others disapprov'd it. The Pope offended that this Division rose so high, and fearing it would spread farther if the Monks of Mount Cassin follow'd their Abbot's Sentiments, order'd Bruno to retire to his Bishoprick, and another Abbot to be Elected in his Room. This Question was likewise debated out of Italy, and we are inform'd that John Arch-Bishop of Lions, would have call'd a Council to condemn what the Pope had done, and that Ivo of Chartres endeavour'd to dissuade him from it. Some maintain'd that one could not approve of Investitures without being guilty of Heresy; others believ'd that they might be tolerated, though they were irregular, and a third openly stood up in their Vindication. Pope Paschal was very sorry that he had deviated from the Decrees of his Predecessors, and desir'd nothing more than to revoke what he had done; but durst not undertake it on his own head after the Oath which he had taken, and the solemn Bull he had granted.

To wind himself out of this Difficulty, he assembled a Council of one hundred Bishops or thereabouts in the Lateran Church in March 1112. The chief Institution of which was the Repealing the Right of Investitures. For after they had renew'd against the Clerks, the Favourers of Guibert the Anti-pope, the Interdiction pronounced against them, the fifth day of the Session the Pope shew'd in what manner He and the Cardinals had been apprehended by King Henry, and how contrary to his Resolution he had been forc'd to grant to that Prince the Investitures for to obtain his Freedom, the Peace of the Church and the People: That he had taken an Oath that he would give him no farther disturbance about Investitures, and that he would pronounce no Anathema against his person: That though the King had not observ'd the Conditions of that Oath, yet he was resolv'd to stand to what he had done; that however he acknowleg'd that he had done amiss, and desir'd it should be redress'd, so that the Church might come to no prejudice. To clear himself the more fully from all Suspicion of Heresy, the next day he made a Profession of Faith, wherein he declar'd that he embrac'd the Faith and Doctrine contain'd in the Holy Scriptures, in the four General Councils, and in the Decrees of the Popes his Successors, especially those of Gregory 7. and Urban 2. that he approv'd of what those Pope approv'd, and that he condemn'd what they had condemn'd. After this Declaration, Gerard Bishop of Angoulême read a paper, importing that all those who were then present at that Council condemn'd, declar'd Null, and absolutely cancell'd the Privilege, or rather Pravilege extorted from Pope Paschal, by the Compulsion of Henry; particularly that which imply'd that those who should be Canonically Elected by the Clergy and People, could not be Consecrated till such time as they had Received Investiture from the King. This Sentence was approv'd by all the Prelates of the Council, consisting of twelve Arch-Bishops, an hundred and fourteen Bishops, and twenty three Cardinals, Priests and Deacons.

The Council of Lateran in the Year 1112.

The Decrees againſt Henry upon the account of Inveſtitures.

There was nothing done in this Council againſt the Perſon of the Emperor Henry, but Guy Arch-Biſhop of Vienna the Pope's Legat, a Man very zealous for promoting the intereſts of the Holy See, call'd a Council together in September, wherein he not only cancell'd the privilege of Inveſtitures, as had been before done in the Lateran Council; but farther declar'd, that it was Hereſie to receive Inveſtiture at the hand of any Laicks, and Excommunicated the Emperor Henry. He ſent the Pope word of what he had done in that Council, and deſir'd that he would be pleas'd to confirm it. The Pope who had already declar'd againſt what himſelf had done, made no ſcruple to grant his Requeſt. Cardinal Conon, Biſhop of Paleſtrina, and Legate of the Holy See in the Eaſt, thunder'd out Excommunications againſt Henry, as well in a Council held at Jeruſalem, as in thoſe he held at his return, in the Years 1114, and 1115. at Beauvais, at Rheims, at Cologne, and at Chalons. Thierry Cardinal and Legate of the Holy See appointed a Council to be held at Cologne in the Chriſtmas Holy-days, 1115. and ſet out with an intention of being there; but he dy'd by the way, however, the Council thunder'd out an Excommunication againſt the Emperor Henry.

The Emperor Henry V's. ſecond Journey into Italy.

That Prince perceiving himſelf to be thus fruſtrated of the hopes which he had conceiv'd of quietly enjoying the Inveſtitures, reſolv'd upon marching a Second time into Italy, and the rather becauſe his Preſence there was requiſite for the taking poſſeſſion of the Dominions of the Princeſs Mathildis, who dy'd the 24th of July 1115. Thereupon having enter'd into Lombardy, he made a ſtay near the River Po, to take poſſeſſion of the Eſtates left him by the Death of that Princeſs; and in the mean time ſent the Abbot of Clugny, and ſeveral other Deputies to the Pope, to endeavour an Accommodation with the Holy See.

The Lateran Council in the Year 1116.

The Pope held at that time a Second Council in the Lateran, which commenc'd the 6th of March, the three firſt Seſſions whereof were wholly taken up in diſcuſſing the private Affairs of ſome Biſhops. Several of thoſe who aſſiſted in this Council complained that they ſpent too much time on ſuch Affairs as were of little, or no conſequence to the Church, and required that they might enter immediately upon the Debate of that for which they were more eſpecially aſſembled, that they might know what the Pope's ſentiments were, and what they ought to teach when they were return'd to their Dioceſſes. Upon this Remonſtrance the Pope declar'd, that he freely acknowledg'd, that deſigning to put a ſtop to the Robberies, Burnings, Murders, and other Crimes which were daily committed; he had done amiſs in granting the privilege of Inveſtitures which now he condemn'd with an Eternal Anathema, and deſir'd they would do the ſame. All who were there preſent, cry'd out, Let it be ſo, Let it be ſo. Bruno of Signi immediately ſaid, "Let us give God thanks for that Pope Paſchal Preſident "of this Council has in our hearing condemn'd this wicked Privilege ſo full of Injuſtice and Hereſie. Moreover, a Biſhop averr'd, that ſince this Privilege was Hereſie, he who had granted it by conſequence was an Heretick. This diſcourſe mov'd Cardinal John Cajetan, who applying himſelf to that Biſhop, How dare you (ſays he) in our preſence call the Pope Heretick? The Writing indeed which he granted was bad, but not Heretical. Another added, that ſtrictly ſpeaking, it could not be call'd bad, becauſe it had been done to deliver the people of God: which according to the Goſpel was a good Work. The Pope who was out of patience to hear himſelf accus'd of Hereſie, caus'd ſilence to be made, and then with a loud Voice expreſſed himſelf thus. "Hark ye my "Lords and Brethren; † let the whole World know that the Church of "Rome has never been guilty of Hereſie, and that it has extirpated them "all: That the Arian Hereſie which laſted for 300 Years together was at "laſt condemn'd at Rome: That the Hereſies of Eutychius and Sabellius "were there likewiſe Condemn'd: That Photinus and the other Hereticks "receiv'd their Condemnation at Rome: That laſtly, 'tis for this Church the Son of God pray'd "juſt before his Paſſion, when he ſaid, Peter, I have pray'd for thee that thy Faith fail not. And thus ended the third Seſſion. At the fourth, which was held on Thurſday, the Pope was not preſent, becauſe he was taken up in giving Audience about the Emperor's Affairs to the Abbot of Clugny, to John Cajetan, and to Peter Leo, Prefect of the City of Rome, and to the other Favourers of Henry.

† This is a bold aſſertion, and fit only for a Pope, an infallible Pope to make; but how true it is, we with him appeal to the Determination of the whole World.

The fifth Seſſion on Friday, began with the Diſputes between John Cajetan and the other Defenders of the Emperor Henry, and Conon of Paleſtrina, who was abſolutely for Excommunicating him. The Pope to pacifie them, ſaid, that the Church in the Primitive times flouriſhed by its Martyrs; and by the Piety of its Profeſſors; that afterwards, when Emperors and Kings were Converted to the Faith, they Honour'd the Church by granting it Demeans, Revenues, and Temporal Rights and Dignities: That it was reaſonable ſhe ſhould enjoy the Benevolence of Princes, and beſtow thoſe Goods on her Sons as ſhe judg'd moſt convenient. He afterwards repealed the Privilege of Inveſtitures, and renew'd the Decrees of Gregory VII. but would pronounce nothing in particular againſt Henry's Perſon. However, he confirm'd what Cardinal Conon of Paleſtrina had done againſt that Prince in Syria, in Greece, in Hungary, in Saxony, in Lorrain, and in France. This was paſs'd by the majority of Voices.

The next day the Pope diſcuſs'd in the Council the Conteſt between Groſolanus, or Chryſolaus and Jordanes, pretenders to the Arch-Biſhoprick of Milan; and after he had obſerv'd that the Tranſlations of Biſhops were never allow'd, but in caſe of neceſſity, or for the Churches greater benefit, he declar'd that of Groſolanus Null, which had been more prejudicial than advantageous to the Church. Afterwards he granted indulgences of forty days, to thoſe who would viſit the Sepulchres of the Apoſtles, and diſſolv'd the Council by giving his Bleſſing to the Prelates.

Henry enters Rome, Paſchal withdraws.

The Emperor Henry having heard of the proceedings of this Council, thought it requiſite that he himſelf ſhould appear perſonally at Rome, to prevent the Conſequences of the Excommunication, and maintain the Privilege which the Pope had granted him. He thereupon order'd his Army to advance towards that City. The Pope not venturing to ſtay his coming, retir'd to Mount Caſſin, and from thence for the greater ſecurity went into Apulia. The Emperor came to Rome and enter'd it without any oppoſition.

position, and caus'd himself to be Crown'd a Second time, by Maurice Burdin Arch-Bishop of Brague. This Arch-Bishop was Limosin, who went into Spain to wait upon Bernard Arch-Bishop of Toledo, who made him Arch-Deacon of his Church, from whence he was preser'd to the Bishoprick of Conimbra, and afterwards to the Arch-Bishoprick of Brague. He was come to Rome to defend the Rights of his Church against the Arch-Bishop of Toledo, and stay'd there two Years. The Emperor spent the Easter Holy-days at Rome, but was forc'd by the excessive hotness of the Season to draw off towards Tuscany, from whence he sent Ambassador to the Pope to promise him all manner of satisfaction, provided, he would but absolve him, from the Excommunication. The Pope return'd him this Answer that for his part he had not Excommunicated him, because he had engag'd himself upon Oath to do no such thing; but that he could not take off the Excommunication which others had denounc'd against him, till he had heard what they and he had to say for themselves in a Synod. In the mean time, the Pope return'd towards Rome with the Norman Troops of Apulia, and fell Sick at Anagnia. Being recover'd of his illness, he went and spent the Christmas Holy-days at Palestrina, and from thence advanc'd towards Rome and enter'd it; and as he was studying to bring his Enemies to submit, he Died two days after his return, in January 1118.

Paschal returns to Rome.

After his Death, the Cardinals met in a Monastery of the Benedictines of Rome call'd the Palladium, near to the Palace of Franchipani, and six days after Elected John Cajetan the Chancellor, who was call'd Gelasus II. and Proclaim'd Pope. Cincius of Franchipani being offended that they had not made choice of a Cardinal whom he had propos'd, enter'd the Monastery in a forcible manner, with Armed Men, fell upon the Pope, abus'd him, and carry'd him away Prisoner to his Palace. The Romans could not endure this Affront; the chief among them met, and sent to demand the Pope from Cincius, and the common people rose up in Arms to set him at liberty. Upon this, Cincius was forc'd to deliver him. He was put in possession of the Papal Chair, which he enjoy'd very peaceably till the Arrival of the Emperor, who being inform'd that Gelasus would not confirm the privilege of Investitures, march'd directly with his Army to Rome. The Pope made his Escape by Sea to Cajeta, where he was Consecrated by the Bishop of Ostia, in the presence of William Duke of Apulia, and Robert Prince of Capua. After his Consecration he came to Capua, where he heard that the Emperor had caus'd Maurice Burdin Arch-Bishop of Brague to be Proclaim'd Pope, under the Name of Gregory VIII. In the mean time Gelasus rais'd Forces, William of Apulia came in to his Assistance; they march'd towards the Territories of Rome, where the Emperor invested a place of some strength, who hearing that Forces were coming to its relief, rais'd the Siege immediately, and retir'd into Germany. The Pope retook several places in the Countrey, and enter'd privately into Rome; but his Enemies there being more powerful than himself, after he had settled his Affairs in a good posture, he went into France, and retir'd to Clugny, the usual Sanctuary of the Popes, where he Dy'd of a Pleurisie on the 29th of January, in the Year 1119. after he had nominated Cardinal Guy Arch-Bishop of Vienna for his Successor, upon the refusal of Conon Bishop of Palestrina.

Gelasus II. Elected Pope.

Henry comes to Rome and causes Maurice Burdin to be Proclaimed Pope.

This Choice was approv'd of by all the Cardinals then present at Clugny when the Pope Dy'd: They unanimously Elected Guy who was Nam'd Calixtus II. and their Election being confirmed by the Cardinals who were at Rome, he was Consecrated by the Bishop of Ostia.

The Election of Calixtus II.

The Emperor Henry, who had been Excommunicated afresh by Conon in two Councils held in Germany, to screen himself from these proceedings and to restore peace to Germany, held a Convention at Tribur, wherein it was propos'd to put an end to the difference between him and the Pope, by way of Accommodation. He promis'd to do it, and to go to the Council which the Pope had appointed to be held at Rheims on the 18th of October. In the mean time to prepare matters for the Peace, William of Champeaux Bishop of Chalons, and Pontius Abbot of Clugny, went to Strasburg to begin the Treaty. The Emperor demanded how he might put an end to this Affair without losing any thing of his Prerogative; to which the Bishop of Chalons reply'd, That if he were sincere in his desires of the Peace, it was requisite he should remit the Investitures, but that he would not thereby diminish the least of his Prerogative; because then the Case would be the same as it was in France, where, though the Bishops neither before nor after Consecration received their Investiture from the King, yet they were not thereby dispens'd from discharging their Duties to him, whether in paying Taxes, or contributing towards the Soldiery, or any other Dues whatsoever. The Emperor said, that he desired nothing more, provided, the Pope would do him Justice, and restore to his Subjects the Lands which they had lost during the War. These two Deputies having gain'd this Concession from the Emperor, went to wait upon the Pope who was hard by Paris, and propos'd the Business to him. He immediately sent the Cardinal Bishop of Ostia, and another Cardinal to finish the Treaty with him. They met the Emperor between Metz and Verdun, and agreed with him in Writing about the same things; and for a compleat consummation of this Affair, the Emperor promis'd to meet the Pope at Mouzon on the 24th of October.

The Conference between the Emperor and William of Champeaux concerning Investitures.

The Council of Rheims open'd on the 21st of October. The Pope and Lewis King of France were personally present at it, and it consisted of fifteen Arch-Bishops, above 200 Bishops of France, Spain, Germany, and England, and a great many Abbots and other Ecclesiasticks. The Pope made a Discourse on the Gospel for the Day, and Conon made another upon the Pastoral Care. In this Council, King Lewis preferr'd several Complaints against Henry King of England. Geofrey Arch-Bishop of Roan undertook to answer him, but was forc'd to be silent by the Noise that arose in the Assembly. Afterwards Hildegarda Countess of Poictiers appear'd in the Council, and complain'd that her Husband had left her and marry'd another Woman. The Bishop of Saintes, and other Prelates of Aquitain undertook the Defence of their Prince, and excus'd him for not appearing because he was sick. The Pope accepted of this Excuse, and put off the Tryal of this Cause till another time. The Contest which afterwards was started between Audin Bishop of Eureux, and Amaury who had turn'd him out of that Bishoprick, rais'd a great Heat between the French and the Normans. The Pope to lay

it,

it, made a Diſcourſe on the Advantages of Peace and Unity, and declar'd that the Emperor had propos'd an Accommodation, and that he was to meet him at Mouzon to put an End to it; that he deſir'd the Prelates to ſtay till his Return which ſhould be very ſpeedy. The Cardinals who had waited upon the Emperor, the Biſhop of Chalons, and the Abbot of Clugny, gave an Account of their Negotiation to the Council.

The Negotiation between the Pope and the Emperor.

On the morrow the Pope took his Leave of the Aſſembly, recommended them to put up their Prayers and Wiſhes for the Peace, and the next day ſet out for Mouzon. He arriv'd there on the Thurſday, and after he had conferr'd with the Prelates whom he had brought along with him, and read over again the Projects of the Accommodation, he ſent the Deputies who had already commenc'd this Negotiation to the Emperor. That Prince at firſt deny'd that he had made any ſuch promiſe; afterwards they debated how the Pope ſhould receive him in giving him Abſolution, but could come to no agreement. On the morrow the Emperor deſir'd farther time, and the Pope perceiving that he ſought to procraſtinate the Buſineſs, retir'd to a Caſtle belonging to the Count of Treyes with an Intention of returning back again. The Emperor deſir'd time till Munday, but the Pope would not grant it; and after he had order'd him to be told that if he were ſincerely intent upon Peace, he was ready to grant it him either in or after the Council. He ſet out on Sunday Morning, and return'd with all expedition to Rheims. The next day being fatigued by his Journey, he could not ſtay long in the Council, he only gave them an Account of his Proceedings at Mouzon. On Tueſday he was not there at all, but on Wedneſday he appear'd. At firſt they debated of a great many private matters, and afterwards the Pope publiſh'd five Canons.

The firſt was againſt the Simoniacal, who either bought or ſold any Eccleſiaſtical Goods.

The ſecond was againſt Inveſtitures.

The Third againſt thoſe who either ſeiz'd or detain'd the Revenues of Churches.

The Fourth againſt thoſe who left them to their Heirs by way of Succeſſion, and againſt the Prieſts who exacted Money for the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments or for Burial.

And the fifth againſt the Prieſts, Deacons and Sub-deacons who had Wives or Concubines.

The Canon concerning Inveſtitures made a great Noiſe in the Council. It was drawn up in theſe Terms: We abſolutely forbid the receiving the Inveſtiture of Churches or any other Eccleſiaſtical things from the hands of Laicks. Several were of opinion that this Canon thus expreſs'd took away from the Eccleſiaſticks the Tenths and Benefices which they held or receiv'd from Laicks, ſo that the Conteſt ariſing upon this Article, hinder'd the Council from determining any thing about it that day. On the Morrow the Pope remov'd this Difficulty by mending the Canon and drawing it up in theſe Terms. We abſolutely forbid the receiving the Inveſtiture of Biſhopricks and Abbeys from the hands of Laicks. Afterwards they brought in 427 Candles, which were given to the Aſſiſtants, who roſe up and held them Lighted whilſt the Pope ſolemnly Excommunicated the Emperor Henry, the Anti-pope Burdin and all their Adherents; He likewiſe declar'd all the Emperor's Subjects diſſolv'd from their Oath of Alliegance to him, and forbad them to obey him, till he return'd to his Duty, and had made the Church ſatisfaction. Thus the Council broke up.

Calixtus II. is receiv'd into Rome and Burdin ſhamefully diveſted.

The next year Calixtus went into Italy, with a Deſign of going to Rome. He was joyfully receiv'd every where, and enter'd Rome as in Triumph. The Anti-pope Burdin being drove out of that City retir'd to Sutri, from whence he made ſeveral Excurſions, to the very Gates of Rome. Calixtus to rid himſelf of this Enemy, went into Apulia to deſire aſſiſtance from Duke William, and having rais'd a Conſiderable Army, he march'd to inveſt Sutri. The Inhabitants of this City perceiving they ſhould be taken by Storm, ſeiz'd upon Burdin, and deliver'd him up to the Normans, who by way of deriſion cloath'd him with a Goat's-Skin, made in the form of a Cope, ſet him on a white Camel, with his face towards the Tail which ſerv'd him for a Bridle, and in this manner led him through the whole City, heaping affronts upon him. Afterwards he was ſhut up in a Caſtle, and confin'd in a Monaſtery of Cava, where he ſpent the reſt of his days in a forc'd Penance.

The Treaty between Calixtus II. and Henry. V.

After this Victory the Pope becoming abſolute Maſter of Rome, where he caus'd the Forts of the Franchipani and of the other Favourers of the Emperor to be raz'd, ſent an Ambaſſy to Adalbert Arch-Biſhop of Mentz, a profeſs'd Enemy to the Emperor, and ſolicited him to ſtir up Saxony againſt that Prince. This Enterprize ſucceeded, and within a ſhort time all Saxony revolted, and rais'd an Army againſt Henry, who likewiſe for his part rais'd ſome Forces: So that there would have been a bloody War in Germany; if the Lords on both ſides had not agreed upon a Treaty of Peace, by which they agreed to reſtore to the Emperor what belong'd to him; that he ſhould likewiſe reſtore to the Churches the Revenues which had been taken away from them; and ſend Deputies to Rome to make up an Accommodation with the Pope. This Treaty was concluded at Wirtzburgh in the year 1121. Bruno Biſhop of Spires and Arnulphus Abbot of Fulda were choſen for this Deputation. They came to Rome, where they Negotiated this accommodation; and being agreed about it, the Pope ſent Lambert Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia, and two other Cardinals, who met with the Emperor Henry at Wormes in September 1122. and there concluded the Treaty between the Pope and Him. The Emperor remitted the Right of Inveſtiture, which was given by the Ring and Croſier; and engag'd himſelf to leave to all the Churches within his Dominions, the Liberty of Elections and Conſecrations; to reſtore to the Church of Rome all the Revenues which had been taken away from it ſince the Beginning of this Conteſt, whether under his Reign, or during the Reign of his Father; to reſtore likewiſe to other Churches, Princes and private perſons as well Eccleſiaſticks as Laicks all the Revenues which have been taken away from them; to Live in peace with the Church of Rome, and aſſiſt it, whenever it ſhould have occaſion. The Pope on his part granted to the Emperor that the Elections of Biſhops and Abbots within the Kingdom of Germany ſhould be made in his preſence, without Simony and Force, upon Condition that in Caſe of any conteſt, he ſhould favour him, who ſhould be approv'd by the Metro-

Metropolitan and the Bishops of the Province. He consented that the person who should be Elected, should receive the Royalties from the Emperor by the Sceptre, except of such things as belong'd to the Church of Rome, and should faithfully perform what he was bound to by Virtue of those Royalties: That the Prelates of the other States of the Empire, should likewise receive the Royalties at the Emperor's hands, within six Months after their Consecration. He likewise oblig'd himself to assist the Emperor on all occasions, and lastly granted absolution to him and all his Adherents. These Articles of Peace were solemnly publish'd in the Emperor's Camp, and within a short time that Prince was receiv'd into the Communion of the Church by the Pope's Legates, who carry'd this Treaty to Rome, where it was confirm'd in the general Council of the Lateran, held in the Year 1123. and publish'd in Rome. Thus ended the Quarrel about Investiture, which Lasted six and fifty Years, and which had caus'd so much disturbance to the Church and Empire. We shall farther illustrate this by some Reflexions on the Original and Use of Investitures.

The Original and Progress of Investitures.

The Word Investiture signifies the Grant of any Fief, Territory, Dignity, Place of Trust, or Privilege, made by a Lord to his Vassal or Client, or by a Prince to his Subject, upon condition that he prove Faithfull to him, and do him all the Service and Duty requir'd of him. This Investiture was perform'd with certain Ceremonies, by putting into the person's hands to whom it was granted something as a Symbol or Sign of the Donation then made, such as a piece of Turf, a Staff, Green Boughs, the Ornaments or the Habits of the Dignity or Place of Trust, or other such like Tokens, which had resemblance to, or denoted the thing given. The Christian Church, which in the Primitive times had no other Goods than those of the Voluntary Oblations of the Faithful, or the Revenues of such Estates as had been bestow'd upon it by private persons, began in the time of Pepin, and Charlemagne to be possess'd of a great many Fiefs, with which those Princes enrich'd it. This render'd the Bishops and Abbots more considerable in the State, and engag'd them to take an Oath of Fealty and Homage to their Prince for the Fiefs which they held of him, to supply him with a Certain Number of Soldiers for the Wars, to go themselves thither in person, to concern themselves with the Affairs of the State, and to discharge the other Duties to which they were bound by virtue of the Fiefs and Dignities which they enjoy'd. According to Ancient Custom, after the death of those who had those Fiefs, the Lord of the Manner enter'd into the Possession of them and held them, till such time as the Heir or successor were invested anew, and had taken the Oath of Fealty and Homage. Upon this Account after the Death of a Bishop, the Princes and Lords enter'd into the Possession of his Fiefs, and held them till such time as the person elected in his stead had receiv'd Investiture from them, and had taken the Oath of Homage and Fealty. In process of time this Prerogative extended to all the other Revenues left by the Bishop, and the Princes granted indifferently the Investiture of all the Revenues of the Bishoprick to the person who was elected Canonically before he was Consecrated, but they never pretended by this Ceremony to confer any Spiritual Power or Mission to the Bishops. Some are of Opinion that this Right of Investiture was granted to Charlemagne by Pope Adrian, as 'tis related by Gratian Distinct. 63. Ch. Adrianus, which is taken out of the Chronicon of Sigebert of Gemblours, wherein 'tis said that that Pope in a Council held at Rome in the Year 774. granted to Charlemagne the Right of Electing Popes, and order'd that all Arch-Bishops and Bishops within his Dominions should receive Investiture at his hands before they were Consecrated. But most of the Learned are perswaded that this matter of Fact is forged, because neither Eginard who wrote the Life of Charlemagne, nor any other Coemporary Author, make any mention either of this Grant, or of Charlemagne's, going to Rome this Year. This Constitution notwithstanding is cited by Leo viij. who renew'd it in favour of Otho 1. both with respect to the Election of the Pope, and to the Investiture of Bishops. But thô we cannot found the Original of Investitures upon Gratian's Chapter intitled Adrianus, which is at least doubtful, yet we may be certain that this Custom commenc'd a long time before Otho, and soon after Charlemagne, and that it was observ'd not only by the Emperors, but likewise by the Kings of France and England, and by most of the other Christian Princes.

The Ceremonies us'd in Investitures.

We are not certain what Ceremony was us'd at first in the Investiture of Bishops and Abbots; but 'tis very probable that they made use of the Crosier, or the Ring, the Marks and Tokens of their Dignity; as the Custom was with regard to secular Offices. We find in the Author of the Life of St. Romanus Arch-Bishop of Roan, that when this Saint, was Elected, the Great men about Court unanimously advis'd the King to approve his Election, and that that Prince ('twas Clovis 2. or his Father Dagobert) having conven'd the Bishops and Abbots, gave him the Pastoral Rod, in consequence whereof he was Consecrated. The Author of the Life of Aldric Bishop of Mans, tells us that after the Election of that Bishop made in the Year 832. Lewis the Gentle having taken the Pastoral Rod from the hands of Landramnus Arch-Bishop of Tours, the Metropolitan of Mans, gave it to Aldric, and in giving it to him, committed to him the Care and management of that Bishoprick. Glaber in the Life of King Robert, relates that that Prince desiring to gratify an Abbot who had presented him with a fine Horse, demanded the Crosier of him, and that having put it into the hand of our Saviour's Statue, bad the Abbot take it again, and by Virtue thereof to enjoy his Dignity, without any manner of Dependance. We find that in the tenth Century, this Custom was become Common in Germany, and that those who were instituted into Bishopricks, carry'd the Pastoral Rod, and the other Ensigns of their Dignity, even before they were Consecrated. Ivo of Chartres takes notice that the King had inducted him into his Bishoprick, by giving him the Pastoral Rod. However this Ceremony was not so general nor so necessary, but it was sometimes omitted, or supply'd by some other. Investiture might be given by Writing, or by word of Mouth, or even by a dumb sign. Several Authors tell us that the Emperor Henry II. confer'd the Bishoprick of Paderborne on Meinwercus, by presenting him with one of his Gloves. Let this Account be how it will, 'tis certain that 'tis a thing very indifferent with what Ceremony, or after what manner the Inveſtiture was confer'd. Yet there can be no queſtion made but that commonly in granting the Inveſtitures of Biſhopricks and Abbeys they made uſe of the Paſtoral Staff, to which they afterwards join'd the Ring, becauſe theſe were the Tokens and Enſigns of the Epiſcopal Dignity.

The Beginning of the Conteſt about Inveſtitures.

When this quarrel about Inveſtitures firſt began, it was not the Ceremony, but the thing it ſelf which rais'd the Heat; and Gregory VII. in prohibiting Inveſtitures, not only oppos'd thoſe which were perform'd by the Paſtoral Rod and Ring, but in general all manner of Inveſtitures of Benefices granted by Laicks. The principal reaſon that induced him to prohibit them was, that it very much hinder'd the Liberty of Elections, and render'd Princes the Maſters and ſole Diſpoſers of all Benefices. For when a perſon canonically Elected could not enjoy his Benefice, nor be Conſecrated till he had receiv'd Inveſtiture from his Prince, it was unavoidably requiſite before they proceeded to an Election to know whether the Perſon they had an Eye to were agreable to the Prince or no; and in caſe they Elected one who was not ſo, the Election would be Invalid. By this means it abſolutely depended on the Will of the Prince to confer Biſhopricks and Abbeys on whomſoever he pleas'd. Oftentimes he granted them as a Reward for ſome Service done, or to the man who was the higheſt bidder. This was that Abuſe which mov'd Gregory VII. abſolutely to prohibit all Inveſtitures of Benefices; and he carry'd it ſo high, as to forbid Biſhops taking an Oath of Homage and Fealty to their Princes. Victor III. and Urban II. his Immediate Succeſſors prohibited likewiſe in general all manner of Inveſtitures. Ivo of Chartres tells us that Urban only forbad Princes the Corporal Inveſtiture: but that he never prohibited them from concerning them with an Election to which they had a Right, as being Heads of the People, and that he had not taken away from them the Right of Conceſſion. However that Pope in the Council of Clermont abſolutely prohibited all Inveſtitures, and even the Biſhop's Oath of Fealty to their Prince.

The State of the Conteſt in the time of Paſchal II.

It was in the time of Pope Paſchal II. that they began to have a more particular deſign upon the Ceremony of granting them by the Rod and Ring; and hence they rais'd a freſh Argument againſt Inveſtitures, by looking upon thoſe Ornaments as tokens of the Eccleſiaſtical Power appertaining to the Altar; from whence 'twas Concluded that the Prince in making uſe of this Ceremony ſeem'd to confer the Eccleſiaſtical Power. 'Tis thus that Paſchal explain'd himſelf in the Conference which he held at Chalons with the Emperor's Deputies; and 'tis chiefly upon this Reaſon thoſe men argu'd, who look'd upon Inveſtitures as an Hereſy worſe than Simony. The Princes on their ſide urg'd to no purpoſe, that they did not pretend by this Ceremony to beſtow any Spiritual Power: That their Intention was only to inveſt the Biſhops, as they did the other Lords, with the Temporalities which belong'd to the Church by the Grants of Princes. But the Enemies to this Right to render it the more odious would perſwade us that this Ceremony had another meaning. The Accommodation which was ſet on foot between Pope Paſchal II. and the Emperor Henry V. entirely remov'd the Difficulty: For it took away from the Biſhops all the Fiefs and other Temporalities which they poſſeſs'd by the Donation of the Emperors ſince Charlemagne, which were the only Ones for which the Princes could juſtly demand the Right of Inveſtitures; but it diveſted the Churches of great, real and ſolid Goods, for a chimerical, fanciful Independance: The Biſhops likewiſe did not reliſh this Accommodation, and ſo it came to nothing. The forc'd Conceſſion of Inveſtitures made by Pope Paſchal was reſented by ſome as an Hereſy, and conſider'd by others as a Dangerous Relaxation. There were ſome who would have it paſs for a neceſſary Toleration, and others for a thing reaſonable and Lawful.

The State of the Queſtion under Calixtus II.

In the Beginning of the Popedom of Calixtus II. the Difficulty ſeem'd to be reduc'd to the Ceremony of Inveſtiture with the Ring and Rod: At leaſt thoſe who were concern'd in the Negotiation thought ſo. Henry V. was very ready to renounce this, provide it did not prejudice his Prerogative; and if the Biſhops and Abbots would hold their Fiefs and Royalties of him; take to him the Oaths of Allegiance, and pay him all the Dues to which they were oblig'd by virtue of the Eſtates which they poſſeſs'd. But the Pope always inſiſted upon a General Prohibition of Receiving any manner of Inveſtiture or Eccleſiaſtical Benefices at the hands of Laicks; to which the Emperor would never conſent. The French themſelves would not admit this Prohibition to extend to Biſhopricks and Abbeys.

Remarks upon the Treaty concluded between Calixtus II. and Henry V.

In ſhort the laſt Accommodation made between Pope Calixtus and Henry was a great deal more Advantageous to the Princes than the Eccleſiaſticks. For the Princes pretended to theſe three things. (1.) That no Election of Biſhops or Abbots ought to be made without their Conſent. (2.) That the Perſon Elected ought to receive Inveſtiture with the Paſtoral Rod and Ring before he was Conſecrated. (3.) That he was oblig'd to take an Oath of Fealty to them, and do them Homage for the Fiefs and Royalties which were dependent on them. Now by this Treaty it was granted to them (1.) That the Elections of Biſhops and Abbots ſhould be made in their Preſence and Conſequently with their Conſent. (2.) That in Germany the Biſhop Elect ſhall be inveſted with the Royalties (that is all the Eſtates which he holds of the Crown, by the Sceptre, before his Conſecration; and in the other States within ſix Months after his Conſecration. (3.) It preſerves to them all the Dues and Services to which the Biſhops were oblig'd by Virtue of their Fiefs and Royalties. So that all the Alteration it made to the ancient Cuſtom of the Emperors conſiſted (1.) In that it took away the Ceremony of Inveſtiture by the Paſtoral Rod and Ring, and order'd that it ſhould be done with the Sceptre. (2.) That it reſtrain'd this Ceremony preciſely to the Royalties, that is, to ſuch Fiefs and other Eſtates which the Biſhops held of the Crown. (3.) In that it permitted the Conſecration of Biſhops out of Germany before they had receiv'd Inveſtiture, yet upon condition that they ſhould receive it within ſix Months after.

The

The Treaty made between Pope Calixtus II. and the Emperor Henry V. was executed on both sides. But Lotharius, Henry's Succeſſor, in the time of the Schiſm which was between Pope Innocent II. and his Adverſary Peter de Leon, thought he had a favourable opportunity of re-entring upon the Right of Inveſtiture. He made this Propoſal in the Conference which he had with Pope Innocent at Liege, letting him know that he would not acknowledge him but upon this Condition. This very much ſtartled the Roman Prelates, but Saint Bernard perſwaded that Prince not to inſiſt on this Pretenſion, and things remain'd in the ſame ſtate wherein they were before. The Execution of the Treaty made with Henry.

This is what relates to the Empire: As to France the Kings had never any Conteſt with the Popes about Inveſtitures: They enjoy'd them quietly even in the time of Gregory VII. who was not indeed pleas'd at it, but durſt not fall out with France upon that Subject. Under the ſucceeding Popes the Kings of France left off giving Inveſtiture by the Paſtoral Rod and Ring, and were pleas'd to confer it by a Writing or by Word of Mouth; ſo that the Popes whoſe chief deſign was to aboliſh that External Ceremony, left them in the quiet enjoyment of their Prerogative. The Cuſtom of France with reſpect to Inveſtitures.

This Affair made a greater Noiſe in England than in France: For S. Anſelm willing to be conformable to the Decrees of the Popes againſt Inveſtitures, refus'd to pay Homage and Fealty to the Kings. This Conteſt laſted a great many years, and neither the Popes, nor the Kings of England would yield the point: But at laſt they both conform'd themſelves to the Regulation of Calixtus II. The Cuſtom of England with reſpect to the ſame.

The Right of Inveſtitures was not the Peculiar Prerogative of Emperors and Kings; but Dukes, Counts and other Lords who had Biſhopricks or Abbeys in their States, poſſeſſing Fiefs or Revenues in their Dominions, did likewiſe enjoy the ſame Right. Thus it appears by a Letter wrote by Gregory VII. to Radulphus Arch-Biſhop of Tours, that the Counts of Bretagne had been in poſſeſſion of the Right of granting Inveſtitures to Biſhops, ſince that Pope commends them for having receded from that Cuſtom which they had ſo long enjoy'd, in compliance to the Holy See. Saint Anſelm tells us likewiſe that Robert Count of Flanders had been us'd to inveſt the Abbots after their Election. Ivo of Chartres in ſeveral places takes notice, that Robert Duke of Normandy granted Inveſtiture to the Biſhops and Abbots of that Province. The Counts of Champagne, Anjou and Savoy had the ſame Cuſtom, and even the petty Lords aſſum'd this Privilege to themſelves: As the Lord of Rotrou, whom we find in the Chartulary of St. Denys of Nogent, to have granted to Hubert the Inveſtiture of that Abbey with the Croſier, ſo that when Gregory VII. and the other Popes condemn'd Inveſtitures, this did not only Extend to Emperors and Kings, but likewiſe to Dukes Marquiſes, Counts, and in general to every Lay Perſon whether Man or Woman. Inveſtitures granted to Petty Princes.

The Lateran Council which approv'd of the Treaty about Inveſtitures, made between Pope Calixtus and the Emperor Henry, is that which is call'd the firſt general Lateran Council. It was held in March A. D. 1123. and compos'd of three hundred Prelates or thereabouts, according to the Teſtimony of Sugerus Abbot of Saint Denys, who was preſent at the Council, a more creditable Witneſs than the Abbot of Uſperge, who reckons four hundred Twenty Six; and than Pandulphus who tells us of almoſt a Thouſand. There were two and Twenty Canons made in this Council. The firſt general Lateran Council in the year 1123.

The Firſt renews the Canons made againſt the Simoniacal, and ordains that all thoſe who ſhall have obtain'd any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity for Money, ſhall be turn'd out of it.

The Second forbids the beſtowing the Dignities of a Provoſt, Arch-Prieſt or Dean on any but Prieſts, or that of Arch-deacon on any other but Deacons.

The Third renews the Prohibitions made by the Laws of the Church againſt Clerks having Wives or Concubines, or to live with Women, excepting ſuch as are exempted in the Canon of the Council of Nice.

The Fourth Imports that the Laicks, how pious ſoever they may be, ſhall not have the Diſpoſal of the Revenues of the Church, and that this ſhall be Peculiar to Biſhops, and declares thoſe Princes and Laicks who ſhall attribute it to themſelves Sacrilegious.

The Fifth renews the Prohibition of Marriages among Relations.

The Sixth declares the Ordinations made by the Arch-Heretick Burdin after his Condemnation, and thoſe that had been made by the falſe Biſhops whom he had ordain'd, to be Null and Void.

The Seventh Prohibits Arch-deacons, Arch-Prieſts, Provoſts and Deans from giving any Benefices having the Charge of Souls, or Prebends, without the Conſent and Approbation of the Biſhop.

The Eighth pronounces an Anathema againſt any Perſon whatſoever who ſhall ſieze upon the Town of Benevento.

The Ninth renews the Prohibitions made in the Canons, againſt admitting thoſe who had been Excommunicated by their Biſhop to the Communion.

The Tenth prohibits the Conſecrating of a Biſhop, who has not been Elected Canonically.

The Eleventh grants remiſſion of Sins to thoſe who go to Jeruſalem to aid the Chriſtians againſt the Infidels, puts their Perſons, their Families, and their Eſtates under the Protection of the Holy See; prohibits the offering any Violence to them under the Pain of Excommunication; and enjoyns all thoſe, who were Croſs'd to go into the Holy Land, or into Spain, and who having chang'd their Minds, had laid aſide their Croſs, to take it up again, and go that expedition within a year under the Pain of Excommunication.

The Twelfth aboliſhes the Cuſtom of ſiezing on the Eſtates of thoſe who dy'd without Heirs.

The Thirteenth Orders that they ſhall be declar'd Excommunicated who ſhall violate the Truce enjoyn'd for Certain Days.

The Fourteenth prohibits Laicks from ſeizing on any Oblations made to Churches, and from incloſing any Churches within the Bounds of Caſtles.

The Fifteenth is againſt Counterfeit Coiners.

The Sixteenth Excommunicates thoſe who Rob or exact any Tribute from the Pilgrims who go to Rome or to any other Places of Devotion.

The Seventeenth prohibits Abbots and Monks, from admitting Sinners to Publick Pennance, from viſiting the Sick, from performing the Extream Unction, and from ſinging Solemn and publick Maſſes, and enjoyns them to receive from their Biſhop the holy Chriſm, the holy Oyls, and Ordination.

The Eighteenth enjoyns that the Curats ſhall be Eſtabliſhed by the Biſhops, and that no perſon ſhall receive a Church or Tenths from the hand of Laicks without the Conſent of the Biſhop.

The Nineteenth imports that the Monaſteries ſhall continue to pay the Biſhops the Services and Duties which they have paid them ſince the time of Gregory VII. and it takes away from Abbots and Monks the Right of claiming the Poſſeſſion of Thirty years, in order to hold thoſe Churches which belong to the Biſhops.

The Twentieth provides for the Security of the Church Revenues.

The Twenty firſt does again prohibit Prieſts, Deacons, Sub-Deacons and Monks from having Wives or Concubines, and Declares the Marriages which they have contracted, Null. This is the Canon which expreſſly pronounces the Nullity of the Marriages of ſuch Perſons as are in holy Orders.

The Twenty ſecond declares the Alienations of Church Revenues made by Biſhops, Abbots, or any other Eccleſiaſticks Null, and Void.

This is the Summary of what we have left of the general Lateran Council, held under Pope Calixtus II. who dy'd the Year after. To compleat the Hiſtory of thoſe three Popes already mention'd, we have nothing more to do, than to give you an Extract of the Letters which they wrote.

The Letters of Paſchal II.

Paſchal II. was he who wrote moſt; of which a Collection is made of an hundred and ſeven, without reckoning the Fragments of ſeveral others which are to be met with in Gratian, and in the other Collectors of Canons.

In the Firſt he congratulates thoſe Perſons of the Croiſade in the Holy Land, for the Victories they had gain'd.

In the Second he confirms the Eſtabliſhment of a new Monaſtery in the Dioceſs of Chalons, and the Treaty which had been made between the Religious of that Monaſtery and thoſe of Moleme by the Arch-Biſhop of Lions according to the order he had receiv'd from Urban II.

In the Third he commends Saint Anſelm Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury for the Stedfaſtneſs he ſhew'd in ſtanding up for the Rights of the Church.

In the Fourth directed to Bernard Arch-Biſhop of Toledo, he confirm'd the Primacy of that Church.

The Fifth and Sixth are not two diſtinct Letters. The former of the two is only a fragment of the latter, whoſe inſcription has been chang'd: It is directed to an Arch-Biſhop of Poland, who ſcrupled to take an Oath to the Pope, in receiving the Pall. He therein magnifies the Dignity and Authority of the Church of Rome, and the Neceſſity of the Pall.

The Seventh is directed to Robert Count of Flanders, whom he commends for having executed his Orders touching the Church of Cambray; and whom he exhorts to perſecute the Emperor Henry IV. and the Inhabitants of Liege, to whom that Prince was retir'd.

The Clergy of Liege having procur'd a Copy of this Letter return'd a very ſmart reply to it: Wherein they made it appear how contrary that Order which the Pope gave in this Letter of making War againſt them, was to the Spirit of the Church, and to the Charity which the Pope, the Common Father of all the Faithful, ought to bear towards all the Churches. They ſay that they could not tell how to believe that the Pope had approv'd of the Deſtruction of the Church of Cambray, and the Outrages which had been there committed, had they not learn'd from his own Mouth, that all this was done by his Order; without mentioning the dividing of that Biſhoprick into two, and the Expulſion of Gautier who was Biſhop thereof. They make mention of ſeveral Inſtances to prove that one ought not to make uſe of the Sword, or engage in a War to put the Sentences of Excommunication in Execution: That moreover they have done nothing which deſerv'd either Death or Excommunication: That they were Excommunicated only becauſe they had paid to their Lawful Soveraign the Reſpect which they ow'd him, according as they were oblig'd by the Law of God: That they are not Simoniacal, but on the Contrary avoid thoſe who are ſo, and that they have no leſs abhorrence to thoſe who pretending to give Eccleſiaſtical Graces for nothing, ſell them under a pretence of Charity: That in fact they had not been Excommunicated by their Arch-Biſhop, and that they ſuppos'd they had not been Excommunicated by the Pope, ſince he could not do it without hearing them firſt. That no one could ſay that they were Excommunicated, becauſe they Communicated with their Biſhop, who would not fail in his Duty towards his Prince, ſince therein that Prelate had done his Duty, and had greater Reaſon to fear the Curſe which God had pronounc'd againſt thoſe who obey'd not his Commandments, than that which ſome Popes have within a while invented againſt thoſe who would not be Rebels to their Lawful Prince: That the Holy Fathers inform us that Kings ought not to be Excommunicated, or at leaſt but very rarely: That according to Ancient Cuſtom they ſtand to the Deciſions of their Metropolitan and of their Provincial Synod, and they did not recognize thoſe Legates à Latere, who ran from place to place to enrich themſelves, and who reform'd neither Manners nor Diſcipline, but were the Cauſe of rifling Churches and of the Wars: That they liv'd as Regular Clerks, according to the Rule of the Canon. Laſtly, they inveigh'd againſt the Memory of Gregory VII. who was the firſt that ſtirr'd up the People againſt their Emperor, and was for extending the Spiritual Power of binding and unbinding even to Temporalities; which they prov'd to be contrary to the Maxims and Practice of the Popes his Predeceſſors.

The Eighth Letter of Paſchal is directed to the Clergy and People of Bamberg, to whom he recommends Otho their Biſhop Elect.

By

By the Ninth directed to Henry King of England he exhorts that Prince to renounce his Right of Inveſtitures.

By the Tenth he adviſes Didacus Biſhop of Compoſtella, to take care that his Clergy live regularly, to hinder forbidden Marriages, and not to ſuffer the Monks to live with the Nuns.

The Eleventh is the Bull of Canonization of Peter Biſhop of Anagnia, by which he orders that his Feaſt ſhould be celebrated on the third of Auguſt.

In the Twelfth directed to Gebehard Biſhop of Conſtance, and to Oderick Biſhop of Paſſau, he determines that thoſe who unwillingly converſe with Excommunicated perſons by neceſſity or in duty, are not liable to Excommunication.

By the thirteenth he cites the Laity and Clergy of Augsburgh, who accus'd their Biſhop; and

By the fourteenth congratulates their being reconcil'd to him.

By the fifteenth he adviſes the Clergy and Laity of Arles to Elect another Arch-Biſhop in the place of Gibbeline, who had been made Patriarch of Jeruſalem.

In the ſixteenth he congratulates S. Anſelm for his being reconcil'd to the King of England, and grants him a Power of abſolving thoſe who had oppoſed the Decrees of the Holy See about the Inveſtitures of Benefices granted by Laicks, or who had done Homage to the King for Eccleſiaſtical Preferments.

In the Seventeenth he adviſes Gerard Arch-Biſhop of York to ſubmit to the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury.

By the Eighteenth he writes to Baldwin King of Jeruſalem, to ſubject all the Churches which ſhall be conquer'd by him to the Church of Jeruſalem as their Metropolitan.

In the Nineteenth he grants this Privilege to Gibeline Patriarch of Jeruſalem.

In the Twentieth, he declares to Bernard Patriarch of Antioch, that he did not thereby intend to prejudice his Rights.

In the Twenty firſt he orders Uraca, the Daughter of the King of Caſtile, to part from Alphonſo King of Arragon her Kinſman in the third Degree.

The Twenty ſecond is the Draught of a Bull which he had thought of making, according to the firſt agreement which he had made with the Emperor Henry V. whereby he enjoyns the Biſhops and Abbots of Germany to abandon all the Fiefs and other Eſtates which they held of the Empire, upon Condition that the Emperor ſhould make no pretenſion to the Eſtates which had not been beſtow'd on the Church by the Emperor.

The Twenty third is written to John Cardinal Biſhop of Freſcati, to Leo of Verceil, and to other Cardinals, who were met at Rome to Cancel the Decree of Pope Paſchal, whereby he had granted the Right of Inveſtiture to the Emperor Henry.

In the Twenty fourth directed to Guy Arch-Biſhop of Vienna, he himſelf cancels this Decree, and declares the Conceſſion null and void.

In the Twenty fifth he advertiſes the Clergy of Augsburgh, that he had interdicted their Biſhop five Years ago, upon the Complaints that had been preferr'd againſt him; and that ſince that Biſhop never appear'd to clear himſelf of the Crimes laid to his Charge, he thought it not convenient to take off the Interdiction pronounc'd againſt him.

In the Twenty ſixth, he refers this Affair to the Determination of Arnulphus Arch-Biſhop of Mentz.

The Twenty ſeventh directed to the Chapter of Augsburgh does not at all agree with the two former. For he therein excuſes the Biſhop of Augsburgh, and refers his Affair to Guy Biſhop of Coire; which has made Baronius ſuppoſe that it was ſurreptitious.

In the Twenty Ninth written to the Patriarch of Antioch, he renews the Declaration which he had formerly made; that by the Letter which he had written in favour of the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, he did not pretend to prejudice the Rights of the Church of Antioch. He wrote the ſame thing to Baldwin King of Jeruſalem by the Twenty Ninth.

In the Thirtieth he wrote word to Henry King of England that he would not meddle with the Rights and Privileges of the Church of Canterbury.

In the Thirty firſt directed to the ſame Prince he complains of their having turn'd Turſtin Arch-Biſhop of York out of his Church, without having obſerv'd any forms of Juſtice.

In the Thirty ſecond written to Pontius Abbot of Cluny, he orders that in the Communion they ſhould give the Bread and Wine apart, which was contrary to the Cuſtom of Cluny, where ſometimes they dip'd the Hoſt in the Wine. However he excepts Infants and Infirm perſons.

In the Thirty third he ſent word to Daimbert Arch-Biſhop of Sens, that he had Conſecrated him who had been Elected Biſhop of Paris without prejudicing the Rights of the Church of Sens.

By the Thirty fourth directed to Lambert Biſhop of Arras, he confirms the Diſunion which had been made by his Predeceſſor Urban II. of the Biſhoprick of Arras, from that of Cambray; gives two Arch-Deaconries to the former, and orders it ſhould enjoy all the Territories which depended on it formerly.

By the Thirty fifth he wrote word to the Biſhops of the Provinces of Rheims, Sens, and Tours, that he had commiſſion'd them with Lambert Biſhop of Arras, to give King Philip Abſolution, in caſe he would ſincerely part with Bertrarda. To this Letter is annex'd the Oath which that Prince and Bertrarda took at Paris in the Year 1104. in the preſence of thoſe Biſhops, to have nothing more to do with each other.

In the Thirty ſixth he Commiſſions Daimbert Arch-Biſhop of Sens to try the Difference which was between the Abbot of Vezelay and the Abbot of Flavigny.

The Thirty ſeventh is the Bull of the Legation of Gerard Biſhop of Angoulême, in the Provinces of Bourges, Bourdeaux, Auche, Tours and Bretagne.

In the Thirty eighth directed to Norigand Biſhop of Autun, he confirms his Election, and orders that he ſhall freely enjoy all the Revennes of his Church.

The next written to Stephen Biſhop of Autun contains ſome thing like the former.

The Six next Letters are directed to Saint Anſelm Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury. In the forty ſecond he anſwers to ſeveral queſtions which that Arch-Biſhop had propoſed, eſpecially about the Inveſtitures of Churches, and he therein determines that a Biſhop may receive Eccleſiaſtical Revenues from the hands of Laicks, who beſtow them on the Church, provided it were within his own Dioceſs, but that he ought not to receive thoſe which are in another Dioceſs, and that Abbots ought not to receive them but from the hands of Biſhops: That one might not receive a Church from the King, as a Recompence of thoſe Eccleſiaſtical Revenues which he had ſeiz'd upon: That an Eccleſiaſtick ought not to pay Homage to a Lay Prince: That the Sons of Prieſts may be admitted into Holy Orders: That it was better in caſe of extremity one ſhould receive the Viaticum from the hands of a Married Prieſt, rather than not receive it at all.

In the forty ſixth, he wrote word to the Clergy of Terrouane, that they ought not to ſuffer any Marry'd Clergy amongſt them.

The forty ſeventh is a Privilege granted to the Monaſtery of St. Sophia near Benevento.

The forty eighth directed to Richard Arch-Biſhop of Narbonne, is a confirmation of the Revenues and Privileges appertaining to that Arch-Biſhoprick, with Prohibitions againſt making any attempts on them.

In the forty ninth he prohibits two Abbots from admitting into Communion two perſons Excommunicated by the Arch-Biſhop of Narbonne.

In the fiftieth directed to Rhotard Arch-Biſhop of Mentz, he wrote againſt the Inveſtitures of Churches, which Princes made with the Paſtoral Rod and Ring. He therein renews the Decree of the Council of Placenza under Urban II. againſt the Clerks Ordain'd during the Schiſm, and refers to a Council to determine how they ought to proceed againſt Excommunicate and Schiſmatical perſons who had procur'd themſelves to be Ordain'd Biſhops.

The fifty firſt is a Privilege granted to the Abbey of Vezelay.

The five next Letters are written in favour of that Abbey.

The fifty ſeventh and eighth confirm the re-eſtabliſhment of the Biſhop of Arras.

In the two next he nominates Umpires to decide the difference between the Clergy of Arras and the Monks of St. Vaaſt.

The next Letters to the ſeventy ſixth are particularly in favour of the Abbey of Clumy. He grants that Abbot a Power of wearing the Mitre and the Croſier, and the Pontifical Habits: but forbids him to cauſe the Holy Chriſm to be Conſecrated in his Abbey.

In the ſeventy ſixth he commends Otho Biſhop of Bamberg, for not accepting of that Biſhoprick from the hands of the Emperor.

In the ſeventy ſeventh, he recommends to the Clergy of Paris, Gualon their Biſhop, and exhorts them to joyn with him in the recovery and preſervation of the Revenues of their Church. He therein prohibits the Great Prebendaries from exacting Homage from the Demi-Prebendaries.

The four next are directed to Guy Arch-Biſhop of Vienna, Legate of the Holy See: In the firſt he confirms to him his Privileges: In the ſecond and third he orders him to determine the difference which was between the Canons of Beſanzon and thoſe of St. Stephen in the ſame City: And in the laſt he confirms what that Arch-Biſhop had done in the Council of Vienna. The Conteſt between the Canons of St. John and St. Stephen of Beſanzon was about the Right of the Cathedral. The Pope had referr'd the Determination thereof to William the Predeceſſor of Guy; afterwards the Cauſe was heard at Rome: The Pope there order'd that in caſe the Canons of St. Stephen could prove that they had been in quiet poſſeſſion of the right of the Cathedral for thirty years paſt, they ſhould enjoy it without any more diſpute. It was upon this and ſeveral other differences that their Cauſe was referr'd to the Arch-Biſhop of Beſanzon, who having call'd a Council at Tornus, in the Year 1115. found that the Canons of St. Stephen produc'd very ſorry Witneſſes to prove their Poſſeſſion, and thereupon adjudg'd the Right to the Chapter of St. John. Pope Paſchal was not ſatisfied with this Sentence, as appears by his third Letter written to Guy; but Calixtus II. confirm'd the Judgment of the Council of Tornus. But this did not put an end to the Diſpute, till Cardinal Hugh united thoſe two Churches by a Treaty concluded between them, An. Dom. 1253.

In the eighty fourth, he confirms the Limits granted to the Citradel of Velitra by Gregory VII.

In the eighty fifth, he wrote word to William Arch-Biſhop of Melphi, that he put down the Biſhoprick eſtabliſhed in the Burrough of Lavella, and confirms the Privileges of the Church of Melphi.

In the eighty ſixth directed to Guy Biſhop of Pavia, he confirm'd the Rights and Privileges of the Church of Pavia.

Moſt of the following Letters are confirmations of Privileges.

The ninety ſixth, ninety ſeventh, ninety ninth, the hundredth, hundredth and firſt and ſecond are written to Henry King of England, and to St. Anſelm about Inveſtitures, and about the Prohibition made againſt admitting the Sons of Prieſts into Orders.

The next Letters are likewiſe directed to the ſame Perſons, and have regard to the Affairs of England; ſuch as the Inſtitution of the Biſhoprick of Ely, and the Tranſlation of Radulphus from the Biſhoprick of Rocheſter to the Arch-Biſhoprick of Canterbury. In the ninety eighth directed to Osborn Biſhop of Exon, he determines that he ought to allow the Monks to have a Church-yard within their Monaſtery to Bury their Dead.

Theſe Letters are followed by ſeveral fragments of other Letters Attributed to this Pope, in the Collection of Gratian, ſeveral of which are againſt the Laicks who were for conferring the Inveſtiture of Churches, Churches, or seiz'd on their Revenues; others about Tenths; some whereby the Monks were prohibited from claiming the Rights which belong'd to Bishops, or from exempting themselves from their Jurisdiction; and others against Marriages between Relations.

Pope Gelasius II. being but a short time on the Chair, wrote but a very few Letters. The Letters of Gelasius II.

In the first directed to all the Prelates of the Kingdom of France, he gives them to understand that the Emperor being unexpectedly come to Rome had drove him thence, and that afterwards he threatned to do him all the mischief he could, if he would not grant him what he desir'd. That he had return'd this Answer to him, that he was ready to determine the difference which was between the Church and the Empire, at Milan or at Cremona, about St. Luke's-day, by those whom God had appointed to be Judges in the Church: That notwithstanding this proposal, he had set on the Chair Maurice Arch-Bishop of Bragne, Excommunicated by his Predecessor Pope Paschal: That thanks be to God the Emperor had not been favour'd by any of the Romans in this his proceeding; but only by those of the Faction of Guibert. He exhorts the Prelates of that Kingdom to find out ways of vindicating the Honour of the Church.

The second directed to Bernard of Toledo, is upon the same Subject.

In the third he exhorts the Clergy and Laity of Rome to have no Correspondence with Maurice the Intruder, who was both Perjur'd and Excommunicated.

In the fourth, he Congratulates Gautier Arch-Bishop of Ravenna, his being advanc'd to that Arch-Bishoprick, and the re-union which he had procur'd between that Church and the Holy See; in pursuance whereof, he restores to the Arch-Bishoprick of Ravenna all the Bishopricks of Æmilia, which had been taken away from it during the Schism, and granted him the Pall.

In the fifth he recommends to the Christians who were at the Siege of Saragossa to receive him whom he had Consecrated Arch-Bishop of that City, and grants Indulgences to all who should Die in that Expedition.

The sixth and seventh are Privileges granted to the Abbey of Cluny.

Calixtus II. wrote more Letters. The Letters of Calixtus II.

By the first he informs Adalbert Arch-Bishop of Mentz of his Election to the Popedom.

The second is a confirmation of the Constitutions of the Order of Cisteaux.

The third is a Confirmation of the Privileges, Rights, and Revenues of the Church of Vienna.

The fourth is written to the Bishops of France, about the taking of Maurice Burdin.

The fifth is a Congratulatory Letter to the Emperor Henry V. upon the Conclusion of the Treaty which he had made with the Holy See about Investitures.

By the sixth he confirms the Privileges of the Church of Bragne.

By the seventh and eighth those of the Church of Bamberg.

By the ninth and tenth those of the Abbey of Vendome.

In the eleventh, he refers to the Bishop of Langres a difference which was between the Monastery of St. Peter the Lively of Sens, and the Abbots of Molesin, and of St. Rhemy of Rheims.

The next are written in favour of the Chapter of St. John of Besançon, to whom he adjudg'd the Right of the Cathedral.

The four next are Privileges granted to the Abbey of Tornus.

The twenty first and second are other Privileges granted to the Abbey of Cluny.

The twenty third is a Letter of Compliment to King Lewis the Gross, to whom he recommends his Legat.

The twenty fourth is directed to Gerbert Bishop of Paris: He therein orders that all the Churches and Abbeys of his Dioces shall be subject to him, and that the Canon of his Church who had been made a Bishop, shall no longer hold his Prebend.

In the twenty fifth, he permits a certain Lord of Germany to found a Monastery; upon Condition, that the Revenues which he bestow'd should be under the Protection of the Holy See, to which the Monastery should give every fourth Year an Albe and some white Vestments; and that neither he nor his Successors should have any thing to do with what related to the Monastery.

In the twenty sixth and seventh, he approves the Institution of the Regular Canons in the Churches of Benriad and Berchgetesgaden.

By the twenty eighth, he Establishes Gerard Bishop of Angoulême, his Legat in the Provinces of Bourges, Bourdeaux, Auche, Tours, and Bretagne.

In the twenty ninth directed to the Bishops of Orleans and Paris, he confirms the Prohibitions made by his Legat against Celebrating Divine Service, where-ever William the Son of Count Robert, who had Marry'd the Daughter of the Count Angers his Kinsman, should be.

In the thirtieth directed to Pontius Abbot of Aniana, he adjudg'd to that Abbot a Priory, which was Contested between him and the Arch-Bishop of Arles, and the Monks of the Abbey de la Chaise-Dieu.

In the thirty first and second, he order'd that those who pillag'd the Revenues of the Village of Mongodin, belonging to the Chapter of Mascon, shall be Excommunicated.

In the four next, he confirms the Primacy of the Arch-Bishoprick of Toledo.

To these Letters is annex'd a Letter of Lewis the Gross, directed to that Pope, as an Answer to that which he had sent into France upon the taking of Burdin; wherein, after he had declar'd to him the Joy he conceiv'd at this Success, he returns him thanks for having superseded for a while the Sentence past'd against the Arch-Bishop of Sens, in favour of the Arch-Bishop of Lions; and desires he would be pleas'd wholly to revoke it, observing to him that he had laid this business very much to heart, and would expose himself and his Kingdom to the utmost dangers; rather than put up such an Affront. He puts his Holiness in mind of the great services which the Kings of France had always done to the Holy

Holy See, and of thoſe which in a particular manner he had done for him by being preſent at the Council of Rheims, wherein he had more regard to the Honour of the Holy See than to his own Intereſt. He conjur'd him as an acknowledgment of thoſe good turns, that he would be pleas'd to preſerve the Church of Sens in its Ancient Liberty, which could not be taken away from it by a Privilege granted by Stealth, and without his knowledge, to the Arch-Biſhop of Lions.

The four Sermons upon St. James attributed to Calixtus II. Publiſh'd by Mariana, and inſerted in the Bibliotheca Patrum, are ſuppoſititious pieces, and unworthy of that Pope.

CHAP. III.

The Hiſtory and Letters of the Popes, Honorius II. Innocent II. Celeſtine II. Lucius II. and Eugenius III.

Honorius II.

POPE Calixtus being Dead, Leo Franchipani forbad the Cardinals to proceed to a New Election till three days after, under pretence, that they might have time ſufficient to deliberate on the Choice they were to make, and to conſult the Canons, relating to Elections thereupon. Franchipani's deſign was to get Lambert Biſhop of Oſtia Elected; the People were for the Cardinal of St. Stephen, whom Franchipani ſeem'd alſo to favour: But, the Cardinals caſting an eye upon Thibaud, Prieſt and Cardinal of St. Anaſtaſius, gave their Votes for him, and would have Proclaim'd him Pope under the Name of Celeſtine II. When in the mean time Leo Franchipani, obſerving the People were againſt this Election, propos'd to them the aforeſaid Lambert; who was ſoon after Proclaim'd by the common ſuffrage of the Clergy and People, was Clothed in his Pontifical Habit, and Nam'd Honorius II. Nevertheleſs, the better to gain the Cardinal's Approbation, in few days after he threw off his Papal Ornaments in their preſence; which won ſo extreamly upon them, that they were ſoon brought to acknowledge him and confirm his Election. He Govern'd Peaceably and Prudently the Holy See for five Years and two Months. In the Year 1125. he Excommunicated Frederic and Conrade, Nephews to the Emperor Henry V. who would have ſeiz'd upon the Empire, and who made War upon Lotharius. In 1127 he declar'd War himſelf againſt Roger Count of Sicily, who pretended to have a right to the Dutchies of Calabria and Apulia Independant from the Pope. The Year after he Excommunicated this Prince, and Dy'd the 14th of February, in the Year 1130.

Innocent II.

After the Death of Honorius II. the Cardinals that were then preſent, on the ſame day Elected Gregory Cardinal of St. Angelo, who was then Nam'd Innocent II. At the ſame time Cardinal Peter of Leon, formerly a Monk of the Abbey of Cluny, caus'd himſelf to be Elected, under the Name of Anacletus, by another Faction of Cardinals. The Party of Cardinal Peter was by much the ſtronger, which oblig'd thoſe that were for Innocent to retire to ſtrong Holds, and afterwards to fly with that Pope to the City of Piſa. This occaſion'd Innocent to come into France, where an Aſſembly of Prelates was held on his account at Etampes, in the Year 1130. to which St. Bernard was ſent. He ſpoke very notably in favour of Innocent, and his Opinion was follow'd by the whole Council. This Pope being thus acknowledg'd by France went immediately thither, and was ſplendidly receiv'd at Orleans by King Lewis the Groſs, and ſeveral Biſhops that came to wait on that Prince. From thence he ſet forwards to Chartres, where Henry I. King of England acknowledg'd him likewiſe. He had not long after the Approbation and Conſent of the Emperor Lotharius, whom he went to meet at Liege in the beginning of the following Year. This Prince receiv'd him very honourably, but however he would needs make uſe of this occaſion to get the Inveſtitures reſtor'd. This very much ſurpriz'd the [illegible], and St. Bernard labour'd all he could to diſſwade the Emperor from inſiſting on ſuch a Demand.

At the breaking up of this Conference, the Pope held a Council at Rheims, at which he Crown'd King Lewis the Younger, in the Room of his Brother Philip, then lately dead. After this Council was over he made ſome ſhort ſtay at Auxerre and thence return'd into Italy, having firſt comply'd with Lotharius, who thereupon promis'd to march to Rome and Re-Eſtabliſh him in the Papal Chair. Upon this Lotharius kept punctually to his word; came to Rome; put Innocent in poſſeſſion of the Palace of Lateran, and in recompence was Crown'd Emperor by this Pope in the Year 1133. But, notwithſtanding, all this; Peter of Leon and his Party, being become Maſters of all the Strong Holds in and about Rome, and Lotharius likewiſe being Oblig'd to Return home, Innocent was conſtrain'd to retire a Second time to Piſa, where he call'd a Council in the Year 1134. The Church of Milan ſoon came under the Obedience of Innocent II. thro' the perſwaſion of St. Bernard and the Legates which this Pope had ſent thither. But the Province of Guienne declar'd for Peter of Leon thro' the Subtilty of Gerard Biſhop of Angouleſme, who had perſwaded William Duke of this Province that this was the Rightful Pope, and who for recompence was made Legate in conjunction with Giles Cardinal Biſhop of Freſcati: Theſe condemn'd William Biſhop of Poictiers, caus'd him to be driven out of his Dioceſs and placed another in his Room. They likewiſe diſpoſſeſs'd the Biſhop of Limoges and inſtated Ranulphus of Duras in his See. Hereupon St. Bernard and Geofrey Biſhop of Chalcedon, went to Guienne and conferring with the Duke at Pontigni, eaſily enclin'd him to own Innocent for Pope. But whereas he would by no means conſent to the Re-eſtabliſhment of the Biſhops that had been ſuſpended, St. Bernard to ſurmount his Obſtinacy, took the bleſſed Sacrament and carrying it to the Place where the Duke was, conjur'd him in the Name of Jeſus, and with ſuch terrible words that the frighted Duke fell flat upon the Ground and was forc'd to be reconcil'd to the Biſhop of Poictiers.

The

The Bishop of Angoulesme, who had also possess'd himself of the Arch-Bishoprick of Bourdeaux, dy'd some small time after, whereby the Schism was entirely suppress'd in Guienne. Roger Duke of Sicily was now the only Prince that continu'd in the Interest of Peter of Leon, and this by reason that he had receiv'd the Title of King from him, and moreover was in possession of that part of the Patrimony of St. Peter which lay in the Province of Benevento which he had no mind to restore to the Holy See. Yet Duke Ranulphus having defeated him in a signal Battle, prevented his attempting any thing against Pope Innocent. Peter of Leon dy'd in the Year 1138. A little while after his death, those of his Party plac'd in his stead the Cardinal Gregory to whom they gave the name of Victor, but this Person finding his side too weak to hold out against Innocent, came and publickly surrender'd his Pretensions to him in the Year 1139. Afterwards Innocent held a Council at Lateran, in which the Favourers of Peter of Leon were solemnly condemn'd, and the Ordinations made by this Pope declar'd Null and Void. Some time after Innocent was taken by Duke Roger which occasion'd the Agreement afterwards made between them. This Pope dy'd the 24 of September in the Year 1143. The same day Guy a Priest and Cardinal of St Mark was chosen Pope by the Cardinals, and proclaim'd under the name of Celestine II. He had no Competitors in his Election, but his Pontificate was of no long continuance, for he dy'd 5 Months and a few days after, on the Eighth of March in the Year 1144. He was succeeded by Gerard Cardinal of the Holy-Cross, who took the name of Lucius II, whose Pontificate was very much molested by the War with Roger Duke of Sicily, with whom nevertheless he at length made a Truce, and by the Revolt of some Italians who had a mind to Assert the Authority of their Senators that were Assembled in the Capitol. This Pope dy'd of Grief as some will have it, but as others say, he was kill'd by the fall of a Stone about the End of the first Year of his Pontificate, the 26th of February in the Year 1145. Celestine II. Lucius II.

Bernard, Native of Pisa, Abbot of St. Anastasius and Disciple of St. Bernard was chosen in his place by the Cardinals under the Name of Eugenius III. This Pope the People would have Oblig'd before his Consecration to have confirm'd the Soveraignty of the Senators, to avoid doing which he retir'd to the Monastery of Forsu where he was proclaim'd and Consecrated Pope. Some time after his Consecration he retir'd to Rome, where he liv'd for a while in a strong hold; but at length, not thinking himself in sufficient Security, he retir'd to Viterbe. He was no sooner gone but Jordanes, who had taken upon him the Quality of a Patrician, made himself master of Rome, Pillag'd all the Cardinals and Great Mens House that would not submit to his Government, Built divers Citadels in the City, and also made one of the Church of St. Peter. Against him, Eugenius pronounc'd the severest Anathema's and by the Assistance of the Militia of Tivoli forc'd the Italians to make Peace, to abolish the Dignity of Patricius, and to receive a Præfect and Senators which he should depute to govern them in his Absence. This Agreement being Concluded, he return'd to Rome, and kept the Feast of Christmas there, but the Romans being unmindful of the Articles of the Peace, and given to Rebel, Eugenius was forc'd to get away secretly to Tivoli, whence he retir'd to Pisa and from thence into France in the Year 1147. He was there kindly receiv'd by King Lewis and had several Councils in favour of the Croisade, and continu'd above a Year in that Country. He return'd into Italy towards the End of the Year 1148. where after having undergon divers fatigues of War, he at length became Master of the Church of St. Peter in the Year 1150. He dy'd at Tivoli the Ninth of July in the Year 1153, His Body was carry'd to Rome and Interr'd in St. Peter's Church. Eugenius III.

The Letters of these Popes contain nothing very remarkable.

Honorius II. has writ but very few.

His first was upon occasion of the Death of Pontius a Monk of Cluny who dy'd out of his Abbey. He gives Peter the Venerable Abbot of Cluny, to Understand that he had bury'd him in holy Ground out of respect to that Abbey whereof he had formerly been Monk. The Letters of Honorius II.

The Second and Third are writ concerning the Pall which he Grants to William Elected Arch-Bishop of Tyr and Consecrated by the Patriarch of Jerusalem.

In the Fourth he recommends to the King of Denmark the Legat which he had sent into his Kingdom.

By the Fifth he receives Henry, Son of Lewis VI. of France being design'd for the Church, under the Protection of the Holy See.

In the Sixth, directed to the Clergy of Tours, he confirms the Excommunication pronounc'd by his Legat against Fulcus Earl of Angers, by reason that he did not break the Marriage between his Daughter and William Son of Lord Robert.

The Seventh is a Confirmation of the Privileges granted the Abbey of Cluny by his Predecessors.

The Three following relate to the Legateship of Cardinal John de Creme into England.

The Last is Address'd to the Bishops of the Province of Tours to exhort them to Observe the Decrees of the Council of Nantes.

The Letters of Innocent II are very many.

In the First he confirms the Judgment of the Council of Jouare against the Associates of Thomas Prior of St. Victor as likewise against those of Archembaud Sub-Dean of Orleans, adding several Punishments which were before Omitted. The Letters of Innocent II.

By the Second he gives all the Land which the Princess Matilda enjoy'd in Italy, and which she had left to the Holy See, to the Emperor Lotharius and Henry Duke of Bavaria his Son in Law, on condition that they swear Fealty and do Homage to the Church of Rome, and moreover to pay yearly a Hundred Pound in Gold.

The

The Third is a Confirmation of the Immunities and Revenues belonging to the Church of Piſtoia in Tuſcany, Addreſs'd to the Biſhop of that City.

The Five Letters following are written to the Patriarch of Jeruſalem and Antioch, and the other Biſhops of the Eaſt for Conſervation of the Dignity and Rights of Fulcus Arch-Biſhop Tyr.

In the Ninth he confirms the Grant made by Pope Honorius II. to Roger, of the Kingdom of Sicily, Dutchy of Apulia and Principality of Capua together with the Title of King.

The Next following contain the Condemnation of Peter Abaëlard and Arnold de Breſſe.

The Twelfth is a Privilege granted to the Abby of St. Memme.

In the Three Next he confirms the Power of the Arch-Biſhop of Hambourg over the Biſhopricks of Denmark, Sueden, and Norway.

In the Sixteenth he Admoniſhes Hugh Arch-Biſhop of Roan to comply with the King of England his Maſter, and to permit the Abbots of Normandy to pay Fealty and Homage to him.

In the Seventeenth, he acquaints King Lewis that he is Arriv'd in perfect Health at Cluny.

By the Eighteenth he commands Geofrey Biſhop of Chartres, and Stephen Biſhop of Paris, to reſtore to Archembaud Sub-Dean of Orleans and his fraternity, the Benefices and Goods that had been taken from them.

In the Nineteenth, he orders the ſame Biſhop of Paris to take off the ſuſpenſion which he had awarded againſt the Church of St. Genievefve.

The Four next relate to the Abbey of Vezelay, to which he orders an Abbot, and whoſe Privileges he confirms.

In the Twenty fourth, he commands Aloiſius Abbot of Anchin to take care of the Church of Arras, of which he was Elected Biſhop.

In the Twenty fifth, he confirms the Rights and Privileges of the Biſhop of Bamberg.

In the Twenty ſixth, he receives Hugh Arch-Deacon of Arras, under protection of the See of Rome.

The Fourteen Letters which follow, concern the Privileges and Revenues of the Abbey of Cluny: and in the fifteenth, he recommends himſelf to the Prayers of this Monaſtery.

The Forty ſecond is a piece of a Letter wrote to Otho Biſhop of Lucca, concerning thoſe Witneſſes who are related to either Party.

In the Forty third, he acquaints Guigue Prior of the Great Charter-Houſe, that he has Canoniz'd Hugh Biſhop of Grenoble, and farther Commands him to write what he knows of his Life or Miracles.

There are alſo five more Letters which belong to Innocent II. and relate to the Affairs of Germany, and two concerning the Church of Angers. The firſt are at the end of the 10th Tome of the Councils, and the two laſt in the 2d Tome of the Miſcellanies of Monſieur de Baluze.

We have but three Letters of Celeſtine II.

The Letters of Celeſtine II.

IN the Firſt he acquaints Peter, the Venerable Abbot of Cluny, with his Acceſſion to the Pontificate.

In the Second, he confirms the Donation of the Church of St. Vincent, to the Order of Cluny, by the Biſhop of Salamanca.

In the Laſt, he orders the Arch-Biſhop of Toledo to reſtore to the Biſhop of Orenſe ſome Pariſhes which the late Biſhop of Aſtorga had ſeiz'd upon.

The Letters of Pope Lucius II. are about Ten.

The Letters of Lucius II.

BY the Firſt he gives Peter of Cluny to underſtand that he has made a Truce with Roger King of Sicily.

By the Second he demands aid of King Conrade againſt the Italians, who were revolted, and who had choſen Jordanes for a Patrician.

In the Third and Fourth, he confirms the Primacy of the Church of Toledo over all the Churches of Spain.

The Fifth contains a Privilege granted to the Abbey of Cluny.

In the Sixth he ſubmits the Monaſtery of St. Sabas to the Abbey of Cluny.

By the Seventh, he Commands the Abbot of St. Germain's of Auxerre to diſcharge the Servants of the Abbot of Vezelay, who were Bail for him, and he moreover removes the Suit before Godfrey Biſhop of Langres.

In the Eighth, he confirms the Judgment given by Pope Paſchal againſt thoſe that had kill'd Artaud Abbot of Vezelay, and forbids their being receiv'd any more into any Monaſtery.

By the Ninth he orders the Count of Nevers to reſtore to the Abbey of Vezelay whatever he had taken from it.

And by the Tenth, he enjoyns St. Bernard to warn the ſaid Count from exacting any thing from the aforeſaid Abbey.

The Letters of Eugenius III. are in a far greater number.

Eugenius III.

THE Firſt Addreſs'd to Lewis King of France, is an exhortation to the Croiſade, to encourge the retaking the City of Edeſſe, with all others that had been Conquer'd, and in a word, to defend the Holy-Land from Invaſion. He therein confirms all the Privileges granted to the Knights of the

Croſs

Croſs by his Predeceſſor Urban, and moreover puts their Wives, Children and Eſtates under protection of the Churches and Biſhops; then he prohibits any Proceſs being iſſu'd out in prejudice of the ſaid Knights till they were either Dead or return'd from their Voyage. Next, his Will is, that they be paid Intereſt for the Money they had, Permits them to Mortgage their Eſtates to the Churches without equity of Redemption; warns them not to be at a needleſs charge about unprofitable Equipage, but to lay the moſt part out in Arms, Horſes and other Inſtruments of War. And laſtly, he grants them Remiſſion and Abſolution of all their Sins, which they ſhall have Confeſſed with an humble and contrite Heart. The Letters of Eugenius III.

By the Second directed to Thibaud, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, he Commands and Provides that the Biſhop of St. David's ſhall be ſubject to the See of Canterbury, and likewiſe requires the two ſaid Biſhop's Attendance at Rome the Year following, on St. Luke's day, that he may Judge farther of the matter.

The Third is Addreſſed to Hildegarda Abbeſs of Mont St. Rupert, commending her Spirit of Prophecy, and adviſing her to preſerve by her humility God's Grace granted to her, and moreover, always to make uſe of Prudence in the unfolding of thoſe Myſteries which God had reveal'd to her.

The Fourth and Fifth are againſt ſome Eccleſiaſticks of Rome, who follow'd the Doctrine of Arnaud de Breſſe.

By the Sixth he comforts King Conrade on his ill ſucceſs in his Expedition to the Eaſt.

The Seventh comprehends the Ceremonies of the Canonization of the Emperor Henry II.

The Eighth is an anſwer to the Biſhops of Germany, wherein he ſignifies his diſlike of the intended Tranſlation of Guieman Biſhop of Naumbourg to the Arch-Biſhoprick of Magdebourg.

The Ninth contains a grant of the fourth part of all the Offerings made in the Church of St. Peter, to the Canons of that Church. This is ſigned by the Pope and ſeveral Cardinals.

The Tenth is another Act to confirm the Rights and Privileges of the Church of Colen. This is likewiſe Signed by divers Cardinals.

The Eleventh is a Conſolatory Epiſtle written to Sugerus Abbot of St. Denys upon the Death of his Nephew.

In the Twelfth written to the ſame Abbot, he Demands the Names of thoſe French Biſhops who had refus'd to aſſiſt him in the defence of the Kingdom, and likewiſe thanks him for his kind offer of the place which he deſir'd to hold a Council in. He therein alſo ſpeaks of the Excommunication of the Duke of Lorrain, and of a favour which this Abbot had requeſted of him for a certain Church.

The Thirteenth is likewiſe written to Sugerus: He therein exhorts him to place the Monks of St. Martins in the Fields, in the Church of St. Genevieve; and accordingly gives the Canons of the ſaid Church notice thereof in the Letter following. But however, having afterwards alter'd his mind, he orders in the Fifteenth the Regular Canons to be receiv'd in ſtead of the Monks, which was ſpeedily obey'd by Sugerus, as he gives his Holineſs to underſtand, and which the Pope approves of by the Sixteenth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, and Twentieth Letters, all written to Sugerus.

The Seventeenth is writ to the ſame, relating to him that had been choſen Biſhop of Arras, notwithſtanding an Appeal made to the Holy See.

In the Twenty firſt, he gives this Abbot to underſtand that Lewis King of France is return'd from the Holy-Land, and Arrived in Sicily.

In the Twenty Second, he exhorts the ſaid Abbot to govern the Kingdom of France with Fidelity during the King's Abſence. And moreover, acquaints him that he has written a Letter to the Arch-Biſhops and Biſhops of that Kingdom, by which, he Commands them to Excommunicate all thoſe that diſturb the publick Tranquility, and likewiſe Commands the ſaid Abbot to convene the Prelates of the Kingdom to provide whatever ſhall be neceſſary for the good of the State.

The Twenty third is the ſame mention'd before, written to the Arch-Biſhops and Biſhops of France.

The Twenty fourth relates to a particular Affair of two Prieſts of Meaux accus'd by Goſlin whoſe cauſe he refers to Sugerus.

By the Twenty fifth, Twenty ſixth, and Thirtieth, he alſo refers to Sugerus the Judgment pronounc'd againſt a Prieſt of the Dioceſs of Sens who had been depriv'd of his Benefice by the Arch-Deacon for having refus'd to give him ſuch Sums as he demanded.

By the Twenty ſeventh, he alſo refers to the ſaid Abbot the difference between Joſſelin Canon of Meaux and another Eccleſiaſtick.

By the Twenty eighth, he exhorts the ſame Abbots to redeem the Treaſure of St. Genevieve which had been pawn'd.

In the Twenty ninth, he ſpeaks to him concerning the Croiſade of King Lewis.

In the Thirty firſt, he deſires him to relieve the Church of St. Medard of Soiſſons, from which Ives Count of Soiſſons demanded a great Sum.

In the Thirty ſecond, he thanks him for his Care of the Churches of the Eaſt, and moreover recommends to him the re-eſtabliſhment of Religion in the Church of Campiegne.

The Thirty third is Addreſs'd to Stephen King of England, whom he deſires not to uſe the Biſhop of London ill, though he had refus'd to take the Oath of Fidelity to him. He recommends the ſame matter to Maud Queen of England by the Thirty fourth Letter.

The following Letters to the Sixtieth, concern the differences which Pontius Abbot of Vezelay had with Count Nevers, and the Biſhop of Autun, concerning the Immunities and Privileges of his Abbey. Eugenius III. takes this Abbot's part very ſtrongly, and writes in favour of him, to ſeveral Princes and Biſhops.

The Sixty firſt is written to Eberhard Biſhop of Bamberg, whom he Commands to retain the Regular Canons Eſtabliſh'd in the Church of Hildeſheim by Gebehard Biſhop of Eichſtat, and to drive out the Secular Canons which the Arch-Biſhop of Mayence had introduc'd there. He writes about this matter to the ſaid Arch-Biſhop in the following Letter.

The Sixty third is the Title of the Re-Eſtabliſhment of the Biſhoprick of Tournay written to the Clergy and People of that City, by which he gives them to underſtand that he has ordain'd for their Biſhop, Anſelm Abbot of St. Vincent of Laon, enjoyning them to receive him, and conſequently promiſes to diſpenſe with their Oath of Fidelity which they ſhould have taken to the Biſhop of Noyons. By the following Letter he acquaints Lewis VII. King of France with the Re-Eſtabliſhing of this Biſhoprick and recommends to him the Perſon that he had Ordain'd Biſhop of Tournay.

The Three following Letters are written to Moſes Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna concerning him that had been Elected Biſhop of Placenza, and who ought to have been Conſecrated by this Arch-Biſhop his Metropolitan.

In the Sixty eighth he ſeverely reprimands Samſon Arch-Biſhop of Rheims for having Crown'd the King of France in the City of Bourges to the Prejudice of the Arch-Biſhop of that City, whereupon he Orders him to reſtore to the Church of Bourges the Offerings and Gifts which he had receiv'd upon that Occaſion, Interdicts him the Pallium, and moreover Cites him to Rome together with the other Biſhops who had Aſſiſted at that Coronation.

The Sixty ninth contains his Grant and Confirmation of the Arch-Biſhop of Bourges his Primacy over the Provinces of Bourges and Bourdeaux.

By the following Letter he commands the Biſhop of Saintes to permit a new Church to be Built at Rochelle.

The Seventy firſt is a Confirmation of the Conſtitutions and Privileges and of the Order of White Friars.

The Seventy Second with the following till you come to the 83 and laſt, are Addreſs'd to the Biſhops of Spain Relating to the Primacy of Toledo.

There are alſo three Letters of Eugenius III. wherein he commands the Abbots of St. Pons, and de Grace to preſent to the Arch-Biſhop of Narbonne the Prieſts which they have a mind to place in Curacies belonging to them, to the End that they might receive their Orders from him and pay him accordingly their Firſt Fruits and Oblations.

Monſieur Baluze in his II Tome of Miſcellanies, has given us a Letter of this Pope's written to the Biſhops of Reggio and Foro-Julio, whereby he forbids the ſaid Biſhops to exact any thing from the Church of Barſole, ſince it was under protection of the Holy See. He alſo Excommunicates the Biſhops of theſe Dioceſſes for having Interr'd Excommunicated perſons in Conſecrated Ground.

There is alſo a Privilege in favour of the Biſhops of the Province of Bourges, whereby Eugenius confirm'd the Liberty granted them by the Kings of France, and which had been approv'd by the Popes, Innocent and Lucius, which was that they might be Elected without being Oblig'd to do Fealty or Homage to the Papal-Chair.

The Letters of Anacletus II. the Anti-Pope.

To the Letters of theſe Popes we may here Add thoſe of Anacletus II. the Anti-Pope, which have been lately publiſh'd by Chriſtianus Lupus, at the End of his Collection of Letters printed at Louvain in the Year 1682.. They are in all 38, whereof the moſt conſiderable have been written about his Election, which he maintains to have perform'd according to Cuſtom; and with the Unanimous Conſent of the Clergy of Rome. He there Accuſes Aimeric Chancellor of the Church of Rome to have been the Cauſe of his Adverſaries being Elected, and of the Troubles which Enſu'd. Theſe Letters are writ in a good ſtile, and with ſome ſort of Elegance and Force.

CHAP. IV.

The Life of St. Bernard together with his Works.

The Life of Bernard.

SAint Bernard was Born in the Year 1091. at Fontaine a Village of Burgundy whereof his Father, call'd Teſchelin, was Lord. His Mother, nam'd Alethe Daughter to Count Montbart, had 7 Children, ſix Boys and one Girl, all which ſhe Educated very diſcreetly and pioufly. St. Bernard was very much inclin'd to Virtue from his Infancy, and took betimes a reſolution to retire from the World. He alſo engag'd all his Brothers and ſeveral Friends in the ſame Reſolutions, who after they had liv'd for ſome time retir'd in their own houſes, in the year 1113. met together and went to Ciſteaux, there to enter into a Monaſtical Life. This Monaſtery is Situated in the Dioceſs of Chalons about Five Leagues from Dijon. It had been Built about 15 Years before, in 1098, by Robert Abbot of Moleſme who retreated thither with about one and Twenty Monks, who all embrac'd an Auſtere and Rigid Life. But in the Year following Robert being Oblig'd by the Pope's Order to return to Moleſme, Alberick Prior of Ciſteaux, was made Abbot who dying in 1109. Steven Hardingve became the Third Abbot. He Govern'd this Monaſtery, reduc'd to a ſmall Number of Monks by reaſon of the Auſterity of their Lives, when St. Bernard and 30 of his Companions came into it. This extreamly augmented the Zeal of this Order which then began to encreaſe; for the firſt year after the Abby of la Tetté, firſt Daughter of Ciſteaux, was founded near la Grone in the Dioceſs of Chalons. The year following there was another Eſtabliſh'd at Pontigni four Leagues from Auxerre, and in the year 1115. thoſe of Clairvaux and Morimond were founded in the Dioceſs of Langres. Abbot Stephen ſent St. Bernard and his Brothers to that of Clairvaux. He choſe, although he was very Young, to govern this Monaſtery. He was Conſecrated Abbot by William de Champeaux Biſhop of Chalons, by reaſon of the Vacancy of the Epiſcopal See of Langres. The Reputation of St. Bernard's ſingular Piety, and the ſtrict Manner of living in his Monaſtery, drew People from all parts to be Admitted of it. Inſomuch that in a little time ſeveral Monks went out thence to Eſtabliſh themſelves in other Monaſteries where they liv'd according to the ſame Rule. That of the Three Fountains was firſt founded in the Dioceſs of Chalons in the year 1118. That of Fontenay a little while after in the Dioceſs of Autun in the Year 1121. Next there was one Eſtabliſh'd at Foigny in the Dioceſs of Laon, and that of Igny in the Dioceſs of Rheims, and Laſtly the fourth Off-ſpring of Clairvaux was founded in the year 1127. All theſe Monaſteries had for their firſt founders the Monks of Clairvaux, who were all Abbots ſucceſſively. But St. Bernard had a general ſuperviſorſhip over all the reſt. The Learning and Virtues of this Saint were too bright to continue long hid within the Walls of a Cloyſter, for they quickly render'd him ſo famous in the Church that nothing of Moment paſs'd there wherein he was not Employ'd. He was call'd to the Councils of Troyes and Chalons, held by Matthew Cardinal Biſhop of Albani: The firſt in the year 1128. and the ſecond in 1129. The Schiſm and Factions which hapned in the Church of Rome after the Death of Pope Honorius II. between Innocent and Peter of Leon, gave a great deal of Trouble to St. Bernard who was the principal Defender of Innocent for eight years together. The King of France before he would declare for either of theſe Competitors aſſembled a Convocation of his Prelates at Etampes to examine which of the two had the greater Right. To this Aſſembly St. Bernard was call'd, and the ſole Deciſion of ſo important a matter refer'd to his Judgment. Whereupon he gave his Opinion for Innocent II. and all the Aſſembly acquieſced in it. This Pope being thus acknowledg'd by France, poſted thither with all imaginable diligence, and St. Bernard waited on him all along during his ſtay there. He carry'd him from Orleans to Chartres where he perſwaded Henry King of England to Acknowledge him. From thence he follow'd this Pope into Germany, and was preſent at the Conference his Holyneſs had with the Emperor at Liege. He there ſpoke with a great deal of freedom to this Prince, perſwading him to alter his reſolutions of requiring the Pope to re-eſtabliſh Inveſtitures. At his Return from Liege, His Holyneſs held a Council at Rheims in the year 1131. which when ended he retir'd to Auxerre, after having Viſited Cluny and Clairvaux, which did not go in Proceſſion before him clad in ſplendid Ornaments, but cloath'd in Courſe Cloath, carrying a homely Crucifix and ſinging leiſurely and modeſtly Hymns and Anthems. The year following St. Bernard accompany'd the Pope into Italy, and brought over to him both the Piſantines and Genoeſes. At length he came with him to Rome, whence he was not long after ſent into Germany, to make Peace between Conrade and Lotharius. Having happily Negotiated this Affair he was recall'd to Piſa, whither the Pope was forc'd to retire a ſecond time. St. Bernard Aſſiſted at the Council which his Holyneſs held in this City in the Year 1134, after the Concluſion of which the Pope ſent him to Milan to reconcile the Milaneze to the Church of Rome. He ſent alſo along with him two Cardinals in quality of Legates, Guy Biſhop of Piſa, and Matthew Biſhop of Albani, and this to the end that they might purge the City of Milan of the Schiſm which Anſelm a favourer of Peter of Leon had ſpread there, and bring back all that were ſtray'd from the Church of Rome. St. Bernard took alſo along with him Geofrey Biſhop of Chartres to Adviſe with upon occaſion. The Milaneze who had long deſir'd St. Bernard ſhould come among them, met him before he came to the City, and receiv'd him with all imaginable Reſpect and Honour, ſo that by his means the Church of Milan was ſoon brought over to the Obedience of the See of Rome. After this St. Bernard return'd into France, but he was no ſooner got there, but he was forc'd to leave his Monaſtery to go to Guienne with the Pope's Legate, to reduce the Duke of that Province to the Obedience of the Holy See, and to re-eſtabliſh the Biſhops of Poictiers and Limoges who had been Expuls'd. He Overcame the Obſtinacy of this Prince by an Action of ſurprizing Boldneſs, for when he ſaw the Dukes reſolution, not to reſtore the Biſhop of Poictiers, was inflexible, he went to perform the Divine Office, and as ſoon as the Conſecration was over, he plac'd the Wafer upon the Chalice, walk'd out of the Church and with Eyes full of fury and a terrible Meen he accoſted the Duke after this manner. Hitherto (Quoth He) We have Pray'd and Pray'd, and you have ſtill ſlighted us. Several Servants of God who were preſent at the Aſſembly, have Join'd their Prayers with ours, yet you have never minded them. Now therefore the Son of God, who is the Lord and Head of that Church which you perſecute, is come in Perſon to See if you will Repent. Here is your Judge at whoſe name every Knee bends both in Heaven, Earth and Hell. Here is the Juſt revenger of your Crimes into whoſe hands this Obſtinate Spirit of yours ſhall one day fall. Will you deſpiſe and flout at him? Will you be able, think you, to ſlight him as you have done us his Servants? Will you. Here the Duke not being able to hear any more, fell down in a Swoun; whereupon St. Bernard took him up and commanded him forthwith to be reconcil'd to the Biſhop of Poictiers, which the poor Aſtoniſh'd Prince immediately condeſcended to; ſo that the Biſhop was quickly after reſtor'd and all Schiſm aboliſh'd in that Province. In the year 1137. he was recall'd into Italy by the Pope to quell the remaining Party of Peter of Leon. He went thither and after having brought over ſeveral to Pope Innocent's ſide, he was deputed to Roger Duke of Sicily, who was then the only Prince that continu'd to ſupport Peter of Leon, there to Defend his Maſter Innocent againſt Cardinal Peter of Piſa who was to Oppoſe him. He enter'd into a Conference with this Cardinal, and ſoon made him change his Opinion and Party. After Peter of Leon's Death, the Perſon that was intended to ſucceed him in his Attempt, came to beg of St. Bernard that he would Intercede to Pope Innocent for his Pardon. Peace by theſe means being reſtor'd to the Church of Rome, and Schiſm entirely extirpated, St. Bernard return'd to his Monaſtery of Clairvaux, and after his arrival ſent the Pope ſome of his Monks to Inhabit the Monaſtery of St. Anaſtaſius newly re-built. One of theſe call'd Ber- nard, formerly Official of the Church of Piſa, was choſen for their Abbot, who afterwards came to be Pope under the name of Eugenius III. after the Death of Celeſtine and Lucius, ſucceſſors to Innocent II. both who liv'd no long time. It was about this time that St. Bernard diſputed with Abaëlard, a Famous Philoſopher of the Univerſity of Paris, at the Council of Sens in the year 1140. He had often ſent to him privately to correct his Errors, maintain'd in his Books, but this Obſtinate Author neglecting ſo to do, and Appealing to the Arch-Biſhop of Sens, St. Bernard was ſent to the Council held there, whither he went though againſt his will. Abaëlard not daring to ſupport his Errors, Appeal'd to the Pope, but his Doctrine being condemn'd by this Council, he retir'd to Cluny; where after having renounc'd his ſentiments, he Dy'd in the Communion of the Church of Rome. Under the Pontificate of Eugenius III. St. Bernard was deſir'd to Preach up the Croiſade, at the Requeſt of Lewis the Younger, who had thoughts in his Head to undertake a Voyage into the Holy-Land. St. Bernard acquitted himſelf in his Duty with ſo much zeal, that great numbers of people reſolv'd to accompany Lewis in that Expedition. He was preſent at three Councils, held in the Year 1147. at Etampes, Auxerre, and Paris. The ſame Year he was ſent into Aquitaine, by Alberic Cardinal-Biſhop of Oſtia, to Combat the Hereſies which Henry had promulg'd there. He quickly confounded them, as well by his Preaching as a great many Miracles which he perform'd. In the Year 1148. Gillebert of la Porrée, Biſhop of Poitiers, being Convinced by St. Bernard at the Council held at Rheims, retracted his Errors, and came over to the Church. At length, St. Bernard having been choſen towards the end of his days, to be Mediator between the people of Mentz and ſome Neighbouring Princes, after having happily and Prudently concluded all differences between them, on his return, he fell Sick of a weakneſs in his Stomach, and Dy'd the 20th of Auguſt, in the Year 1153. He left near 160 Monaſteries of his Order, Founded by his Care. Divers Churches deſir'd to have him for their Biſhop: Thoſe of Langres and Chalons Courted him exceſſively; and thoſe of Genoa and Milan offered him their Arch-Biſhopricks. And laſtly, Rheims earneſtly requeſted him for its Paſtor, but notwithſtanding all theſe Solicitations, he perſevered in his Reſolutions never to be Advanc'd to the Epiſcopacy.

St. Bernard, did not only render himſelf worthy of Eſteem by the Piety of his Life, and his many Illuſtrious Actions. His Works alſo ſpeak high in his behalf; in which, he diſcovers as much Wit and Elegancy, as Knowledge and Piety. We ſhall proceed to give an exact Hiſtory and Abridgment of them, as we find them rank'd in the laſt Edition, Publiſh'd not long ſince by Father Mabillon. The Firſt Volume, Contains all his true Works, and begins with the Letters which Compoſe the firſt Tome.

The Letters of St. Bernard.

The Firſt Letter was written to his Son Robert, to exhort him to return to the Monaſtery of Clairvaux, which he had left for that of Cluny. The Author of St. Bernard's Life, ſays, that this Letter was dictated to William, who was afterwards Abbot of Rievaux, in the middle of a Field while it Rain'd hard, yet the Paper was never wet. This Letter is full of Profeſſions of Love and Charity towards his Son, which ſhews, how extreamly St. Bernard was griev'd at his Abſence. I have long and impatiently expected (ſays he,) My Dear Son Robert, That God in his Mercy would pleaſe to touch thy Heart, and mine at the ſame time, inſpiring thee with a hearty Compunction, and giving me the Pleaſure of ſeeing thy Converſion: But having hitherto been all along fruſtrated in my hopes, I can no longer conceal my Grief, contain my Sorrow, nor diſſemble my Sadneſs. 'Tis that which obliges me, contrary to the Order that ought to be obſerved, to call home him who has Offended me; To Court one that has ſlighted me; To give ſatisfaction to one that has Affronted me; and in a word, to Beg of him that ought to Petition me. For when a Man is once touched with extream concern, He deliberates not, has no Shame, Conſults not his Reaſon, Thinks not of abaſing himſelf, obſerves no meaſure, and his Soul is entirely employed in the ſearch or recovery of what he has loſt or deſires. You will tell me perhaps that you have never Offended nor Slighted me, but that it was I only that have abus'd you, and that you left me but to avoid the ill Uſage which I made you undergo. I grant it: You had reaſon, but let us talk no more of what is paſt, nor enquire into the cauſe of it; the preſent time only demands our Conſideration. Let me conſider then what makes me unhappy, what ſo diſcompoſes me? Is it not becauſe I have thee no more, becauſe I ſee thee no more, and becauſe I live altogether without thee, who art only able to give me Life? I ask not why you went away, but I heartily Grieve that you are not returned. Come but a little and I ſhall be at quiet. I own it was my fault that you left me; I was perhaps too rigid towards a young tender Youth, and dealt perhaps too hardly by thee, yet ſtill it may be I could excuſe my ſelf and ſay that the follies of unexperienc'd Youth ought to be ſuppreſs'd by a ſevere Diſcipline, and our firſt Years ſhould be corrected by the ſevereſt Teſt of Reaſon: But I will not inſiſt upon this; I will as I ſaid before, take all upon my ſelf; I only am in the wrong; Pardon me, for I confeſs it; I will never do the like again: You ſhall find me quite another Man: Return only and have no more fear of any thing. Others now might lay your Crime home to you; Fright you into thoughts of Guilt; Lay the Contents of your Vow before you; Threaten you with God's Judgments; Condemn your Diſobedience, and accuſe you of Apoſtacy; but I had rather bring you over by fair means, and reclaim you with kind Words. St. Bernard next deſcribes after what manner Robert had been ſeduc'd to Cluny, and how he had been led away by the Converſation which a Prior, who was ſent by the Abbot of Cluny, had with him. This Preacher of the New Goſpel, (ſays he,) I ſuppoſe, cry'd up good Cheer, and Condemn'd Self-denial and Parſimony; and told him, I imagine, that voluntary Poverty was a real Miſery, and Faſts, Watchings, Prayer, and Labour a meer Folly. To Idleneſs, it may be, he gave the Title of Contemplation, and that of Diſcretion to Gormandizing, Babling, and Niceneſs. Perhaps he demanded of him if God could ever be Pleas'd with tormenting us; Or, if the Scripture Commanded us any where to Murther our ſelves? What Religion there could be in digging of Ground, Cutting of Wood, Carrying of Dung, or the like? Who was the Wiſe Man, he that hated his own Fleſh, or he that cheriſh'd it? This poor Youth might eaſily be ſeduc'd by ſuch inſinuating Diſcourſe, and conſequently is led to Cluny, where they Shave his Head, Waſh his Bo- dy, Tear off his courſe and homely Habits, and put on ſuch as were New and more Coſtly. Next is he led in Triumph about the Monaſtery; every Body Commends him, and Congratulates his coming among them; and, in a Word, he is ſoon placed above thoſe of a longer ſtanding. But however, they think fit to ſend to Rome to have what they do Authorized by the Holy See, and that the Pope may the better yield to their Requeſt, they pretend that being a Child he was offer'd by his Parents to their Monaſtery. No body was then at Rome that could refute this Reaſon, and therefore his Holineſs has paſs'd his Judgment in favour of the preſent, to the prejudice of the abſent; by a Privilege too ſevere he has confirm'd an Abſolution too eaſie; and, in a Word, has forc'd my Son to take up a new Profeſſion and make new Vows. From this allowance of the Pope's, St. Bernard Appeals to the Determination of God, and the Tribunal of Chriſt, and demands which ought to prevail moſt, the Vows of a Father for his Son, or thoſe of a Son made for himſelf, principally when he has enter'd into a Vow of any great importance. For it is certain, that Robert had never been any otherwiſe than promis'd, and never had been given to the Monaſtery of Cluny, ſince his Parents had not requir'd them to receive him, and he had not been offer'd in the preſence of Witneſſes, neither had his Head been cover'd with the Pallium of the Altar. They likewiſe gave out that there was a Portion given with him to their Monaſtery. But (Quoth St. Bernard) If they had a Portion with him, why do they not think themſelves oblig'd to keep him as well as the Portion? Is it becauſe they have greater regard to the Money than the Perſon, and love the Pence better than the Soul? If he has been offer'd to the Monaſtery, why do they ſuffer him to live at large in the World, for it is from the World and not from Cluny that you came, Robert, to Ciſteaux? You have earneſtly entreated and beg'd to be receiv'd into that Brotherhood, but notwithſtanding, they delay'd two Years before they would admit you, yet at length you got in, and after having been a Year Probationer, you became Profeſs'd, and quitted the Secular Habit for the Regular. It is here that St. Bernard ſeverely reproaches him for the breach of his Vows, and for his Ingratitude, and that in making him ſenſible of the care and pains he had been at in his Education. Afterwards in terms the moſt moving imaginable, he expreſſes the Agonies he has endur'd by his Abſence. He gives him moreover to underſtand, that a Lazy and Luxurious Life, which they all lead in the Order of Cluny, is very dangerous to his Salvation, and likewiſe exhorts him to do his beſt endeavours to be in a Condition to obſerve Abſtinence, Watching, Faſts, Silence, Labour and other Auſterities, practis'd in Clairvaux, and all which the Life he leads in Cluny, will very much diſuſe him from. This Letter was writ in the Year 1119.

The Letters of St. Bernard.

In the Second he Reproves Fulcus a Regular Canon inaſmuch that having accepted of the Deanery of Langres at his Uncles requeſt, he thereupon quitted his Cloyſter for a ſecular Life. Altho' St. Bernard had no poſitive Authority over this young Man, yet his Zeal oblig'd him to rally him ſeverely, and openly to blame the Conduct of his Uncle. He endeavours to convince him, that to convers with the World is dangerous, and therefore the beſt way to be ſav'd were to avoid that. At length he Admoniſhes him to return to his Cell, and promiſes he will put up his petitions to God on his behalf. In this Letter there is an Elegant Paſſage relating to the uſe of Church-Goods. You may imagine (ſays he) that what belongs to the Church belongs to you while you Officiate there. But you are miſtaken, for tho' it be reaſonable that one that Labours at the Altar ſhould live by the Altar, yet muſt it not be either to promote his Luxury or Pride. In a word whatever extends beyond bare Nouriſhing, and ſimple, plain Cloathing is Sacrilege and Rapine. This Letter was writ in the year 1120.

In the Third, directed to the Canons of Audicour, in the Dioceſs of Chalons, after having rejected, with a great deal of Humility, the commendations which they gave him, he acquaints them that he has receiv'd, with permiſſion of the Biſhop of Chalons, ſome Regular Canons into his Monaſtery who had a mind to embrace a Monaſtick Life.

The Fourth was written about the year 1125. to Arnold Abbot of Morimond about his having quitted his Monaſtery with ſix of his Brothers without leave, firſt Obtain'd from the Abbot of Ciſteaux. He had acquainted St. Bernard with what he had done, and beg'd of him not ſo much as to mention his return to his Monaſtery. This Letter S. Bernard anſwers, and tells him that it is not in his power to forbear Adviſing him to return, and moreover acquaints him that if he had known where to have met him, he would have run into his Arms, thrown himſelf at his feet, Beg'd, Conjur'd and Endeavour'd both by Tears and Words to have reclaim'd him: But ſince he had thought fit to deprive him of that pleaſure, he earneſtly entreats him to hearken to an Abſent Friend, that is ſorry for his Crime, and cordially concern'd at his Peril. He likewiſe ſhews him that it is to be fear'd that his fall may draw others into the ſame ſnare, and therefore tho' he has little regard to himſelf yet ought he to take care of thoſe he has the Charge of. He conjures him to think how much he Expoſes both them and himſelf, and laſtly he Adds that for his part he cannot think he did well to leave his Convent even on a worldly Account, becauſe he did it without the Conſent of his Brothers; the Monks, the reſt of the Abbots, and without the Permiſſion of his Superior.

That which follows is Addreſs'd to Adam one of the Monks that went away with Abbot Arnold. He Reproaches him for his Inconſtancy and Fickleneſs.

In the Sixth he entreats Brunon, who was afterwards Arch-Biſhop of Colen to do all in his power to cauſe ſome of theſe ſtragling Monks of Morimond that lurked about in his Dioceſs, to Return to their Cloyſter.

Arnold being dead, St. Bernard reinforc'd his Requeſt to Adam, that ſince his Abbot was dead and he conſequently diſcharg'd of his Obedience, he might make no difficulty to return. And farther upon this Abbots having commanded his Monks to follow him, St. Bernard examines into theſe caſes how far Superiours are to be Obey'd. He lays down for an Unqueſtionable Maxim that they are not to be Obey'd when they command any thing that is ill, becauſe in that caſe they cannot be comply'd with without diſpleaſing God. Afterwards he proceeds to reckon up three ſorts of things that may be commanded: 1. Abſolutely Good, 2. Abſolutely bad, and 3. Indifferent, which may be either good or bad according to the ſeveral Circumſtances and Perſons. He obſerves that the Law of Obedience which relates to men, has regard only to the laſt of the three for the firſt may not be Omitted tho' any body commands it. Nor the ſecond permitted tho' a Superiour would have it ſo, but in the third and laſt a Superiours Pleaſure is to be preferr'd to our own will, and we are to Obey equally what they Command or forbid. Moreover he urges that what had been commanded him by his Abbot to quit his Monaſtery and go along with him, was among the Number of thoſe things which are forbidden by God, and that even the Pope himſelf could not have given him permiſſion to have done it, for that the Diſpenſation which he had Obtain'd was a frivolous Remedy that ſerv'd rather to palliate a Diſeas'd Conſcience than cure it. We have (ſay They) Ask'd leave of the Holy See, and we have obtain'd it; but would to God (ſays Saint Bernard) that you had not Ask'd Leave but rather demanded Counſel; that would have been more for your Good and my ſatisfaction. But again, why did you Ask this Leave? Was it not becauſe you had a mind to do what you ought not? Now what you ought not to do is ill when done, and you it ſeems have got a Permiſſion to do ſo. You will ſay perhaps that what you Ask'd was only ill where leave had not been Obtain'd, but being once permitted it ceaſed any longer to be ſo. But I have already ſhewn that your Petition was not of this kind, but a Publick Scandal forbidden by the Law of God; ſo that this Action of yours was not leſs blameable by being allow'd of by the Pope, who I'm confident would never have conſented to your Demands, had he not been either deceiv'd or forc'd by Importunity. After having ſhewn farther by ſeveral Arguments, that it was in vain for this Monk to pretend to Excuſe himſelf on pretence of Obedience to, and Command of his Abbot, he remarks that two things are principally to be obſerv'd in Monaſteries; which are Obedience to their Abbot, and Continuance in the ſame Place. Here You may Ask me perhaps (ſays he) how I can reconcile that with the continuance which I vow'd to Ciſteaux? I Anſwer that in truth I was Profeſs'd at Ciſteaux, but that I was ſent by my Abbot to the Place where I now reſide, without Diſcord and Scandal, purſuant both to Order and Cuſtom. There is alſo another Objection rais'd againſt me. If I condemn (ſay They) thoſe that have left their Monaſteries by the Command of the Abbot, how comes it to paſs that I have receiv'd and retain'd ſuch as have done ſo? The Anſwer to this is eaſy, tho' I do not know whether it will pleaſe every body. I receive them (continu'd he) becauſe I cannot think it a Crime to Aſſiſt them to Obſerve their Vows in one Place which they could not do in another, and ſo to recompence the Omiſſion of Reſidence by a ſtrict Performance of all the Other Precepts of a Monaſtick Life. But why, ſays one to me, do you condemn all thoſe that do not live in every particular like your ſelf? No; I do not do ſo, I know there are many Holy Men that do not live after the ſame manner with me; I only give a reaſon why I receive thoſe that deſire it of me without blaming thoſe that don't deſire it. Excuſe the one without Accuſing the Other. The Envious only I cannot nor will not Excuſe. In reſpect to others, if there be any that deſign to practiſe a Monaſtick Life in its Purity, but dare not for fear of Scandal, or cannot by reaſon of ſome Infirmity, I do not believe they commit any Sin, providing they live ſoberly, juſtly, and devoutly in the place where they are; and if they are ſometimes Oblig'd to live a little more looſely than our Rules preſcribe, they may be Excus'd either by Charity that covers a Multitude of faults; or Humility, which makes them ſenſible of their own Weakneſs and Imperfection.

The Eighth Letter of St. Bernard is written to Brunon Arch-Biſhop of Colen, who had demanded of him, If he might accept that Arch-Biſhoprick. To which he Anſwers That no Mortal Man ought to reſolve that Queſtion; becauſe if God calls one to it no body ought to diſſwade one from it, and if God does not call one to it no body ought to Adviſe one to Accept it, for the Holy-Ghoſt alone is able to determine who is call'd and who not; that what troubles him more than this is that he made a confeſſion of his Sins to him, but he fears, has not ſufficiently repented of them; ſo that when he conſiders that he has been call'd from the State of a ſinner to that of a moſt Reverend Miniſter without Repenting, he hopes he will beg of God a ſpeedy Commiſeration and Forgiveneſs; but yet there is a great deal of difference between Meriting Pardon for Sins, and being advanc'd all of a ſudden to ſo great a Dignity, that it is true St. Matthew was call'd to the Apoſtle-ſhip even in the very Act of his Profeſſion, but nevertheleſs he thought it Adviſable to repent heartily before he Accepted of his Miſſion. St. Ambroſe alſo was rais'd from a Profeſſion of the Law to that of the Goſpel, but he had all along led an Innocent and Inoffenſive Life. That the Converſion of St. Paul likewiſe is a Miracle which cannot be paralell'd. But in fine he ſays that in this Caſe he can give no other Anſwer than that he will pray God to Manifeſt his pleaſure, and that if he doubts of any thing more, he may conſult Norbert who being a great Scholar, and always with him may be able to give him due Satisfaction.

Brunon at laſt reſolves to Accept the Arch-Biſhoprick of Colen; which St. Bernard having Underſtood, he writ him the two following Letters by which he exhorts him to do his Duty, and acquit himſelf in all things as he ought to do. Theſe Letters were writ about the year 1132.

The Eleventh Letter is written to Guigue Prior of the Great Charter-Houſe and to his Monks. He therein Diſcourſes upon Charity and its Effects with its ſeveral kinds, and Laſtly Aſſerts that it can have no perfection in this Life.

In the Twelfth writ to the ſame, he deſires their Prayers.

By the Thirteenth he requeſts of Pope Honorius II. a Confirmation of the Election of Alberic to the Biſhoprick of Chalons. This Alberic was Native of Rheims, a fellow-Diſciple with Abaelard, and a learned Divine. He was Elected Biſhop of Chalons in the year 1126. after the death of Ebalus, but he was never Ordain'd nor Inducted into this Biſhoprick. He was Tranſlated in the year 1139 to the Arch-Biſhoprick of Bourges. This Letter of St. Bernard's was written ſoon after the Election of Alberic to the Biſhoprick of Chalons. This is the firſt which he wrote to Pope Honorius II, and yet he did not put his name to it, but ſubſcrib'd himſelf a Poor Monk and great Sinner.

In the Fourteenth he recommends to the ſame Pope an Affair of the Church of Dijon.

He recommends alſo the ſame thing in the two following Letters, to the Cardinals Haimeric and Peter.

In

In the Seventeenth he excuſes himſelf to the laſt of theſe Cardinals, that he did not come to wait on him, becauſe he had made a Reſolution never to ſtir out of his Monaſtery. He moreover writ to him, that he knew not what his Eminence meant by the Books he ſpeaks of, and that he knows not what he had ever writ, which could in the leaſt be worthy of his judicious peruſal. That ſome of his Monks indeed might probably have copy'd what they heard him ſpeak, and that he believ'd Gebuin the Chanter and Arch-Deacon of Troyes might likely have a Copy by him; but for his own part, he had none to his knowledge; yet if he ever found any, or writ any thing for the future, which he thought might be agreeable to him, he would certainly ſend it. The Letters of St. Bernard.

In the following Letter addreſs'd to the ſame, he enlarges upon the vanity of Humane Praiſe, and the Eſteem which Men have of us. I am proud, (ſays he) of the good Character you have honoured me with, but my Pride is extreamly diminiſhed, when I conſider that it is not my Actions, but the Opinion which others have of me, that has procur'd me this Eſteem. I am aſham'd to be ſo puff'd up, when I perceive that I am not ſo much Lov'd and Honour'd for what I am, or for what I am thought to be; for it is not I that am ſo well belov'd, but a certain Je ne ſcay quoy which is ſuppos'd to be in me, and perhaps is not. He ſhews afterwards that there is nothing in any Creature which deſerves perfectly to be Lov'd, and Commended; nevertheleſs (ſays he) there is an univerſal Vanity ſcatter'd amongſt the Generation of Men, which makes all covet to be prais'd, although they are never ſo blame-worthy. All Commendation beſtowed on us is Flattery, and the Joy we conceive thereupon a fruitleſs vanity. They that let themſelves be Commended are moſt commonly vain Fools, and ſuch as Commend themſelves for the moſt part are impudent Lyars. Towards the end of this Letter, he promiſes to ſend him ſome of his Works. Theſe Letters are thought to have been written about the Year 1127.

The Two next Letters, are likewiſe writ to the ſame Cardinals. He Recommends to them an Affair of the Church of Rheims.

The Twenty Firſt is directed to Matthew, the Pope's Legat in France. In it he excuſes himſelf for not being able to wait on him, by reaſon of his illneſs; as alſo complains of being ſollicited to come out of his Cloyſter to embroil himſelf with the Affairs of the World. This Letter was written ſome ſhort time before the Council of Troyes, which was held in the Year 1128.

In the Twenty ſecond, he recommends to Humbaud Arch-Biſhop of Lyons, an Affair belonging to the Biſhop of Meaux.

In the Twenty Third, he Commends Atton Biſhop of Troyes, for having diſtributed all he had among the Poor, when he once lay ſick. Moſt commonly, (ſays he,) Wills are not wont to be Executed till after our Deaths, and conſequently we then give what we are no longer able to enjoy, but this Perſon being between the hopes of Life and Fear of Death, gave away all his Goods to the Poor, to the end that his Charity might ſubſiſt Eternally, even in deſpite of his Fate. He afterwards rejoyces that this Biſhop recover'd from his Diſeaſe. Theſe Two laſt Letters were written about the Year 1128.

In the Twenty Fourth, he Commends Gilbert Biſhop of London, for living Poor whilſt he enjoy'd ſo conſiderable a Benefice. "It is no great wonder (ſays he,) That Gilbert is a Biſhop, but it is ſomewhat "extraordinary that a Biſhop of London ſhould live ſo meanly. The exalted Dignity of his Epiſcopacy "could not augment the Glory of ſo great a Man, when his humble Poverty has not a little advanc'd "him. To undergo want patiently is the effect of an ordinary Virtue, but to court it voluntarily is "the Sign of a great Soul.

In the Twenty Fifth, he exhorts Hugh, Arch-Biſhop of Roan, to Patience, and to temper his Zeal by Charity. "A Biſhop, (ſays he,) muſt not only be Patient, that he may not be overcome by Evil, but "he muſt be alſo a Peace-maker, to ſurmount the Evil with Good, inſomuch, that he ought to ſup- "port even the Wicked, and Reform them that he ſupports. Be you therefore Patient, becauſe you "are amongſt Wicked Men, and a Peace-maker, that you may be able to govern ill-doers. Let your "Charity be full of Zeal, but let your ſeverity be tempered with Reaſon.

The Twenty Sixth is a Letter to Guy Biſhop of Lauſane, which Comprehends in few Words the neceſſary Qualifications and Virtues requir'd in a Biſhop. "You have (ſays he to him,) undertaken a dif- "ficult Task, you need therefore to have force to go through it: You have took upon you to watch "over Iſrael, you ought to have a great deal of Prudence. You expoſe your ſelf both to Fools and "Wiſe Men, therefore Juſtice is likewiſe neceſſary, and, in a word, you will have occaſion for Tem- "perance to moderate your Paſſion upon the greateſt Provocations.

The Twenty Seventh and Twenty Eighth, contain much the like inſtructions to Arduition Biſhop of Geneva.

In the Twenty Ninth, he congratulates Stephen, Biſhop of Mets, upon the Peace reſtored to his Church.

In the Thirtieth he exhorts Alberon of Mets to wait patiently for the execution of an affair which he was treating about with his Biſhop. Theſe two Letters were written after the Year 1126.

In the Thirty Firſt he congratulates Hugh Count of Champaign, on his being made a Knight of Jeruſalem (of the Croſs.) This Count was the firſt founder of the Abby of Clairvaux, which occaſions St. Bernard to ſay that he can never forget the great Friendſhip he has for him, on account of his Noble Beneficence to his Monaſtery.

The Thirty Second is addreſs'd to Joran Abbot of St. Nicaiſe of Rheims, who complained that the Order of Ciſteaux had received into their Fraternity, one of his Monks call'd Dreux. St. Bernard gives him to underſtand, that he does not approve of ſuch a Proceeding, and that if that Monk had aſked his Advice, he ſhould not have counſell'd him to ſuch an Action, and that he would not have receiv'd him himſelf, had he been Abbot of that Monaſtery. He likewiſe acquaints Joran that he partakes of his Concern, and would aſſiſt him to his Power; but that he was able to do nothing more, than to write to the Abbot of Ciſteaux to reſtore the ſaid Monk. He moreover counſels him not to take that matter ſo much to Heart, but to ſubmit freely to the good pleaſure of God, and ſuppreſs his juſt Indignation by the example of a certain Saint, who being ſollicited to look after a ſtray'd Monk, anſwer'd, I ſhall not do it; for if he be a good Chriſtian, wherever he be he is ſtill mine. St. Bernard adds further, that he himſelf had made uſe of the Counſel which he gave; for that having had a near Relation receiv'd by the Monaſtery of Cluny againſt his Will, though he is ſenſibly griev'd for his Loſs, yet is he reſolved to reſt ſatisfy'd, praying both for the Monks that they would reſtore him, and for the Perſon himſelf, that God would give him Grace to return. This ſhews plainly, that this Letter was written before Robert's return, about the Year 1120.

Although St. Bernard had thus written to the Abbot of St. Nicaiſe, nevertheleſs, his Opinion was not that this Monk was obliged to return to his Cloyſter, therefore having written before to Hugh, Abbot of Pontigni, that had receiv'd this Monk, that he thought him obliged to reſtore him, he was forc'd to write a ſecond Letter to undeceive him, whereby he ſignified that it was never his Intention to adviſe him to give up this Monk, but that on the contrary, he commended what he had done, and likewiſe congratulated him in it. But having been powerfully ſollicited by the Arch-biſhop of Rheims, and by an Abbot, who was one of that Monks Friends, he could not prevent writing that Letter and requeſting what he feared ſhould come to paſs. He believed at the ſame time that he had given ſome umbrage of his meaning by writing at the end of his Letter, that if he choſe rather to ſuffer Diſpleaſure, than to releaſe this Monk, he might do as he pleas'd, but that for his part, he would have no manner of hand in it. In fine, he tells him, that he did him a great deal of wrong, to ſuſpect that he had a mind to ſeduce this Monk to his own Monaſtery.

In the Thirty Fourth, he congratulates this Monk on the Reſolution he had taken, and exhorts him to perſevere in it.

The Thirty Fifth is addreſs'd to Hugh Farſite, Abbot of St. John of Chartres, whom he deſires to recommend the cauſe of Humbert, to the Count of Chartres. He withal aſſures him, that he has not burnt the Letter which he ſent him, although there were ſtrange Notions in it concerning the Sacraments.

Hereupon this Abbot wrote him an Anſwer to this effect, That he had forgot that he had given him any cauſe of Concern, but having ſent him a right Orthodox Confeſſion of Faith, St. Bernard makes known to him by the Thirty Sixth Letter, that he eſteemed him a very good Catholick, and that he verily believes he gave wrong Sentiments of his Mind. He counſels him moreover, not to injure the Memory of a Holy Biſhop, with whom he never had any difference whilſt he liv'd.

In the Thirty Seventh, Thirty Eighth, Thirty Ninth, Forty and Forty Firſt, St. Bernard recommends ſeveral things to Thibaud Count of Champagne.

The Forty Second written to Henry Arch-Biſhop of Sens, is to be found among St. Bernard's Opuſcula.

In the Forty Third and Forty Fourth, he deſires that Arch-biſhop to do Juſtice to the Abby of Moleſme, concerning what he claim'd from the Church of Sevan, which belonged to that Abby.

The Forty Fifth Letter is written in the name of the Abbot, and the whole Order of Ciſteaux to Lewis the Groſs, King of France, concerning his perſecuting of Stephen, Biſhop of Paris. He makes them ſpeak to this King with a great deal of freedom, and declare that if His Majeſty did not think fit to do Juſtice to this Biſhop, they would aſſuredly write to the Pope about it.

This King not having made ſatisfaction to the Biſhop of Paris, The Arch-Biſhop pronounc'd a Suſpenſion againſt him, but the King having afterwards humbled himſelf to Pope Honorius II. procur'd it to be taken off, which oblig'd Hugh Abbot of Pontigni, and St. Bernard, to write the Forty Sixth Letter to this Pope, ſignifying to him, that they were ſurpriz'd that his Holineſs would ſuffer that Suſpenſion to be taken off, when if it had been continu'd, the King would certainly have done that Biſhop Juſtice, and this becauſe the Conſtancy and Courage of the Prelates of that Nation had conſiderably wrought upon the Temper of that Prince.

St. Bernard, caus'd alſo the ſame thing to be written to the Pope, by Geofrey Biſhop of Chartres, in whoſe Name the Forty Seventh Letter was writ. He Acquaints his Holineſs that the King having been frightned with the Interdict, had promis'd to reſtore to the ſaid Biſhop of Paris, all that he had taken from him, but that ſince he had obtain'd Abſolution, he refus'd to perform his Promiſe.

In the Forty Eighth, he juſtifies himſelf to Haimeric, Chancellor of the Holy See, concerning the Accuſations which had been made againſt him. He deſires to know if they are grounded on the Biſhoprick of Verdun, being taken from a Perſon that was unworthy to enjoy it, or upon Fulbert Abbot of the Holy Sepulchre, at Cambray's being forc'd to yield his Place to Porvin, or by reaſon that at Laon a place of Debauchery was become one of Devotion, by driving out of the Monaſtery of St. John Monks which led an Irregular lewd Life, and by putting thoſe of St. Nicaiſe in their room. He ſays, if theſe things are laid to his Charge, he takes it for an Honour, but that to his great Grief he was not the Author of them, and by conſequence could neither deſerve the Merit nor the Blame. He adds, that the Biſhop of Albani was the occaſion of the Firſt, the Arch-Biſhop of Rheims of the Second, and the Third ought to be Attributed to the ſame Arch-Biſhop, in Conjunction with the Biſhop of Laon. All that is to be found fault with in him, he ſays, is, that he was preſent when theſe matters were tranſacted, when he ought to have been ſhut up in his Cloyſter, and not to have medled in the Affairs of the World. He owns he was there preſent. "But, (ſays he,) It was becauſe I was Summon'd and forc'd thither, which if it be diſpleaſing to my Friends, it is leſs pleaſant to me, and would to God I had never gone to any of theſe ſorts of Aſſemblies. He then earneſtly entreats the Chancellor, That ſince his Endeavours have been eſteem'd unacceptable, he might for the future never be Order'd out of his Monaſtery. "Let theſe Clamorous and Troubleſome Frogs (ſays he,) for the future be confin'd to their Marſhes; Let them no more be heard in Councils, nor ſeen any more at Court: and let neither Neceſſity nor Authority drag them out of their Solitude. It may be by theſe means your Friend may avoid the ſuſpicions of being thought bold. For my part I am reſolv'd henceforward never to ſtir abroad unleſs it be about the Affairs of the Order, and that too only upon Command of the Pope's Legat or my Biſhop.——If by your means I can obtain the favour to go no more out of my Cell upon any account whatever, I ſhall be at reſt, and envy no body. But although I am permitted to remain in ſilence, yet I cannot believe that the Church will ever be at quiet as long as the Court of Rome perſiſts to prejudice the abſent, by obliging and humouring the preſent. This Letter was writ in the Year 1130.

The Forty Ninth and Fiftieth, are Addreſs'd to Pope Honorius II. in the Name of the Abbots of Ciſteaux, Pontigni, and Clairvaux, in favour of the Arch-Biſhop of Sens, perſecuted by King Lewis the Groſs. They beg of his Holineſs to permit this Arch-Biſhop to have recourſe to the Holy See for Juſtice.

In the Fifty Firſt, he recommends the ſame Affair to Haimeric, Chancellor of the Church of Rome.

In the Fifty Second, Addreſs'd to the ſame, he ſays, That the Biſhop of Chartres was in the right not to undertake the Voyage to the Holy-Land. He moreover begs of this Chancellor to uſe his Intereſt to the Pope that he may be employed no more abroad.

The Two following are Letters of Recommendation, Addreſs'd to Haimeric. Theſe Six Letters were writ about the Year 1127.

In the Fifty Fifth directed to Geofrey, Biſhop of Chartres, he prays that Biſhop to receive again a Recluſe Monk, who had repented of leaving his Cell.

In the Fifty Sixth, he acquaints the ſame Biſhop that he does not know whether Norbert will go to Jeruſalem or no. He ſays, he is not of the Opinion of that Holy-Man, who Affirm'd that Anti-Chriſt would certainly come before the Century he Lived in was expir'd, and that he ſhould not die before he had ſeen a general Perſecution in the Church. He alſo recommends to the Biſhop of Chartres the Affair of Humbert.

In the Fifty Seventh writ to the ſame Biſhop, he ſays, that a Vow made to go to Jeruſalem ought not to hinder a Man from being receiv'd to make a better Vow.

In the Fifty Eighth writ to Ebalus, Biſhop of Chalons, he recommends to him to admit for Prior of the Regular Canons of his City, him whom the ſaid Canons had choſen, being a good and Religious Perſon; or if they would not do ſo he propos'd to them another of a Regular and virtuous Life, and not ſuch a one as they would have to favour their Libertiniſm.

In the Fifty Ninth, he adviſes Guilencus Biſhop of Langres to deliver up to the Church of St. Stephen of Dijon, ſome Goods fell to them by the Death of the Arch-Deacon Garnier.

In the Sixtieth Addreſs'd to the ſame Biſhop, he Recommends to him the Care of the Church of Moleſme.

By the Sixty Firſt, he ſends a Penitent that had Addreſs'd himſelf to him, to Ricuin Biſhop of Toul, he being not us'd to enjoyn Penance to any but ſuch as were under his Care. For (ſays he,) would it not be an unpardonable raſhneſs in us to intermeddle with the Affairs of Biſhops, when we our ſelves have recourſe to them in matters of great difficulty. Ricuin Dy'd in 1128. ſo that this Letter muſt neceſſarily precede that Year.

In the Sixty Second, he deſires Henry Biſhop of Verdun, to receive a Penitent that had Addreſs'd himſelf to him.

In the Sixty Third, he aſſures this Biſhop that he has never utter'd any thing to his Prejudice. This Henry is he whom St. Bernard perſwades to lay down his Biſhoprick, and which is mention'd in the Forty Eighth Letter.

The Sixty Fourth is written to Alexander, Biſhop of Lincoln, whoſe Conſent he asks to permit a certain Clerk of his Nam'd Philip, who had left his Cloyſter, with deſign to Travel to Jeruſalem, to remain a Monk in his Monaſtery of Clairvaux, and he farther deſires him to pay the ſaid Monk's Debts out of the Revenues of his Prebend.

In the Sixty Fifth written to Aloiſius, Abbot of Anchin, in Flanders, he Commends him for being ſo much concern'd at the Death of a Monk of his call'd Godwin, who Dy'd in his Monaſtery of Clairvaux. He alſo excuſes himſelf for having receiv'd him.

In the Sixty Sixth, he entreats Geofrey Abbot of St. Medard of Soiſſons to make peace with Aloiſius.

In the Sixty Seventh, he excuſes himſelf to the Monks of St. Germer de Flay, for having received one of their Fraternity into his Monaſtery. He tells them that he never heard any thing of them but very lately; That this Monk came to him after he had been an Hermit above Seven Months, and that he had ſeveral times refus'd to admit him. Alſo having ask'd him why he would not return to his Cloyſter, that he had anſwer'd; his Abbot would not have him only in quality of a Monk, but alſo oblig'd him to ſerve as Phyſician. But at length being over-perſwaded by his importunities that he had receiv'd him; and as he had not forc'd him to come into his Monaſtery, ſo he would not oblige him to go out of it.

Theſe Monks being not well ſatisfy'd with this Anſwer, and having writ again to St. Bernard, to this effect; That he did not do well to receive one of their Monks whom they had Excommunicated. He Anſwers by the following Letter, That if they have Excommunicated him, he underſtands it was ſince he admitted him, which was not likewiſe well done on their part. And ſince they accus'd this Monk for a Vagabond that could never reſt in a place, and who was always diſobedient to his Abbot, they ought to rejoyce on account of his Converſion, and in regard that he liv'd now in a Monaſtery where he ſhould perform the ſtricteſt Vows. Theſe two Letters are thought to have been written about the Year 1125.

In the Sixty Ninth, he Comforts Guy Abbot of the Three-Fountains, who was extreamly concern'd in that being about to Celebrate Mass he hapned to Consecrate a Chalice, in which, there had been nothing but water put, through carelesness, because this Crime was rather the effect of Inadvertency and Negligence than a Design. He nevertheless enjoyns him and the Person that serv'd them at the Altar the Penance of repeating till Easter the Seven Penitential Psalms, as likewise to receive fifteen lashes of a Scourge each day. He approves of what he did when he saw there was no Wine in the Chalice, which was to pour a little Wine upon part of the Consecrated Host; because though it was not transmuted by a proper and Solemn Consecration into the Blood of Christ, it was nevertheless become Sacred by the bare contact of his Body. He adds moreover, That there is a certain Writer who maintains that the Sacrifice cannot be Valid, unless there be both Wine, Bread, and Water, in a manner, that if there be but one of these wanting the rest signifie nothing. He says likewise, That in this case every one may do as he pleases, but for his part, if any such Accident should happen to him, he would do the same thing with him to whom he writes, or would begin Mass with these Words. Simili modo postquam cœnatum est, &c. and would finish the rest of the Sacrifice, not in the least doubting but that the Bread was Consecrated separately.

In the Seventieth, he Counsels the same Abbot to treat one of his Monks more kindly, and to revoke the several rigorous Judgments he had pass'd against him.

In the Seventy First Address'd to the Monks of this Abbey, he acquaints them that he has not yet had an opportunity to make them a visit, and moreover Condoles them upon the Death of the Abbot Roger.

The Seventy Second is written to Rainaud Abbot of Foigni. He writes to him concerning the Title of Father, which this Abbot had given him, and refuses to accept of any other but Brother.

In the Seventy Third and Seventy Fourth, he comforts and fortifies this Abbot who had been melancholy and seem'd dissatisfy'd with his having been elevated to this Dignity.

In the Seventy Fifth, he disswades Artaud Abbot of Prully from sending any of his Monks to found a Monastery in Spain.

In the Seventy Sixth, he Counsels the Abbot of the Regular Canons of St. Pierre-Mont, in the Diocess of Toul, to exert all their force in reclaiming one of their Monks who had stray'd into the World, and was there marry'd.

The Seventy Seventh is the 14th of the Opuscula.

In the Seventy Eighth, he Congratulates Sugerus Abbot of St. Denys, for having made a reformation in his Monastery, and quitted the exterior Pride which was in it before. He likewise Commends him for having taken so Pious a Resolution. Towards the end of this Letter, he exclaims against Stephen de Garlande Deacon, who was then Steward of the King's Household, bore Arms, and enjoy'd divers Benefices. This Letter was writ in the Year 1127.

The Seventy Ninth was written to Luke Abbot of Cons'y of the Order of Austin-Friars, in the Diocess of Laon. Whom he advises to send a certain Friar of his who had committed the Sin of the Flesh, to some place far distant from his Cloyster, where he might do Penance.

In the Eightieth, he Comforts Guy, Abbot of Malesme, upon a certain Injury done him; and moreover, exhorts him not to think of Revenge upon that occasion, but to Pardon freely him that did him the wrong.

By the Eighty First, he assures Gerard, Abbot of Poictiers, in the Diocess of Langres, That he never writ any thing to the Count of Nevers in his prejudice, but only for his Churches Benefit, that it might continue in Peace.

In the Eighty Second he disswades Stephen Abbot of St. John of Chartres, from quitting his Monastery to go on Pilgrimage to Jerusalem.

In the Eighty Third he comforts Simon Abbot of St. Nicholas of the Woods in the Diocess of Laon, about the Persecution which he suffer'd on account of his Monks. We understand by the Letters of Sampson Arch-Bishop of Rheims, and Josselin Bishop of Soissons, to Pope Innocent II. that these Monks were dissatisfy'd with their Abbot by reason that he had restored to the Church of Arras some Curacy which they were in Possession of.

By the following Letter written to the same Abbot, he entreats him to receive and use kindly a certain Monk which he sends him.

The Eighty Fifth Address'd to William Abbot of St. Thierry, is a Christian and Spiritual Compliment to serve for Answer to an Obliging Complaint which this Abbot had made him, who did not believe himself so well belov'd by St. Bernard as he lov'd him.

In the Eighty Sixth he writes to the same Abbot that he sends him a Monk who had stray'd out of his Monastery. He acquaints him that he has reprimanded him severely and desires of him to do as much, and then to send him back to his Abbot with a Letter of Recomendation. He disswades this Abbot from quitting his Cloyster to turn Hermit.

In the Eighty Seventh he blames the Conduct of Ogier, a Regular Canon, who after having laid down a Curacy by the consent of his Bishop, which he had as 'twere extorted from him, on condition that he should remain in his Bishopriek, he Address'd himself to the Metropolitan to Obtain leave to Return to his Abby. Being return'd he entreated St. Bernard to Instruct him how he should live. Whereupon this Saint disapproved altogether of his Conduct, yet would not have him nevertheless charge himself anew with the care of his Curacy. He advises him to be thoroughly Sensible of his fault, for that he considers his Retreat as an Action of no great Virtue. He afterwards gives him a great deal of good Advice in this Letter, and in the three which follow, being all likewise writ to him. He excuses himself in the Eighty ninth for not writing him long Letters, because he is Oblig'd to silence, which is interrupted as well as the Tranquility of Mind by Dictating and Compoſing, and Moreover ſo much as his Profeſſion is not to Inſtruct others but bewail his own Sins.

The Ninety First is Addreſs'd to a General Chapter of Benedictine Abbots, Aſſembled at Soiſſons for Reformation of their Monaſteries. St. Bernard exhorts them earneſtly to Labour about it, for feat (ſays he) "That the World ſhould ſay, you were met together to no purpoſe. Do all in your pow-"er to render your Actions and Occupations perfect. They cannot be ſo too much, becauſe a Man "cannot be too Juſt, too Wiſe nor too Virtuous. Hearken not to ſuch as will ſay: We will not be better "than our Fathers, Owning thereby that they are the Off-ſpring of Luke-warm and Looſe People: "Or if they pretend to be Children of Saints, let them Imitate their Sanctity and not their Indul-"gence and Depravity. There is no living in this World without either Advancing or Retrea-"ting, Riſing or Deſcending: If a Man has a mind to continue in the ſame State, he ſhall preſently "fall. He that deſires not to be better was never really Good; and whoever ceaſes endeavouring to "be good ceaſes to have any worth.

The Four following Letters are Letters of Compliment, the Firſt is Addreſs'd to Henry King of England, and the others to the Prelates of his Realm.

In the Ninety Six he commends Richard Abbot of Fontaine in the Dioceſs of York, for having embrac'd the Order of Ciſteaux with 12 of his Monks in the Year 1132.

In the Ninety Seventh he diſſwades Duke Conrade from making War upon the Count of Savoy.

In the Ninety Eighth He Anſwers a queſtion which had been put to him. Why of all the Saints that are in the Old Teſtament, the Church Obſerves Feaſts for none but the Macchabees? The Anſwer is that the Church takes Notice of them becauſe they are not unlike our Chriſtian Martyrs, having ſuffer'd Death for not Abjuring the Law of God.

In the Ninety Ninth he writes to a Monk whoſe going out of the Monaſtery he was Jealous of; but having by a Letter Underſtood the occaſion of it, his Suſpicions ſoon vaniſh.

In the Hundredth he commends the great Charity of a certain Biſhop towards the Poor. It is (ſays he) a thing ſo well becoming a Biſhop; It is a great Ornament to his Function in that not being able to be Poor by reaſon of his Revenues, he Nevertheleſs has regard to the Poor and Indigent; for it is not Poverty that is a Virtue, but the Love of the Poor, and the Poor in Goods are not pronounc'd happy by the Goſpel, but the Poor in Spirit.

In the Hundred and Firſt, he begs of a Monaſtery to receive a Monk again that had left them without Permiſſion.

In the Hundred and Second, He Counſels an Abbot to try all means to bring a certain Monk to his Duty, and to expell him if he found him Irreclaimable.

In the Hundred and Third he exhorts a Perſon to forego the inordinate Love that he had for Riches.

In the Hundred and Fourth he Adviſes another to quit the World.

The Letters following to the Hundred and Fifteenth, are Exhortations to ſeveral Perſons to embrace a Monaſtick Life which he greatly commends.

In the Hundred and Fifteenth he diſſwades a Monk from turning Hermit.

The Six following Letters contain only Compliments and Thanks.

The Hundred Twenty Second is a Letter of Hildebert, at that time Arch-Biſhop of Tours Addreſs'd to St. Bernard, in which he greatly commends him and begs his Friendſhip, which Letter St. Bernard Anſwers after a very Obliging manner in the 123. and in the 124 he Admoniſhes him to embrace the Intereſt of Pope Innocent II.

By the Hundred Twenty Fifth, he ſends to Geofrey of Lotoux, to engage in the Defence of this Pope againſt Peter of Leon.

In the Hundred Twenty Sixth. Addreſs'd to the Biſhops of Limoges, Poictiers, Perigueux and Saintes, he vigorouſly defends the Cauſe of Innocent II. againſt Gerard Biſhop of Angouleſme whom he accuſes to have engag'd in the Intereſt of Peter of Leon thro' Ambition.

The Hundred Twenty Seventh is written in the name of Hugh Count of Burgundy, to William Count of Poictiers, whom he Admoniſhes to quit the Party of Peter of Leon, and to Acknowledge Pope Innocent.

In the Hundred Twenty Eighth, St. Bernard Reproaches Count William, in that having once procur'd peace to the Church of Poctiers, he had afterwards drove the Clergy of Hilarius out of the City. He Adviſes him to ceaſe that Perſecution.

In the Hundred Twenty Ninth, he Counſels the Genoeſe to live Peaceably with the Citizens of Piſa, and to continue faithful both to the Pope and Emperor.

In the Hundred and Thirtieth, he Adviſes likewiſe the Piſantines by reaſon of the great Affection they had to the Pope.

By the Hundred Thirty Firſt, he puts the Milaneſe in mind of their reconciliation with the Church of Rome, and Pope Innocent, and earneſtly exhorts them to continue their Obedience and ſubmiſſion accordingly.

The Three following are written to the Clergy and People of Milan upon the ſame Account.

In the Hundred Thirty Fifth he rejects, with a great deal of Humility, the Praiſes which Peter Biſhop of Pavia had given him; and moreover commends that perſon for his Charity.

In the Hundred Thirty Sixth, he deſires Pope Innocent to Pardon a Man that was diſpos'd to make ſatisfaction.

In the Hundred Thirty Seventh, he implores the Clemency of the Empreſs upon the Milaneſe, whom the Pope had not receiv'd into favour till after they had Acknowledg'd Lotharius for their King and Maſter.

In the Hundred Thirty Eighth, he requires Henry King of England to Aſſiſt Pope Innocent.

In the Hundred Thirty Ninth, he excites the Emperour Lotharius to revenge the Church upon Schiſmaticks.

In the Hundred and Fortieth, he recommends the Piſantines to this Prince.

In the Hundred Forty Firſt, he ſharply Reproaches Humbert Abbot of Igny for having quitted his Abby.

In the Hundred Forty Second, he condoles the Monks of the Abby of the Alps for the loſs of their Abbot Guarin, who had been advanc'd to the Biſhoprick of Sion in Switzerland.

In the Hundred Forty Third, he excuſes his long Abſence to the Monks of Clairvaux, aſſuring them that he has been no leſs concern'd than they about it, and exhorting them to Perſevere in their Duty.

The Two following Letters are written upon the ſame Account, with the ſame Tokens of Tenderneſs and Affection.

All theſe Letters were written under the Pontificate of Innocent II. from the year 1132 to the year 1137.

In the Hundred Forty Sixth, he congratulates Burchard Abbot of Balere, inaſmuch that the care he has taken to reform his Abby has not been fruitleſs, and ſays the Glory of it is due only to God.

The Hundred Forty Seventh, is a Letter of Thanks to Peter, Abbot of Cluny, for having Comforted him in the pains he had been at in procuring Peace to the Church. He therein expreſſes his ſatisfaction in that the Schiſm was at length extirpated thence.

The following is a Letter of Compliment written to the ſame.

In the Hundred and Forty Ninth, he Admoniſhes this Abbot not to take ſo much pains to bring the Monaſtery of St. Berthin to ſubjection.

In the Hundred and Fiftieth, he Commends Pope Innocent for having made a Reformation in the Monaſtery of Vezelay, St. Bennet on the Po, and thoſe of St. Meme, and St. Satyre. As likewiſe for the reſolution he had ſhewn at Liege in refuſing to grant Inveſtitures at the requeſt of the Emperor Lotharius, and for Excommunicating the Clerks that diſturb'd the Church of Orleans. He exhorts him to employ the like Zeal in oppoſing Philip, Nephew to Giſlebert Arch-Biſhop of Tours, who had ſeiz'd upon the See of that Church.

The Hundred and Fifty Firſt is Addreſſed to this Philip, whom he acquaints with his concern to ſee him ingaged in ſo pernicious an undertaking. Theſe two Letters were writ in the Year 1133.

In the Hundred and Fifty Second, he writes to Pope Innocent in Favour of the Biſhop of Troyes, who was moleſted by his Clergy. He there ſays, that the Inſolence of the Inferior Clergy occaſioned by the Biſhop's neglect, has every where diſturb'd the Peace of the Church: That Biſhops give Holy things to Dogs and throw Pearls to Swine, who afterwards turn upon them and trample them under their Feet: That ſuch as they prefer, ſuch are they oblig'd to bear with; that they firſt enrich them with the Spoils of the Church without correcting them, and afterwards they are forc'd to ſubmit to their Inſolencies, for Prieſts that enjoy the Fruits of other's Labours live without Gratitude to their Benefactors, inſomuch, that their Iniquity moſt commonly proceeds from their abundance. Towards the end of this Letter, St. Bernard excuſes himſelf for not having gone to wait on the Pope as he had been deſir'd.

In the Hundred and Fifty Third Addreſs'd to Bernard, Prior of the Charter-Houſe of Portes, near the Town of Bollay, which had deſir'd of him an Expoſition of the Canticles, after having ſpoken of this Work in a very humble manner, he promiſes to tranſcribe and ſend his Expoſition at the beginning of that Book.

In the following Addreſs'd to the ſame, having ſent him this Diſcourſe, he expreſſes his Sorrow that he had not leiſure to go Viſit that Charter-Houſe.

In the Hundred and Fifty Fifth, he Acquaints Pope Innocent, who had given this Prior a Biſhoprick in Lombardy, that he is very worthy of that Honour, but that he is not a proper Perſon for the Place, inſomuch, that the Lombards being a headſtrong wicked People, a young Man that has always Liv'd in a Cloyſter, would find it a difficult matter to govern them, ſo that he deſires this Pope to beſtow on him another Place.

In the Hundred Fifty Sixth, he Recommends to this Pope the Church of Orleans, whoſe See was vacant.

In the Hundred and Fifty Seventh, he Recommends to Haimeric, Chancellor of the Church of Rome, the Provoſt and Canons of the Church of Meun, in the Dioceſs of Orleans. Theſe Two Letters with the foregoing, from the Hundred and Fifty Firſt, were written in the Year 1135.

The Hundred and Fifty Eighth is written to Pope Innocent, concerning the Murther of Thomas Prior of St. Victor in Paris, who had been kill'd near Gournay, by the Relations of Thibaud Arch-Deacon of Paris, in his return with Stephen Biſhop of Paris, to the Abbey of Chelles, whither they went to make a Reform in that Abbey. The Biſhop of Paris was ſo concern'd with this Aſſaſſination that he after pronounc'd Excommunication againſt the Murtherers and all their Adherents, reſerving to himſelf only their Abſolution, he retir'd to Clairvaux, whence he wrote to the Pope, and to Geofrey Biſhop of Chartres, his Legate, to encline them to do Juſtice upon the Aſſaſſines. This Letter St. Bernard writ to the Pope in his Name to exite his Zeal againſt ſo deteſtable an Action, and to beg of him to Puniſh the Arch-deacon of Paris, as being Acceſſary to this Murther.

The following Letter is that which was writ to the Pope in the name of the Biſhop of Paris, upon the ſame Account.

About

About the ſame time there was another Murther Committed on the Body of Archembaud, Sub-Dean of the Church of Orleans, at the Inſtigation of a Canon of that Church. St. Bernard writes alſo concerning the Murther to the Pope, by his Hundred and Sixty Firſt Letter, to the end, that ſo Barbarous a Crime might meet with an exemplary Puniſhment, not only in the Perſon of thoſe who had committed the Crime, but alſo in thoſe who were the cauſe of it.

There are moreover Three other Letters which follow thoſe, which are the Hundred Sixtieth, the Hundred Sixty Second, and Hundred Sixty Third, by which, he Recommends this Affair to Haimeric, Chancellor of the Church of Rome, and to another Cardinal.

Geofrey Biſhop of Chartres, the Pope's Legat, upon occaſion of theſe Murthers, Commanded the Biſhops of the Provinces of Rheims, Roan, Tours, and Sens, to meet at the Council of Joarre to Condemn the Authors thereof, purſuant to the utmoſt rigour of the Canons. We have not the Tranſactions of this Council of Joarre, but we are Aſſur'd by a Letter of Pope Innocent II. Addreſs'd to the aforeſaid Biſhops, that they Excommunicated all that were in the leaſt concern'd in theſe Murthers. The Pope confirms their Decree by this Letter, and becauſe it ſeem'd to him that this Judgment was not ſevere enough, he order'd farther, That no Maſs ſhould be Celebrated in any of thoſe places where theſe Murtherers were found, and that Thibaud, Noterius, and all others concern'd in the ſaid Murthers ſhould for ever be depriv'd either of enjoying or acquiring any Benefice. He pronounc'd alſo Anathema's againſt any that receiv'd or conceal'd theſe Aſſaſſines. All this hapned in the Year 1133. as Father Mabillon teſtifies in his Notes.

The Hundred Sixty Fourth Letter of St. Bernard is writ to Pope Innocent, concerning the difference which aroſe in the Church of Langres, about the Election of a Biſhop, in the room of William, who Dy'd in 1138. Peter Arch-Biſhop of Lions, and Hugh Duke of Burgundy, would have choſen a Monk of Cluny, yet Robert Dean of the ſaid Church, Pontius the Arch-Deacon, Olric, and the other Canons would not acquieſce in this Election, but demanded an Accuſtom'd liberty of chooſing whom they pleas'd. The Pope writ to them not to make choice of any without the Advice of ſome Pious Men, whereupon, they had recourſe to St. Bernard, and promis'd to do nothing but with his Conſent. This Arch-Biſhop of Lions Agreed to, and the Pope likewiſe approved of the Choice they had made of St. Bernard, who was then at Rome. In his return, St. Bernard underſtanding that they were about to Conſecrate a Biſhop of Langres at Lions, which he thought not worthy, and whom the Dean and Canons would not receive, he went immediately to the Arch-Biſhop, and repreſented to him, that having agreed to be determined by him, they ought to do nothing without him. The Arch-Biſhop laid all the blame on Hugh, Son to the Duke of Burgundy, but promis'd, that for the future there ſhould be nothing done without his Knowledge. St. Bernard propos'd to leave the matter to a Debate in a general Convocation of the Biſhops and Clergy. That Monk of Cluny who was about to have been Elected, dar'd not appear, but being arriv'd on Friday went away on Saturday. The Arch-Biſhop of Lions at the ſame time wrote Two Letters to the Chapter of Langres, quite contrary to each other, for by one, he order'd them to proceed to an Election, and by the other, told them that he had not altogether rejected, but only put off to another time the Ordination of this Monk of Cluny. Whereupon, this Monk obſerving his Ordination to be ſtopp'd, went to the King, and obtain'd from him an Inveſtiture, and afterwards aſſign'd a day for his Ordination. Soon after Falcon Dean of Lions, Pontius Arch-Deacon of Langres, Bonami Canon of the ſame, with two Monks of Clairvaux, Appeal'd to the Holy See, and Cited thither as well the Perſon that would have been Conſecrated, as the Perſons that would have Conſecrated him. St. Bernard inform'd the Pope of all matters that related thereto by this Letter.

In the following Letter written to Dean Falcon, and Guy Treaſurer of the Church of Lions, he commends them for the Zeal they had ſhown in this Affair.

Notwithſtanding the Appeal to the Court of Rome, yet the Arch-Biſhop of Lions, and the Biſhops of Autun, and Maſcon, Inſtalled and Conſecrated the Monk of Cluny; which extreamly nettled St. Bernard, for he wrote very earneſtly about it to the Pope and Cardinals, in the Hundred Sixty Sixth, Hundred Sixty Seventh, and Hundred Sixty Eighth Letters. At length he wrought ſo much upon his Holineſs as to cauſe him to diſapprove of this Election, and to give the Chapter leave to proceed to a New Election, after having taken Advice of St. Bernard. Whereupon, they immediately went to wait upon him accordingly, and he after having made them all Friends, ſent them back to make their Election, as he Acquaints his Holineſs by the Hundred Sixty Ninth Letter. Hereupon they Elected Godfrey Prior of Clairvaux, a relation to St. Bernard, who having met with ſome difficulty on the Courtſide, St. Bernard writ the Hundred and Seventieth Letter to Lewis the Younger, in which, he proteſts that no body had a greater Veneration for His Majeſty than himſelf, and afterwards Aſſures him that the Election of his Prior to the Biſhoprick of Langres was altogether againſt his Intention and good liking, ſince it depriv'd him of the principal Comfort of his Age and Infirmity, yet that he muſt nevertheleſs ſubmit to the Will of God: That it was neither in the power of himſelf nor the King to oppoſe it; and that he was perſwaded His Majeſty would not attempt it, but leave the Church of Langres to remedy its Affliction, having been long vacant together with that of Rheims: That he humbly thank'd His Majeſty for what he writ him thereupon, and would have been conformable, had not he ſeen the danger of delays, as likewiſe that the Revenues of that Church were in Huckſter's hands: That this was that which gave him the greateſt trouble, and procur'd no ſmall Diſhonour to His Majeſty, it being his Duty to preſerve the Goods of the Church: That the Election had been made altogether according to Form; That the Perſon Elect was faithful, for that he would not have been for him had he not firſt conſented to do Homage to His Majeſty for the Lands held of the Crown; That he had all along this Precaution given him; That he was not yet put into poſſeſſion, nor yet enter'd into the City; That for his part he had meddled but little with the matter, tho' he had been Invited to do it by the Clergy and People, and that the Oppreſſion of ſeveral and Prayers of Good Men might well have engag'd him deeper in it. That as the caſe now ſtands, it was for his Majeſty's Honour and the Publick Good to defer the Confirmation no long[illegible] and that if he did not Return an Anſwer by thoſe that gave him this Letter, he would peradventure raiſe the Spirits of divers Religious Men againſt him, and moreover Prejudice the Revenues of the Crown annex'd to this Biſhoprick. There is great likelihood that the King comply'd with St. Bernard's requeſt, for the year following, Falcon Dean of the Church of Lyons, having been Elected Arch-Biſhop thereof, Godfrey and St. Bernard wrote in his favour to Pope Innocent, which are the 171 and 172 Letters.

In the Hundred Seventy Third, St. Bernard recommends to Falcon the Monks of the Monaſtery of Beniſſon-Dieu.

The Hundred Seventy Fourth is the famous Letter which he writ to the Canons of Lyons, concerning the Feaſt of the Conception which they had newly Introduc'd. This Letter he begins with Commending of the Church of Lyons which (ſays he) "Has always been Preferable to all the reſt of France "not only on account of the Dignity of its See, but alſo by the ſtrict Order there kept. For is there "any where a better Diſcipline to be found, a greater Authority Eſtabliſh'd and of a more venerable "Antiquity, principally in regard of Eccleſiaſtical Duties, it having never hitherto introduc'd any No- "velty, nor ſuffer'd its ſelf to be debauch'd by any change? This has been the occaſion (continues he "that we can never enough wonder that ſome of you could have the Boldneſs to Introduce a Feaſt) "which the Church has not the leaſt knowlege of, which neither is ſupported by reaſon, nor back'd "by any Tradition: Are we, to think our ſelves more knowing or Devout than our Fore-fathers? and "is it not a dangerous Preſumption to pretend to do what they thought not proper? But (ſay you) "we ought to Honour the Mother of our Saviour: Why ſo we ought in all reaſon, but ſtill the ho- "nour paid to a Queen demands Diſcretion. This Royal Virgin has no need of falſe Honour ha- "ving Several true Titles, and being of a Quality truly Honourable. Honour then the Purity and "Piety of her Life, Admire her ſupernatural Fecundity and Adore her divine Off-ſpring; Commend "her in that ſhe conceiv'd without Concupiſcence, and brought forth without trouble: Affirm that "Angels reſpected her, All Nations have deſir'd her, that the Patriarchs and Prophets have been ac- "quainted with her, and that ſhe was choſen above all Women, and Preferr'd to all her Sex.——— "The Church teaches me to have an Uncommon Veneration for the day when ſhe dy'd, and when "ſhe was receiv'd with an unexpreſſible Joy into Heaven. The ſame Church learns me to honour "the day of her Birth, being verily perſwaded that like Jeremiah and St. John Baptiſt, ſhe was ſanctifi- "fy'd in her Mothers womb. Yes, the Mother of our Lord was Holy before ſhe was Born, and "therefore the Church cannot err in believing that the day of her Birth was alſo Holy, nor in "keeping it ſolemnly as ſuch: I alſo am thoroughly perſwaded that ſhe was endu'd with ſo many Graces "that not only her Birth was ſanctify'd, but alſo all the reſt of her Life, which was exempt from "all Sin; a favour that never yet was granted to any Other of the Off-ſpring of Man.——What "then are we able to contribute to theſe Honours? Let her conception alſo have Honours (ſay they) "ſince it preceeded her Birth, becauſe had not this Conception preceeded, her Birth could not have "been extant to be honour'd. Very well! for the ſame reaſon any one might Celebrate the Feaſts "of their Father and Mother, and mount upwards even to their remoteſt Anceſtors. Then we ſhould "have a prodigious Number of Feaſts indeed, and which would be more proper for the Eternity of "the other Life than the poor circumſcrib'd Limits of this. But there is a Book produc'd where this "Feaſt is Authoriz'd, as they pretend by Divine Revelation. Why this might very well be, and I my "ſelf could ſooner compoſe one in favour of any of my Anceſtors. For my part I am not willing to "Credit any of theſe Books which have neither Reaſon nor Authority on their ſide: For "what Conſequence is there that a Conception muſt be Holy becauſe the Birth was ſo? was it "made Holy by its Precedence? Whence had it this Sanctity to communicate to the Birth? and on "the contrary is it not becauſe this Conception was not Holy, that it was thought neceſſary to Sancti- "fie the Virgin afterwards? Whence proceeds the pretended Sanctity of this Conception? Will "any one ſay that it was occaſion'd by Grace to the End that ſhe might be conceiv'd "Holy? But then ſhe could not receive the Appanage of her Divinity before ſhe was Divine, and "that ſhe could not poſſibly be before her Conception. Some will ſay perhaps that ſhe was conceiv'd and "ſanctify'd in the ſame Moment, but that is what they cannot reaſonably make out, for how can Holy- "neſs be where ſin is? and how can any one deny that ſin is not to meet where Concupiſcence is to be "found. If they will not Affirm ſhe was conceiv'd by the Holy Ghoſt, which I preſume no body will "Offer to Aſſert? ſo that not having been Sanctify'd before her Conception, becauſe ſhe then was no- "thing, nor at her Conception, becauſe ſhe was then in the State of Sin, ſhe muſt have been ſanctify'd "in the womb of her Mother after her Conception, and that tho' her Birth was Holy her Conception "was not. In a word her good Fortune of being conceiv'd in Sanctity, is owing only to Jeſus Chriſt, "for all the other Children of Adam have been conceiv'd in Sin. This being thus, what reaſon can "there be for Introducing a Feaſt of the Conception? How can it be maintain'd that a Conception "which proceeds not from the Holy Ghoſt, but rather from ſin, can be Holy? Or how could they con- "jure up a Holy-day on Account of a thing that is not Holy in it ſelf? The Church may have "reaſon to boaſt indeed of a Feaſt which honours ſin or Authorizes a falſe Holyneſs; Yet whatever "People may think ſhe will never be brought to Approve of an Innovation contrary to her Uſual "Cuſtom that being the Mother of Raſhneſs, Siſter of Superſtition, and Daughter of Levity. More- "over if they had proceeded rightly in Introducing this Feaſt, they ſhould firſt have conſulted the "Holy See, and not follow'd blindly and without Deliberation the ſuggeſtions of ſome hair-brain'd "Ideots. St. Bernard adds that he has underſtood this error, was in other Places; That he had hi- therto forborn taking Notice of it out of a Veneration, he had for the Holy Virgin which proto spread it self over the whole Church, of which he was a Member, he could no longer dissemble his resentments without Offending all. He concludes, with saying, that he submits his Judgment to the more Sage and Experienc'd, and chiefly the Authority of the Church of Rome, to whom, he reserves the Decision of this matter, being ready to alter his Opinion if the Holy See shall be of another Mind.

Some Authors have undertaken the Defence of the Feast of the Conception of the Virgin, and among others, a certain Person has written a Treatise on this Subject, commonly Attributed to St. Anselm, wherein, he attacks St. Bernard without naming him. Likewise an English Monk call'd Nicholas writ a little after St. Bernard's Death against his Letter. This Monk has been refuted by Peter Abbot of Cellos; and at the same time Peter Priest and Monk of Prom blam'd those that had receiv'd three new Feasts, which were that of the most Holy Trinity, of the Transfiguration, and of the Conception of the Virgin, all which he esteem'd very extravagant. In the Century following, John Beleth, and William Durand, Bishop of Mande, disapprove also of this Feast, but notwithstanding it was Authoriz'd in the Fifteenth Century by the Council of Basil. It must here be understood with Father Mabillon, that St. Bernard means by Conception that same instant, in which the Body of the Virgin was Conceiv'd, and not with the School-Divines the moment of the Union of the Soul with the Body, for he could not have overthrown those that say that she was Sanctify'd this Instant, but only such as maintain she was Sanctify'd before she was animated, if he should have compar'd her Sanctification with that of Jeremias and St. John Baptist, but he plainly insinuates that she was not Sanctify'd before her Soul was United to her Body. Thus it may be observ'd, that St. Bernard had no very favourable Thoughts of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary.

The Hundred Seventy Fifth Letter of St. Bernard, is an Answer to one writ to him by the Patriarch of Jerusalem, wherein, he Recommends to him the Knights of the Cross. This Patriarch was William of Flanders, who had been formerly a Hermit at Tours.

The Hundred Seventy Sixth is written in the Name of Alberon, Arch-Bishop of Treves, to his Holiness Pope Innocent. This Arch-Bishop not being able to go in Person to wait on the Pope, writes him this Letter, to assure his Holiness of the unfeigned Obedience of the Churches on this side the Mountains; and moreover exhorts him not to concern himself at the loss of Benevento and Capua, which Roger of Sicily had taken from him, and likewise assures him, that the Emperor Lotharius was preparing to march to his Relief. This Letter was written in the Year 1135.

The Hundred Seventy Seventh is also written to the Pope, in the Name of the same Arch-Bishop, who complains of the Fatigue and Care he is like to undergo in his Arch-Bishoprick. He says, he accepted it not without regret; that he is plagu'd by his Suffragans who are young persons of Quality, and who rather oppose than assist him; that Right, good Manners, and Religion, are extinct in their Suffraganships; that he thinks himself oblig'd to Acquaint his Holiness with what he will not give him leave to reform; that notwithstanding, he undergoes patiently all these Affronts rather than act any thing contrary to the Obedience he owes to the Papal Chair. But that he begs of his Holiness to consider that these Injuries fall on the Papal See, and that the Contempt had of him renders also the Holy See despis'd: That in a word, he has several more complaints to make to him, of which his Holiness may be better inform'd by the Deputy he has sent.

In the following Letter written also in the Name of the former Person, and Address'd to Pope Innocent. St. Bernard lays open all the causes of Complaint which the Arch-Bishop of Treves had against the Pope, grounded upon the frequent usage of Appeals, which brought all matters before the Holy See, and quite destroy'd the Authority of the Arch-Bishops and Bishops. Observe how St. Bernard represents this matter to the Pope. I speak to you, (says he,) with a great deal of Freedom, because I have a more than ordinary Affection for you, which could not be, should I use Dissimulation. The Arch-Bishop of Treves his Complaint is not his alone, but proceeds from the Sentiments of several others, and chiefly those that love you best. They complain that Justice is no more to be found in the Church, that the Keys thereof become of no use, and the Episcopal Authority is rendred Despicable, by reason that the Bishops have now no more power to revenge the Injuries done to God, nor to punish the Offences committed in their Dioceses. The fault of all which is laid upon you and the Court of Rome. It is affirm'd that you abolish what they have well establish'd, and that you have establish'd what they abolish'd with Reason; That all Criminals and disobedient Persons, whether they be of the Clergy or Laity have immediately recourse to you, and boast when they return, that they have not met with Protectors who ought rather to have been Punishers of their Crimes. What a shame is this! What occasion for Laughter to the Enemies of the Church! Friends finds themselves Confounded, the Faithful Affronted, Bishops become the Subjects of Scorn and Contempt, and your Authority much lessen'd by the weakness of your Decisions. 'Tis those only have a true value for the Holy See, who labour heartily to procure the Peace, and advance the Grandeur of the Church of Rome. Why therefore will you your self weaken your own Strength? He afterwards proceeds to represent to the Pope the mischiefs occasion'd in the Churches of Toul, Verdun, and Metz, by the Protection which the Holy See has unadvisedly bestow'd. He Accuses the Bishops of Metz, and Toul, of Tyranny and Misgovernment, and complains that the Holy See has upheld them in it, and particularly that the Bishop of Metz had quash'd a free Election made with all form, in his Chapter, and plac'd by his Authority, a Probationer in the Church. At length he gives the Pope an extraordinary Character of the Arch-Bishop of Treves, assuring him, that he is a much more faithful Person both to the Church and the Holy See.

In the Hundred and Seventy Ninth, and Hundred and Eightieth Letters, he Recommends to this Pope the Affair which this Arch-Bishop had with the Abbot and Monks of St. Maximine and desires his Holiness to revoke the Brief which these last had obtain'd. One of the greatest Advantages of the Holy See, (says he,) is, that it can revoke whatever it finds it has been overseen in granting. It is certainly ly very juſt and commendable that a Perſon ſhould not get any advantage by his Crime, and above all with the Holy See and Sovereign Biſhop. This is what engages me in a boldneſs to requeſt your Favour in behalf of the Arch-Biſhop of Treves, and to lay before you ſuch inſtances of his Integrity as I am pretty well aſſur'd will ſucceed. All his Crime is having wreſted a Monaſtery out of the hands of Laicks, and endeavouring to purge it of its Errors.——— May God always fortifie your Holineſs with his Divine Grace, that the Monks may at no time over-reach you: Theſe Monks that hunt not after Liberty more than they fly Order and Diſcipline.

The Hundred and Eighty Firſt, is a Letter of Thanks to Haimeric, Chancellor of the Holy See.

In the Hundred and Eighty Second, he writes very earneſtly to Henry, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, concerning his inflexibility, which, he ſays, has procur'd him a great many Enemies.

In the Hundred and Eighty Third, he exhorts Conrade King of the Romans, to be Obedient to the Pope.

In the Hundred and Eighty Fourth, he excuſes himſelf to Pope Innocent, for not being able to ſend him ſome Religious Perſons, as he promis'd, by reaſon of three late Foundations he had made.

In the Hundred and Eighty Fifth, he exhorts Euſtace who had poſſeſs'd himſelf of the Church of Valence, not to perſiſt in his deſign thro' a falſe Glory, and by being Adviſ'd by Flatterers who play'd upon him.

In the Hundred Eighty Sixth, he recommends to Simon Son of the Chaſtelan of Cambray, the Monks of the Monaſtery of Vaucellei, and deſires him to confirm the Donation which his Father had made them.

The following Letters were writ in the Year 1140. againſt Peter Abaelard.

The Hundred Eighty Seventh is Addreſs'd to thoſe Biſhops that were to Aſſemble at the Council of Sens all whom he exhorts to promote zealouſly the intereſt of Religion.

In the Hundred Eighty Eighth, he makes the ſame Entreaty to the Biſhops and Cardinals of the Court of Rome. He in general accuſes Peter Abaelard of Contemning the Fathers; raiſing trifling Queſtions upon elevate Subjects, and, in a word, for confiding too much in his Wit, and not contenting himſelf with the plainneſs of Faith, and afterwards deſcending to particulars, Read (ſays he, to thoſe to whom he writes) Peter Abaelard's Book, which he calls his Theology. It is eaſie to be found, becauſe it is to be Sold, and there are a great many Perſons at the Court of Rome who Read it. See there how he advances upon the Holy Trinity, the Generation of the Son of God, the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, and ſeveral other matters which both the Ears and Minds of Catholicks are but little Accuſtom'd to. Read likewiſe another which is ſaid to be his Book of Proverbs, but which is Entituled, Noſce Teipſum: There you may obſerve how full his Works are of Sacrilege and Errors. What ſtrange Opinions has he concerning the Soul and the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt, of his Deſcent into Hell, and the Sacrament of the Altar; of the power of binding and of looſing, Original Sin, Concupiſcence, the Sin of Pleaſure, the Sin of weakneſs, the Sin of Ignorance, of the Action of Sinning, and the Will of Sinning. If you find hereby that I have reaſon to be mov'd, be you alſo the like, but that you may not be ſo to no purpoſe, be ſure to beſtir your ſelf ſuitable to the Rank, Dignity, and Authority of your Power. Lay theſe Works of Darkneſs open, Reprehend and Condemn them publickly, and ſtop the Mouths of thoſe that ſpeak Evil.

In the following Letter to Pope Innocent, he expreſſes his concern in that Schiſm had not been ſooner extinguiſh'd, and that the Errors of Peter Abaelard, and Arnauld of Breſſe had not ſooner been aboliſh'd. He Acquaints his Holineſs, that he has been invited by the Arch Biſhop of Sens, to enter the Liſts with Abaelard. That he came at the time appointed, and in the Preſence of the King, Biſhops, Abbots and ſeveral Learned Men, he produc'd divers Articles againſt him, but as they were going to be Read, this Heroe all of a ſudden went out of the Aſſembly, and Appeal'd to the Judges that he had choſen, which I hope (ſays St. Bernard,) will not be approv'd of. In his Abſence, the Articles propos'd were examin'd into, and found repugnant both to Faith and Truth. He concludes this Letter by earneſtly exhorting the Pope not to grant protection or encouragement to a Perſon that was at variance with the Eſtabliſh'd ſentiments of St. Peter.

The Hundred and Ninetieth is a Treatiſe againſt the Errors of Peter Abaelard, which is alſo inſerted amongſt his Opuſcula.

The Hundred Ninety Firſt is written to Pope Innocent, in the ſeveral Names of Sanſon, Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, Joſſelin Biſhop of Soiſſons, Geofrey of Chalons, and of Aloiſius of Arras, againſt Peter Abaelard. They are made to Accuſe him of Preſumption, Error, and Hereſie, and alſo obſerve, that his Book of the Trinity has already been Condemn'd to be Burnt by a Legat of the Holy See; and moreover, that having been lately Accus'd by the Abbot of Clairvaux, to avoid his Condemnation, he had Appeal'd to the Holy See, without cauſe or reaſon, againſt the Judges which he himſelf had made choice of; And that the Biſhops who were Aſſembled about that Affair would not Decree any thing againſt him out of reſpect to the Holy See, but only Condemn'd ſome few Articles drawn out of his Books. In a word, that it was neceſſary that his Holineſs ſhould apply ſome ſpeedy remedy to a miſchief which daily encreaſed.

In the Hundred Ninety Second, he Counſels Guy, Cardinal of the Church of Rome, not to favour the Errors of Abaelard on account of Friendſhip for his Perſon, and to frighten him the more from it, he tells him, that he treats of the Trinity like Arrius, like Pelagius of Grace, and like Neſtorius concerning the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt.

In the Hundred Ninety Third, he writes to another Cardinal Nam'd Ives, acquainting him that he is ſurpriz'd that Abaelard ſhould find ſo many Friends and Protectors at Rome.

By the Hundred Ninety Fourth Letter, Pope Innocent Anſwers Henry Arch-Biſhop of Sens, Sampſon Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, the Biſhops their Suffragans, and St. Bernard Abbot of Clairvaux, that he has been been as much concern'd for the Novelties advanc'd by Abaelard, as joyful at the Zeal they have ſhewn to oppoſe him in his Innovations, and declares that by the Advice of the Biſhops and Cardinals of the Church of Rome, he had Condemn'd the Articles which they had ſent him, and all the falſe Doctrines of Peter Abaelard, together with their Author, on whom he has enjoyn'd perpetual ſilence, as being a Heretick; and moreover, that he eſteems all the Followers and Defenders of theſe Errors, to be worthy of being put out of the Communion of the Church.

In the Hundred Ninety Fifth, he Counſels the Biſhop of Conſtance to expel Arnaud of Breſſe out of his Dioceſs, he having already been driven out of Italy and France for his Errors.

In the Hundred Ninety Sixth, he gives the ſame Advice to Guy the Pope's Legat, to whom this Arnaud was retir'd for ſhelter.

In the Hundred Ninety Seventh, he reproves Peter Dean of Bezanſon, for diſturbing the Abbot and Monks of Cherlieu.

In the Letter following, he earneſtly Recommends their Caſe to Pope Innocent, who refers it to John Abbot of Bonneval, then Biſhop of Valence, and to the Biſhop of Grenoble. Theſe determin'd in favour of the Abbot of Cherlieu. But Peter not being willing to acquieſce in their determination, continu'd to importune the Holy See for redreſs, which occaſion'd St. Bernard to write the Hundred Ninety Ninth Letter to Pope Innocent, to beg of him to confirm the Judgment Pronounc'd by the Biſhops.

The Two Hundreth is written to Ulger Biſhop of Angers, concerning a difference between this Biſhop and the Abbeſs of Fontevrault.

In the Two Hundred and Firſt, he admoniſhes Baudouin Abbot of the Monaſtery of Realino, and recommends to him in particular three things, Firſt, to inſtruct others by his Diſcourſe, Secondly, to give them good Example by his Works, and Thirdly, to apply himſelf to Prayer.

In the Two Hundred and Second, he exhorts the Clergy of Sens not to proceed too raſhly in the Election of an Arch-Biſhop, but to wait for the Opinion of the Suffragan Biſhop's, and conſent of the Perſons of Rank in the Dioceſs to prevent that befalling them which hapned before to the Churches of their Neighbourhood, Orleans and Languedoc. He Recommends to them, moreover to proclaim a Faſt, Aſſemble the Biſhops, Summon the Monks, and in fine, to omit none of the requiſite Ceremonies in this Election. This Letter was written after the Death of Henry, Arch-Biſhop of Sens, who was ſucceeded in the Year 1144. by Hugh Abbot of Pontigni.

In the Two Hundred and Third Letter, he Counſels the Biſhop and Clergy of Troyes not to ſuffer the Sub-Deacon Anſelle to be Marry'd and carry Arms.

The Two Hundred and Fourth, contains a Chriſtian Compliment to the Abbot of St. Aubin.

The Two Hundred and Fifth, is an Anſwer to the Biſhop of Rocheſter, who wrote to him ſomewhat ſeverely about cauſing Robert Pallus to Live at Paris, when he thought it neceſſary.

In the Two Hundred and Sixth, he Recommends one of his Kindred to Meliſenda Queen of Jeruſalem, and wiſhes her a long and happy Reign.

The Three following Letters Addreſs'd to Roger King of Sicily, contain nothing remarkable.

The Two Hundred and Tenth, and the Eight following, are Letters of Recommendation Addreſs'd to Pope Innocent. In the Two Hundred and Thirteenth, he complains that this Pope took little or no notice of the Reconciliation made by his means with Peter of Piſa. In the Two Hundred and Sixteenth, and Two Hundred and Seventeenth, he Complains that Radulphus Count of Vermandois, having put away one Wife and Marry'd another, was ſeemingly vindicated by the Court of Rome. He likewiſe Commends Thibaud Count of Burgundy, for taking the part of the firſt Wife which was his Niece. In the Two Hundred and Eighteenth, he juſtifies himſelf to the Pope againſt a ſuſpicion had of him concerning the Goods of the Cardinal Ives, aſſuring his Holineſs that they had been embezled contrary to his knowledge.

The Two Hundred and Nineteenth is Addreſs'd to Alberic, Biſhop of Oſtia, Stephen of Paleſtrine, Igmar of Freſcati, and Gerard Chancellor of the Church of Rome, concerning a difference which happened between the King of France and the Pope, on account of the Arch-Biſhop of Bourges. This Arch-Biſhoprick being vacant, the King had given the Clergy of Bourges leave to chooſe any other for their Arch-Biſhop than Peter, whom the Pope had caſt a favourable Eye upon. He was nevertheleſs Elected afterwards, and Conſecrated at Rome by the Pope. Whereupon, the King having made an Oath, that he ſhould never be Arch-Biſhop during his Life time, would not receive him, but declar'd War againſt the Count of Champagne, to whom he was retir'd. This caus'd the Pope to interdict the Dominions of France, and it was upon this occaſion that St. Bernard writ this Letter, by which, he wills the Prelates of the Court of Rome, that they might have learnt by the Perſecution of Gilbert, and undertakings of Burdin and Peter of Leon, how much Schiſm is to be dreaded, and how hazardous it is to raiſe any difference between the Regal and Sacerdotal Power. That therefore they muſt Act with Prudence, and manage Matters with Lenity not to incur the danger of a New Schiſm: That he can by no means excuſe the King for having made an Oath, which it was both a Crime and Sin to keep; nay, though he was in a manner forc'd to perform it, being a cuſtom among the French to obſerve any, though never ſo unjuſt; that his Intention was not to excuſe the King of France, but ask Pardon for him; and laſtly, that the concern he was in, his Age and Majeſty, do in ſome meaſure deſerve it, without being like to do any great wrong to the Church.

In the Two Hundred and Twentieth Letter, he writes to King Lewis, that he cannot hinder the Anathema's being renew'd againſt Radulphus; and endeavours to perſwade his Majeſty, that that ought not to ſet him at variance with Count Thibaud.

In the Two Hundred Twenty Firſt, he ſpeaks high to this Prince, and takes a great deal of Liberty to reprove him, Affirming that he is an Enemy to Peace; that he has violated the Treaties which he has made; that he has communicated with Excommunicated Perſons; that he has encourag'd Murthers, Theft, Robbery, and the Deſtruction of Churches; that not contented to aſſume an Authority over the Church of Bourges, which did not belong to him, he alſo hinders the Church of Chalons from having a Biſhop, as likewiſe permits his Brother to ſeize upon the Revenues of the Biſhopricks. He Admoniſhes him to forbear ſpeedily theſe Exactions, and prevent the anger of God by Repentance after the Example of the King of the Ninevites.

In the Two Hundred Twenty Second, he writes to Joſſelin Biſhop of Soiſſons, and Sugerus Abbot of St. Denys, likewiſe the Kings Miniſter, concerning the occaſions pretended at Court for making War upon Count Thibaud, as alſo touching the wrong which the King did to the Churches.

Theſe Letters written with all the freedom imaginable, extreamly incens'd the King and his Miniſters againſt St. Bernard, who having underſtood as much by the Anſwer which Joſſelin ſent him, he ſignifies again to him in the Two Hundred Twenty Third Letter, that perhaps he had been a little bold, but that his Preſumption was meerly caus'd by Grief, and the Zeal he had for the Welfare of the Church, and moreover that it was to have been wiſh'd that they had made uſe of the ſame Liberty, and endeavour'd to reclaim the King by the like Admonitions.

In the Two Hundred Twenty Fourth, he acquaints Stephen Biſhop of Paleſtrine with the damage which the King had done to the Churches of France, putting him in mind that he ought to Repent, having written to Rome in favour of this Prince.

In the Two Hundred Twenty Fifth, he exhorts Joſſelin to endeavour a Peace.

The Two Hundred Twenty Sixth is written to the King in the Name of Hugh Biſhop of Auxerre, as likewiſe in his own, wherein he Admoniſhes this Prince, who had juſt before fruſtrated a Negociation begun at Corbeil, to renew the ſame and to have more advantageous thoughts for the good of the Church.

In the Two Hundred Twenty Seventh, he conjures Joſſelin to uſe his Intereſt that no damage may come to him eſpecially from the King, who was not a little incens'd againſt him. All theſe Letters were writ in the Years 1142 and 1143.

The Two Hundred Twenty Eighth, is a very Civil Anſwer to a Letter of Peter Abbot of Cluny's lately written to him, whereby he gives him to Underſtand that he could heartily wiſh to renew the Friendſhip that had formerly been between them, and which was now Interrupted by ſome differences as well on account of the Biſhop of Langres, as by reaſon that Pope Innocent had diſcharg'd the Order of Ciſteaux, of the Tithes which they paid to Cluny.

The following is the Anſwer which Peter of Cluny gives to this Letter, in which after having heaped on St. Bernard, a great many Complements, he ſearches into the Reaſons, why the Orders of Cluny and Ciſteaux, which ought to live in good Intelligence with each other, ſo continually jar and diſagree; and he makes it plainly appear, that they have no reaſonable Cauſe to be ſo divided: For in the firſt place, if their Difference be about Lands or other temporal Goods, they have proper Judges who may regulate thoſe Matters, and make Peace between them. Secondly, they ought not to diſagree about their Monaſtical Obſervances, becauſe if the different Cuſtoms of different Churches, hinders not the Union of the Spirit and Charity among Chriſtians, no more ought the diverſity of Practices and Ceremonies to be a cauſe of Diviſion among Monks, who although they are all of one Order, yet may have different Uſages and Cuſtoms, St. Bennet himſelf having been ſenſible that his Order might be ſubject to ſome Moderation or Explication. He then brings examples of theſe Differences, and ſhews that both Orders may obſerve their Cuſtoms ſeparately, and with ſimplicity of Heart, without condemning each other in them. Thirdly, he affirms that the different Colours of Habits ought to be a leſs ſubject of Diviſion, ſince nothing is more ridiculous than for Men to fall out on ſuch trifling Accounts. And laſtly, he lays the blame on the Spirit of Pride, which (he ſays) had divided the Monks of Cluny and Ciſteaux; the former being unwilling that the latter ſhould be preferr'd to them, and the latter Glorying that they had been reſtorers of the Order, and of Monaſtick Diſcipline. He concludes by exhorting both Parties to live in Peace, and to preſerve a mutual Eſteem and Value for each other.

In the Two Hundred and Thirtieth he writes to the Cardinals of Oſtia, Freſcati and Paleſtrine, to relieve the Church of Mets, which for ſome time had rather been in the hands of a Woolf than a Shepherd. He ſpeaks of Stephen Biſhop of that City, and Nephew to Pope Calixtus II. who came to the Biſhoprick whilſt he was young, which occaſions St. Bernard to ſay, that he began like a little Woolf, but now being become a great one, he ravaged the Herd of Chriſt by Rapines, Conflagrations and Murthers.

The Two Hundred Thirty Firſt is written to the ſame Cardinals, in favour of the Abbot of Lagny, accus'd at Rome to have refus'd receiving the Pope's Nuncio, to have torn his Holineſſes Letter, to have impriſoned certain Monks, and to have given divers Lands of his Monaſtery to his Relations. St. Bernard after having exceedingly commended this Abbot, proceeds to reply to his Accuſations. Firſt he ſays he did not entertain the Nuncio which his Holyneſs ſent into England, by reaſon that the Provoſt Humbert promis'd to do it for him; that the Letter which he was accus'd to have torn, was yet whole; that he never impriſoned any Monks, but only ſent ſome that were of a very turbulent Spirit to other Monaſteries, and as for giving away the Monaſtery Lands to his Relations, he never did without a Clauſe of Reverſion, and a Rent reſerv'd according to Cuſtom, and which likewiſe was executed in preſence of the Biſhops of Soiſſons and Auxetre, and of Thibaud Count of Champagne, Conſervator of the Rights and Privileges of the Monaſtery. As to the reſt, he ſaid it was unaccountable that a proud, rebellious and ambitious Monk, ſhould obtain his Liberty of the Holy See. Formerly (ſays he) you have been accus'd of domineering over the Clergy, and the Conſciences of all the World, contrary to the precept of the Apoſtle; and now you add ſomething more to this Preſumption, in ſhewing an Inclination to diſpoſe abſolutely of all Religious Perſons; inſomuch, that I know not what remains for you to desire more, unless you would likewise command over the Angels. I do not impute this to my Lord Pope Innocent, who might easily have been over perswaded, being but a Man, and I beg of God not to impute it to him, not in the least doubting, but when he shall come to a knowledge of the Truth, he will abhor the favouring of so pernicious and dangerous a Person as that Monk was.

In the Two Hundred Thirty Second, he writes to the same Cardinals, that if the Abbot of St. Theofroy, commonly called St. Chaffre, in the Diocese of Puy in Vellay, be guilty of those things whereof he is accused, they ought not to favour, but speedily punish him.

In the Two Hundred Thirty Third, he writes to John Abbot of Busey, in the Diocese of Nantes, perswading him to return to his Abby, which he had quitted for some time before.

In the Two Hundred Thirty Fourth, he desires Herbert Abbot of St. Stephen of Dijon, to pardon one of his regular Canons, though he had written injuriously against him.

In the Two Hundred Thirty Fifth, written in the Year 1143 to Pope Celestine II. He writes very bitterly against William, who had got possession of the Arch-Bishoprick of York, being guilty of several Crimes which he was not clear'd from but by a false Oath. The Cause was removed to Rome, and he obtain'd of Pope Innocent a Bull in his Favour, whereupon St. Bernard begs of Celestine not to suffer so ill a Man to continue in possession of the Arch-Bishoprick of York.

In the following Letter he writes upon the same subject, and after the same manner, to the Prelates of the Court of Rome.

In the Two Hundred Thirty Seventh, he writes to the same, concerning the Elevation of Bernard, Abbot of St. Anastasius, to the Sovereign Pontificate (Eugenius III. who succeeded Lucius II. in the Year 1145.) He admires how they could draw him out of his Cloyster where he was at quiet, to bring him into the World, and lay the whole Care of the Church upon him, which he says makes him very much doubt whether he will be able to sustain the Weight, and therefore recommends to them to support him therein.

The Two Hundred Thirty Eighth is Addressed to Pope Eugenius, then but newly rais'd to the Holy See. St. Bernard acquaints him with his Joy, intermixt with Grief and Fear for his Elevation to that Dignity. And afterwards he exhorts him to sustain with Apostolick Zeal, the sublime Ministry which was committed to him, and to endeavour to answer the Opinion people generally had of his Virtue. He writes to him particularly concerning the irregular Lives of the Arch-Bishop of York and the Bishop of Wincheſter. At length he recommends to him to abolish the wicked Custom crept into the Court of Rome, of bestowing Favours for Money; and moreover admonishes him to remember at all times that he is a Man, and to think often of Death by Reflecting how little time the Pontificates of several of his Predecessors have lasted.

In the Two Hundred Thirty Ninth, and the Two Hundred and Fortieth, he writes again to the Pope against the Arch-Bishop of York, and presses his Holiness to suspend him.

The Two Hundred Forty First is written to Hildefonsus, Count of Tholouse, concerning the Errors of Henry, Disciple to Peter de Bruys, whom this Count favoured. "How many Disorders (says he) "do we every Day hear that Henry commits in the Church of God? That ravenous Wolf is within "your Dominions cloathed in a Sheeps' Skin, but we know him by his Works. The Churches are "forsaken, the People are without Bishops, and the Bishops are no more respected. In a Word, the "Christians are without Christ, the Church are like Synagogues, the Sanctuary despoil'd of its Holy-"ness, the Sacraments look'd upon as prophane Institutions, the Feast days have lost their Solemnity, "Men grow up in Sin, and every day Souls are born away before the Terrible Tribunal of Christ, "without being first reconciled to and fortify'd with the Holy Communion. In refusing Christians Bap-"tism, they are denyed the Life of Jesus Christ. A Man that Teaches and Acts so contrary to the "Will and Word of God, cannot be from God. And yet alass! he is hearkened to by many, and finds "those that are ready to believe him. He would have People believe that the Church of God is at an "End, and reduc'd only to that small number that he imposes on: After having been driven out of "France, he nevertheless finds an Asylum in your Dominions. Consider with your self, Great Prince, "if this Person does you any Honour; he is an Apostate; for after having quitted his Cloyster to "live loosely, and not being willing to tarry in his own Country, or rather having been whipp'd out "of it, he went about begging his Bread, and Preaching for a wretched Sustenance, and whenever it "hapned that he got any thing over and above, he did not fail to consume it at Play, or at other "means more shameful. This famous Preacher has been often found with Women of ill Lives. In-"form your self therefore, I beseech you, how he has been driven out of Lausane, Mons, Poictiers "and Beurdeaux, and what Reputation he has left behind him in those Places. St. Bernard sends this Prince word, that he is coming to reform the Disorders that this Prince has caused in the Churches of his Dominions; that he has Authority for that Purpose; that he shall do his utmost endeavours to extirpate this pernicious Plant, with assistance of the Bishops, and particularly by the Authority of the Cardinal of Ostia, who will be sent on purpose by the Holy See. He takes notice to him, that it will be for his Interest to receive this Cardinal Kindly, and to joyn his Authority with theirs, to the end, that the Pains they shall take for the Salvation of him, and his People may not prove of no effect.

In the Two Hundred Forty Second, written by St. Bernard after his return from this Country, he exhorts the People of Tholouse to shun Hereticks, obey their Bishop, exercise Hospitality, and not to suffer any Preachers among them, but such as have either Ordination from their Bishop or the Pope.

These Letters were writ in the Year 1147.

The Two Hundred Forty Third, is Address'd to the Lords and People of Rome, after they had driven out Pope Eugenius III. He reproaches them severely for this Action, and conjures them to reconcile themselves speedily to him.

In the Two Hundred Forty Fourth, he exhorts Conrade, King of the Romans, to Re-eſtabliſh the Pope, and Puniſh the Rebels of Rome; giving him to underſtand, that it is as much for his Intereſt as for that of the Holy See, that the City of Rome which is Metropolis of the Empire, ſhould be under his Subjection.

In the Two Hundred Forty Fifth, he Commends the Zeal which Pope Eugenius ſhew'd in oppoſing King Lewis the Younger's obliging Elias Biſhop of Orleans to quit his Biſhoprick.

In the Two Hundred Forty Sixth, he Recommends this Biſhop to the Pope, being before but an humble Monk, and entreats his Holineſs to take pity on his Condition, and to provide for the Payment of his Debts, out of the Revenues of his Biſhoprick.

In the Two Hundred Forty Seventh, he Prays the ſame Pope to permit Sampſon, Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, to make uſe of the Pallium which he had been forbidden, on account of his having Crown'd King Lewis in the Church of Bourges in preſence of the Arch-Biſhop of that City.

In the Two Hundred Forty Eighth, he adviſes this Pope not to ſuffer himſelf to be over-reach'd by the Biſhop of Seez, who was coming to wait on him, to get himſelf re-eſtabliſh'd.

In the Two Hundred Forty Ninth, he recommends to the ſame Oribert the Prior of Chaiſe-Dieu, Biſhop Elect of Valence, choſen in the Year 1145.

In the Two Hundred and Fiftieth, he Acquaints the Prior and Monks of Portes, that they ought not to take it amiſs that the Pope would not allow one of their Fraternity to be Biſhop, though he was choſen. He ſays, that perhaps his Holineſs would not admit of him, becauſe he was too Young, and that he would have nothing to be ſaid afterwards againſt the Election. And as for his own part, he ſays, he never oppos'd it in the leaſt. Afterwards, he tells them, that he is ſorry that the Abbot of Troyes had written to them ſo very harſhly, and he concludes his Letter with theſe Humble Words. My Monſtrous Life and my Afflicted Conſcience Cry towards you for Compaſſion, for I am a kind of Amphibious Creature, that neither live altogether as an Eccleſiaſtick nor a Recluſe; and it is now a long while ſince I have quitted the Life of a Monk without forſaking the Habit. I eſteem it needleſs to acquaint you with what you may eaſily hear from others, that is, what I do, what I employ my ſelf about; what hazards I expoſe my ſelf to in the World, and through what dangers I am compelled to go: If you are not acquainted with theſe I beſeech you to inform your ſelves of them, and when you have thoroughly learnt them, to favour me with your Aduice and Prayers.

In the Two Hundred Fifty Firſt, he intercedes to Pope Eugenius in behalf of the Monks of Baume, whom this Pope had puniſh'd by changing their Abbey to a Priory, for their having ſlighted the Authority of the Holy See.

In the Two Hundred Fifty Second, he conjures the ſame Pope to put in execution the Sentence pronounc'd by Innocent II. againſt the Arch-Biſhop of York.

The Two Hundred Fifty Third is an Anſwer to a Letter from Hugh Abbot of Premontre, who had made ſeveral Complaints againſt the Monks of Clairvaux. St. Bernard tells him, he did not do well to complain of him and his Order, ſince he has always had an eſteem for that of Premontre, and that he has done them ſeveral Services upon divers occaſions: He brings ſeveral Examples of what he aſſerts, and at length juſtifies himſelf againſt what that Abbot had alledged againſt his Order. Towards the end, he admoniſhes them not to break the Union betwixt them, Acquainting them that for his part he ſhall never be wanting in the Duties of Charity and Friendſhip.

In the Two Hundred Fifty Fourth, he Commends Guarini, Abbot of the Alpes, in endeavouring to reform his Monaſtery, and exhorts him, not to diſcontinue ſo good a Work out of fear of not being able to accompliſh it while he lives, ſince the ſhort time we have to live is not ſufficient excuſe for not endeavouring to make our ſelves perfect, and that ſuch as do not labour after a progreſs in Spiritual Affairs go backwards inſtead of advancing.

In the Two Hundred Fifty Fifth, he exhorts Lewis the Groſs, King of France, not to hinder the holding of a Council which he believes neceſſary for the good of the Church. It is of the Council of Piſa that he ſpeaks, conven'd in the Year 1134. ſo that this Letter ought to precede the others by many Years.

In the Two Hundred Fifty Sixth, he exhorts Pope Eugenius not to be diſheartned becauſe of ſome loſſes the Chriſtians had ſuſtain'd in the Eaſt, but to ſuccour and aſſiſt them to his power. He moreover tells him, that he was more than ordinarily ſurpriz'd when he heard that he was pitched upon for General of the Army, that was to go thither, being no ways qualify'd for that Employ.

In the Two Hundred Fifty Seventh, he writes to this Pope in favour of Philip, who was become a Monk of Clairvaux, after he had been ſuſpended from his Biſhoprick of Tarentum, and deſires his Holineſs to be kind to him.

The Three following Letters were writ concerning Rualenus, who had been choſen Abbot of St. Anaſtaſius. St. Bernard after having requeſted of his Holineſs by the firſt of theſe Letters to diſcharge him from his Burthen. In the Second, conſents that he ſhall continue it, ſince his Holineſs deſires it, and by the Third, he Admoniſhes this Abbot not to be uneaſie under his Vocation.

In the Two Hundred Sixty Firſt, he deſires Eugenius to take off the Excommunication pronounc'd againſt the Abbot of St. Urban, who had beſtow'd the Habit of that Order on a Knight Templar.

The Two Hundred Sixty Second, is a Letter of Recommendation to the Pope, in favour of the Monks of Mouzon.

The Two Hundred Sixty Third is Addreſs'd to the Biſhop of Soiſſons, in favour of the Abbot of Cheſy.

The Two Hundred Sixty Fourth is a Letter from Peter, Abbot of Cluny, to St. Bernard, in which, he extreamly Commends St. Bernard, and begs of him to ſend him his Secretary Nicholas.

The

The Two Hundred Sixty Fifth is St. Bernard's Anſwer, in which, he rejects the Praiſes given him, and moreover informs him, that he cannot ſend the Perſon he deſires, by reaſon, that he was with the Biſhop of Auxerre, where he was ſo Sick that it was impoſſible he ſhould come to Clairvaux without great inconvenience.

The Two Hundred Sixty Sixth is written to Sugerus, Abbot of St. Denys, a little before his Death. He exhorts him to prepare courageouſly for Death, and profeſſes a great deal of Friendſhip for him.

By the Two Hundred Sixty Seventh, he tells Pope Eugenius that he was groſly deceiv'd when he rais'd to the Eccleſiaſtical Dignity a Perſon Convicted of Crimes and Condemn'd for them, by Lambert Biſhop of Angouleſme, and therefore begs of his Holineſs to revoke what he had done.

In the Two Hundred Sixty Ninth, he ſends him word that he would not have him give Credit to a Letter he lately wrote him, about a Perſon who had over-reach'd him by a Recommendation from the Biſhop of Beauvais.

In the Two Hundred and Seventieth, he writes again to the Pope, in favour of Anthelmus, Prior of the Great Charter-Houſe, who having expell'd ſome of his Monks for Diſobedience and Irregularity, they had gone to Rome, and obtain'd a Re-eſtabliſhment from the Pope. St. Bernard ſays, that from the firſt foundation of this Order, he had never heard that a Carthuſian who forſook his Cloyſter had ever been receiv'd again, without making ample Satisfaction; that theſe Monks who had thus forſaken their Order did yet worſe in returning to it. "And what good (ſays he to the Pope) does your Holi-"neſs believe, that theſe Monks could do, whoſe leaving their Monaſtery was an effect of Diſobedience, "and their returning to it the Product of Pride? They rejoyce for the Ill they have done, and inſult "over thoſe whom they have Offended; and, in a word, they even Triumph for having obtain'd the "Victory. The Prior is no more Prior; he bears his Office with regret, not being willing to ſee "the Deſtruction of his Order, and he would have left his Monaſtery long ſince, could he have gone "out alone.——Conſider therefore moſt Holy Father, (continues he,) how you have been over-"reach'd, and what Puniſhment he deſerves, who has thus deceiv'd you!—— Take Care then that "the Prior be reſtor'd, to the end, that Iniquity may not Triumph over Juſtice. He afterwards Ac-quaints the Pope with the Death of Raymond, Abbot of Ciſteaux, and that Gozvin, Abbot of Boine-val, had ſucceeded him. This Abbot Dy'd in the Year 1151. This Letter therefore belongs to that Year.

In the Two Hundred Seventy Firſt, he excuſes himſelf to Thibaud, Count of Champagne, for not caring to be concern'd in promoting his Son's having Benefices while he was but a Child, and this for Conſcience ſake, well knowing that Eccleſiaſtical Dignities ought only to be beſtow'd upon ſuch as are able to acquit themſelves of their Functions, and moreover, it being not allowable for one perſon to enjoy ſeveral Benefices at a time, unleſs by Diſpenſation or ſome other conſiderable reaſon that the Church may have.

In the Two Hundred Seventy Second, he exhorts the Biſhop of Laon, (Gautier Abbot of St. Martin who was made Biſhop of that See in the Year 1151.) to be reconcil'd to the Bearer of that Let-ter.

The Two Hundred Seventy Third, is written to the Abbot and general Chapter of Ciſteaux: He gives them to underſtand that he could heartily wiſh his Affairs would give him leave to Aſſiſt in their Chapter, and moreover Admoniſhes them to Labour in the Reformation of their Order.

In the following he thanks Pope Eugenius for the Letter full of Charity and Zeal which he had written to his Chapter, and moreover entreats him to continue always the ſame good will towards his Order. He acquaints him towards the End that he is Sorry that he had taken from them Hugh Abbot of the Three Fountains, to make him a Cardinal.

In the Two Hundred Seventy Fourth, he gives this Abbot of the Three Fountains, to Under-ſtand, that he Repents having writ to Rome, in favour of the Nephew of Hugh Biſhop of Auxerre then lately Dead.

In the Two Hundred Seventy Fifth, he Acquaints the Pope with the Diſturbances that had happned in the Election of a Biſhop to the Church of Auxerre, and what he had been Inform'd by one of his Monks, ſent thither concerning the double Election there made.

In the Two Hundred Seventy Sixth, he Acquaints him likewiſe that the will of the late Biſhop of Auxerre, had been made by ſuggeſtion of Deacon Stephen, at whoſe Requeſt he had given his Ne-phew ſeveral Benefices and Church-Lands.

In the Two Hundred Seventy Seventh, written alſo to the Pope, he recommends to him Peter Abbot of Clumy, who was on his Journey towards Rome, and begs that his Holyneſs would not give him leave to quit his Abby altho' he ſhould deſire it.

The Two Hundred Seventy Eighth is a Letter of Recommendation to the Pope in favour of Henry Biſhop of Beauvais.

In the Two Hundred Seventy Ninth, Addreſs'd to Henry Son of Thibaud Count of Champagne, he begs of him to do Juſtice in behalf of the Abbot of Chatillon, on the Lord of Belfort, whoſe Servants had taken ſeveral Cattle from him.

The Two Hundred and Eightieth is written to the Pope concerning the Election of a Biſhop of Auxerre. The Pope having Underſtood that there were two different Elections, deputed St. Bernard, with two other Perſons to proceed to a New one, St. Bernard and one of the Electors pitched upon one Perſon who is thought to have been Alain who got the better, but the Third gave his Vote for another. Here-upon St. Bernard prays the Pope to procure the Conſent of the Third Perſon, Aſſuring his Holyneſs, that he could not have thought of a more proper Perſon to ſerve the Church, and to prevent the De-ſigns of the Count of Nevers upon the Church of Auxerre.

The

The Two Hundred Eighty Firſt contains a Reprimand which he gave the Abbot of Cheroal, for the Liberty he had taken to talk injurioufly of him.

In the Two Hundred Eighty Second, he exhorts Lewis the Younger, King of France to give his Conſent to the Election which had been made of a Biſhop of Auxerre.

In the Two Hundred Eighty Third, he writes to Pope Eugenius touching the reſtitution demanded by the Monks of the Monaſtery of the Mirrour, of the Order of Ciſteaux, upon the Monks of Gigny of the Order of Cluny, of 30000 Sols. Hereupon the Abbot of Cluny and St. Bernard had endeavour'd to accommodate the Difference; and the Monks of Gigny, having little to ſay for themſelves, St. Bernard has recourſe to the Pope, that he would be pleas'd to do juſtice in behalf of thoſe of the Mirrour.

In the Two Hundred Eighty Fourth he recommends to this Pope the Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, the Biſhop of Arras, the Abbot of Aucourt, and ſome others.

The Three following Letters were written in favour of Odon Succeſſor of Sugerus in the Abby of St. Denys. The Two Firſt are Addreſs'd to the Pope, and the Third to Hugh Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia.

In the Two Hundred Eighty Eighth Addreſs'd to Andrew his Uncle, a Knight Templar, he acquaints him with his concern for the ill Succeſs of the Croiſade occaſion'd by the ill Conduct of the Chriſtian Princes, and ſays he hopes to ſee that Enterprize accompliſh'd before he dies.

In the Two Hundred Eighty Ninth, he gives wholeſom Advice to Meliſenda Queen of Jeruſalem.

In the Two Hundred and Ninetieth, Addreſs'd to Hugh Cardinal-Biſhop of Oſtia, he writes againſt the Conduct of Jordain des Urſini, Cardinal Legate of the Holy See in Germany. Your Legate (ſays he) has left behind him ſhameful Marks of his Expedition where-ever he has been, for he has fill'd all the Churches of Germany, France, and Normandy with Sacrileges. It is ſaid that he has done a great many Ill Things unworthy of his Character, Robb'd the Churches where-ever he came, and every where plac'd Young Men in Eccleſiaſtical Dignities; That ſeveral have paid him great Sums of Money to keep him out of their Country; That by his Emiſſaries he has Extorted and Exacted Money from thoſe places whither he could not go himſelf: In a word he is become the By word of the World: Every Body ſlights and ſpeaks ill of him: The Poor Monks and Other Clergy complain of him: Thoſe of his Profeſſion have the greateſt Abhorrence of his Life and Converſation; and Laſtly he has little reſemblance with John Paperans, who was Legate at that time in Ireland, and who was juſtly Honour'd and Rewarded for his faithful and Prudent Miniſtry. St. Bernard deſires his Letter may be Read to the Pope, to Aſſiſt him in his Proceedings againſt this looſe Legate.

In the Two Hundred Ninety Firſt, he prays the Pope to have compaſſion on the Monaſtery of St. Eugende on Mont-Jura which was almoſt ruin'd.

In the Two Hundred Ninety Second, he reproves a Man of the World for having endeavour'd to diſſwade one of his Relations from turning Monk.

In the Two Hundred Ninety Third, he writes to Peter Abbot of Celles concerning a Monk of the Abby of Cheſy whom he had receiv'd into his Monaſtery.

In the Two Hundred Ninety Fourth, he recommends to the Pope, William de Paſſavant Biſhop of Mans, Accus'd by one of his Clergy.

In the Two following Letters he recommends alſo the ſame Perſon to the Cardinals Henry, and Hugh Biſhop of Oſtia.

In the Two Hundred Ninety Seventh, he ſends back a Monk of the Abby of Montier-Ramey who had quitted his Monaſtery, and now was deſirous to return to it.

In the Two Hundred Ninety Eighth he writes to the Pope, that Nicholas who came from the Abby of Montier-Ramey to his of Clairvaux, and who alſo had been his Secretary, was run from him, and had taken away ſeveral Books, a great Sum of Money and divers Seals of Value. That he had for ſome time been Jealous of him, but that he all along hop'd that God would convert him or that he would betray himſelf as he now had done. That he does not queſtion but he has written to ſeveral People in his Name. At length he deſires his Holyneſs not to receive him.

In the Two Hundred Ninety Ninth, he writes to the Count of Angouleſme in behalf of the Monks of the Monaſtery of St. Amand de Boiſſe.

In the Three Hundredth he comforts Matilda Counteſs of Blois concerning the extravagant Courſes of her Son, and that he hop'd Age would work an Alteration upon him, but however he Adviſes her to treat him with Mildneſs.

In the Three Hundred and Firſt, he prays Sancha, Siſter to the King of Spain, to Accommodate a difference that had hapned between the Monks of the Order which ſhe had newly Eſtabliſh'd in Leon, and the Other Monks of the Country.

The Three Hundred and Second is written in favour of the Arch-Biſhop of Mentz, to the Legates of the Holy See ſent into Germany to determine the matter. This Arch-Biſhop was Henry and the Legates were the Cardinals Bernard and Gregory who ſuſpended this Arch-Biſhop, notwithſtanding the recommendation of St. Bernard, having as was ſuppos'd been corrupted by Money.

In the Three Hundred and Third, he writes to King Lewis the Younger that he ought not to let a Lord of Britany, being Excommunicated for Adultery, have the Eſtate that belongs to his Wife.

In the Three Hundred and Fourth he thanks this King for his kind Enquiry after his health, and Moreover recommends to him Robert Couſin to this Prince.

In the Three Hundred and Fifth, he ſends Pope Eugenius word that he has hindred Henry Biſhop of Beauvais from going to Rome; as likewiſe recommends to him the Affair of this Biſhop, deſiring him to delegate the Arch-Biſhop of Rheims for its Determination.

In the Three Hundred and Sixth, he acquaints the Cardinal of Oſtia that he has not been able to encline the Monks of the Three Fountains; to Elect Nicholas for their Abbot whom this Cardinal deſir'd might might succeed in this Abby, yet notwithstanding the Monks had chosen Turolde; that he knew nothing in that Person which could deserve that Dignity, and that if he had a mind to out him of it, for his part he would not oppose it.

In the Three Hundred and Seventh, he excuses the Conduct of the Bishop of Beauvais to this Cardinal, altho' he says he does not deserve it. He promises him to recall as soon as possible Robert his Monk who was with that Bishop; and moreover sends him word, that Heraclius, Arch-Bishop of Lyons, was on his Journey to Rome, but that falling Sick at Montpelier, he had spent all the Money he had laid apart for his Voyage. He gives him likewise to understand, that he had been almost at Death's-Door, but was now somewhat recover'd.

The Three Hundred and Eighth is address'd to Alphonso King of Portugal. He writes him word, that he will do all in his Power to comply with his Commands; gives him some Account of his Brother Peter, and likewise acquaints him, that one of his Monks nam'd Roland, brings him a Letter from the Pope, whereby his Holyness grants him many Favours. He lastly recommends this Monk to him, as also all of his Order within his Majesty's Dominions.

The Three Hundred and Ninth was written before the foregoing, in the Life time of Sugerus, Abbot of St. Denys, whom he thereby recommends to the Pope.

The Three Hundred and Tenth, Address'd to Arnaud, Abbot of Bonneval, is the last which he writ before his Death. He therein gives his Friend to understand the sad Condition he is in, and desires his Prayers.

These Three Hundred and Ten Letters, compose the Ancient Collection of those of St. Bernard, compil'd by his Disciples, and left in the Monastery of Clairvaux. There have since been found several others which are those which follow, continuing the Number.

The Three Hundred and Eleventh is Address'd to Haimeric, Chancellor of the Holy See, and written in the Name of Hugh Abbot of Pontigni, and of St. Bernard. It contains Complaints against those who envy other Men's good Actions, and excessive Commendations of Haimeric's Conduct in his Ministry.

The Three Hundred and Twelfth is a Letter of Compliment to Rainaud Arch-Bishop of Rheims.

In the Three Hundred and Thirteenth, written to Geofrey Bishop of York; he says that those Monks that have a mind to quit a——Life for amore Austere, ought not to be hinder'd, but after having embrac'd it, they are not to be releas'd, for fear of becoming Apostates.

The Three Hundred and Fourteenth is written to Pope Innocent II. about the time that St. Bernard negotiated the Affair of the People of Lombardy with his Holyness. He sends him word, that he can neither prevail upon those of Cremona, nor those of Milan.

In the Three Hundred and Fifteenth, he begs of Maud Queen of England, to grant him what he had formerly requested of her in favour of the Abbot of La Chapelle.

In the Three Hundred and Sixteenth, he desires also Henry Arch-Bishop of Sens, and Haimeric Chancellor of the Church of Rome, not to oppose the Restitution of some Ecclesiastical Goods, which a certain Lord has a mind to make to the Monks. "When Laicks (says he) who are in possession of Churches or Church-Revenues have a mind to quit them, it is commendable; and when they are disposed to give "them to the Ministers of God, it is doubly so. But this being to be done only by the hands of the Bishop, he cannot refuse it without being guilty of two Faults, nor consent to it, without being cause "of two good things. This Lord requests a thing of you which you ought to have asked of "him; for which do you think does it better become to be in Possession of Church Revenues, a Soldier "or a Saint? No body that has heard of this Action, but has been surprized. Make then no "more difficulties to receive from Laicks what belongs to the Church and the Ministers of God's "Word.

In the Three Hundred and Seventeenth, written from St. Bernard to Geofrey Prior of the Monastery of Clairvaux; he gives him to understand that the Church of Rome is at present in Peace; that the party of Peter of Leon have done Fealty and Homage to Pope Innocent; that in like manner, all the Clergy that had sided with that Cardinal were come over to the Pope: And in fine, that God having thus fulfill'd his Wishes, he shall be speedily on his Return. This Letter was written in the Year 1138.

In the Three Hundred and Eighteenth, he acquaints Pope Innocent II. with the Danger the Church of Rheims was in, by reason of the great Contests about the Election of an Arch-Bishop.

In the Three Hundred and Nineteenth, he exhorts Turstin Arch-Bishop of York, not to lay down his Arch-Bishoprick, or in case that he be obliged to do it for some secret Reason, or in Obedience to the Popes Commands, he advises him to enter into the strictest Cloyster.

In the Three Hundred and Twentieth, he admonishes Alexander, Prior of the Monastery of Fountain in England, to take care that the Election of a new Abbot be made without Heats and Dispute.

In the Three Hundred and Twenty First, he enjoyns Henry de Murdach to accept of the Abby of Fountain, in case he be Elected.

The Three Hundred and Twenty Second contains wholsom Instructions to a young Monk, which he gives to Hugh, then but a Probationer, and afterwards Abbot of Bonneval.

The Three Hundred and Twenty Third is written in favour of the Arch-Bishop of Treves, against the Abbot of St. Maximin.

The Three Hundred and Twenty Fourth is a Compliment to Robert Abbot of Dunes, who was afterwards successor to St. Bernard, in the Abby of Clairvaux.

In the Three Hundred and Twenty Fifth, he writes to the same Abbot, that he is not to admit a Probationer, if he have not well acquitted himself during his Probation-ship.

The

The Three Hundred Twenty Sixth is a Letter from William Abbot of St. Thierry, to Geofrey Biſhop of Chartres, and to St. Bernard, againſt the Error of Abaelard, which he has there reckon'd up. We ſhall ſpeak more of this when we treat of the Doctrine of Abaelard.

The Three Hundred and Twenty Seventh is an Anſwer of St. Bernard's to this Letter, wherein he acquaints him that he intends ſpeedily to have a Conference with him upon that Subject.

The Three Hundred Twenty Eighth is written to Pope Innocent II. againſt him that had been choſen Biſhop of Rhodes.

The Three Hundred Twenty Ninth is written to the Biſhop of Limoges againſt the ſame.

The Nine Letters following were written in the Year 1140. againſt Peter Abaelard. The Three Hundred and Thirtieth, and the Three Hundred Thirty Seventh to Pope Innocent, and the reſt to the Cardinals. The Three Hundred Thirty Seventh is written in the Name of the Biſhops of France, and contains a Relation of what had paſſed againſt Abaelard in the Council of Sens.

In the Three Hundred Thirty Ninth, he recommends to Pope Innocent, Aloiſius Biſhop of Arras, and ſays that thoſe who have accus'd him are only Calumniators.

In the Letter following he recommends to the ſame Pope Ulger, Biſhop of Angers.

The Three Hundred Forty Firſt is written to Malachy, Arch-Biſhop of Armagh in Ireland, who had ſent two young Monks to him, to learn the manner of living in Clairvaux, with deſign to found a Monaſtery of the ſame Inſtitution. St. Bernard promiſes to ſend them back well inſtructed in a ſhort time.

In the Three Hundred Forty Second, he writes to Joſſelin Biſhop of Soiſſons, to appeaſe the King who had been incens'd without cauſe againſt Geofrey de Loroux, Arch-Biſhop of Bourdeaux, who had incurred the Diſpleaſure of this Prince, by ordaining Grimoard, who had been canonically elected Biſhop of Poitiers, in the Year 1140.

The two following Letters were written by Bernard, Abbot of St. Anaſtaſius, and afterwards Pope Eugenius III. The firſt to Pope Innocent II. and the ſecond to St. Bernard. In both he expreſſes a great deal of Concern, for having been forced from the Monaſtery of Clairvaux, and ſent into Italy.

The Three Hundred Forty Fifth is a Letter of St. Bernard's to the Monks of St. Anaſtaſius, to whom he recommends living always in ſtrict obſervance of their Order, and in Charity one towards another. He moreover tells them, that though any of the Monks be ſick, they muſt make uſe only of ſome common ſorts of Herbs, it being repugnant to the Spirit of Religion to buy Drugs, to ſend for Phyſicians, or to take Phyſick.

In the Three Hundred Forty Sixth, he exhorts Pope Innocent II. not to favour the unjuſt cauſe of William Arch-Biſhop of York.

In the Three Hundred Forty Seventh, he recommends to him the Deputies which went to Rome to complain of this Arch-Biſhop.

In the Three Hundred Forty Eighth he recommends to the ſame Pope Arnone, Elected Biſhop of Liſieux, who had a Diſpute in the Court of Rome, about his Election, with Geofrey Count of Angers.

The three following, are alſo Letters of Recommendation to the ſame Pope.

The Three Hundred Fifty Second contains a Privilege granted by Pope Innocent to St. Bernard and his Succeſſors, in conſideration of the great Services he had done the Church of Rome, during the Schiſm caus'd by Peter of Leon, by which this Pope takes under the Protection of the Holy See, all Revenues preſent, and to come, belonging to the Abby of Clairvaux; as likewiſe, grants to the Monks of Ciſteaux, leave to choſe an Abbot out of their Order, and to the Abbeys which have others under them; he grants permiſſion to choſe any of thoſe Abbots for their Head, or any of the Monks belonging to ſuch Orders. He forbids the Biſhops to conſtrain the Abbots of Clairvaux, and the other Abbots of the Order of Ciſteaux, to come to any Council, providing it be not about matters of Faith. He prohibits all Perſons to receive any Fryars of their Order, after they are profeſs'd; and laſtly, declares the Monks of this Order exempt from paying Tithes of Fruits or Cattle.

In the Three Hundred Fifty Third, he Comforts William Abbot of Rivau, in the Dioceſs of York, in that the Arch-Biſhop of that See has been Countenanc'd at Rome, Aſſuring him withal, that the Sacraments Adminiſtred, and Ordinations made by bad Miniſters are Valid, ſince it is God that Baptizes and Conſecrates.

In the Three Hundred Fifty Fourth, he Comforts Meliſenda, Queen of Jeruſalem, for the Death of Fulk her Husband, and exhorts her to govern her Kingdom with Prudence and Juſtice.

In the Three Hundred Fifty Fifth, he Recommends to this Queen the Monks of Premontre, who were on their Journey to the Holy Land.

By the Three Hundred Fifty Sixth, he ſends back to Malachy, Arch-Biſhop of Armagh, the Monks which he had ſent him. He likewiſe Recommends them to him in the Letter following.

In the Three Hundred Fifty Eighth, he writes to Pope Celeſtine II. to Pardon Thibaud, Count of Champagne.

The Three Hundred Fifty Ninth, is written to the ſame Pope, in the Name of the Monks of Clairvaux, who beg of his Holineſs not to permit Rainaud Abbot of Morimond, to quit his Monaſtery to go to Jeruſalem.

In the Three Hundred and Sixtieth, he again exhorts William Abbot of Rivau, to bear patiently with the Arch-Biſhop of York.

In the Three Hundred Sixty Firſt, he recommends to Thibaud Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, John Biſhop of Salisbury.

In the Three Hundred Sixty Second, he recommends to Robert Pallus, Cardinal and Chancellor of the Church of Rome, to behave himſelf becoming his Dignity, to Eugenius III. newly Elected Pope.

In

In the Three Hundred Sixty Third, he exhorts the Christians of France and Bavaria to take up Arms for relief of the Holy Land; and moreover admonishes them neither to put the Jews to Death, nor so much as to persecute them.

In the Three Hundred Sixty Fourth, he invites Peter Abbot of Cluny to an Assembly to be held after Easter at Chartres, there to deliberate on the manner of relieving the Christians of the Holy Land.

In the Three Hundred Sixty Fifth, Addressed to Henry Arch-Bishop of Mayence, he writes against a Monk named Radulph, who by his Preaching, authoriz'd killing of the Jews.

The Three Hundred Sixty Sixth is Address'd to Hildegarda Abbess of Mont-Saint-Robert near Binghen, in the Diocess of Mayence. After having rejected the Praises given to him, he congratulates her upon the extraordinary Gifts she has received from God, and exhorts her to make a suitable return thereto by Humility and Devotion.

The Three Hundred Sixty Seventh is a Letter of Recommendation to Guy Chancellor of the Church of Rome, in favour of Stephen Bishop of Metz.

The Three Hundred Sixty Eighth is a Letter of Compliment to a Cardinal, which contains wholesome Advice to wean him from the Cares of the World.

In the Three Hundred Sixty Ninth and Three Hundred and Seventieth, he congratulates Sugerus Abbot of St. Denys, in having reform'd the Church of St. Genevieve, by introducing regular Canons into it. He exhorts him to do the same thing in the Church of St. Victor.

In the following Letter Address'd to the same, he dissuades him from making the Match between the Count of Angers and the King's Daughter, by reason of their near Kindred.

In the Three Hundred Seventy Second, he commends Peter Bishop of Palenzade, for his Humility and Application to the reading of good Books.

The Three Hundred Seventy Third is a Letter of the Abbot of Epine, in the Diocess of Palenza, Address'd to St. Bernard, by which this Abbot testifies the great Concern he has for having been drawn out of the Abby of Clairvaux, and charg'd with the Government of a Monastery, which he earnestly entreats St. Bernard to get him discharged from.

In the Three Hundred Seventy Fourth, he comforts the Monks of his Order in Ireland, for the death of their Abbot St. Malachy.

In the Three Hundred Seventy Fifth, he complains to Ida Countess of Nivernois, that her Servants molest and detain those who go to the Abby of Vezelay.

In the Three Hundred Seventy Sixth, he exhorts Sugerus Abbot of St. Denys, to hinder the Duels which certain French Lords were engaged in against each other.

In the Three Hundred Seventy Seventh, he commends this Abbot in that he design'd to Assemble the Clergy for the publick Good.

The four Letters following are likewise Address'd to Sugerus, whereof the two first are Letters of Recommendation. The Third is concerning the Estate the Church of the East was then in; and in the last, says that he is sorry that this Abbot is accus'd of the disturbances in the Kingdom, and wills him therefore to do his utmost to prevent 'em, and not to suffer any in his Abby, which are any ways the cause of them.

In the Three Hundred Eighty Second, written to Leonius Abbot of St. Berthin; he expresses his Gratitude for the Favours he has received from him, and moreover acquaints him, that Thomas of St. Omer who had left his Order to come to his of Clairvaux, could not possibly return.

In the Three Hundred Eighty Third, Address'd to the same, he thanks him for the many proofs of Friendship which he has received from him. He passes the same Compliment on the Monks of St. Berthin in the following Letter; and in the Three Hundred Eighty Fifth, he commends them for having reform'd themselves, and exhorts them to endeavour to perfect themselves every day more and more.

The Three Hundred Eighty Sixth, is written to St. Bernard, by John Abbot of the House of St. Mary, in the Country of Verulo, to comfort him about the unsuccessful Expedition to the Holy-Land, whereof St. Bernard had been the Promoter. He imputes the Fault thereof to the wickedness of those that had the management of it.

The Three Hundred Eighty Seventh, is written to Peter Abbot of Clumy, to whom St. Bernard excuses himself about a sharp Letter written in his Name, affirming that the Blame ought not to be cast on him, but on the Authors of it; to which Peter Abbot of Clumy, Answers by the following Letter, expressing a great deal of Value and Esteem for St. Bernard, professing himself well satisfy'd with his Excuse; and moreover mentioning a Legacy deposited in the Treasury of Cluny, which was left to the Monasteries of Clairvaux and Cisteaux, which he says he will not contend with him about, nor concerning the Election of a Bishop of Grenoble, which the Carthusians oppos'd.

St. Bernard gives a short Answer to this Letter, by the Three Hundred Eighty Ninth.

The Three Hundred and Ninetieth, written to Eskile, Bishop of London in Denmark, and Legate of the Holy See in Sweedland, contains only matter of Compliment, in which St. Bernard Assures him of his Affection, and thanks him for that which he had profess'd for him.

The Three Hundred Ninety First is Address'd to the Abbess of Tavernay, in the Diocess of Bezançon, whom he Admonishes to endeavour to re-establish the Religious Houses, and to reform the Monastick Discipline.

The Three Hundred Ninety Second, contains Instructions concerning Humility given to Radulph Patriarch of Antioch.

The following Letter contains the like, being Address'd to William Patriarch of Jerusalem.

In the Three Hundred Ninety Fourth, he blames the Arch-Biſhop of Lyons, for having depos'd the Abbot of Aiſnay, and admoniſhes him to revoke his Decree,

In the Three Hundred Ninety Fifth Addreſs'd to Alviſus Biſhop of Arras, he acquaints him that Thomas a Monk of St. Berthin being enter'd into the Monaſtery of Clairvaux, cannot reaſonably be expected to return to Berthin.

In the Three Hundred Ninety Sixth written to Ricuin Biſhop of Toul, he excuſes himſelf for having receiv'd into his Monaſtery a Clerk of his Church without knowing of him.

In the Three Hundred Ninety Seventh written to Odon Abbot of Marmoutier, in the Name of Hugh Abbot of Pontigni and of St. Bernard, they give him to underſtand that his Monks ought not to take it ill that they have loſt ſome Churches which they pretended to by the Arbitration and final Determination of Geofrey Biſhop of Chartres, and Thibaud Count of Champagne, therefore perſwades them to acquieſce in that Judgment. They further Obſerve in this Letter, that Churches and Church-Revenues belong naturally to the Clerks who are Oblig'd to ſerve at the Altar, and conſequently ought to live by it. When the Profeſſion of Monks and the Examples of their Predeceſſors learn them that they are to get their living with the ſweat of their Brows, and not to ſubſiſt on the Profits of the Church. Nay even tho' the Church ſhould be neglected by the Clerks they are not to partake of the Revenues tho' they do of the Trouble. For (ſays he) with what Face can you, O Monks, pretend to the Wine of the Vines which you have not planted, and to the Milk of the flock which you have not govern'd? How comes it that you would exact ſome thing from them for whom you never did any Service? And if you will needs lay claim to it, why don't you Baptize their Children, Bury their Dead, Viſit their Sick, Give Benedictions in Marriage, Inſtruct their Ignorant, Reprimand Sinners, Excommunicate ſuch as deſpiſe Inſtruction, and give Abſolution to Penitents? In a word why don't ye Open your Mouths and Preach, you whoſe duty it is to live in Repoſe and ſilence? But it is a moſt Odious thing to reap where you did not Sow, and live upon the gains of another. Laſtly St. Bernard ſays that altho' they had the right they pretended, yet ought they not to Diſſent from their Abbot who had already Agreed to the Judgment of the Arbitrators.

In the Three Hundred Ninety Eighth he writes to Guy Abbot of Montier-Ramey, and to the Monks of his Monaſtery who had deſir'd St. Bernard to compoſe Leſſons and Hymns for them to read on the Feaſt of St. Victor, whoſe body they pretended was bury'd in their Church, to which he Anſwer'd that he durſt not undertake a work ſo much above his Capacity, and which requir'd a Perſon of greater Authority, of a Life more Holy, and who was maſter of a better Stile. He Adds moreover that in the Celebration of ſo ſolemn a Feaſt, New Prayers of ſmall Authority ought not to be made uſe of, but rather Authentick and Ancient Compoſitions which may be proper to edify the Church, and which Savour of Eccleſiaſtical Gravity. That if there be a Neceſſity for ſomething new and the ſubject ſo requires it, ſuch Pieces ought only to be us'd as command reſpect from the Grandeur of their Style and the Pious Life of their Author. As for the reſt (ſays he) the Expreſſions therein contain'd ought to be of Unqueſtion'd Veracity; They ought to inſpire Juſtice, Teach Humility, Inculcate Equity, Enlighten the mind, Model the Manners, Extirpate Vice, Inſtill Devotion and reſtrain the Liberties of the Senſes. The Singing ought to be Grave, without intermixing any thing either Effeminate or Ruſtick. It ought to be Agreeable without being too delicate, and ſhould Affect the Heart by ſurprizing the Ear. And in a word it ſhould comfort ſadneſs, and Appeaſe Diſcontent, but not drown the Sound of the Words but rather encreaſe it; for it is no ſmall disadvantage to a ſpiritual Life when the Charms of Singing divert the Attention from Thoughts, and fix them rather upon Modulating the Voice, than comprehending the ſence of the Words. Theſe are the Sentiments of St. Bernard concerning Prayers and Celebrating the Divine Office, and altho' he had all the Qualifications which he requir'd in an Author of this kind, yet would he not undertake what was requeſted of him, and contents himſelf with ſending only two Sermons on the Life of St. Victor to the Monks of Montier-Ramey.

The Three Hundred Ninety Ninth is a Letter of Recommendation which he gave to a Monk of the Monaſtery of St. Michel, who was about to go in Pilgrimage to Jeruſalem. He endeavours to diſſwade him from this Deſign by reaſon that he thought a Monk, however Criminal he were, could not do Pennance better than within the Walls of his Monaſtery. He deſires Lelbert Abbot of this Monaſtery to receive him.

The Four Hundredth is another Letter of Recommendation granted to Robert a Monk of Lieſſies that his Abbot might uſe him more kindly.

The Two Letters following contain nothing remarkable.

In the Four Hundred and Third Addreſs'd to Henry Arch-Deacon of Orleans, he Anſwers to a Queſtion propos'd to him, to wit, If a Child who was in Danger of Death had been baptiz'd by a Laick under this form. I Baptize you in the Name of God and of the Holy and true Croſs, whether the Baptiſm had been Valid; or whether providing the Child had liv'd it muſt have been Baptiz'd again. St. Bernard is of the mind that it had been well Baptiz'd, becauſe he cannot think that the difference in words can prejudice the Truth of the Faith, and the good Intention of him that Baptiz'd it. His reaſon is becauſe under the word God the Trinity is comprehended, and by Adding the Holy and True Croſs he had made mention of our Saviour, That when one is baptiz'd according to the Cuſtom of the Church in the Name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, and as we may read in the Acts of the Apoſtles that ſome were baptiz'd in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt only, it cannot be doubted but that thoſe who have been baptiz'd in the Name of the Holy Croſs, have been ſufficiently ſanctify'd, inſomuch that the Confeſſion of the Croſs implys the Confeſſion of Jeſus Chriſt Crucify'd. Moreover that in reſpect of him who had baptiz'd, his ſimplicity and good Intention excus'd him, but nevertheleſs that if any ſhould endeavour to Introduce this manner of Baptiſm they would be Inexcuſable. This Opinion of St. Bernard diſagrees with that of the Divines, who maintain that Baptiſm of this kind is ipſo facto Null and Void.

The

The Four Hundred and Fourth is Addreſs'd to Albert a Recluſe Monk, who deſir'd of St. Bernard that he might faſt after his own faſhion, and Permit Women to enter into his Cell. St. Bernard Anſwers that he has no power to Command him, but that he has ſeveral times Advis'd him to Eat at leaſt once a day to receive no viſits from Women and to live by hard Labour.

In the Four Hundred and Fifth he takes Notice to an Abbot that one of his Monks was qualify'd to be Profeſs'd, and therefore he ought not to diſpenſe with him.

The Four Hundred and Sixth is Addreſs'd to the Abbot of St. Nicholas in the Woods, to whom he recommends a certain Monk.

In the Four Hundred and Seventh he blames Odon Abbot of Beaulieu, for not having paid a Legacy to a Poor Man, and tells him he had better have Sold a Chalice from the Altar, than have ſuffer'd this Perſon to want.

In the Four Hundred and Eighth he recommends to William Abbot of the Regular Canons of St. Martin of Troyes a Clerk who had a mind to retire from the World, and who was not able to undergo the way of Living at Clairvaux.

In the Four Hundred and Ninth Addreſs'd to Rorgon Abbot of Abbeville, he makes him a compliment upon his deſiring to ſee him, and deſires him to beſtow a ſpare piece of Ground belonging to his Abby, to the Monks of Alchy.

In the Four Hundred and Tenth he recommends to Gilduin Abbot of St. Victor of Paris, Peter Lombard who was come from Bulloign in France, and had been recommended to St. Bernard by the Biſhop of Lucca.

The Four Hundred and Eleventh is written to Thomas Provoſt of Beverlake in England, and contains Exhortations to a Holy Life.

The Letter following is written upon the ſame ſubject to a young Man who had enter'd into a Vow to embrace a Monaſtick Life.

In the Four Hundred and Thirteenth he recommends a Probationary Monk to Rainaud Abbot of Foigny Adviſing him to ſend him back after he had corrected his Faults.

In the Letter following he blames a Monk of this Monaſtery for having Oppos'd the return of this Perſon.

By the Four Hundred and Fifteenth he exhorts a Man to perform the Vow he had made to become a Monk of Clairvaux.

In the Four Hundred and Sixteenth he Anſwers a certain Perſon who had complain'd to him that he had had no ſhare of the Alms given by Count Thibaud, that he was not concern'd in the Diſtribution of them.

The Two following Letters contain nothing remarkable.

Theſe are all the Letters which are moſt commonly Aſcrib'd to St. Bernard tho' Father Mabillon has Added ſome others which are doubtful, and might very probably have been written by other Perſons. He alſo adds ſome Charters which may reaſonably admit of the ſame doubt, all which nevertheleſs continue the foregoing Numbers.

The Four Hundred and Nineteenth is An Exhortation to Probationers the which Father Mabillon believes does not belong to St. Bernard, by reaſon that the Stile is more reſtrain'd, and contains Maxims unlike thoſe of St. Bernard, ſuch as this, That we muſt Praiſe God even for our Damnation. It likewiſe appears to me that this Letter differs in ſtile from thoſe of St. Bernard.

The Two following Letters are alſo Unlike the ſtile of St. Bernard.

The Four Hundred and Twenty Second is only a ſhort Billet Addreſs'd to King Lewis.

The Four Hundred and Twenty Third is a draught of a Letter concerning the Croiſade which might probably be his as well as the Letter following. He therein recommends the Son of Count Thibaud going to the Holy War to Emanuel Commenes Emperour of Conſtantinople.

The Four Hundred and Twenty Fifth is a Copy of the Twenty Sixth Letter of St. Bernard.

The Four Hundred and Twenty Sixth is a Judgment by Arbitration pronounc'd by St. Bernard between Hugh, Biſhop of Auxerre, and William Count of that City.

The Four Hundred and Twenty Seventh is a Letter from Geofrey Biſhop of Chartres, to Stephen Biſhop of Paris, by which he adviſes him to Refer himſelf to St. Bernard touching the diſpute he had with Stephen de Guarlande.

The Four Hundred and Twenty Eighth from Bernard Abbot of St. Anaſtaſius, to St. Bernard Abbot of Clairvaux, concerning a diſobedient and haughty Monk.

The Four Hundred and Twenty Ninth is an Elogium of St. Bernard ſent to him by Hugh Metellus a Regular Canon of St. Leon.

The Four Hundred and Thirtieth is a Letter from the ſame written to St. Bernard which contains an Apology for his Monaſtery.

The Four Hundred and Thirty Firſt is alſo from the ſame written in the Name of Siebaud Abbot of St. Leon to Abbot William, to excuſe him for having Anſwer'd the Calumnies of Herbert with too great ſeverity.

The Two following Letters are written by Haimon Arch-Deacon of Chalons, to St. Bernard; In the Firſt he acquaints him with his ſickneſs, and in the other he ſends to him for his Sermons.

The Four Hundred and Thirty Fourth is a Letter Addreſs'd to St. Bernard to excuſe Thierri Biſhop of Amiens from his Voyage to the Holy Land.

The Four Hundred and Thirty Fifth is a Charter by which Sampſon Arch-Biſhop of Rheims gives to the the Congregation of Clairvaux the Church of Mores, which he had Obtain'd from the Monks of St. Denys there to Build a Monaſtery of his Order.

By the Four Hundred and Thirty Sixth Henry Biſhop of Troyes makes the like Gifts of the Church of Billencourt to the Abby of Clairvaux.

The Four Hundred and Thirty Seventh is a Letter of Hugh Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia, to the general Chapter of Ciſteaux, concerning the death of Pope Eugenius III.

The Four Hundred and Thirty Eighth, is a Letter of Bartholomew, a Monk of Foigny, who had been Biſhop of Laon, Addreſs'd to Sampſon Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, by which he juſtifies himſelf againſt his being accus'd, that he had embezelled the Goods of the Church of Laon, while he was Biſhop there.

The Four Hundred and Thirty Ninth, is a Letter from Turſtin Arch-Biſhop of York, to William Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, containing a Relation of what had happened to him when he had endeavoured to introduce the Cuſtoms of Ciſteaux into the Monaſtery of St. Mary at York.

The Four Hundred and Fortieth, is a Letter of Eaſtrede the Fourth Abbot of Clairvaux, to an Abbot of his Order, whom he blames for going too richly dreſs'd, and living too delicately. He therein renews the Maxim of St. Bernard, That a Monk ought not to make uſe of any external Remedies.

The Four Hundred and Forty Firſt, is written by Peter de Roye, a Probationer of Clairvaux, to the Provoſt of the Church of Noyon, in which he ſhews the difference between the Life led in Clairvaux, and that which is led at large in the World.

The Four Hundred and Forty Second, is a Letter of a General Chapter of the Province of Rheims, who were call'd the Black Monks, to Pope Adrian IV. whereby they beg that Godfrey Abbot of Lagny may be ſuſpended.

The Letter following is from the ſame, Addreſs'd to Pope Alexander III. upon the ſame Subject.

Laſtly, the Four Hundred and Forty Fourth, is a Letter from an unknown Hand, Addreſs'd to the Abbot of Reatino, which contains nothing remarkable.

St. Bernard's Treatiſe of Conſideration.

The Second Tome of St. Bernard's Works, comprehends divers Treatiſes, whereof the firſt is Entituled, Of Conſideration, divided into V. Books, and Addreſs'd to Pope Eugenius III. to ſerve him for Inſtruction. The Conſideration he treats of in this Work, is as himſelf deſires it, the Thoughts which he employs in ſearch after Truth, and more particularly relating to the Duties of his Profeſſion. In the firſt Book, he ſhews that the Condition of a Sovereign Pontiff would be but very unhappy, had he no regard to himſelf, for it would be a very indiſcreet thing of him to ſpend all his time in hearing and deciding other Mens Differences, and all the while neglect to employ himſelf ſometimes in Contemplation. He exclaims againſt the great number of Cauſes that are brought into the Eccleſiaſtical Courts, as likewiſe againſt the many Abuſes committed there. He ſhews that this is more conſiſtent with the Secular Power than the Eccleſiaſtical. He ſays he would not have Eugenius follow the Examples of his Predeceſſors, who applyed themſelves more to Buſineſs than Contemplation, but that he ſhould imitate St. Gregory, who when Rome was threatned to be beſieg'd by the Barbarians, labour'd on an Expoſition of the moſt difficult paſſage of the Prophet Ezekiel. He there proves that Conſideration ſerves to form and employ the four Cardinal Virtues. Laſtly, he takes Notice of the unbecoming Bickerings at the Eccleſiaſtical Bar, and exhorts Pope Eugenius to endeavour after a Regulation.

In the ſecond Book, after having juſtify'd himſelf for adviſing the expedition of the Croiſade, which had been unſucceſsful; he admoniſhes Pope Eugenius to conſider as to his Perſon, who he is, and as to the Dignity of his Profeſſion, what he is. Firſt he is to reflect whence he is deſcended, which may ſerve to abate his Pride. He gives him to underſtand, that he is not ſet over others, to domineer over them, but to be their Miniſter and watch over them; that if this Dignity has procur'd him great Riches, he is not to think they belong to him by the right of Apoſtleſhip, ſince St. Peter had no power to diſpoſe of what he never enjoyed: That he indeed had given him the charge of all Churches, but not an arbitrary Dominion over them, which he expreſly forbids, and the Goſpel diſallows. That the ſame Perſon cannot well execute the Civil Government and the Papacy, and therefore he who graſps at both, ought juſtly to loſe both. In a word, he adviſes him particularly to avoid being haughty on account of his Supremacy, "for (ſays he) you are not ſupreamly perfect by being ſupream Biſhop, and "take notice, that if you think your ſelf ſo, you are the worſt of Men. But let us conſider you, as "you ſtand in the Church of God, and what Figure you make. You are the Chief Prieſt, the Sove-"reign Pontiff, the firſt among the Biſhops, the Heir of the Apoſtles, Abel in Priority, Noah in Go-"vernment, &c. 'Tis to you that the Keys of Heaven have been entruſted, and to whom the Care of "the Flock has been committed; but there are other Door-keepers of Heaven, and other Paſtors be-"ſides you; yet you are ſo much the more above them, as you have receiv'd the Title after a different "manner. They have every one a particular Flock, but you are ſuperintendent over them all; you "are not only Supream Paſtor over all the Flocks, but likewiſe over all the Shepherds. He eſtabliſhes this Privilege upon the Words of our Saviour in the Goſpel, and he adds ſome Lines afterwards.—— "Others are but call'd to a part of the Care, when the full Power is confided to you. Their Power "is limited, when yours extends even over thoſe who have a power over others; for it is your Buſi-"neſs to excommunicate a Biſhop, and ſuſpend him, if you ſee occaſion. This is what you are at pre-"ſent by your Office to remember alſo what you were, and who you are Perſonally, for you are ſtill "what you were once, and the Dignity which has been ſuperadded to you, has not been able to diveſt "you of your Nature. You were born a Man; you have been made a Sovereign Biſhop, yet you "are ſtill a Man, ſo that you ought to conſider your ſelf as a Man; draw the Veil which covers you, "diſperſe the Clouds that environ you, and you will find your ſelf to be no better than a Poor, Naked, "Wretched Creature, that is diſſatisfy'd with his Nature; that is aſham'd of being Naked; that "grieves for being Born; that murmurs at being deſtin'd to Labour, and not to Eaſe; and in a word, that "is born in Sin, with a ſhort Life abounding in Miſeries, and full of Fears and Complaints. From theſe two Conſiderations he paſſes to a Third, which is to conſider his Manners and Conduct, wherein he Counſels Eugenius to make a ſerious Reflection upon thoſe things. He admoniſhes him in the Concluſion of this Book to be conſtant in Adverſity, and humble in Proſperity; to fly ſloth and unprofitable Diſcourſe, and to practiſe no manner of Partiality in his Judgments.

Con-

In the Third Book he Treats of the Conſideration that the Pope ought to have towards thoſe that are under him, and they are the Faithful over all the World. He admoniſhes him again not to affect an arbitrary Power over them which he repeats (ſays he) becauſe there is no Poiſon nor Arms that he ought to dread more than the Spirit of Tyranny. He afterwards proceeds to treat of the Duty of a Pope towards his Inferiours, and firſt in reſpect to thoſe who are out of the Church, as well Jews and Infidels, as Chriſtians and Schiſmaticks. He ſays it is a Pope's Duty to bring over thoſe that are in an Error, to keep thoſe from ſtraying that are already brought over; and laſtly, to reconcile and fix Wanderers. For this purpoſe he muſt pitch upon unbyaſſed Preachers, and who ſhall be apt to be mov'd neither by Ambition nor Avarice: Such as theſe now adays ſwarm in the Court of Rome, and that is the reaſon that there is ſo little good done, and that Religion ſeems as it were at a ſtand. He ſpeaks afterwards againſt the grievance of appealing to the Court of Rome: 'We muſt (ſays he) make 'a ſevere Reflection upon theſe Appeals, for fear a Remedy prove fruitleſs when it is eſtabliſhed, 'for it ſeems to me, that a great deal of Miſchief may be occaſioned by theſe means, if moderation be 'not made uſe of. Every Body appeals to your Holyneſs; 'tis a badge of your Primacy, yet if you 'are wiſe, you will rather endeavour to procure the welfare of the Church, than inſiſt upon the gran-'dure of your See. Men appeal to the Pope, and would to God it was to a good end. Would to God 'that thoſe who oppreſs others, would feel the effect of protection granted to ſuch as are oppreſſed. 'But on the contrary, nothing is more common, than for the Oppreſſors to have cauſe to rejoyce, and 'for the Oppreſſed to have reaſon to mourn. The Court of Rome ſeldom conſiders, either the Fatigue 'or Expence of a Journey in a juſt cauſe, and rarely are incens'd againſt him or them that were the 'cauſe of it. Rouze thee then, O Man of God, when theſe things happen: Be touch'd with Com-'paſſion for the Sufferer, and mov'd with Indignation againſt the Oppreſſor: Let the firſt be comforted 'by a Redreſs of his Grievance, by a full ſatisfaction for the Injury done him, and let the laſt repent 'of what he has done, and let him have no power to do the like again. The ſame puniſhment is to 'be inflicted upon thoſe that appeal without cauſe, for no ſmall Injury accrews that way; Men may 'be permitted to appeal where they are injured, but to appeal with deſign to injure others, is an inju-'ſtice that ought not to be ſuffer'd. One may reaſonably appeal from a Sentence, but it would be ill 'done to do ſo before any be pronounc'd, inſomuch that as then no manifeſt wrong appeared. Who-'ever appeals without being injured, has either deſign to moleſt his Adverſary, or to gain more time 'for his Defence. He adds, that every Body complains and murmurs againſt the great Number and confuſion of Appeals made to Rome, and that they are the occaſion of innumerable Miſchiefs. He confirms this by ſome Examples; and moreover Counſels the Pope not to ſuffer any longer ſuch as promote injuſtice. He alſo in this Book condemns the Abuſe of Exemptions. 'I have a mind (ſays he) 'to ſpeak of the Complaints and Murmurings of the Churches who cry continually that they are torn 'to pieces and diſmember'd, and that there are few or none, but either feel this Damage or fear it. If 'you ask wherefore? It is becauſe the Abbys are wreſted from the Juriſdiction of their Biſhops, the Bi-'ſhops from that of the Arch-Biſhops, and the Arch-Biſhops from that of the Patriarchs or Primates. 'Does this conſiſt with Order? Can this be any ways excus'd? You may thereby indeed ſhew the ab-'ſoluteneſs of your Power, but it is to be fear'd you can at the ſame time produce but little Juſtice. You 'do thus becauſe you have a power to do it, but the Queſtion will be only whether you ought to 'have done it. You are ſet above others, only to preſerve to every one his Rank and Quality, 'and not to injure any one. He proves afterwards that theſe Exemptions are neither Juſt nor Profita-ble; that they confound the Oeconomy of the Church; that they occaſion a great deal of Trouble, and raiſe a contempt as well of the lawful Powers eſtabliſh'd by God Almighty, as of thoſe of the Pope; and in a word, that they deſtroy the Eccleſiaſtick Hierarchy eſtabliſh'd in imitation of that of the Angels. But what (may it be objected in the Pope's Name) will you then forbid me to grant Diſpenſations? No certainly, but to ruin the Church you ought not. I know you are eſtabliſh'd univerſal Diſpenſer, but ſtill it is to Edifie and not to Deſtroy. When there is a neceſſity for Diſpenſation it is excuſable; when it is profitable it is likewiſe commendable, but when there is neither of theſe, it is rather Diſſipation than a faithful Diſpenſation. There are ſeveral Monaſteries in moſt Biſhopricks, which belong peculiarly to the Holy See, according to the Will of their Founders, but then muſt thoſe be diſtinguiſh'd which have been gain'd on account of Devotion, from thoſe that have been coveted by Ambition. And laſtly, St. Bernard ſays, that the Pope ought in general to watch over the Church, and ſee ſtrict Diſcipline and Eccleſiaſtical Inſtitutions duly obſerved. He recommends to him more particularly to take care of the Reform, enjoyn'd by the Council of Rheims, relating to the Habits and Manners of the Clergy, as likewiſe to the Age and Qualifications of ſuch as were to be admitted to Benefices.

In the Fourth Book, St. Bernard conſiders the Pope's Duty towards the Clergy, the Inhabitants of Rome, the Cardinals, and other Officers of his Court. He tells him his Clergy ought to be extreamly regular in all their Actions, becauſe it is they that are to ſet Examples to others. In relation to the People, he obſerves that it is enough to ſay, it is the People of Rome to denote what diſorders they live in. That it is a People that have never been accuſtomed to Peace, that love Diſturbances and Tumults, that are Cruel and Untractable, and who never ſubmit, but when they have no power to reſiſt: That he is nevertheleſs obliged to exhort them, though they ſeem irreclaimable. He farther admoniſhes the Pope in particular to endeavour a Reformation of Luxury and Sumptuouſneſs. He gives him a great deal of Advice, concerning the Qualifications that are to be requir'd in Cardinals and other Miniſters, which he ſhall pitch upon to be near his Perſon, and counſels him to take care that they be neither Selfiſh nor Arrogant; and in a word, he admoniſhes him to diſcharge his Domeſtick Affairs with true Oeconomy. Laſtly, he makes a Recapitulation of all the principal Qualities that a Pope ought to have. Conſider above all things (ſays he to him) that the Church of Rome over which God hath plac'd you as Supream, is the Mother, and not the Commandreſs of other Churches; and moreover, that you are not a Soveraign Lord over the other Biſhops, but only one among them; that you are a Brother of thoſe that love God, and a Companion of ſuch as fear him; that you ought to be a living Example of Juſtice, a mirrour of Holyneſs, a model of Devotion, the ſupport of Truth and defence of Faith, the leader of Nations and guide of Chriſtians, the Friend of the Bridegroom, and conducter of the Bride to her Spouſe; the Ordainer of the Clergy, the Paſtor of the People, the inſtructer of the Ignorant, the Sanctuary of the Oppreſſed, the Advocate of the Poor, the Hope of the Miſerable, the ſupport of the Fatherleſs, the Judge of Widows, the Eye of the Blind, the Tongue of the Dumb, the ſtaff of Age, the revenger of Crimes, the Terror of the Wicked, and Glory of the Good, the Rod of the Powerful, the Scourge of Tyrants, the Father of Princes, the mitigator of Laws, the diſpenſer with Canons, the Salt of the Earth, the Light of the World, the pontiff of the moſt High, the Vicar of Chriſt, the Anointed of the Lord; and laſtly, the God of Pharaoh.

In the laſt Book, he admoniſhes Pope Eugenius to conſider the Power that is above his, that is, that of God and the Angels, which gives him occaſion to treat of the Angels and of the Divinity.

St. Bernard began this Work in the Year 1149, and the firſt Book of it was finiſhed the ſame Year. The ſecond was ſent to Pope Eugenius, in the Year 1150. after the ill ſucceſs of the Croiſade. The third in 1152, and the two laſt, ſome ſmall time after.

Theſe Books Of Conſideration were follow'd by a Treatiſe of the ſame Nature, addreſs'd to Henry Arch-Biſhop of Sens, concerning the Manners and Duty of Biſhops. St. Bernard therein ſhews how difficult it is to behave ones ſelf in that Office, and the Neceſſity there is for having good Counſel. He afterwards lays down the Obligations for Biſhops to prove an Honour to their Miniſtry by their Virtues, and not by Vanity and Luxury. He treats more particularly of the Virtues requir'd in a Biſhop, ſuch as Chaſtity, Humility and Paſtoral Care; and laſtly, he blames the Conduct of thoſe Abbots who had a mind to exempt themſelves from the Epiſcopal Juriſdiction, and wear Pontifical Habits. This Treatiſe was compos'd about the Year 1127.

About the ſame time St. Bernard being at Paris, writ a Diſcourſe to the Clergy of that City, Intituled, Of Converſion, which follows the Treatiſe of the Duty of Biſhops. It contains a Moral Exhortation to Repentance and change of Life, and towards the End, he ſpeaks againſt Ambitious and incontinent Clerks.

The Treatiſe of Commands and Diſpenſations was compos'd by St. Bernard, about the Year 1131. to ſerve for Anſwer to the Monks of St. Peter of Chartres, who had conſulted him upon this Subject, and which is addreſs'd to Roger Abbot of St. Colombe, near Sens, and not to theſe Monks of Chartres, becauſe they had written to him with the leave of their Abbot. The firſt queſtion he treats of, is whether all thoſe things which are contained in the Order are Obligatory to them who profeſs them, or whether they are only Monitory and Inſtructive. And again, if one part ought to be taken for Precepts, and the other for Counſel. He anſwers, that the Order of St. Bennet is propos'd to all Mankind, but not offer'd to be forc'd upon any Body. That any Perſon is free to be admitted of it, but when one is once engag'd in it, it becomes neceſſary ſo to continue; ſo that excepting a few particulars which relate to Spiritual Matters, ſuch as Charity, Humility, &c. which are inſtituted only by God, and therefore not to be chang'd, all the other Rules of the Order are only Inſtructions and good Counſel to them who are not yet profeſs'd, but to ſuch as are, they become Commands, and it is Criminal to violate them; that they are voluntary to the firſt, and compulſory to the laſt; yet however they may be diſpens'd with upon an extraordinary occaſion: That this power of diſpenſing belongs only to Superiours, and who cannot do it upon juſt Grounds, and not meerly out of Fancy. To explain the utmoſt extent of theſe Diſpenſations. St. Bernard reckons up three ſorts of neceſſary things which are one eſtabliſh'd, two Inviolable, and three Immutable. The eſtabliſh'd are thoſe which are found to be ſo very neceſſary, that every Body is not allow'd to alter them but Superiours only: Theſe are Monaſtick Rules, which having been inſtituted by Saints, are as it were eſtabliſh'd, and cannot be chang'd by private Perſons, but as thoſe who eſtabliſh'd them were Men, thoſe Men alſo who by a Canonical Election have ſucceeded to theſe Saints, have authority to give Diſpenſations without Abuſe and Diſorder, according to the circumſtances of Time, Place and Perſons; and moreover, theſe having been inſtituted for the encreaſe and preſervation of Charity, as long as they are conducing thereunto they cannot be alter'd, even by Superiours; but if it at any time happens that they become contrary to the intereſt of Charity, in the Obſervation and Judgment of thoſe that are oblig'd to inſpect them, then it is but reaſonable that what was at firſt inſtituted for the benefit of Charity, ſhould be either omitted, interrupted or alter'd for the ſake of Charity, and it would be unjuſt, that what had been eſtabliſh'd on account of Charity, ſhould ſubſiſt and flouriſh in prejudice thereof. Theſe things we term eſtabliſh'd, are fixt and immoveable, even in regard to Superiours, but then it muſt be as long as they are Serviceable and Aſſiſting to Charity. The ſecond ſort of neceſſary things are call'd Inviolable, for that not having been inſtituted by Men, but eſtabliſh'd by the Commandments of God, they cannot be chang'd but by the Authority of God himſelf who was the Author of them. As to the third kind of neceſſary things which he terms immutable, are thoſe which are of ſuch a Nature, that even God himſelf could not change them on whatſoever account. Under this kind are comprehended all the Inſtructions which Chriſt gave his Diſciples on the Mount, and moreover, ſuch as both the Old and New Teſtament have ordain'd relating to Charity, Humility, &c. all theſe things being ſuch in their Nature, it would not be either allowable or profitable to retrench them, their Excellency being immutable and founded on the principles of the Law of Nature. Of theſe three neceſſary things, the firſt is covenanted by free Will and a Promiſe. The ſecond proceeds from the Authority of him that Commanded. And the third is grounded on the dignity of Precept.

From

From theſe Principles St. Bernard concludes, that an Abbot cannot diſpenſe with any thing that belongs to Spirituals in his Order, and as to Outward Obſervances he muſt not be guided by his Pleaſure, and Fancy, but by Charity, becauſe he is not above the Order which he Profeſſes himſelf a Member of: That the Letter of the Rules muſt give way to Charity when Neceſſity ſo requires it: That even Superiours cannot reſtrain the Obligation of a Vow, unleſs upon an abſolute Neceſſity; nor Extend it, unleſs the Inferiours Conſent: that Nevertheleſs an Inferiour whoſe Obedience does not exceed his Vow is Imperfect, becauſe perfect Obedience is not comprehended within any bounds, but embraces willingly and accepts courageouſly whatever it is commanded: That there is no Diſobedience but what is to be avoided, but that ſeveral kinds of it are not equally Criminal: That there ought to be a difference put between the Perſon that commands and the things commanded: That in regard of the Perſons we ought to be moſt Affraid of Offending our Superiours who have the greateſt Authority over us; for it is better to obey God than Man, our ſuperiours than our equals, and amongſt our ſuperiours thoſe of our own Country rather than ſtrangers: That in relation to Commands we ought to take more care of thoſe which are of Importance than of thoſe of leſs conſequence, and that a Perſon is more or leſs culpable according as the Command is of more or leſs Importance: That this difference is in the Commandments Eſtabliſh'd by Men, becauſe they command with more or leſs Affection according as they ſee Occaſion: That Perfect Obedience conſiſts in not ſlighting the leaſt commands and Obeying the Greateſt, conforming ones ſelf to the Intent of the Superiour: That ſlight matters, ſuch as forbidding laughing or ſpeaking when they are once commanded become Obligatory, and they who diſobey them commit a ſin, tho' no Crime, providing they do it not with contempt; but when they contemn the Law they are more than ordinarily Faulty: That God is to be Obey'd, as likewiſe is Man that commands in his name providing the command be not contrary to the Law of God: That in doubtful Matters the commands of ſuperiours are to be follow'd: That all Sins of Diſobedience are not equal; and that in reſpect of thoſe which are committed againſt the Monaſtick Rules, ſome are more conſiderable than others: That it ought not to be thought that the Obſerving of Monaſtick Rules is Impoſſible, becauſe that cannot be but either thro' Neglect or Inadvertency.

St. Bernard proceeds afterwards to Anſwer ſome Particulars which theſe Monks had propos'd to him.

The Firſt was why an Erroneous Conſcience does not ſometimes change the Bad to Good in like manner as the Good to Bad? He Anſwers that to the End that an Action may be good, it ought to be Effected by the Knowledge and Love of God: That he that does a good Action believing it to be bad, has not the Love of Good in him, and by conſequence his Action muſt be bad, but that he that does a bad Action believing it to be Good, is ignorant of what is Good, and therefore his Action cannot be eſteem'd Good tho' his Intention was ſo: That his good will ſhall not be altogether depriv'd of a Reward, altho' thro' a deceiv'd ſimplicity he be not altogether exempted from Ill. But what (Perhaps you may ſay) did not he Act according to his Conſcience? Yes, (replys St. Bernard) but according to a falſe and erroneous Conſcience which does not exempt him abſolutely from ſin.

Next he Anſwers this Second Queſtion, which was If in relation to Commands Diſobedience be proportionably as Criminal as Obedience is Meritorious? He ſhews that in certain caſes Obedience is more Meritorious than Diſobedience Criminal.

They had likewiſe demanded of him how far they were Oblig'd to be reſident, and where they might take a Liberty to quit their Monaſtery. He Anſwers that a good Monk ought never to forſake his Monaſtery without leave firſt Obtain'd from his Abbot when he is able to Undergo the Injunctions of his Order; but if the ill Lives of thoſe which he lives amongſt, hinder him from ſo doing, then is he to chuſe and go to another Monaſtery where he may accompliſh thoſe Vows, he could not ſo well perform there: That altho' it be not allowable for a Monk who is in a well regulated Monaſtery tho' leſs Auſtere, to leave it without permiſſion of his Superiour for one more Auſtere; yet if it happen that one having left it enters into another, none ought to Adviſe him to return, unleſs the Monaſteries be near to each other, and he be ſpeedily recall'd.

The Fourth Queſtion they propos'd to him was Why St. Gregory the Great receiv'd a Perſon that had quitted his Order, into the Communion, and did not rather Oblige him to return to a Monaſtick Life. and why St. Auſtin Teaches that a Marriage contracted by ſuch as had made a Vow of Continence is not to be Diſſolv'd. St. Bernard owns freely that he is not of thoſe holy Biſhops Opinion: And that it belong'd to them to make good what they had Aſſerted.

He moreover Anſwers a Fifth Queſtion Concerning the Biſhops which St. Gregory had Cloyſter'd up in Monaſteries by reaſon of the Crimes they had committed, the Queſtion was Whether they were to continue their Epiſcopal Habit there or to wear that of the Monks. He ſays He knows little of the matter but that it is likely they ought not to take upon them the Habits of the Order becauſe they had never before done it, and becauſe they were to continue in thoſe Monaſteries but for a time, and that they were confin'd to theſe Places only that they might have more leiſure to Repent.

The Sixth Queſtion which he Anſwers, is why of all the kinds of Repentance that among Monks has the Privilege of being term'd a Second Baptiſm? He ſays he believes it is by reaſon that they have abſolutely renounc'd the World and Practiſe a ſpiritual Life after a very excellent and extraordinary Manner; That they are anew cloath'd with Jeſus Chriſt, and retire from the darkneſs of ſin into the Light of Piety and Virtue.

The Seventh Queſtion they Ask'd St. Bernard, is If when an Abbot dies or is Depos'd, they have during the Interval a Liberty to go out of their Monaſteries to go to another? St. Bernard Anſwers they have not, becauſe the Vow they made is not to be limited by the death of the Abbot, but only Authoriz'd by his Preſence, and that therefore a Monk ought to conſider his Vow by the limits of his own Life, and not by that of another.

They

They alſo demanded of him what a Monk ought to do that has a ſecret Averſion to his Abbot, whoſe Election he looks upon to be Inconſiſtent with the Rules of the Order? to which St. Bernard Anſwers that when the Election is not manifeſtly Irregular the Monks ought to Obey.

The other Queſtions of theſe Monks being of leſs Conſequence St. Bernard Anſwers them in few words, and there is but one which deſerves to be Mention'd, which is, If a Perſon who has offended another be ſo diſpoſed as not to deſign to do him any harm, and yet is not concern'd if any happen to him, be in a condition to Approach the Altar. St. Bernard Anſwers that he ought not to do it till his paſſion and Reſentments be over.

St. Bernards Apology to William Abbot of Thirey.

St. Bernard's Apology Addreſs'd to William Abbot of St. Thierry, is a Work in which he undertakes to Juſtify himſelf and thoſe of his Order againſt their being Accus'd of ſpeaking ill of the Order of Cluny, that is to ſay of all the Benedictin Monks who had not embrac'd the Reform of Ciſteaux. Altho' this work be entitled an Apology, he nevertheleſs ſeverely reproves in it the Monks of Cluny; but to have the better colour for doing ſo with greater freedom, he begins by declaring that neither he nor any of his Monks have ever ſpoken ill of that Order. He Approves of the different kinds of Religious Orders, and particularly commends that of Cluny. He exclaims againſt thoſe that Judge raſhly of the manner of living of this Order, who think themſelves more holy, becauſe they lead an auſterer Life. He ſhews that Spiritual Exerciſes are more profitable than Corporal, and that a Man may be a good Monk without practiſing all theſe Auſterities, and that alſo all theſe Auſterities are Unprofitable when they are not accompany'd with Charity and Virtue. But for fear that he may not ſeem to Approve of the Irregularities which were practis'd in the Abby of Cluny, he falls upon and condemns them in the Second part of this Work. He ſays that the manner of Living among the Order of the Abby of Cluny ſeems to be a work of Saints, becauſe being willing to ſave a great many Perſons they have temper'd the Rigour of the Rules of this Order in favour of the Weak without altogether ruining it at the ſame time. But I cannot believe they have nevertheleſs allow'd of the Many Diſorders that are to be found in moſt Monaſteries. For I can never enough Admire (ſays he) how ſo great a Licentiouſneſs in Meals, Habits, Beds, Equipages, and Horſes can get in and be Eſtabliſh'd as it were, among Monks; Inſomuch that thoſe who have thus wholly Abandon'd themſelves to theſe Exceſſes, ſeem to have had a mighty regard to the Spirit and Religion of their Anceſtors: In a manner that by theſe extravagant Proceedings they have procur'd Vices the name of Virtues, and on the contrary Virtues the Name of Vices. When a Moderate Expence ought to be call'd Covetouſneſs; Sobriety, if not Extraordinary, Auſterity; and ſilence, ſadneſs; they on the contrary call a looſe behaviour the Effect of Diſcretion; Profuſeneſs, Liberality, and much Talking but common Civility. Immoderate Laughing with them is no more a Vice, but goes under the Name of a Neceſſary Gaiety. Luxury in Habits and Pride in Horſes are look'd upon as the good Breeding of a Monk; and ſuperfluous Ornaments are the furniture of his Chamber. Yet whatever they thus laviſh away can it be call'd Charity? No; Unhappy Charity that deſtroys the True! Irregular Diſcretion that confounds in us that of Virtue! Cruel Pity that has greater regard to the Body than the Soul! What a ſtrange Charity is this, to provide ſo well for the Fleſh, and to take no care of the Spirit! What Diſcretion to give all to the Body and Refuſe all to the Soul! He afterwards proceeds to compare the Sobriety of the Antient Monks with the Intemperance of thoſe of his Time, and gives a very lively Deſcription of the Exceſſes of theſe laſt, whereof ſome of his Expreſſions follow. Are not their Mouths and Ears equally fill'd with Victuals and confus'd Voices? And while they thus Spin out their Immoderate Feaſts, is there any one who offers to regulate the Debauch? No certainly: Diſh dances after Diſh, and for Abſtinence which they Profeſs, two Rows of fat fiſh appear ſwimming in ſauce upon the Table: Are you Cloy'd with theſe? The Cook has Art ſufficient to Prick you up Others of no leſs Charms? He'll provide Sauces as different as your Diſhes. Thus Plate is devoured after Plate, and ſuch natural Tranſitions are made from one to the other, that they fill their Bellies, but ſeldom blunt their Appetites, for the Palate is always ſo agreeably entertain'd with ſo many Novelties that it has not leiſure allow'd it to be ſatisfy'd. Now Hunger is reviv'd again, the Appetite is Awaken'd and they fall on with the ſame greedineſs and Guſt. The Belly having no Eyes ſees not how much it takes in, and it is at laſt rather fill'd than Glutted. And becauſe the ſimplicity of Nature is not entertaining enough, we make Mixtures and Hotchpotches of different kinds, and by exquiſite and elected Sapours ſupport and encourage our Intemperance, yet notwithſtanding tho' we recede ſo much from Nature, yet are we not able to fill the vaſt Bounds of our Deſires. He then reproves very ſeverely, their Exceſs and Niceneſs in Drinking, and ridicules a pleaſant cuſtom of ſome Monks who being Young, Healthy and Strong, would retreat at Sacrament time into the Infirmary to Eat and Drink. From their Exceſs in Eating and Drinking he proceeds to Dreſſing. We don't think our ſelves well Dreſt (ſays he) unleſs we have the beſt of every thing on our Backs. We don't ſearch after the moſt decent and commodious but the Gayeſt Cloaths. We don't enquire for the warmeſt but the fineſt cloath. In a word, we don't deſire (purſuant to our Vows) what may be moſt ſerviceable to us, but what may cover us moſt with Vanity? ——— Don't we ſee every day that thoſe Habits which were given to the Monks as Marks of Humility, are ſo contriv'd that they ſerve rather to exalt their Pride? ſcarce can a whole kingdom furniſh them ſuitable to their Extravagant Deſires. The Soldier and the Monk almoſt participitate of the ſame Habit in the Field and the Cell. Will not a Monks Habit now a days become a Man of the World? A Prince likewiſe, providing he were in faſhion, would not look Amiſs in their Garments. But You'll tell me perhaps with the Proverb, That the Habit does not make the Monk, and that it is Virtue alone which governs the Heart tho' the Perſon be never ſo ſplendidly cloath'd. Very well: Then I would Ask you when you Traverſe the Town, viſit all Fairs, and the Merchants Houſes, Overturn the Magazines, Unfold the Silks, Feel them with the Fingers, View them with your Eyes, Hold them up to the Light, Reject ſome and like others, Whether you have not more Vanity than Virtue? He Adds moreover that the Abbots do not only Neglect to Reform theſe Diſorders, but even Authorize and Encourage them by their Silence and Example. "I am Accus'd (ſays he) of being Arrogant; No matter I cannot hold "my Tongue; I muſt always take the Liberty to enquire how the Salt of the Earth comes to be ſo

"deprav'd:

" deprav'd: What occasions Men, who in their Lives ought to be Examples of Humility, by their " Practice to give Instructions and Examples of Vanity? And to pass by many other Things, what a " Proof of Humility is it to see a vast Retinue of Horses with their Equipage, and a Confused train of " Valets and footmen, so that the Retinue of a single Abbot outshines that of two Bishops. May I be " thought a Lyar if it be not true that I have seen one single Abbot attended by above 60 Horse. Who " could take these Men for the Fathers of Monks and the Shepherds of Souls? Or who would not be " apt to take them rather for Governours of Cities and Provinces? Why, tho' the Master be Four Leagues " off, must his Train of Equipage reach to his very Doors? One would take these mighty Preparations " for the Subsistence of an Army, Or for Provisions to Travel thro' a very large Desert. Cannot Wine " and Water be pour'd Undefil'd out of the same Cup? Cannot a Candle Give Light but in a Gold or " Silver Candlestick? Cannot you sleep upon any other Bed but one of Tissue? Will not one Servant " suffice to guide the Horse, serve at Table and make the Bed? If you tell me it is to save charges in an " Inn that you carry so many things, then will I ask you why every one does not carry his own Provisions. He also does not spare the Monks in their Buildings. " But all this (says he) is little or nothing. Let " us proceed to matters of greater Consequence, and so much the greater as by how much they are more " Common. I shall not take Notice of the Dimensions of our Churches, of their Stately Heighth, of " their Excessive Length and Superfluous Breadth, of their Sumptuous Ornaments and Curious Pictures " which, attracting the Eyes of the Congregation do not a little, I fancy, divert their Devotion, and " which seem to me not much more allowable than the Ceremonies of Ancient Judaism. As for my part " I would have all Devotion and Places of Worship tend to the Glory of God. I would feign Ask the " Monks (for I am a Monk my self) a Question which a Pagan heretofore demanded of Pagans. Tell " me ye Priests (says he) what has Gold to do in Holy Places? Now I would make use of his Sence tho' " not of his words. Tell me Poor Souls then say I (if you may be call'd Poor Souls) what has Gold to " do in the Sanctuary? I do not speak of Bishops and their Churches, for they may take a greater Liberty, " but I speak of the Churches of Monks. We know that Bishops are endebted both to Wise Men and " Fools, and must be allow'd to stir up Devotion in the People by Images, and other such Sensible ob- " jects, which they could not raise by their Preaching. But we that are now no more of the World; " that have forsaken all the Pleasures and Riches of Life, for Jesus Christ his Sake; who have cast at our " feet all that Glitters in the Eyes of the World, and have fled from Concerts of Musick, Fragrant smells " and Feasting our senses, shall we (I say) Interrupt our Devotion by these Bawbles which we have " left for its sake? What can we expect if we should Acquiesce in all these Vanities? The Admiration of " Sots or the satisfaction of Fools. Is it not the Commerce we entertain'd with the World that causes us " to offer Incense to it's Idols? and to speak more plainly, Is not Avarice the Cause, the very worst of " Idolatries? Is it not true that we have greater regard to the Peoples Riches, than their Salvation? If " you ask me how comes this to pass? I will discover the wonderful Secret to you. There is a certain " Art to multiply Riches by Exhausting them, and like a River to make them encrease while they flow, " for here Profuseness is the Cause of their Abounding. Here the Eyes and minds of the spectators are so " seduc'd by these costly Vanities, that instead of Offering their Hearts to God they Sacrifice their Purses " to Man. Thus you may see how Riches swallow up Riches, and how the Money of the Monks proves " a bait for that of Fools; for Men have I know not what Inclinations to throw Water into the Sea, and " to heap Riches upon those that have 'em in Abundance. The Monks cover the Relicks with Rich Ar- " tire, and the Pilgrim for fear of being dazled approaches them with shut Eyes and an Open Purse. " The best Adorn'd of these Images are ever the most Holy. Men crowd to pay them Devotion, but " first they must be Consecrated with the Holy Water, and after are led to the Image where they for the " most part Admire the Ornaments more than the Thing it self. Next the Church is hung round not " with Crowns of Thorns, but Rows of Pearls. The Lights of the Lamps are heightned by the Lustre " of Diamonds, and instead of Candlesticks you see great Branches of Brass mounted, whose weight and " Work-man-ship are equally to be Admir'd. What do you think can be the cause of all these fine things? " Are they more to put you in mind of your Sins than to move your Admiration? No Certainly. O " Vanity of Vanities? But this is not so much a Vanity as Folly. The Church shines in its Walls and " Suffers in its Poor. It covers its stone with costly Garments and leaves its Children the Misfortune of " being Naked. Here the Eyes of the Rich are fed with the Bread of the Poor. The Curiosity of Men is " Indulg'd when the Miseries of the Indigent are Neglected. Nevertheless if we are Insensible of the " Wants of Men, we ought to have more respect to the Images of our Saints, than to Pave our Chur- " ches with them. What shame is it for us to Spit in the Mouth of an Angel, and Tread on the face of " a Saint? But all this while if we have an Indifference for the Carving, why do we not spare the Beauty " of the Painting? Why do we paint with our Hands, what we intend to deface with our Feet? Why " do we take so much pains in embellishing what we Intend to defile the next Moment? What signify " so many fine stroaks when they are immediately to be cover'd with Dust? In a word what occasion is " there for all these Vanities among Poor Monks who have renounc'd the World, unless we have a mind " to Answer this Pagan Poet with David; Lord, I have been all Enflam'd with Zeal for the Honour of thy House " and the Tabernacle of thy Glory. Well then I Agree with you; I consent to these Excesses in the Church. " the simplicity and Devotion of Prayers may possibly sanctify that that would be a Crime in a " Prodigal; but in Cloisters, to what purpose are those Paintings Cawings, before people who weep " for their Sins. Towards the End of this Treatise he makes an Apologue for what he had said before. " I hope in God (says he) that no body will be Offended at what I have writ, for I do not question but " that in Reproving Vice so severely, I have a little grated the Ears of some that Practise it. But it may " be if God is so pleas'd to have it, that even those whom I may be thought to have anger'd, may not " be so. But this cannot possibly happen unless they cease to be what they are, unless they cease to Ca- " lumniate every day according to Custom; to Judge ill of their Brethren by reason they do not visibly

"lead ſo auſtere a Life; and if on the contrary thoſe that are leſs mindful of exteriour Rigour, do not "take care to retrench all their ſuperfluities. Laſtly he blames thoſe who thro' their Inconſtancy go from one Order to another. "I have known ſome (ſays he) who had a mind to change the Moderation "of their Order, for the Auſterity of ours; What had they a mind to do then? Why what but to de- "prive their Brethren of the Scandal of their Inconſtancy, and bring it to us? and they have not been "leſs troubleſome to us by their wretched Converſation, than they were to them by their lea- "ving them; and becauſe they have deſpiſed through Pride the profeſſion which they had embrac'd, "and preſum'd to aſſume a new one beyond their Abilities, God's Juſtice has ſuffered their Baſeneſs to "appear, for they have been obliged to quit our Order through the ſame Imprudence that they engaged "in it, and ſhamefully to reſume that which through Inconſtancy they had forſaken, for not having "entered on it, but by the Impatience they had to continue in their own, and not through an hearty "deſire of living with us, they have ſufficiently ſhewn what they were, and going thus from one to "the other, they have left Scandal with both. I don't here mean every Body, for thanks be to God, "we have found ſome, who as they have begun generouſly, have perſever'd honeſtly; for it is much "better to perſevere in what we undertake, than to undertake what we are not able to perſevere in. "But above all, let us all take care with the Apoſtle, that our Actions be conceiv'd in the Spirit of Charity.

St. Bernard's Treatiſe in Commendation of the New Militia.

The Treatiſe in commendation of the New Militia Addreſs'd to Hugh, Great Maſter of the Knight Templars, was written by St. Bernard, about the Year 1135. This Order had been eſtabliſh'd in the Year 1118. by ſome pious Knights who had made a Vow to the Patriarch of Jeruſalem, that they would live like regular Canons in Chaſtity, Obedience and Poverty. The firſt that made this Vow, was Hugh de Paganis, and Geofrey de St. Aldemar. The King of Jeruſalem gave them for their Habitation a place near the Temple, whence they afterwards took upon them the names of Knights-Templars. The Patriarch and Biſhops gave them for Employment the guard of the High-Roads that led to Jeruſalem, to defend the Pilgrims from Robbers. The firſt Great Prior of this Order was this Hugh de Paganis to whom this Treatiſe of St. Bernard is dedicated. In the beginning of this Inſtitution they were but nine Knights, but afterwards their Number ſoon encreaſed. Their Inſtitution was approved of by the Council of Troyes, in the Year 1128. who drew up the Rules they were to obſerve; ſome believe they were drawn by St. Bernard, but it is certain that it was John de St. Michael, nam'd by the Council and by St. Bernard, who drew them up according to the relation of the Great Prior and the other Knights; and as may appear in the Prologue of theſe Rules. The Treatiſe of St. Bernard which we ſpoke of, does not conſiſt of Rules, but is an Elogium on this Order, and an Exhortation to the Knights of the Temple, to acquit themſelves well of their Duty. The World hears (ſays he) with Aſtoniſhment, that there is a new Militia eſtabliſh'd in the Country, which Chriſt honoured with his Corporal Preſence, to the end, that as he had exterminated the Prince of Darkneſs from thence by the force of his Arm, he might likewiſe at preſent drive away his Guards by the proweſs of his Courageous Soldiers, and conſequently redeem his People anew. This kind of Militia is altogether new, and paſt Ages, have known nothing like it. They are engaged in two Combates at once, one againſt the Fleſh, and the other againſt the Enemies of Chriſt; in one they reſiſt a Corporal Foe by force of Arms, and in the other declare War againſt Vice and the Devil. He adds, that the occaſion and deſign of this Inſtitution is not leſs to be admir'd; for whereas all Wars among Men, are either begun on account of Anger, Ambition or Vain Glory, or out of a deſire of getting poſſeſſion of ſomething, and the end propos'd is always ſome Temporal Intereſt. Theſe Knights of the Temple acted by a quite different Motive, and had quite another end in their Enterprizes. Their Buſineſs was to fight the Battles of the Lord, without fear of Sinning, if they kill'd their Enemies; or Periſhing, if they were kill'd themſelves; becauſe whether they kill or were kill'd, it was altogether to further the cauſe of Jeſus Chriſt. In a word, the Lives and Behaviour of theſe Knights ought to ſhame all thoſe, who now-a-days practiſe the Art of War, for they did nothing but by command of their Prior, had nothing but what he gave them, us'd nothing ſuperfluous in their Habits, liv'd regularly without Wives and Children, pretended to nothing of their own, nor even ſo much as wiſh'd for more than they had; they moreover never gave their Minds to any Sports, delighted in no Shows, nor ſought after any Honour, but wiſely and diligently waited for the Victory of the Lord. After this great Commendation, St. Bernard exhorts them to acquit themſelves courageouſly in their ſeveral Poſts, having always a ſtrict regard not to prophane the Holy Places upon which he makes divers Myſtical Reflections.

St. Bernard's Treatiſe of the Degrees of Humility and Pride. His Treatiſe of the love of God.

The firſt of the Works compos'd by St. Bernard, is his Treatiſe on the Degrees of Humility and Pride, which follow in order of the Edition the Treatiſe which we have juſt mentioned before. The Title ſufficiently acquaints you with the Subject: It ſuffices to obſerve that it is very moving, conſiſting of abundance of Piety and good Matter.

The Treatiſe of the Love of God was written ſome time after the foregoing. St. Bernard therein treats of the Manner, Reaſons, Source, Degrees and Obligation of loving God. He ſays, that the manner of loving God, is to love him without Reſerve; the reaſon of loving him, is becauſe he is God, and loves us, for the Recompence of loving him, is the Love it ſelf which makes our Happineſs; then that the Source and Origin of this Love is Charity, which God affords us through Mercy. Laſtly, that four degrees of this Love may be diſcover'd; the firſt is that by which Men love themſelves; the ſecond, whereby they love God for their own ſakes; the third, by which they love God, both for him and themſelves; and the fourth, whereby they love God on his account only. This fourth Degree is the ſupream perfection to which it is impoſſible to arrive in this Life, which even the Martyrs never did, and which the Souls of the Bleſſed cannot attain to, till they are ſeparated from their Bodies, to which they have always a natural Tendency. He moreover diſtinguiſhes Chaſt and Pure Love from that which is intereſſed; the Love of Slaves from that of Children, and at length, in reſpect of the Obligation to the Love of God he ſhews that it is natural ſo to do, and that it has an univerſal influence upon Mankind.

The

The Treatiſe of Grace and Free-Will, Addreſs'd to William Abbot of St. Thierry, was written by St. Bernard, about the Year 1128. upon occaſion of a Conference in which a certain Perſon had objected to him, that he had allowed too much to Grace, becauſe that ſpeaking of the Graces which God had done him, he had ſaid that God had prevented him in doing Good, for that he ow'd to his Divine Grace all the Progreſs which he had made therein, and that he hop'd that he would in time grant him a full Perfection. One of the ſtanders by, hearing him talk thus, ſaid to him, What have you done then of your ſelf, and what Reward can you expect when you confeſs God has done all? This Queſtion occaſion'd St. Bernard to write upon this Subject to explain the agreement of Free-Will with Grace. He therein follows the principles of St. Auſtin, and firſt he ſays, that Free-Will is ſav'd by Grace, together with which it cooperates in conſenting voluntarily to its Motions; that this Conſent is effected by Grace it ſelf, but that it is not leſs Free, becauſe it is without conſtraint and voluntary. Where-ever there is conſent (ſays he) there is a Will, and where there is a Will, there is a Freedom or Liberty. Ubi voluntas, ibi Libertas: The Will is a reaſonable Movement, which preſides over the Senſes, and the Appetite which reaſon accompanies, follows and inſtructs without impoſing any Force on it, ſo as that it may either incline to Ill by purſuing inordinate Deſires, or to Good, by following Grace. The Will only is capable of both Happineſs and Miſery, and 'tis by its Conſent and Approbation, that Men are either Wicked or Good, Happy or Miſerable. He afterwards divides Freedom into three ſorts, 1. Freedom or Exemption from Sin. 2. Freedom or Exemption from Miſery. 3. Freedom or Exemption from Neceſſity. He calls the laſt Freedom that of Nature, the ſecond, that of Grace, and the firſt, the Freedom of Life or Glory; for firſt, ſays he, Man was made an excellent Creature, with a Will altogether Free; ſecondly, he has been re-eſtabliſh'd in Innocence to be a new Creature in Jeſus Chriſt; thirdly, he is tranſlated into Glory, to become a perfect Creature in Spirit. The Freedom of Neceſſity is to be found in all rational Creatures in whatever Condition they be; in Angels as well as Men, in the Bleſſed as well as the Damn'd, in the Righteous as well as the Wicked. They that would do well and cannot, are free from this Freedom, but they are not nevertheleſs free from the freedom of Sin, which ought rather to be call'd Free Advice than Free-Will. This ſecond Freedom is found only in ſuch as have Grace, as the Freedom of Miſery, which he calls Liberum Complacitum, is to be met with alone among the Bleſſed, becauſe thoſe only can enjoy the Good that pleaſes them, and be exempt from the Ill that diſpleaſes them, they being only endued with Grace that can do Good, Grace being abſolutely requiſite to do it; ſo the Will of Free-Will to be abſolutely perfect, has need of two Gifts of God, viz. of Converſion to Good and Confirmation in it, the firſt is granted through Grace to the Juſt in this Life, and the ſecond is the effect of Beatitude. The firſt Man over and above the Freedom of Nature, had likewiſe the Freedom of Counſel and the Freedom of Compliance, but nevertheleſs in an imperfect Degree; for theſe two Freedoms have both their Degrees, one being ſuperiour, and the other inferiour. The firſt Man in the ſtate of Innocence had this laſt, but loſt it by his fall, inſomuch that he afterwards retain'd only Free Will. He fell by his Crime, and the ill uſe he made of his Will, but then he could not raiſe himſelf again by the ſame Power, by reaſon that he might not have fell unleſs he had ſo pleas'd, but being once fallen, it was not allow'd him to riſe. What then ſays one, is Man's Free-Will loſt becauſe he cannot avoid Sinning? No, anſwers he, but rather the Free Warning he had not to Sin. He ſays moreover, that 'tis by reaſon of this treble Liberty of the firſt Man, that he was created after the Image, and in the reſemblance of his Maker; that the Bleſſed have this reſemblance in the greateſt perfection, becauſe they enjoy this treble Freedom, after a more excellent manner than the firſt Man, and that thoſe redeem'd by Jeſus Chriſt, during their ſtay on Earth, through Grace receive a part of this Freedom, becauſe that though they cannot be altogether free from Sin and Miſery, yet with the aſſiſtance of Grace, they may be able to prevent being Over-come by Sin and Miſery. Let no body think then, ſays he, that Free Will is ſo call'd becauſe it keeps as it were, the Will in balance betwixt Good and Evil, in a manner that it can do one as eaſily as the other, for if this were ſo, neither God, the Angels nor Saints, who can do no Ill, could be exempted from doing it no more than the very Devils, who can do no Good. It is rather call'd Free-Will, becauſe let the Will be inclin'd either to Good or Ill, it is ſtill Free, it being in the power of no Perſon to be either Good or Bad, without the conſent of his Will: Now Grace does not take away this Freedom, becauſe it ſets the Will at work, and changes the Evil to Good; but nevertheleſs, by its free Conſent: So thoſe who act through fear of Death or Puniſhment, do not fail to act with Freedom, becauſe the Will cannot be conſtrain'd but by its ſelf, and that cannot be forced by a violence purely paſſive on its own part. That in a word, excepting original Sin only, all others are an effect of the Will which inclines to Sin without being oblig'd by any exteriour Force: That we cannot pretend to any thing meritorious without Grace, but alſo that Grace cannot make us to merit without our Will. Merit conſiſts in the conſent that Free-Will gives to Grace, but at the ſame time this Conſent does not proceed from Free-Will, becauſe that cannot have a good Thought of it ſelf, and that God is the occaſion of all Good in us, whether it be the product of Thought, Will or Action, for he does as it were prevent us by inſpiring us with good Thoughts, and changes our bad Will by making us conſent to Good, which he alone cauſes us to perform. That he effects the firſt without us, the ſecond with us, and the third by us, for the beginning of our Salvation proceeds from God; we our ſelves are not the occaſions of it, neither are we preſent at its being done, but the Conſent and Action, although they do not proceed from us, yet are they not without us, inſomuch, that we ought to take care when we feel good motions in us, not to attribute them to our Will which is weak, but to the ſole Grace of God. Theſe are the Principles and Maxims which St. Bernard eſtabliſhes in this Treatiſe, which agree with the Doctrine of St. Auſtin, concerning the Nature of Free-Will, and the neceſſity and efficacy of Grace, without which Man could not perform any thing towards his Salvation.

St. Bernard's Treatiſe of Grace and Free-Will.

St. Bernard's Letter to Hugh of St. Victor.

The Tenth Treatiſe of St. Bernard, is a Letter addreſs'd to Hugh of St. Victor, againſt ſome Opinions which an Anonymous Author had laid down; which were,

1. That the Baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt had been obligatory ever ſince our Saviour had ſaid to Nicodemus, Whoever is not born anew by Water and the Holy Spirit, ſhall never enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.

2. That no Body can be ſav'd without actually receiving the Sacrament of Baptiſm, or Martyrdom in its ſtead.

3. That the Patriarchs of the Old Teſtament had as clear a knowledge of the Incarnation of the Chriſtians.

4. That there is no ſuch thing as a Sin of Ignorance.

5. That St. Bernard was miſtaken in that paſſage of his Homilies, where he ſays, that even the Angels were not acquainted with God's Deſign touching the Incarnation.

As to the firſt, he ſays that it would be a hard caſe, that what Jeſus Chriſt ſpoke in particular, ſhould be taken for a general Precept, to oblige all Mankind. He is of Opinion, that Original Sin was remitted to the Jews by Circumciſion, during the time of the antient Law, and to the faithful amongſt the Gentiles, either by their own Faith, or by that of their Parents, and that the Obligation of being Baptiz'd under penalty of Damnation, did not commence till after the Promulgation of the Goſpel.

As to the ſecond, he is of Opinion that the Adult may be ſav'd without actually receiving Baptiſm, if ſo be they cannot be Baptized, although they deſire it, becauſe that actual Baptiſm is here ſupply'd by Faith and Vows. This he proves from divers paſſages out of St. Ambroſe and St. Auſtin, who (ſays he) are two Authorities which I cannot poſſibly diſſent from, but with whom I am always reſolved to be, either in the right or the wrong. He adds, that what ſupplies Baptiſm in caſe of Martyrdom is not the Pain, but the Faith of him that ſuffers. In relation to Infants who can have no Faith, he owns that they cannot be ſaved without Baptiſm, although they might be ſav'd by the Faith of others, when they actually receive it.

As to the third, he ſays that if the faithful of the Old Law had as clear a knowledge of our Myſteries, as we our ſelves, God would have been either too liberal to them, or too reſerv'd towards us: That the Goſpel would not have been then above the Law; that St. Paul would have been in the wrong, to boaſt that he and the other Apoſtles received the firſt Fruits of the Spirit of God; that this would be to do a conſiderable Injury to St. John Baptiſt. And laſtly, that the Prophets have not been all equally enlightned with our Myſteries, and that even among Chriſtians, ſome have more knowledge in thoſe matters than others.

As to the fourth, he affirms that there are Sins of Ignorance, and that the Author of this Propoſition ought to agree with him, ſince he has before maintain'd that the Precept of Baptiſm given to Nicodemus in private, obliged thoſe who could have no knowledge of it; that it was moreover evident by the Holy Scriptures, that there are Sins of Ignorance, for that the Prophet David expreſly prays to God not to lay his Sins of Ignorance to his Charge; alſo Moſes ſpeaks of Sins committed through Ignorance, and St. Paul is ſaid to have perſecuted the Church without knowing what the Church was; and our Saviour Chriſt beg'd of his Father to forgive them that Crucify'd him, in that they were ignorant of the Sin they committed.

As to the fifth, he explains what he had ſaid concerning the Angels, knowing nothing of the myſtery of the Incarnation before Gabriel came to acquaint the Virgin of the Circumſtances of time, and place of the Incarnation, the manner thereof, and the Perſon choſen to be the Mother of God.

The Life of St. Malachy, &c.

We will forbear ſpeaking of the Treatiſe againſt the Errors of Abaelard, till we come to the Hiſtory of that Author, ſo that there remains no more of the Treatiſes of St. Bernard in this ſecond Tome, than the Life of St. Malachy, and the Tract concerning Singing, neither of which require any Obſervation.

St. Bernard's Sermons.

The third Tome contains St. Bernard's Sermons throughout the whole Year, upon the ſeveral Feaſts, and other matters of Moment. Theſe are his other Works, being writ with as elborate as Spirit, and abounding with lively and ſolid Thoughts, very proper to move the Heart. He preach'd moſt of them to his Monks, whom moſt commonly he exhorted publickly every day. Father Mabillon ſhews in his Preface, that although there might have been ſeveral Converts among theſe Monks who did not underſtand Latin, yet for the moſt part theſe Sermons were delivered in that Language, as their ſtyle ſufficiently demonſtrates. He owns alſo that St. Bernard might ſometimes have preach'd in the Vulgar Tongue, for the benefit of thoſe that did not underſtand Latin.

The laſt Tome of the firſt Volume of St. Bernard's Works, contains his Sermons upon the Canticles, amounting to the number of 86, and being upon the two firſt Chapters, and the firſt Verſe of the third Chapter, they comprehend an infinite number of both Moral and Spiritual Thoughts which he draws out of the words of the Text, either by explaining the Text after a myſtical manner, or giving it an allegorical Sence, or adapting it to other Subjects. It is a wonderful thing to conſider how ready he is at this manner of writing, and how he could be capable of compoſing ſo vaſt a Work of ſuch different matters upon two ſuch ſhort Chapters as thoſe of the Canticles.

Gilbert Abbot of Hoiland.

The ſecond Volume of Works that go under St. Bernard's Name, is divided into two Tomes. The firſt contains a Continuation of the Commentary on the Canticles. This belongs to Gilbert of Hoiland, a little Iſland between England and Scotland, where there was a Monaſtery of Monks and Nuns, whereof he was Abbot, depending on the Biſhop of Lincoln. He was of the Order of Ciſteaux, and dy'd in the Year 1172, in a Monaſtery of the Dioceſs of Troyes in Champagne. This Continuation is of the ſame Nature with the Work of St. Bernard, and is divided into forty eight Sermons, all which do not go beyond the 10*th*. Verſe of the 5*th*. Chapter. This is follow'd by ſeven other Aſcetical Treatiſes, and four Letters by the ſame Author.

This Tome contains several other Tracts, attributed to St. Bernard, although it is certain he was not the Author of them.

The first is a Letter or a Book address'd to the Fryars of Mont-dieu, which is a Charter-House in the Diocess of Rheims near Mouzon. This Book has been quoted under the name of St. Bernard, by Gerson and others; but nevertheless, several ancient Manuscripts assure us that it was written by William Abbot of St. Thierry, since Monk of Signy, as well as the Treatises of the Contemplation of God, and that of the Nature and Dignity of Love, both which go under St. Bernard's Name, and come next after. This William was native of Liege; he came to Rheims with his Brother Simon; they embraced a Monastick Life in the Monastery of St. Nicaise; afterwards Simon was made Abbot of St. Nicolas, in the Diocess of Laon, and William succeeded Geofrey, translated from the Abby of St. Thierry, to that of St. Medard of Soissons, in the Year 1120. He had a very particular Correspondence with St. Bernard, and retir'd to the Monastery of Signy of the Order of Cisteaux, in the Year 1135, where he dy'd about the Year 1150. His Works over and above the first Book, being the Life of St. Bernard, and the three Treatises just mentioned, comprehend a Treatise call'd the Mirrour of Faith; another intituled the Ænigma of Faith; a Book of Meditation; A Treatise of the Nature of the Body and the Soul; Another against Abaelard; a Book of the Works of William de Conches; A Treatise upon the Sacrament of the Altar; and lastly, an Exposition of the Canticles. All these Works are to be met with in the fourth Tome of the Bibliotheque of Cisteaux. There is moreover mention made of a Collection of Proverbs and Sentences, being only a Manuscript, with some other Works which are lost. The Abridgment of the two first Chapters of the Canticles, which immediately follows the preceeding Works is only an extract of remarkable things in the one and fifty first Sermons of St. Bernard upon the Canticles.

William Abbot of St. Thierry.

The Declamations and Discourses on the words of St. Peter with our Saviour Christ, are the Work of Geofrey Abbot of Igny, extracted out of the several Works of St. Bernard whose Disciple he was.

Geofrey Abbot of Igny.

The Treatise of the Ladder of the Cloyster, or the method of Praying, which was found among the Works both of St. Austin and St. Bernard, has been since restor'd to Guigue, Prior of the Grand Charter-House, upon the Credit of a Manuscript of the Charter-House of Colen, having in the beginning of it a Letter of this Guigue, address'd to Gervase, and which serves for a Preface to the Book.

Guigue Author of the Ladder of the Cloyster.

The pious Meditations concerning the knowledge of Human Nature, found amongst the Works of Hugh of St. Victor, belong neither to him nor St. Bernard, but rather to some more Modern Author.

Works belonging to Anonymous Authors, found among those of St. Bernard.

The Treatise of the Edification the Inner House or of Conscience, found also among the Works of Hugh of St. Victor, belongs to some Monk, in all probability of the Order of Cisteaux, who liv'd much about the same time with St. Bernard. The same Judgment may be given concerning another Treatise of Conscience, and of another Treatise of the model of Life and Manners, which follows this.

The Treatise of Charity is composed of Matters drawn out of the Works of Richard of St. Victor, Peter of Blois, and of St. Bernard.

The Treatise Entituled the Mystical Vine, upon the words of our Saviour Christ, I am the true Vine, though it does not belong to St. Bernard, yet was written by some Author not long after him.

The Meditation on the Passion and Resurrection of Jesus Christ, which bears the name of St. Bernard in some Manuscript, yet is not at all like his Stile, no more than the Lamentation on the Passion of our Saviour, and the Treatise on the three principal Mysteries of our Religion.

The Treatise of Virtues is not likewise of St. Bernard's Stile, but rather belongs to some Benedictin Monk, who writ it for Probationers, on the three Virtues of Humility, Obedience and Charity.

The Exposition on the Lord's Prayer belongs to the same Author.

These Treatises are follow'd by some Sermons of St. Aelreda, of Nicholas Disciple and Secretary to St. Bernard, who came from the Monastery of Montier-Ramey to Clairvaux, and who left this in disgust to St. Bernard; of Oger, Abbot of Lucedio, in the Diocess of Verceli, who liv'd a little while after St. Bernard; and of some other Sermons whose Authors are unknown; but which are attributed to St. Bernard, together with some other Opuscula of Piety of the same Nature, without Authors Names, among which there is a Treatise on these Words, Why are you come? Which is printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum, under the Name of David of Ausbourg, of the Order of Minorites, with another Treatise on the manner of living well, dedicated by an Anonymous Author to his Sister.

This Tome ends with some pieces of Prose, likewise falsely attributed to St. Bernard.

The Works of Gueric, Abbot of Igny.

The Sixth Tome contains the Sermons of Gueric, Abbot of Igny, whom St. Bernard brought to Clairvaux, in the Year 1131, from Tournay, where he was a Canon, and whom he had made Abbot of Igny, about the Year 1138, after that Humbert had laid down. Some Spiritual Letters of Guigue, fifth Prior of the Grand Charter-House, Author of the ancient Statutes of this Order. And the Historians of the Life of St. Bernard, whereof the first Book was composed, as we have said before, by William Abbot of St. Thierry. The second by Arnaud, Abbot of Bonneval, and the three last by Geofrey, Secretary and Disciple to St. Bernard, who had before been a follower of Abaelard, and who after having been Abbot of Igny, succeeded in the Year 1162, in the Abby of Clairvaux at Fastrede, and in the Year 1175, retir'd to Fossa Nova in Italy, of which he was Abbot, as also afterwards of Haute-Combe, about the end of this Century. He also writ a Commentary on the Canticles, the Life of St. Peter of Tarantaise, and divers other Treatises or Sermons which were never Printed. Cardinal Baronius has given us a Letter of this Geofrey, Address'd to Henry Cardinal-Bishop of Albani, against Gilbert of La Porre, which Father Mabillon has also placed at the end of this Volume, together with a Sermon of the ſame Author for the Anniverſary on the Death of St. Bernard, and a Letter of the ſame to Foſbert on the Lord's Prayer.

The Hiſtory of the Miracles of St. Bernard.

The five Books of the Life of St. Bernard are follow'd by two Others containing an Account of his Miracles, one whereof conſiſts of divers Pieces, that is of three Letters. One of Philip a Monk of Clairvaux to Sampſon Arch-Biſhop of Rheims. The Other writ by the Monks of this Monaſtery to the Clergy of Colen, and the third by Geofrey Abbot of Igny to the Biſhop of Conſtance: The Second is drawn out of the Book entituled The Great Beginning of the Order of Ciſteaux.

Other Lives of St. Bernard.

Beſide theſe Authors Father Mabillon gives us likewiſe the Life of St. Bernard compos'd by Alanus, who from being Abbot of Larivoir was made Biſhop of Auxerre in the year 1153. and retir'd to Clairvaux in the year 1161 where he dy'd in the year 1181. Alſo ſome Fragments of a third Life of St. Bernard which was believ'd to belong to Geofrey. And a fourth Life of St. Bernard written to-about the year 1180. by John the Hermit, who had liv'd with St. Bernard's Diſciples. He alſo Adds a Poem of the Monk Philotheus of the Life and Praiſes of St. Bernard, with Verſes likewiſe of other Authors in his Commendation. And Laſtly the Bull of the Canonization of this Saint together with the Teſtimonies that divers Authors had given of him which concludes this Volume.

Nicholas a Monk of Clairvaux.

He might alſo have put into this Volume the Letters of Nicholas of Clairvaux Secretary to St. Bernard Publiſh'd by Father Picart a Regular Canon of St. Victor, and Inſerted in the 22 Tome of the laſt Bibliotheca Patrum. They are about 55. all full of wit and written in a very engaging Style; but they contain nothing remarkable either on account of Doctrine or Church-Diſcipline. This Nicholas after having left Clairvaux, retir'd into his Monaſtery of Montier-Ramey, where he dy'd about the year 1180. M. Baluze has alſo given us two of his Letters in the Second Tome of his Miſcellaneous Works.

The Character and Judgment of St. Bernard.

St. Bernard's Style is Lively, Noble and Conciſe; his Thoughts Sublime and his Diction Pleaſant and Curious. He equally abounds with good Matter, Tenderneſs and Force. He is ſweet and Violent: He engages the Mind by his Inſinuating Manner, and touches the heart with his Movements. His Exhortations are Preſſing; His Admonitions full of Gravity; His Reprimands Efficacious; His Reproaches ſo temper'd with good nature that it is eaſie to perceive that he is in Charity with the Perſon that he Rallies and reproves rather to correct than to inſult or domineer over him. He knows how to commend without Flattery, and to tell Truth without Offending. He diverts, recreates and pleaſes; He Inſtills dread and Inſpires Love; his knowledge is more uſeful and wholeſome Doctrine than Curious Learning. He is ſo full of the Holy Scriptures that ſcarce a Period paſſes but he has ſome words or expreſſions out of them. St. Ambroſe and St. Auſtin are thoſe of the Fathers which he has follow'd moſt, and which he conſiders as two Patterns that he is Indiſpenſably bound to Imitate. He alſo Underſtood very well the Canons and Rules of Diſcipline of the Church; but he more particularly apply'd himſelf to Divinity and Morality. His Moral Sentences are noble, lively, weighty, and contain a great deal of ſence in few words. He is Ingenious and very fertil in Allegories. He treats of Doctrines after the manner of the Ancients, and not According to the Methods of the Scholaſticks, and Controverſiaries of his Time, which has gain'd him the Title of the Laſt of the Fathers. Altho' he has taken moſt of his Thoughts from the Ancients, yet has he manag'd them with ſo great Addreſs that they ſeem to be his own. He was in ſo great Reputation for Piety and Learning while he liv'd, that all Potentates deſir'd to have their Differences determin'd by him, and they look'd upon his Deciſions as Indiſpenſable Laws. The Proudeſt Kings and Princes have willingly condeſcended to obey him; The Biſhops not only had recourſe to his knowledge, but likewiſe regarded his Deciſions as ſo many Oracles; and have Referr'd themſelves to him about the moſt Important Affairs of the Church. The Popes themſelves have taken his Advice and look'd upon it as the greateſt ſupport of the Holy See. And all People had a very profound Reſpect and particular Veneration for his Perſon and Character. In a word, it may be ſaid of him that even in his ſolitude, he govern'd all the Churches of the Weſt. But what is moſt remarkable is that he knew how to join the Love of ſilence and a Retreat with ſo many Occupations and Employs, as likewiſe a Profound Humility with ſo great an Elevation.

Editions of St. Bernards Works.

No Father of the Church has had his works ſo often printed as St. Bernard. The Firſt Edition is that of his Sermons on the Times and Saints, Printed with his Book Dedicated to the Knights Templars, in the year 1475 at Mayence by Peter Schoiffer. About the ſame time the Treatiſe of Conſideration, the Apology to William Abbot of St. Thierry, and The Treatiſe of Commands and Diſpenſations were printed at Rhoan. In the year 1481. his Letters with his Sermons were Printed at Bruſſels. This Edition was follow'd by that of Paris in the year 1494. which contains 310 Letters with his Sermons on the Canticles. The Editions of Breſſe of the year 1495. of Spire in the year 1501. and of Venice in the year 1503 are alſo very Imperfect. That of Paris in the year 1508 contains almoſt all this Saints Works: They were Collected by the care of John Bouchard and Printed by John Petit. In the year 1515 Joſſe Clictou Printed them at Lyons with the Sermons of Gilbert de Hoiland on the Canticles. This Edition has been ſeveral times Reprinted at Paris and Lyons. In the year 1520 two Monks of Clairvaux Publiſh'd a New Edition of St. Bernard's Works more correct than the former, Printed the Firſt time at Lyons. Some time after Francis Comeſtor of the College of Sorbonne revis'd the works of this Saint, and Printed a new Edition at Paris in the year 1547. Whilſt this Edition was ſelling and Reprinting, Anthony Marcellin publiſh'd another at Baſil in the year 1552. In which St. Bernards works are rang'd after a New Order, and Divided into four Parts: The Firſt containing his Sermons: The Second his Letters: The Third his Treatiſes: and the Fourth his ſuppos'd Works. In the year 1566 Francis Comeſtor's Edition was Re-printed as Printed with the Additions found in the Edition of Baſil and ſome other Treatiſes. After this John Gillot undertook to preſent the Publick a New Edition of St. Bernard's Works, more Correct and more Ample than the former; This was Printed at Paris by

Nivelle

Nivelle in the year 1572. and afterwards Re-printed ſeveral times, particularly in the year 1586. In the beginning of the following Century, Edmund Tiraqueau a Monk of Ciſteaux publiſh'd a new Edition of St. Bernard's Works, in the year 1601. And Eight years after John Picart gave another which was reprinted ſeveral times at divers Places. At length James Merlon Horſtius labour'd ſeriouſly to get a good Edition of this Fathers works, and after a conſiderable time and a great deal of pains taken, he Produc'd one and Printed it in the year 1641. This Edition was receiv'd with Applauſe, and Reprinted in divers Places. Nevertheleſs Horſtius having paſt over ſeveral Faults in the Text, which might be corrected by Aſſiſtance of the Manuſcripts, Father Chantelon of the Congregation of St. Maur undertook to reviſe his Edition and Preſented the Publick with his Sermons on the Times, and the Saints corrected, in ſeveral Places. This Father dying before he had finiſh'd his Deſign, Father Mabillon was pitched upon to continue what he had ſo well begun, who Publiſh'd this Saints Works entire in the year 1666. in a Great and ſmall Volume according to the Model of Horſtius, and review'd and corrected by divers Manuſcripts. But as this Edition was the firſt work of this Learned Monk, he ſometime after diſcovered ſeveral Errors which he had pretermitted before, and therefore Undertook a Second Impreſſion at Paris in two Volumes in Folio in the year 1690. In which the Order is altogether New, and which is moreover enrich'd with fine Prefaces, and divers ſhort Notes at the bottom of the Pages, and which reach to the end of the firſt Volume. It is this Edition we have follow'd in theſe Extracts which we have made.

CHAP. V.

The Life and Writings of Peter, Sirnam'd the Venerable Abbot of Cluny.

Peter the Venerable Abbot of Cluny.

PEter Maurice Sirnam'd the Venerable, the Ninth Abbot of Cluny, deſcended from a Noble Family of Auvergne. His Father Maurice, and his mother Rungarda preſented him to the Monaſtery of Cluny, where he took upon him the Habit of that Order at the hands of Hugh the firſt Abbot of Cluny of that name. Whilſt Pontius was Abbot he was made Prior of Vezelay, and then of Domnus; and at laſt Elected Abbot of Cluny in the year 1123. on our Lady's Aſſumption day, when he was but Thirty years Old or thereabouts. He dy'd in the year 1157. on Chriſtmas day.

Whilſt he was Abbot he wrote a great many Letters, of which they have made a Collection divided into ſix Books. In the Laſt Book is inſerted a Treatiſe againſt the Jews, and another Tract againſt the Petrobuſians. He likewiſe compos'd two Books containing the Narratives of ſeveral Miracles which happen'd in his time; four Sermons; a particular Letter againſt thoſe who maintain'd that Jeſus Chriſt was not in expreſs Terms call'd GOD in the Goſpel; ſeveral pieces of Proſe, one an Encomium of our Saviour, another upon St. Benedict, a Third upon the Reſurrection of our Saviour, and a fourth in Honour of St. Hugh; two Hymns, the one upon the Virgin Mary, and the other upon Mary Magdalen; and a diſcourſe in Proſe upon the Virgin Mary. He procur'd the Alcoran to be turn'd out of Arabick into Latin, and made a Treatiſe to refute it in oppoſition to Mahometaniſm.

We have almoſt all theſe Works printed a-part at Paris in the year 1522. at Ingoldſtat in 1546. in the Library of Cluny, and in the laſt Bibliotheca Patrum.

Among this Authors Letters there are ſeveral which contain ſeveral conſiderable Points both of the Hiſtory and the Diſcipline of theſe times; ſo that we cannot forbear giving you an Abſtract of them.

The Firſt Letter of the firſt Book is directed to Pope Innocent II. He acquaints him that the Arch-Biſhop of Bourdeaux who was a zealous promoter of the Intereſts of his Holyneſs, had given him intelligence of the News he had receiv'd: That he was heartily glad at the happy ſucceſs of his Affairs, and that he congratulated him for the great care he took in Reforming the Church. He declares to him that he is very much concern'd that he is not in a poſture of being an Aſſiſtant in ſo great an undertaking. He exhorts him to perſevere in the vigorous maintenance of his Dignity, in hopes that God, who had already ſubdu'd part of his Enemies, would at laſt bring the reſt under his feet. He aſſures him that he ſhall always be inviolably at the Devotion of his Holineſs, and that where or in what Circumſtance ſoever he ſhould be, he would always regard him as the Soveraign Pontiff. In the Cloſe of this Letter he intreats the Pope to remember that the Church increaſed at firſt by Sufferings and Perſecutions, and that it ſurmounted all oppoſition by Patience: That he had combated againſt its Enemies Seven years already, that in the Eighth it was to be hop'd, he would ſing Praiſes of Joy and Exultation. This Concluſion makes it appear that this Letter was wrote in the ſeventh year of the Pontificate of Innocent II. Anno Chriſti 1137.

In the Second of the ſame Book he wrote word to the Biſhop of Albani, that the Biſhop of Troyes was ready to beſtow one of the Prebends of his Church on the Monks of Cluny, as formerly the Prebends of Chartres, and Orleans had been beſtow'd on them. He intreats him to promote this Buſineſs at Rome, if he thought in Conſcience he could ſafely do it. He likewiſe intreats him to prevail upon the Pope to remit to him the Tryal of a Prieſt within his Juriſdiction, who was gone to Piſa, where the Court of Rome then was, in order to have his Cauſe heard there.

In the Third he wrote to Haimerick Chancellor of the Church of Rome, concerning the Affair of the Monks of Aniana, who had preferr'd great complaints againſt the Biſhop of Bezius. He therein takes notice that in his time the Members of the Church were very much diſjoynted in his Country, that the ſuperiors inſulted over the Inferiors, and the Biſhops over the Monks; ſo that (ſays he) it ſeems as if their Aim and Deſign was not to feed their Flocks like Shepherds, but fleece and drain them like Hirelings.

In the fourth he acquainted Hugh Arch-Biſhop of Roan of the Death of one of his Clerks, whom he had aſſiſted in the laſt Moment of his Life. He takes notice that they had given him the Extreme Unction before the Viaticum, and that afterwards he receiv'd the Sacrament twice.

In the Eleventh he intreats Pope Innocent to be favourable to the Church of Orleans by confirming the Election of Heli Abbot of St. Sulpicius to the Biſhoprick of that Church.

By the Fifteenth he acquaints Adela of the death of Henry King of England, who departed this Life on the ſecond of December 1135. after he had receiv'd all his Sacraments, as he obſerves in this Letter.

In the Seventeenth he acquainted Pope Innocent II. of the Murders committed on the Sub-dean of Orleans, and Thomas Arch-deacon of Paris, and prays him to confirm by his Apoſtolick Authority, the Sentence paſs'd in France againſt the Murderers.

The Twentieth directed to Monk Ciſtebert contains a long Inſtruction about the Duties and Virtues of Monks.

In the Twenty Third he declares to Pope Innocent that he had much ado to reſolve upon ſending any of his Religious to re-eſtabliſh the Abbey of Luxeu, becauſe he fear'd it would prejudice his Monaſtery by drawing off the Monks from thence; and that beſides it was eaſier to found new Monaſteries than to re-eſtabliſh Old Ones: That however in obedience to the Commands of his Holineſs, he had offer'd to the Monks of the Abbey of Luxeu, who had waited upon him, to ſend them an Abbot and ſome Officers; but that they had rejected the Religious which he had offer'd them.. He intreats the Pope, that if they were ſtill reſolv'd to have a Monk of Cluny for their Abbot, he would not grant them Liberty to chooſe whom they pleas'd, but order them to be ſatisfyed with his Choice.

In the Twenty Seventh he complains to the ſame Pope, of the outrages offer'd to the Arch-Biſhops, Biſhops and Abbots, among whom he was preſent in the Town of Luni.

The Twenty Eighth is an Apology for the Order of Cluny againſt that of Ciſteaux, directed to St. Bernard; wherein after he had paſs'd ſeveral Compliments upon him for his Learning and Piety, he relates the Points, upon which the Monks of Ciſteaux pretended, that thoſe of Cluny deviated from the Rule of St. Benedict; which are as follow. (1.) That they beſtow'd the Monaſtick Habit on Novices as ſoon as they were preſented, without ſtaying till their probation Year was over, according as the Rule preſcribes. (2.) That they made uſe of Habits made with Skins. (3.) That they wore Breeches always, though it was not permitted by the Rule, unleſs in caſe of Travelling. (4.) That they had thicker covering on their Beds than was preſcribed by the Rule. (5.) That they had more than two Diſhes ſerv'd up at Table with a ſecond Courſe. (6.) That they always admitted the Religious Apoſtates, tho' the Rule preſcribes that they ſhould admit them only thrice. (7.) That they did not obſerve the Faſts which the Rule preſcribed. (8.) That they did not inure themſelves to any Manufacture. (9.) That when they entertain'd Strangers, they did not bow to them, and that the Abbot did not waſh their Hands and Feet, as the Rule preſcribes. (10.) That the Abbot kept not an Inventory of all the Tools and Utenſils of the Monaſtery. (11.) That when they are out of their Monaſtery, they do not bow the Knee, as uſual in ſaying their Office. (12.) That the Table of the Abbot is not ſet apart for the Entertainment of Strangers. (13.) That when two Monks chance to meet, the Younger does not ask Bleſſing of the Elder. (14.) That they do not make one of the eldeſt Monks Porter of the Monaſtery Gate. (15.) That the Porter does not reply Deo Gratias, i. e. Praiſed be God, to thoſe who knock at the Gate of the Monaſtery. (16.) That they renew the Vows that they have made in one Monaſtery, when they admit themſelves into another. (17.) That they admit the Monks of another Monaſtery into theirs, without the leave of their Abbot. (18.) That they would be exempted from the Juriſdiction of their Biſhop. (19.) That they hold Pariſhes and Tenths, which are only the Propriety of thoſe who Preach and Adminiſter the Sacraments. (20.) That they are poſſeſſors of Lands, and concern themſelves with the Affairs and Buſineſs of this Life, as if they were mere Seculars having Territories, Seignories, Vaſſals, Banks, and Monks who are employ'd as Sollicitors and Advocates.

He returns a Reply to all theſe Objections, in the Name of the Monks of Cluny, and at firſt ſays in General, that they who make thoſe Objections, are an upſtart ſort of Phariſees, who were for diſtinguiſhing themſelves from other Folks, and would be reckoned better than them. He asks them how it comes to paſs that they who boaſt to be ſuch ſtrict obſervers of the Rule, forget at the ſame time the Obſervation of one Article, wherein the Monks are enjoyned, not only to call, but alſo ſincerely to eſteem themſelves to be the refuſe and vileſt of all Mankind. "Is it (ſays he) the effects of this "Article, which injoyns us to believe and aſſert our ſelves to be worſe than others, to undervalue "their Actions, and overprize our own, to contemn them, and ſet too high an eſteem upon our ſelves? "——You ſtile your ſelves the only true Monks now extant in the World, and treat all other Monks as "Impoſtors and Corrupt; you wear an Habit of extraordinary Colour to diſtinguiſh your ſelves from "others, and you brag to be the white Monks in the midſt of black ones, though the black habit was "made choice of by our Fathers out of Humility; and though we read that St. Martin, that admira- "ble true Monk, wore a long black Habit, and not a ſhort white one as yours is. Now don't you "violate the Rule of which you pretend to be ſo great Obſervers, ſince it declares it ſelf againſt Monks "being concerned for the Colour or the Quality of the Stuff which they wear? Are not you Pre- "varicators in changing that Colour which is moſt conformable to Humility and Auſterity for ano- "ther more glaring and the emblem of Joy.

After he had made theſe Reflections on the Monks of Ciſteaux, he maintains that thoſe of Cluny do not tranſgreſs the Rule, in following the Traditions of their Fathers, ſince they derive them from the Saints, who authorize them by the Sanctity of their Lives, and by their Miracles, and who had a Privilege of preſcribing Laws to them. Afterwards he returns a more particular and direct Anſwer to the foremention'd Objections. (1.) That as to what related to the Admittance of Novices, they therein follow'd the Rule of Jesus Christ, who order'd the Rich Man in the Gospel who desir'd to be perfect, immediately to sell all he had, to give it to the Poor and to follow him; and who order'd the man that was willing to go bury his Father before he would follow him, to leave the Dead to bury the Dead, and to follow him without any more ado. And that they therein imitated the Example of the Apostles who follow'd Jesus Christ as soon as ever he call'd them, and who receiv'd into the Christian Church all those who offer'd themselves. He owns that the Letter of the Rule is against this Custom; but withall averrs that the End and Intention of the Rule being Charity and the Salvation of our Neighbour, which are in force so long as any one practises the Rule even in the strict and Literal Sense, one may with reason deviate from the Letter of the Rule. He adds that since the Discipline of the Church has been alter'd with respect to a great many points, 'tis no such extraordinary matter that the Monastical Discipline should be subject to the same Alterations. (2.) That St. Benedict in his Rule had prescrib'd nothing directly concerning Habits: That he had no where prohibited the Wearing of Leather; that he only order'd that they should be different according to the Variety of Climats: That a Leathern Habit was most suitable to Austerity and Solitude. That the Prophets, Elias, St. John Baptist, and the Ancient Hermits were cloath'd with Leathern Garments: That we find in story, that St. Benedict himself wore such an Habit: That lastly it must be left to the discretion of the Abbot to prescribe the Quality of Habits, according to the Climate, the Season, and the Constitution of those who wear them. (3.) That they wear Breeches for Decency and Modesty's Sake. (4.) That the Rule leaves the Abbot full power to prescribe what sort of Covering the Monks should have on their Beds. (5.) That with respect to Eating, we ought not Scrupulously to adhere to the express Terms of the Rule, since St. Benedict gives the Abbot liberty to Augment the portion of Bread and Wine, if they have work'd more than ordinary: And that 'tis well said of him, that 'tis Enough to allow the Monks two dishes of Meat upon the Account of their Infirmities, that so if they have no Stomach to the One they may eat of the other; but that if it should so happen that they could not eat of either of these two dishes, he has no where prohibited the allowing them a third or fourth Dish: Lastly that we ought to proportion the Quality and the Quantity both of Meat and Drink to the Constitution and strength of men, and to refer all to Charity, which is that Soveraign Rule, by which we ought to be rul'd and govern'd. (6.) That in receiving the Religious as often as they were willing to return, they did nothing but what was agreable to the Evangelical Law, and to the Practice of the Church: That what St. Benedict says on this subject in the Rule was only by way of Commination. (7.) That as to the Fasts they observ'd what was prescrib'd by the Rule, viz. from the 13th of September to the Beginning of Lent, they did not eat on any day (except Sundays) till None: but that from Whitsontide to the 13th of September they did always eat at Noon, tho' the Rule seems to prescribe that on Wednesdays and Fridays they should not eat till the Hour of None, because it leaves the Abbot at his Liberty to augment or diminish the Fast. (8.) That they had particular Reasons for not working with their hands, since such a Labour was injoyn'd the Monks only to keep them from being Idle, and that they being engag'd in other more useful Employments, were dispens'd from that. (9.) That it was a sort of Childishness to condemn the Order of Cluny, because the Religious and the Abbot of that house did not prostrate themselves before all the strangers that came to them, nor wash their Feet; and besides that this Employment would wholly divert the Monks from all their other Duties by reason of the great Number of the strangers: That however to avoid the total neglect of what the Rule prescrib'd each Monk every year washes the Feet of three strangers, and presents them with Bread and Wine. (10.) That the Abbot was discharg'd from the Care of keeping an Inventory of the Tools and Utensils of the Monastery, provided another man did it, since it is impossible for him to do all things himself. (11.) That they do not omit those Genuflections which they are requir'd to make during the Office, tho' they say it abroad, unless when the badness of the Weather hinders them, and that then they say a Miserere. (12.) That the Abbot orders an allowance of meat and Drink to be given to all strangers, but that it was not proper to introduce all manner of persons without distinction into the Refectory; nor that he should leave the Religious to wait upon Others. (13.) That the Young Monks do ask blessing viva voce of the Elder, when they meet them out of the Bounds of their Monastery; but that within those Bounds they only ask it by a low Bow without saying any thing, that they might preserve their Silence. (14.) That if they do not place at their Gate an Elderly Monk, yet they set one there of known and approv'd fidelity and Wisdom; that the Monastery-Gates are almost always open in the day time, and that 'tis sufficient that they have one to open them when they are shut. (15.) That 'tis not at all necessary that the Porter should cry Deo-Gratias to all Comers. (16.) That there was no inconveniency for the Monks when they change their Monastery to renew their Vows, and that the Rule it self in express terms permits the Renewing of the Vow of Constancy. (17.) That they are satisfied that a Monk cannot leave his Monastery without the leave of his Abbot, so long as that Abbot discharges the Duty of a Pastor; that is so long as he takes care to provide for the Bodily necessities of his Religious: But that if it should so happen that a Monk cannot Live or be safe under an Abbot in one Monastery, he may leave that Monastery without the Licence of his Abbot: That 'tis upon this account that the Abbot of Cluny has obtain'd a Privilege from the Holy See, of entertaining all the Religions who are forc'd to leave their Monastery for either of these reasons. (18) That they have for their Bishop the Chief of all Bishops, and the Bishop of all the Churches, namely the Bishop of Rome, who has granted them the Privilege of being exempted from the Interdictions or Excommunications of all other Bishops besides himself: That notwithstanding this they receive the holy Chrism, the holy Oyls, holy Orders, and the Consecration of their Churches from the hands of other Bishops: That to find fault with their Privileges is the same thing as to question the Authority of the Holy See; that several other Monks enjoy the same Privileges; and that Saint Gregory granted such to a great many Monasteries.

Peter the Venerable Abbot of Cluny

Peter the Venerable Abbot of Cluny.

(19.) That the Pope has given them leave to have Pariſhes, and to enjoy Tenths: That 'tis reaſonable for them who offer up continual Prayers for the Faithful to live by the offerings of the Faithful; and that as Secular Clerks have a Right to enjoy the Revenues of Eccleſiaſtical Eſtates, becauſe they adminiſter the Sacrament, and preach the Goſpel, ſo the Monks likewiſe may receive the Oblations of the Faithful, upon the account of the Pſalms which they repeat in their behalf, upon the account of the Tears which they pour out to divert the Juſtice of God, and upon the account of the Alms, and other good Works which they practiſe. (20.) That the Religious are not forbid holding Temporal Eſtates of what kind ſoever; and that they may maintain their Eſtates by all manner of juſt and lawful ways. Laſtly, he obſerves that we ought to make a diſtinction between two ſorts of Precepts the one Immutable, which can never be chang'd, ſuch as our Love to God and our Neighbour, whatever elſe is commanded by the Laws of God, and others which may be chang'd for a greater Good, or for the avoiding a greater Evil; and he avers, that whatever they had alter'd in the Rule of St. Benedict, was of the latter kind; and that they did not change it but only for the greater Benefit, and to fulfil Chriſtian Charity, which ought to be the Supream Rule and Law.

☞ [And now upon this whole Debate or Controverſie between the Monks of Ciſteaux and thoſe of Cluny, we cannot forbear making this one Remark, that according to our old courſe Engliſh Proverb, here has been a great Cry, but little Wool; a great noiſe and clamour about the Externals, but ſcarce one Word ſaid, Pro, or Con, about the Internals of Religion; which ſufficiently ſhews, that when Men are once wedded to any party in Religion, their greateſt Heats happen about the Circumſtantials of Religion, to which that Party adheres, and that they have little or no Concern for the Fundamentals of the truly Catholick and Chriſtian Church.]

The Twenty Ninth Letter is likewiſe written to St. Bernard, upon a particular Quarrel about one of the Monks of Cluny elected to the Biſhoprick of Langres, whereof St. Bernard makes mention in his 164th. Letter, and in thoſe that enſue. Peter of Cluny in this Letter ſays, that Saint Bernard being prejudic'd againſt this Monk upon ſome falſe Reports, oppos'd his Ordination.

The Thirty Third is written to Pope Innocent, about another Difference between the Monks of Cluny, and thoſe of Ciſteaux. This Pope in the Year 1132, had exempted the Monks of Ciſteaux from paying Tenths. This was a conſiderable Prejudice to the Monks of Cluny, particularly to the Abbey of Gigny, who had conſiderable Tithes to receive from the Lands belonging to the Monaſtery of Miroir. The Monks of Gigny were for demanding them, for which the Pope had interdicted their Church; whereupon Peter the Venerable conjures him not to deprive the Monks of Gigny of a Right which belong'd to them, and to ſuſpend the Interdiction which he had pronounc'd againſt them, that ſo they might have time to inform him of the juſtice of their Cauſe. About the ſame time he wrote upon the ſame Subject, the Thirty Fourth Letter to Haimeric, Chancellor of the Church of Rome, whereby he repreſents to him more at length the injuſtice which he pretends was done to his Order; and directed another Letter to the Chapter General of Ciſteaux, whereby he exhorts them to quit this their Pretenſion. This is the Thirty Fifth Letter, which is written with a great deal of Smartneſs and Diſcretion. However, becauſe ſeveral Abbots of the Order of Ciſteaux were diſpleaſed at it; the next Year he ſent them a Letter of Excuſe, which is the Thirty Sixth and laſt of this Book. The Monks of Gigny not being able to obtain of the Pope what they deſired, were for doing themſelves Juſtice, and ſome few Years after went to the Monaſtery of Miroir, where they committed great Outrages. Pope Eugenius III. Innocent's Succeſſor being inform'd thereof, wrote to Peter the Venerable about it, and threatned the Monks of Gigny to puniſh them ſeverely, in caſe they did not make Reparation for the wrong which they had done to the Monks of Miroir. St. Bernard and Peter the Venerable, met at Cluny to adjuſt the Affair; the Damage was eſtimated at above Thirty thouſand Sols; but the Monks of Gigny having made but very inconſiderable offers of Reparation, St. Bernard wrote to the Pope about it. At laſt the Affair terminated in an Accommodation made after the Death of St. Bernard, in the Year 1155.

The Firſt Letter of the Second Book is wholly Doctrinal. He therein proves againſt a Man, who was faln into the Error of the Apollinariſts, that the Humanity of Jeſus Chriſt was compoſed both of Soul and Body.

The Second is directed to Peter Arch-Biſhop of Lions. He congratulates his being advanc'd to the Primacy of a Kingdom, which acknowledg'd no other Superiour than the Holy See, and which had an Authority over all the Churches of France. He exhorts him to uſe his utmoſt Diligence for the Reſtoration of Piety, particularly within his Dioceſs. In this Letter, he gives us a Deſcription of the Irregularity of the Manners of the Eccleſiaſticks and Religious.

In the Third he complains to Pope Innocent of the Coldneſs which he ſhew'd to the Cardinal Biſhop of Albany, to whom he lay under great Engagements; and exhorts him to leave him in France with Authority, where he was capable of doing a great deal of Good, till ſuch time as he could recall him with Honour to Rome.

In the Fourth he exhorts Gilo Biſhop of Freſcati to abandon the Party of Peter de Leon, which could not be the true Church, ſince it was reduc'd to a ſmall Number of People ſhut up in ſeveral Forts of Italy or Poitou. The Thirty Fourth is likewiſe directed to the ſame Biſhop, upon the ſame Subject.

In the Seventh he ſhews Theotard Prior de la Charité, that he is bound both in Duty and Obedience not to quit his Charge.

In

In the Tenth, he with a great deal of Freedom remonſtrates to Pope Innocent, that he does not do well in recalling the Cardinal of Albani to Rome.

Peter the Venerable Abbot of Cluny.

In the Eleventh he complains to that Cardinal, that they had turn'd out ſeveral Monks out of the Monaſtery of Verdun to put ſome Clerks into their places.

The Sixteenth is a Circular Letter to all the Superiours of the Monaſteries of his Order, whereby he recommends to their Prayers his Mother Raingarda, who departed this Life on the 22d. of June, and orders them to ſay thirty Maſſes for the Peace of her Soul, and to feed twelve poor People in the Monaſteries where it could be done, and that in the others, the Prieſts ſhould ſay two Maſſes, beſides the General Maſs.

In the next Letter, he tells us after what manner he receiv'd the News of his Mother's Death, who was become a Religious of Marſigny. He therein makes her Encomium, and deſcribes the Circumſtances of her Death, which was wholly Chriſtian. Theſe and the following Letters inform us that ſhe dyed at the time of his Return from the Council of Piſa, held in the Year 1134.

The Twenty Sixth is a Letter of Pope Innocent directed to Peter of Cluny, wherein he recommends himſelf to his Prayers, and diſpenſes him from coming to Rome, becauſe of his Infirmity.

In the Twenty-Eighth, Peter Abbot of Cluny intreats Pope Innocent, not to take the Prior of Vezelay out of his Monaſtery, to make him Biſhop of Langres.

The Thirty Firſt is written to William Biſhop of Orange, who had interdicted the Monaſtery of Puy, becauſe the Monks retain'd a Church which had been given them by the Predeceſſor of that Biſhop. Peter of Cluny, prays him to do them Juſtice, if not, to appoint a day wherein he would have the Affair diſcuſs'd before the Pope's Legat.

The Thirty Third is written to Atto Biſhop of Troyes about the Difference which had been between him and the Biſhop of Auxerre, about the Ordinations of ſeveral Monks of the Order of Cluny, made at La Charité upon the Loire. Peter of Cluny was willing to ſend him the Privileges of the Holy See, which allow the Monks of Cluny to be Ordain'd by what Biſhop they pleas'd, when he once could underſtand that this Affair was adjuſted. He deſires he would be pleas'd to ſend him an account thereof, and writes to him about two other private Affairs, the latter of which relates to a Clerk of his Church nam'd Guarin, who deſir'd to have the firſt vacant Prebend conferr'd upon him.

The next Letter is written to the ſame Biſhop, about Gebwin his Arch-Deacon, who was gone to Rome about ſome Difference which he had with his Biſhop. In his Journey he ſtop'd at Cluny, and had promis'd Peter to return to Troyes, and adjuſt Matters with his Biſhop.

Atto in the Thirty Fifth Letter returns an Anſwer to the foregoing Letter.

The following Letters of Peter of Cluny contain nothing in them of moment, till you come to the Seventh of the Third Book; wherein he replies to the Queſtions which had been propos'd to him by one of his Monks nam'd Gregory, who was a great Student. The firſt Queſtion was, whether the Virgin Mary had received an Increaſe of Grace, in receiving the Holy Ghoſt with the Apoſtles on the day of Pentecoſt. Peter of Cluny replies, that ſhe had received no increaſe of Charity or of ſanctifying Grace, ſince throughout her whole Life, ſhe had a fulneſs of Grace and Sanctity; but that ſhe might have receiv'd an Augmentation of ſome particular Gifts, ſuch as Knowledge, Prophecy, the power of working Miracles, of ſpeaking ſeveral Tongues, which yet was not very certain. The ſecond Queſtion is, how the Virgin Mary could poſſibly be ignorant of any thing after ſhe had conceived the Son of God. Peter of Cluny proves, that ſhe was ignorant of a great many things, nor is he of Opinion, that ſhe had ſuch a perfect Knowledge of God, as the Angels and Souls of good Men made Bleſſed have; and he poſitively denies, that here below ſhe enjoy'd Beatitude, though he owns that ſhe had more Knowledge and Wiſdom with reſpect to Spiritual things, than all other Mortals? The third Queſtion is upon a paſſage of St. Gregory, wherein that Father ſeems to aſſert that the Word was united to the Manhood, before it was born of the Virgin-Mary. Peter of Cluny ſays, that this paſſage has given ſome an occaſion of aſſerting that our Lord brought down his Humanity from Heaven, which is entirely contrary to the Sentiment of St. Gregory, who explains his Thoughts by ſaying, that though Jeſus Chriſt was not yet born of the Virgin, yet the Union of the Perſon of the Divine Logos with the Manhood was already typifyed and foretold, though it was not as yet known or reveal'd.

[We cannot but here obſerve, that this is one of the moſt modeſt accounts of the Perfections of the Virgin Mary to be met with among any Romaniſts, and ſuch as does not at all favour the Notions of ſome of the modern Papiſts.]

In the Third Letter of the Fourth Book, he writes to Pope Innocent in favour of Lewis the Younger, King of France, and intreats him to have ſome condeſcenſion for him. If his Youth had inclin'd him to do any thing that was not convenient. This was written upon the occaſion of the Difference between that Prince and the Arch-Biſhop of Bourges. He likewiſe gave the Pope to underſtand, that the Monaſtery of Luxeu, which he would have reform'd the laſt Year, by ſending thither ſeveral Monks of Cluny, was ſtill wholly irregular, and in a worſe Condition than before.

The Fourth is that Letter which he wrote to the ſame Pope about Abaelard.

By the Fifth, he recommends to that Pope a Canon of Lions nam'd Heraclius.

In the Seventh, he writes again to that Pope in favour of Arnulphus, Arch-Deacon of Seez, Elected and Conſecrated Biſhop of Lizieux, that the Pope might confirm him in ſpite of the Attempts made by the Count of Angers, to the contrary.

In the Eighth, he complains to Milo Biſhop of Terrouanne, for his having publickly declaim'd in his Church againſt the Monks of Cluny, accuſing them of being Proud and Diſobedient to Biſhops. He ſhews him, that if he had any thing to ſay againſt their Conduct, he ought to let them know of it, and reprove them for it privately, and not to declaim againſt them ſo publickly. Afterwards he clears them of the Accuſation, and complains that that Biſhop had hinder'd the beſtowing a Canonſhip of Abbeville on them, though it did not belong to his Dioceſs, but to the Dioceſs of Amiens.

In the Ninth, he recommends to Pope Innocent the Biſhop of Salamanca, Arch-Biſhop Elect of Compoſtella, and intreats him to approve of this Tranſlation.

In the Tenth, he intreats him to grant Hugh Arch-Biſhop of Tours, leave to return to his Arch-Biſhoprick. For Hugh in his Journey to Rome fell ſick in the Monaſtery of La Charite, where he had taken upon him the Habit of that Order.

In the Eleventh, he exhorts the Arch-Biſhop of Narbonne, who was very old and infirm, to quit his Arch-Biſhoprick, and to retire to Cluny. This Letter was written from Spain, to which place he had travelled.

The Sixteenth is the Two Hundred and Twenty Eighth Letter of St. Bernard, to which Peter of Cluny reply'd by the Seventeenth, which is likewiſe the Two Hundred and Twenty Ninth of St. Bernard's Letters, of which we have given you an Abſtract. Peter of Cluny does therein at firſt declare, that the Difference which had been between them, whether about the Biſhoprick of Langres, or for Tenths, had abated nothing of the Charity, Friendſhip or Eſteem which he had for him. In the cloſe of this Letter he ſends him word, that he therewith ſent him a Verſion of the Alcoran, which he had tranſlated whilſt he was in Spain, to ſhew the Errors and Follies of the Mahometan Religion. Afterwards he gives him a ſhort account of Mahomet and of his Doctrine.

The Eighteenth is a Letter of Compliment to Pope Celeſtine, upon his Advancement to the Popedom.

The Nineteen is written to Pope Lucius, to whom he likewiſe made ſeveral Compliments, and asked him whether he ſhould ſend him the thirteen Religious, according as he had order'd him when he was at Rome. This Pope by the next Letters return'd him Anſwer, that he would do him a great Favour in ſo doing.

The Twenty Firſt is that which he wrote to Heloiſſa, upon the Death of Abaelard.

The Twenty Second is written to Lucius, in favour of the Biſhop of Orleans, who was accus'd by ſeveral of his Clergy.

By the Twenty Fourth, he recommends to him the Religious whom he ſent him.

In the Twenty Fifth, he wrote to Pope Eugenius III. in favour of the Arch-Biſhop of Beſancon.

In the Twenty Seventh, he exhorts Atto Biſhop of Troyes to retire to Cluny.

In the Thirtieth, he blames thoſe who caus'd to be ſung or recited ſuch Hymns or Hiſtories in the Church, as are full of Fictions; and he ſays that not long ago he was very much put to the Bluſh in being forc'd to hear Sung, and to ſing himſelf in the Church an Hymn in Honour of St. Benedict, which contains twenty falſities at leaſt, without mentioning the Impropriety of the Language, and the falſeneſs of Quantity; which had engaged him to make another Hymn in Honour of that Saint.

The Thirty Sixth is written to King Lewis the Young, exhorting him to puniſh the Jews, not by putting them to Death, but by taking away from them ſuch effects as they had unjuſtly gotten by their Uſuries and Extortion.

In the Fourth Letter of the Fifth Book, he writes to Pope Eugenius III. the Cauſes which the Abbot de la Chaiſe-Dieu alledg'd againſt the Arch-Biſhop of Arles, and the Biſhop of Viviers, nominated by his Holineſs to take Cognizanae of the Difference which was between the Biſhop of Niſmes and that Abbey.

In the Fifth he wrote to the ſame Pope, about the refuſal which the Arch-Biſhop of Bourdeaux had made of ordaining him, who had been elected Biſhop of Angoulême.

In the ſeventh, he replies to ſeveral queſtions which had been propos'd to him by Thibald Abbot of St. Colomba of Sens. Among the reſt was this, Why they repeat the Unction of the Sick at Cluny. Peter the Venerable ſays, that the Caſe is not the ſame with the Unction of the Sick, as with the Unctions of Baptiſm and Confirmation, whoſe Efficacy is ſimple and only One; nor the ſame as with the ſacerdotal Unction, or the Unctions of Churches and Holy Veſſels, which imprint a Conſecration which can never be effac'd. Whereas the effect of the Unction of the Sick being only Remiſſion of Sins, wherein Men fall after they are recovered of their Sickneſs, it ought to be repeated in the next Sickneſs.

The Sixth Book contains ſeveral Letters of Peter of Cluny to St. Bernard, and of St. Bernard to Peter of Cluny, of which the fourth is ſomewhat remarkable. Peter of Cluny therein intreats St. Bernard to procure an Union between the Monks of Cluny and of Ciſteaux, by ordering that whenever the Monks of Cluny ſhould come into the Monaſteries of thoſe of Ciſteaux, they might be entertain'd as the Monks of the Monaſtery, and admitted into the Refectory; the Dormitory, and the other Regular Places.

There are likewiſe in the ſame Book ſeveral Letters to Pope Eugenius III. in one of which (viz. the Ninth) he aſſures him that the Arch-Biſhop of Vienna does not at all oppoſe the Intereſts of the Order of Cluny, as the Pope had ſuppos'd, and ſent him word in the preceeding Letter.

In the Twelfth, he advertiſes him of the Diviſion which was in Chartreux the Great, upon occaſion of a Perſon Elected to the Biſhoprick of Grenoble.

In the Twenty Fifth, he gives him to underſtand of the Irregularities of the Biſhop of Clermont.

In the Twenty Seventh he wrote to him in favour of Humbert of Beaujeu, who returning from beyond Sea, was ſetled in the Neighbourhood of Cluny, and had put a ſtop to the Wars and Robberies committed there in his Abſence, and had quieted all the Countrey thereabouts; but becauſe he had quitted the Order of Knights Templars, and taken his Wife again, the Pope could not endure that he ſhould live in the World. Peter of Cluny in this Letter remonſtrates to him, that it was very proper for

for him to uſe his Indulgence towards this Lord, and to grant him a Diſpenſation of living with his Wife, and of leading a ſecular Life. Peter the Venerable Abbot of Cluny.

In the Twenty Eighth he wrote to him againſt the Provoſt, Abbot, and other Eccleſiaſtical Lords of Brioude, who had turned a Clerk out of his Church, and his demeans without any form of Juſtice, nay, ſo much as denying him to clear himſelf by the Tryal of Fire, as he had offered them to do.

The Forty Second, Forty Third, Forty Fourth, and Forty Fifth Letters are likewiſe written to Eugenius III. The firſt in favour of the Abbot of Brems, and the ſecond in favour of Guy Lord of Domnus, who had been interdicted by the Pope, for having marryed a ſecond Wife in the Life time of his firſt. Peter of Cluny ſhews the Pope the Reaſons upon which he believes that the firſt Marriage ought not to ſtand, and prays him to determine this Affair according to this Remonſtrance, and to take off the Interdiction which he had iſſued out againſt this Lord. The Third is in favour of the People of Placenza, who were unwilling to admit of a Biſhop, conſecrated by the Arch-Biſhop of Ravenna, and they thought they had reaſon for it, becauſe they were to admit of no Biſhop but who was ſent by the Pope. In the laſt, he acquaints the Pope of a Treaty which he had made with a Lord of his Neighbourhood.

The Fifteenth Letter of this Book, is a circular Letter written by Peter of Cluny, to all the Superiors of the Houſes of his Order, wherein he warmly reproves the Abuſe which was eſtabliſh'd among the greateſt part of his Religious, of eating Meat every day in the Week except Friday. He ſhews, that this was forbidden by the Rule of St. Benedict, which enjoyns them to eat nothing but Fiſh, and by the Example and Inſtitution of Odo, one of the Founders of their Order.

The Seventeenth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth and Twentieth Letters, are about the Croiſade. Peter of Cluny had been invited by Sugerus Abbot of St. Denys, and by St. Bernard to meet at that Aſſembly which was to be held at Chartres upon this Deſign, he excuſes himſelf from coming by two of his Letters, but withal commends that deſign.

In the Twenty Sixth written to Everard, Grand-Maſter of the Order of Knight Templars, he commends their Inſtitution, and interceeds for Humbert of Beaujeu, who had left them.

The Thirty Ninth written to his Nieces, is in commendation of a Virgin Life.

The Seventh Book contains three Letters written by Peter of Cluny, to Sugerus Abbot of St. Denys, an Anſwer of that Abbot; three Letters of St. Bernard, and one Letter of Peter of Celles, written to Peter of Cluny.

Beſides the Letters we have already mentioned, there are a great many others, which are either Letters of Compliment, or on Affairs of little Moment, and ſeveral other Moral ones about the Spiritual Monaſtick Life, ſuch as the Ninth and Tenth of the firſt Book; the Twelfth, Fifteenth, Twenty Second, and Fiftieth of the Second; the Fourteenth, Thirty Ninth, Fourtieth, Fourty Firſt and Fourty Second of the Fourth Book; the third of the Fifth; and the Thirteenth and Fourteenth of the Sixth. All theſe Letters are penn'd with a great deal of Purity and pleaſantneſs of Stile, full of Life and ſolid Thoughts. They are not indeed ſo Airy as the Letters of St. Bernard, nor ſo full of Turns and playing upon Words, but the Style is more Correct, Even and Pure.

Theſe Letters are follow'd by the Tracts of Peter of Cluny.

The firſt is dedicated to Peter of St. John's, who in a Conference which they had together, had told him, that ſome of thoſe with whom he convers'd, had aſſerted that Jeſus Chriſt is not expreſly call'd God in the Goſpel. Peter of Cluny in this Treatiſe, proves the contrary from all thoſe Paſſages in the Goſpel where Jeſus Chriſt is ſtiled God, and has ſuch Attributes apply'd to him, as belong to none but God.

The Second Tract is againſt the Jews, wherein he proves the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt, that he is the Meſſias who had been foretold by the Prophets, and refutes ſeveral Fables of the Jewiſh Talmud.

To theſe two Tracts are annexed two Prefaces, the one is Peter's of Cluny, and the other Robert's of Redines, upon the Verſion of the Alcoran, with an Abridgment of the Hiſtory and Errors of Mahomet. The Five Books which Peter of Cluny has compos'd againſt the Alcoran, have not as yet been printed.

We ſhall ſpeak of the Treatiſe againſt the Petrobuſians, when we come to treat of thoſe Hereticks.

The two Books of Miracles contain the Relation of a great many Miracles that happened in his time. In the ſecond we meet with the Life of Matthew Prior of St. Martin in the Fields, and afterwards Biſhop of Albani, and the Account of the Conteſt between Pontius and Peter the Venerable, about the Abbey of Cluny.

Of the Four Sermons penn'd by Peter of Cluny, we have only that about the Transfiguration remaining.

The pieces of Poetry which we have of his, are an Apology in Hexameters, or Pentameters againſt thoſe who found fault with the Verſes of Peter of Poitiers; ſeveral pieces of Proſe on the Life of Jeſus Chriſt, on the Reſurrection, in Honour of the Bleſſed Virgin, upon St. Mary Magdalen, and in praiſe of Hugh Abbot of Cluny. Two Hymns, one on the Feſtival of St. Benedict, and the other upon the tranſlation of his Body; and ſeveral Epitaphs on Count Euſtachius, Bernard Prior of Cluny, Reginald Arch-Biſhop of Lyons, and Peter Abaelard. It had been well if he had written as well in Verſe as in Proſe.

Peter of Cluny made likewiſe a Collection of the Statutes of his Order, which were made whilſt he was Abbot, and at the end of each Statute, has explain'd the Reaſon of their being enacted. Theſe ſtatutes relate to the Divine Service, to Faſts, the form of Habits, and ſeveral other Cuſtoms of the Monks of that Fraternity.

Father

Father Mabillon in the third Tome of his Analects, p. 481. has given us two Letters of this Author, of the Aſſociation of Prayers for the Dead, between thoſe of Chartres, and the Senators of Venice.

CHAP. VI.

An Account of the Hereſies which prevailed in the Twelfth Century.

The Hereticks of the Twelfth Century.

WE have already obſerved, that in the beginning of the foregoing Century, there appeared in ſeveral parts of France, ſuch Hereticks as were accus'd of impious Doctrines, who openly attacked the Sacraments of the Church, and ſubverted its moſt ſacred Rites and Ceremonies. The Severity with which thoſe who were taken were condemn'd, did not prevent the Sect from ſpreading further, nor this Doctrine or ſome ſuch like, from over-running the Kingdom, ſo that in this Century, a great many Hereticks appeared, whoſe chief Aim was to divert Men from the receiving of the Sacraments, and to overthrow the Hierarchy and Diſcipline of the Church.

An account of the Heretick Henry.

The firſt who appeared were Peter of Bruis, and an Hermit nam'd Henry, his Diſciple. They firſt began to broach their Doctrine in Provence, from whence the latter went to Lauſune, and afterwards into the Country of Mans. We will give you the Deſcription which the Hiſtorian of the Biſhops of Mans made of him, in ſpeaking of Hildebert. "About this time there aroſe in that Country a certain "Hypocrite, who for his wicked Actions, for his corrupt Morals, and for his abominable Doctrines, "deſerv'd the ſevereſt Puniſhments. This Man conceal'd the Rage of a Ravenous Wolf, under the ap"pearances of an innocent Sheep. His Countenance and Eyes look'd like a ruffled and tempeſtuous "Sea: He was as yet very young: He wore ſhort Hair, his Beard ſhav'd, was large in ſtature, but "very ſorrily cloath'd; walk'd apace, and bare-footed even in the hardeſt time of Winter; he was "pretty Affable, had a ſtrong terrifying Voice, and liv'd in a manner quite different from others. His "ordinary Retreats were the Cottages of Peaſants; he liv'd all day under Portico's; eat and ſlept on "ſome Hill or other in the open Air, and had acquir'd a great Reputation of Sanctity. The Women "applauded him, cry'd him up for a great Servant of God, and gave out that no perſon could have "a greater Faculty than him of converting the moſt obdurate Hearts; and that he was endued with "the Spirit of Prophecy, to diſcern the moſt inward receſſes of the Conſcience, and the moſt private "Sins. This Fame having rendred him very deſirable in the Dioceſs of Mans. He ſent thither two "of his Aſſociates and Diſciples, who liv'd in the ſame manner as he did. Thoſe Men arrived at "Mans on Aſh-Wedneſday, where they were received by the People as Angels. In imitation of their "Maſter they carryed Staffs, on the top of which was an Iron Croſs, and they wore the Dreſs of "Penitents. Biſhop Hildebert was ſurprized at the Sight, and received them kindly. He juſt upon his "departure for Rome, ordered his Arch-Deacons to give Henry leave to come into his Dioceſs, and "permit him to preach to the People. He was no ſooner come, but they flocked from all parts to "hear his Sermons, and the Clergy themſelves excited the People thereto. He had a Natural Elo"quence, and a Tone of Voice reſembling Thunder. He ſoon ſpread his Errors in his Sermons, and "ſtirred up the People againſt the Clergy, ſo that a great many Eccleſiaſticks were abus'd by them. "The Chapter of Mans perceiving this Diſorder, wrote to him, and gave him notice by one of the Ca"nons, that they prohibited him from preaching any more, either in publick or private within their "Dioceſs. The People had like to have kill'd the Canon who brought him this Meſſage, and Henry con"tinued to preach in the Churches of St. Germain and St. Vincent. He taught, that the Women who had not liv'd continently, ought to ſtrip themſelves, to burn their Hair, and to renounce their worldly Goods, to lead a Life of Poverty, by marrying likewiſe poor Men. 'Tis eaſie to gueſs how much diſturbance ſuch a Doctrine put in Practice would raiſe in the Dioceſs. Hildebert being returned from Rome, Henry retired into the Caſtle of Calais, and continued there to vent his Doctrines, and the People ſtill follow'd him, and were ſo far infatuated, that they would ſcarce aknowledge their Biſhop, or receive his Benediction. The Biſhop to undeceive the People, went to Henry, and entring into a Conference with him, ask'd him what profeſſion he was of. He anſwered him that he was a Deacon. The Biſhop asked him whether he had aſſiſted that day at Divine Service? He ſaid no; then reply'd the Biſhop, let us ſay our Matins. Henry declared that he could not ſay his Office; the Biſhop began to recite the Pſalms of the Office of the Virgin-Mary; but Henry was ſtill as ignorant as ever, ſo that being in a Confuſion, was forc'd to own that he knew nothing at all, but that he had made it his Study to make Diſcourſes to the People. Hildebert having gain'd the Conqueſt over him, prohibited him from preaching or ſtaying any longer in his Dioceſs. Two of his Diſciples nam'd Cyprian and Peter, recanted and left him, after they underſtood that his Life was infamous, and his Doctrine Heretical, as Hildebert informs us in his 78th. Letter. All this happened about the Year 1110.

The Errors of Peter of Bruis.

Whilſt Henry preach'd in France, Peter of Bruis continued likewiſe to publiſh his Errors in Provence. Peter the Venerable Abbot of Cluny, who has refuted them, makes mention of five. (1.) His denying that Baptiſm was of any advantage to Infants, and maintaining that only adult Perſons ought to be Baptized; a Doctrine which they put in practice by Re-baptizing all thoſe who initiated themſelves into their Sect. (2.) His condemning the uſe of Churches, Temples and Altars, and beating them down. (3.) His rejecting the Worſhip of Croſſes, and breaking them. (4.) His believing that the Maſs was uſeleſs, and that none are oblig'd to celebrate it. (5.) His Teaching, that Alms and Prayers for the Dead are of no avail, and forbidding to ſing the Praiſes of God. He likewiſe takes Notice that a great great many accus'd them of wholly rejecting all the Canonical Books of the Old and New Testament, and of not believing either in Jesus Christ, or the Prophets, or the Apostles; but he would not impute the Error to them, which was only attributed to them by common Fame. 'Tis no hard matter to comprehend how much Trouble such a seditious Doctrine must needs raise both in Church and State. In Provence there was nothing else to be seen but Christians Re-baptized, Churches Prophan'd or Destroy'd, Altars pull'd down, and Crosses burnt. The Laws of the Church were publickly violated, the Priests beaten, abus'd and forc'd to marry, and all the most sacred Ceremonies of the Church abolish'd. These Disorders excited the Zeal of the Bishops of that Country, who with the assistance of the Princes drove out this Heretick, and put a stop to the fury of his Followers. But he went from thence into Languedoc, where he vented the same Errors at Tholouse, and in other Cities, till he was apprehended and burnt alive at St. Giles's in Languedoc.

The Publication of the Errors of Henry and of Peter of Bruis.

His Disciple Henry who was likewise returned to Languedoc, after he had been driven out of Mons, preach'd there the same Doctrine, and added thereto several new Errors, so that within a short time, that Country was so infested with those detestable Maxims, that there were to be seen (as St. Bernard says) a great many Churches without People, a great many People without Priests, a great many Priests despised by their People, and a great many Christians without Jesus Christ. The Churches there were become like so many Synagogues; the Sanctuary was divested of its Sanctity; the Sacraments looked upon as prophane things; the Festivals lost their Solemnity; Men dy'd in their Sins, without Absolution, and without receiving the Communion, Baptism was deny'd to Infants; they divided the Prayer and Sacrifices for the Dead, and the invocation of Saints; the Excommunications of Bishops, the Pilgrimages made for the sake of Devotion, the Consecration of the Holy Chrism and of the Holy Oyls. And in a Word, a general Contempt was cast on all the Ceremonies and Customs of the Church. St. Bernard brought into that Country by Alberic, Cardinal Bishop of Ostia, and Legat of the Holy See; put a stop to those Disorders, and undeceiv'd part of the People by his Preaching and his Miracles. Henry thought of making his escape, but was apprehended and carryed in Chains to Tholouse, and put into the Bishop's Hands. St. Bernard undertook the Journey in the Year 1147.

The Heretick of Perigueux.

'Tis very probable that the Hereticks of Perigueux were the Disciples of Peter de Bruis and of Henry. We will give you an account which a Contemporary Monk nam'd Herbert has left us of them in a Letter address'd to all Christians, wherein he admonishes them to beware of of these false Prophets. "There are (says he) in the Country of Perigueux a great many Hereticks, who boast that "they lead an Apostolical Life, eat no Flesh, and drink no Wine, unless in a very little quantity, and "that from one three days end to another, who fall upon their Knees an hundred times a day, and receive no Money. Their Sect is very Corrupt and Hyyocritical; they do not say the Gloria Patri, "but instead of it say, because yours is the Kingdom, and you have a Power over all Creatures for ever and "ever, Amen. They make no account of Alms-giving, because they believe that no Man ought to "possess any thing as his own Property. They bear no regard to the Mass, and teach that one ought "not to receive the Communion, but only a piece of Bread. If any one of 'em out of Hypocrisie "says Mass, he never recites the Canon, nor receives the Communion, but throws the Host besides the "Altar, or into the Missal. They do not adore Crosses or Crucifixes, and condemn those of Idola"try who do them any Honour. This Sect is mightily increased, and not only a great many "Persons of Quality leave their Estates to be of their Number, but likewise a great many Eccleſia"sticks, and a great many Religious of both Sexes follow them. The most stupid and senless among "them, within less than eight days time became very expert and fit to teach, and be examplars to the "rest. 'Tis a hard matter to take them, for wherever they be apprehended, the Devil helps them "out of Prison again. They do work some Miracles, such as filling a Vessel with Wine, by pouring "some drops of Water into it. The chief of this Sect is called Pontius. St. Bernard in his Journey confronted likewise these Hereticks.

The Hereſie of Tancheline.

About the same time Tancheline vented the same Errors in Flanders. He was a Laick who ventured to preach, and became so proud, that he caus'd extraordinary Respects to be paid him, and he carryed his extravagant Folly so far, that (if we may believe Abaelard in the Case) he caus'd himself to be styled by the People the Son of God, and a Temple to be built in Honour of him. That which is more certain, is that he taught "that the Churches were only places of Prostitution; that the Eucha"rist which the Priests consecrated signifyed nothing. That the Sacraments were rather Abominati"ons than sacred things; that the efficacy of the Sacraments depended on the Sanctity of the Mi"nisters. The Bishop of Tournay established in the Church of St. Michael, a Congregation of twelve "Eccleſiasticks to oppose these Errors. This Church was afterwards bestowed on St. Norbert. Tan"cheline went as far as Rome with a Priest nam'd Evervachier, who was one of his principal Follow"ers. 'Tis not known what became of him afterwards, but for the Priest he returned to Utrecht, where he made a great many Disciples. The Bishop of Utrecht sent word thereof to Frederick Arch-Bishop of Cologne, who oppos'd the Heresie in its very Birth, which began to spread it self in his Dioceſs, as is observ'd in the Letter of the Church of Utrecht to that Arch-Bishop.

The Hereticks of Cologne.

In spight of all his endeavours it was established there, and there continued, as we are informed by a Letter of Enervin, Provost of Stemfeld near Cologne written to St. Bernard, wherein he gives him to understand, that within a short time they had discovered several Hereticks near that City, some whereof had abjur'd their Errors; and two others having maintain'd them obstinately, had been burnt by the People. These Hereticks taught, that they were the only Persons among whom the true Church had subsisted, because they alone had follow'd the Example of Jesus Christ, and had possess'd nothing of this Worlds Goods. They forbid the eating of Milk meats, and the Flesh of Beasts. They would not discover what their Sacraments were; however they had own'd that they believe that the Bread and Wine which they did eat every Day was consecrated by the Lord's Prayer, for the nourishment of those who were the Members and the Body of Jesus Christ, that in this Senſe it became the Body of Jeſus Chriſt; that Others had not the true Sacraments but only the Appearance of them, and that they held a falſe Tradition of men. They admitted of a Baptiſm by Fire and the Holy Ghoſt as more Excellent than the Baptiſm of Water, for which they had no great Eſteem. They believ'd that their Elect had a power of Baptizing and Conſecrating. They diſtinguiſh'd three ſorts of Perſons among them, Hearers, Believers and the Elect. Laſtly they condemn'd Marriage without giving any reaſon for it.

The ſame Author likewiſe takes notice that there were likewiſe in that Country ſeveral other Hereticks different from the former, (who had been even inſtrumental in diſcovering them) who deny'd that the Body of Jeſus Chriſt was Conſecrated on the Altar, becauſe all the Prieſts of the Church are not Conſecrated, and that the Miniſtry is corrupted by the ſecular and prophane lives of the Eccleſiaſticks: That therefore they have no other power than to teach and Preach, and that all their Sacraments are Null except the Baptiſm of Adult perſons; for they did not believe that Infants ought to be baptiz'd. They likewiſe taught that only Marriages contracted between a Man and Maiden were lawful, and that all others were no better than Fornication. They had no truſt or Confidence on the Mediation of Saints. They Aſſerted that Faſts and other Mortifications were not at all neceſſary for the Juſt, no nor for ſinners themſelves. They ſtyl'd all the Uſages of the Church which were not Eſtabliſh'd by Jeſus Chriſt and the Apoſtles, Superſtitions. They deny'd Purgatory, and maintain'd that the Souls departed immediately went into the Place allotted for them, and by conſequence they render'd the Prayers and Sacrifices of the Church for the Dead Null and Void.

Theſe are the Errors which Enervin attributes to thoſe two Sorts of Hereticks to oppoſe which he excites the Zeal of Saint Bernard, who at that time in diſcourſing upon theſe Words in the Cantieles, Take us the little Foxes, took an occaſion from this Text to write againſt thoſe Modern Hereticks, whom he compares to Foxes. At the Firſt he repreſents their Morals in the 65th Sermon, wherein he accuſes them of Being Proud, Lovers of Novelties; of making no ſcruple to ſwear and forſwear themſelves; of concealing their Myſteries; of leading diſſolute Lives; of being too familiar with marry'd Women and Maids; of being Cheats and Hypocrites. Afterwards in the 66th Sermon he refutes in particular their Errors about Marriage, Abſtaining from Meats, Infant-Baptiſm, Purgatory, Prayers for the Dead, the Efficacy of Sacraments and the like. Laſtly he ſpeaks of their falſe Conſtancy which made them ſuffer Death and the greateſt Torments: and he reproves ſeveral Princes, and even ſeveral Biſhops who tolerated thoſe Hereticks by receiving preſents from them. Thoſe Sermons of Saint Bernard were written about the year 1140. which ſerves to fix the Epocha of the time wherein thoſe Hereticks of Cologne firſt appear'd.

Theſe are the ſame Hereticks whom ſometime after Ekbert Abbot of St. Florin in the Dioceſs of Treves oppos'd in his Tracts dedicated to Reginald Arch-Biſhop of Cologne. He had often had Conferences with them whilſt he was Canon in the Church of Bonne, and whereas they were frequently diſcovered to be in the Dioceſs of Cologne, he thought himſelf oblig'd to expoſe their Errors and refute them. This is what he has done in his ſix Diſcourſes which are to be met with in the Bibliotheca Patrum. He therein takes notice that thoſe Hereticks in Germany were call'd Cathari, in Flenders Piphri, in France Fiſſerani, and makes them to be the off-ſpring of the Manichees. We will now give you an Account of the Errors which he attributes to them and refutes in thoſe Diſcourſes. "They condemn "(ſays he) Marriage, and threaten Damnation to thoſe who dy'd in a marry'd ſtate. Some among "them only condemn ſuch Marriages as are contracted between any beſide ſuch as have never been "marry'd. They eat no fleſh becauſe they believe it to be unclean; which is the Reaſon which they "give of it publickly; but in private they ſay that Fleſh is the Devils Creature. They have divers "Opinions about Baptiſm: ſome of them ſay that 'tis of no uſe to Infants: in ſecret they add that the "Baptiſm with Water is of no avail, for which reaſon they re-baptize thoſe who enter into their Sect "in a particular Way, and aſſert that 'tis the Baptiſm of the Holy Ghoſt and of Fire. They Believe "that the Souls of the Departed enter the very day of their Death into a State of Everlaſting Happineſs "or of Everlaſting Miſery; and do not believe Purgatory: By conſequence they reject the Prayers, "the Alms, and the Maſſes for the Dead. If they come to Church, hear Maſs, and communicate "there, 'tis only for ſhow; for they ſuppoſe that the Sacerdotal Order is utterly extinct in the Church "and only ſubſiſts in their Sect. They do not believe that the Body of Jeſus Chriſt is Conſecrated on "the Altar, but call their own Fleſh the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, and in taking of Food ſay, that they "make the Body of Jeſus Chriſt. I have heard (adds He) from a man who had left their Sect, "after he had diſcover'd the Turpitude and the Errors thereof, that they aſſerted that Jeſus Chriſt was "not born of the Virgin; that he had not real Fleſh; that he did not riſe again really, but in a Fi-"gure: he believ'd that 'tis for this Reaſon that they keep not Eaſter, but have another Feſtival which "they call Bema. Laſtly he accuſes them alſo of teaching that the Souls of Men are thoſe Apoſtate "Angels who were turn'd out of Heaven.

The Hereticks of Toul.

This Sect had likewiſe ſome Followers in the Dioceſs of Toul, as we are inform'd by the Letter of Hugh Metellus, a Regular Canon of that Dioceſs, written to his Biſhop Henry, wherein he gives him to underſtand that in his Dioceſs there were dangerous men who began to ſtart up, whom one might rather ſtile Beaſts than Men, becauſe they led a Life wholly Brutal: who deteſt Marriage; abominate Baptiſm; deride the Sacraments, and Abhor the Name of Chriſtian.

In

In Italy there were likewise Hereticks of the same Nature, who went under the Name of Cathari. Bona-cursus, who had been formerly one of their Teachers at Milan; has given us a Tract of them after his Conversion, publish'd by Father Luke Dachery in the Thirteenth Tome of his Spicilegium. He therein says that some of them maintain'd that God created all the Elements: that others say, It was the Devil who created them; but that they all believ'd that it was the Devil who separated and rang'd them in their Order: That they likewise believ'd that it was he who fram'd the Body of Adam out of the Clay of the Earth, and that he therein infus'd an Angel of Light: that he likewise made Eve, and lying with her, begat Cain of her Body: That they assert that the Fruit which Adam was forbidden to Eat, was the Carnal Knowledge of Eve: That they maintain that all the Bodies which are in the Air, on the Earth, and in the Water were made by the Devil: That it was the Devil who appear'd to the Patriarchs, and who is the God of the Old Testament whom they reject: That they likewise condemn St. John Baptist: That they Teach that Jesus Christ had not a Body animated with a Soul, and that he neither drank, or Eat, or did any other humane Action really, but only in appearance: That they did not believe either his descent into Hell, or his Resurrection, or his Ascension: That they do not believe him to be Equal to the Father: That they affirm that the Cross is the Character of the Beast: That Saint Silvester is Antichrist: that ever since the Pontificate of that Pope the Church had been extinct; and that no person could be sav'd in a Marry'd State: That they condemn the Holy Fathers: That they forbid the Eating of Flesh, Eggs, Milk and every thing else that proceeds from Animals: That they do not believe that the holy Spirit is conferr'd by the Baptism of Water; nor that the Visible Substance of the Bread and Wine is chang'd into the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ; and that they assert that all those who swear shall be damn'd: That they say that no man can be sav'd but by Imposition of Hands, which they Stile Baptism: That they assert that the Sun is the Devil: that the Moon is Eve, who Ly together as Man and Wife once a Month: That all the Stars are Dæmons; and Lastly that no man can be sav'd, unless he be of their Sect.

The Hereticks of Italy call'd Cathuri.

The same Author speaks of other Hereticks whom he calls Passagians, who Taught that one ought to observe the Law of Moses even in the Literal Sense; and that the Sabbath, Circumcision, and the other Ceremonial practices of the Law ought to be still in force: That Jesus Christ was not equal to his Father: That the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost were distinct Substances.

The Passagians.

Lastly he speaks of the Arnoldists, the Disciples of Arnold Native of Bresse, who went from Italy into France, where he was the Scholar of Peter Abaelard. Upon his Return to his own Country he took upon him the Habit of a Monk, and his head was full of this thought, that neither the Pope nor the Clergy ought to hold any Demeans. Upon this Footing he set himself to preach, that the Clerks who held any Demeans, as their own Property, the Bishops who were possess'd of Royalties, and the Monks who enjoy'd any Lands could not be sav'd; that all those things appertain'd to Princes. Beside this, he taught the same Errors as other Hereticks, about Infant Baptism and the Sacrament of the Altar. He was forc'd out of Italy by Pope Innocent II. and oblig'd to retire into Switzerland. After that Pope's Death he return'd into Italy and went directly to Rome, where he stirr'd up a Sedition against Pope Eugenius III. and afterwards against Adrian IV. who interdicted the People of Rome till such time as they had drove out that Heretick and his Followers. This Menace had its Effect; the Romans siez'd upon the strong Houses which those Hereticks kept in, and forc'd them to retire to Otricoli in Tuscany, where they were kindly receiv'd by the People, who look'd upon Arnold as a Prophet. However he was apprehended sometime after by Cardinal Gerard, and in spight of the Endeavours of the Vicounts of Campania, was brought to Rome, and condemn'd by the Governor of that City to be ty'd to a stake and burnt to Ashes, for fear the People should pay any Honour to his Relicks.

The Hereſy of Arnold of Bresse.

Thirty of those Hereticks cross'd over from France into England about the year 1160. where they would likewise willingly have sown the same Doctrine. But they were apprehended and exterminated, and communicated that Error only to one Woman, who recanted. The Author which makes mention of this takes notice that they were call'd Poblicans or Publicans. William of Malmsbury the Historian, who did not live much after this time, says that those Hereticks being examin'd; answer'd pretty well about the Nature of the Heavenly Physician, namely Jesus Christ; but that when they were told of the Remedies which he has left us, namely the Sacraments, they then reply'd very ill, and declar'd that they condemned Baptism, the Eucharist, and Marriage; and that they despis'd the Catholick Unity.

All that we have hitherto related concerning the Hereticks of the Twelfth Century is taken out of Cotemporary Authors, and shews that two sorts of Errors were predominant at that Time; One sort common to all those Hereticks, and others were Peculiar. Their Common Errors regarded the Sacraments, the Practices of the Church, and the Hierarchical Order, against which they had all conspir'd. The particular Errors were such as had some relation to Manichæism, to Arianism, and other Impieties into which many had been led by a strange sort of Blindness.

The Condemnation of the Hereticks in the Council of Toulouse in the year the 1119.

These Hereticks were condemn'd in several Councils. The first which pass'd a Law against them was that of Tolouse in the Year 1119. held in the presence of Calixtus II. the third Canon whereof runs thus. We Condemn and turn out of the Church of God as Hereticks those who under pretence of Religion reject the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, Infant Baptism, Priesthood, Holy-Orders, and Lawful Marriages. We enjoyn that they be suppress'd by the Secular Powers. We ſubject their Defenders under the ſame Commendation, if they do not repent. This Canon was repeated in the ſame Words and confirm'd in the ſecond general Lateran Council held under Innocent II. in the year 1139. in the 23d Canon.

The Condemnation of the ſame in the ſynod of Oxford.

Thoſe who went into England were convicted and Condemn'd in an Aſſembly of Biſhops held at Oxford in the Reign of Henry II. King of England in the year 1160. This Prince order'd them to be branded with a Red hot Iron in their Cheek, to be whip'd publickly, to be driven out of the City half-naked, and left them to be ſtarv'd to Death.

Their Condemnation in the Council of Tours.

The Council of Tours held in the year 1163. enjoyns that for the ſuppreſſing of that Hereſy which ſpread it ſelf in Gaſcogne and in other Provinces, all thoſe ſhould be Anathematiz'd who held any Correſpondence with thoſe Hereticks: That the Princes ſhould confiſcate their Goods, and prevent their Meeting.

The Council of Lambez to the Hereticks.

In the year 1176. A Solemn Sentence was paſs'd in a ſynod held at Lombez againſt ſeveral of thoſe Hereticks; going then under the Name of Bons hommes, who had been apprehended by the Inhabitants of that City. The Judges pitch'd upon by both Parties were Girald Biſhop of Albi, Gaucelin of Lodeba, the Abbot of Caſtro, and three other Abbots, and Judgment was paſſed in the preſence of Pontius Arch-Biſhop of Narbonne, Arnulphus Biſhop of Niſmes, the Arch-Biſhop of Toloufe, the Biſhop of Agda, ſeveral Abbots and Superiors of Monaſteries who aſſiſted at the Synod. The Biſhop of Lodeba by the Order of the Biſhop of Albi, interrogated thoſe Bons hommes, and in the firſt place ask'd them, whether they receiv'd the Law of Moſes, the Prophets and the Books of the Old and New Teſtament. They reply'd that they did not receive the Law of Moſes, nor the Prophets nor the Pſalms, nor any part of the Old Teſtament; but only the Goſpels, the Epiſtles of Saint Paul, the Seven Canonical Epiſtles, the Acts of the Apoſtles and the Apocalypſe. In the Second place he demanded of them an Explanation of their Faith: They return'd him Anſwer that they would not explain it unleſs they were conſtrain'd to do it. The third Queſtion was about Infant-Baptiſm: They reply'd that they had nothing to ſay on that head. The Fourth Queſtion was about the Euchariſt, where and by whom it was Conſecrated, who were the perſons who receiv'd it, and whether it were better Conſecrated by a Good than by a Wicked Prieſt. They return'd him Anſwer that thoſe who receiv'd it unworthily ſhould be damned, but withall averr'd that it might be Conſecrated by any good man, whether Prieſt or Laick. The Fifth was about Marriage. They declar'd that they had nothing elſe to reply to that than what Saint Paul has ſaid, viz. That a Man and Woman are joyn'd together to avoid Incontinence and Fornication. The Sixth Queſtion was whether Repentance at the hour of Death could ſave any man; and whether one was oblig'd to confeſs ones Sins to the Prieſts, or whether one might confeſs them to Laicks. They reply'd that the Sick might confeſs them to whom they pleas'd: As to others they were not willing to determine any thing, becauſe the Apoſtle Saint James ſpeaks only of the Sick. Then they were ask'd whether Contrition and Confeſſion alone were ſufficient to obtain Remiſſion of Sins, without thinking it neceſſary to make Satisfaction, to obſerve Penances, Faſts, Almsgiving, and other Auſterities. They reply'd that the Apoſtle Saint James had order'd nothing elſe beſide Confeſſion as neceſſary to Salvation. They declar'd likewiſe without being ask'd, that they believ'd that one ought not to take an Oath: That all thoſe who were ordain'd without having the Qualifications preſcrib'd by Saint Paul for Biſhops, were Wolves and Devourers, to whom no Obedience ought to be paid. Thoſe Errors were refuted by Pontius Arch-Biſhop of Narbonne, by Arnulphus Biſhop of Niſmes, and by two Abbots, which ſerv'd only as Teſtimonies of the New Teſtament. Afterwards the Judges declar'd theſe Bons hommes Heretical, condemn'd Oliver, and his Followers, and all who were of the ſame Opinion with the Hereticks of Lombez, and authoriz'd their Judgment by ſeveral Paſſages out of the Holy Scripture, oppos'd to the Errors which we have been relating. This Sentence was pronounc'd by the Biſhop of Lodeba. Thoſe Hereticks proteſted againſt it, by ſaying that the Biſhop who had pronounc'd it was an Heretick, an Hypocrite, their Enemy, their Perſecutor, and that they were ready to demonſtrate by the Teſtimony of the Goſpel and the Apoſtles, that neither he nor any of the Biſhops were Paſtors, but Mercenaries and Hirelings. The Biſhop reply'd upon them that his Sentence was Juridical, and that he was ready to demonſtrate in the Court of Pope Alexander, in the Court of Lewis King of France, and in that of the Count of Toloufe or of the Counteſs his preſent Wife, and of the Lord Trencavelle who was likewiſe there preſent, That thoſe whom they had condemn'd were Hereticks. Upon this they being thus convinc'd turn'd about to the People, and declar'd that they would make a Profeſſion of their Faith out of Charity, and for the Honour of the Aſſiſtants. The Biſhop bid them obſerve that they did not ſay for the Honor of God, but for the Honor of the Aſſiſtants. They made profeſſion of all the Articles of the Creed, and added that they acknowledg'd that they ought to confeſs with their Mouth the Faith which they conceiv'd in their Hearts: That they believ'd that no perſon was ſav'd, unleſs he receiv'd the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, which is not preſerv'd but in the true Church; that none elſe beſide Prieſts had Power of Conſecrating it; and that the Bad conſecrated it as well as the Good; that no Body could be ſav'd without Baptiſm, and that Infants are ſav'd by this Sacrament; That Men and Women may be ſav'd tho in a Married State: That every one ought to receive with Heart and Mouth Repentance from the Prieſt, and to be baptiz'd into the Church; and that Laſtly they were ready to acknowlege all that could be demonſtrated to them by the Authority of the Evangeliſts and the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles: The Biſhop urg'd them to ſwear that they would keep to the Doctrine, and to declare whether they ever had any other Opinions. They reply'd that they could not ſwear, becauſe the Goſpel had prohibited all Oaths. The Biſhop determin'd that they ought to swear, if they would be credited, and prov'd by several Instances taken out of the New Testament, that Oaths were not absolutely forbidden. They reply'd that the Bishop of Albi had promis'd them that they should not be oblig'd to swear at all. The Bishop of Albi deny'd that he had made them any such promise, and confirm'd the Sentence pronounc'd by the Bishop of Lodeba, which was sign'd by all the Assistants.

to

Some time after this there appear'd a great many of those Hereticks in Toulouse: The Pope's Legate went thither in the year 1178. attended by several Bishops. They constrain'd them to submit to publick Penance, raz'd the Forts wherein they met, Excommunicated and Banish'd those Hereticks who retir'd into Albigensis, where they were secure. For Roger Count of Albi Countenanc'd and made use of them in detaining the Bishop of his City Prisoner. From this time forward they went under the Common Title of Albigenses. There were a great Number of them not only in that Country, but likewise in all Languedoc and Gascogne. There were likewise Banditi in those Provinces without Law or Gospel, who ran about the Countrey, ravag'd, pillag'd and Massacred all without Distinction of Estate, Age or Sex; and in an especial manner Assaulted Churches and Monasteries; some of them were call'd Barbancons, others Arragonists, Navarrists and Bascani; others Cotteraux and Triverdini. The General Council of the Lateran held in the year 1179. Excommunicated all of them, prohibited the Interring them in holy Ground exhorted the Catholick Princes to wage War against them, to confiscate their Goods, and to make them slaves; granted to those who took up Arms against them proportionable to their Services and according to the Discretion of the Bishops, Excommunicated those who gave them any protection, suffered them in their Territories or had any Commerce with them.

The Hereticks condem'd at Toulouse.

The Condemnation of the Albigenses in the Lateran Council A.D. 1179.

That Council says that the Hereticks of Albi were call'd Cathari, Patarini, Publicans, and went under a great many other Names: which shews that they were descended from the Hereticks who appear'd in the Beginning of this Century, and were so call'd. The Publicans or Poblicans held a great many Castles in Gascogne. In the year 1181. Henry Abbot of Clairvaux Bishop of Albi being in the Quality of Legate, rais'd a great many Troops, and went to give them a Visit. To divert this storm they pretended to Abjure their Errors; but the danger once past they follow'd their old Course of Life again.

This Infection spread it it self in several Provinces on each side the Loire. One of those false Apostles nam'd Terrick, who lay a long time conceal'd in a Grott at Corbigny in the Diocess of Nevers, was taken and burnt. Several others suffer'd the same Punishment in other parts, particularly two old Women in the City of Troyes, to one of whom 'tis said that this Terrick gave the name of Church, and to the other the name of Saint Mary, that so when his followers were examin'd; they might swear by Saint Mary that they held no other Faith than that of the Holy Church.

The Hereſy of Terrick.

These Publicans were likewise condemn'd in the Council held at Sens in the year 1198. which depos'd the Abbot of Saint Martin's of Nevers, and suspended the Dean of the Church of that City, accus'd of that Heresy, and referr'd them to the Holy See.

The Publicans.

There was in the same Century a Visionary who was presented to Pope Eugenius III. at the opening of the Council of Rheims. He was a Gentleman of Bretagne nam'd Eon de l' Etoile, who was so Ignorant, that having heard it sung in the Church: Per Eum qui venturus est judicare vivos & Mortuos, he imagin'd and asserted that it was he who was to Judge the Quick and the Dead. He was follow'd as a great Prophet: sometimes walk'd with a great train of People at his heels, sometimes liv'd in Solitude, and afterwards appear'd in greater splendor than before. Tis said that he was a Magician and that to draw the Mob after him he made great Entertainments, but that they were meer Illusions, and that the Victuals which were eat at his Table, and the Presents which he made bewitch'd mens minds. The Arch-Bishop of Rheims having apprehended him, presented him to his Holiness, and the Council. His Answers were so full of Frenzy and Enthusiasm, that they look'd upon him as a Fool, and shut him up in a close Prison, where he dy'd soon after. A great many of his Disciples a great deal more senseless than himself, chose rather to be burnt than to renounce him.

The Errors Eon de l' Etoile.

These were the Heretical Sects which appear'd in the Twelfth Century, and were so full of Extravagant Errors. If we enquire into the Causes of the Amazing Progress which they made in so short a time, we shall find that the Relaxation of Church Discipline, the Avarice and Covetousness of Eccleſiasticks, the Common Abuse which was made of the Sacraments, the Credulity and Ignorance of the People, the pretended Virtues of those new Preachers, and the Desire of Reformation contributed very much to the spreading of those Upstart Opinions.

CHAP. VII.

The Hiſtory of Peter Abaelard, of his Writings, Errors and Condemnation.

The Life and Adventures of Abaelard.

THE famous Peter Abaelard has himſelf given us an account of his Life and Adventures, which are both Diverting and Singular. We have the Relation thereof in his firſt Letter written to one of his Friends, of which we now give you the Abſtract. He was born in the Village call'd Le Palais, about three Leagues from the City of Nantes. His Father Berengarius, though a Man of Arms, was yet ſomewhat given to Study, and took care to give all his Children Learning. Abaelard who was the Youngeſt, and very much inclin'd to Letters, renounc'd the Profeſſion of War, to give himſelf up wholly to the ſtudy of Philoſophy. With this deſign he left his Native Country, and after he had frequented ſeveral Schools, came to Paris, where that Science was then in Vogue, and choſe for his Maſter William of Champeaux Arch Deacon of Paris, the moſt famous Profeſſor of that time. After he had liv'd for ſome time with him in good Repute, he incurr'd his Diſpleaſure, becauſe he undertook to refute his Opinions, and to diſpute againſt him with ſo much Strength, that he ſometimes ſeemed to have the Advantage over him. The great Opinion which he had of his own Parts, made him though but young, very deſirous of teaching others and of ſeeking out a convenient place where he might profeſs publickly. The Caſtle of Melun, which was then a Royal Seat, was pitch'd upon by him as very proper for his Purpoſe, becauſe of its being near to Paris. He obtain'd a Licenſe to teach there publickly, in ſpite of the Oppoſition which William of Champeaux made, who did not like that Abaelard ſhould teach ſo near Paris, for fear that the Reputation which he acquir'd would leſſen his. In effect Abaelard had no ſooner begun to teach Logick, but the Reputation of William began to ſink, which inclin'd Abaelard to go and ſettle at Corbeil, that ſo being nearer Paris, the Diſputes might be more frequent. Some time after, this Abaelard was conſtrain'd by a Sickneſs contracted by his great Application to Study to return to his own Country. During his Abſence, William was made Regular Canon in the Monaſtery of St. Victor, that ſo (as was ſuppos'd) he might with greater eaſe obtain a Biſhoprick, as happened accordingly, being within a ſhort time after elected Biſhop of Chalons. Whilſt he ſtay'd at Paris he continued his Lectures in St. Victor; and Abaelard being returned to that City, had ſtudied Rhetorick under him, and renewed the Diſputes in Philoſophy, which he had formerly with him, eſpecially concerning that Univerſal à Parte rei, which he urged ſo far, that William was forc'd to change his Opinion, which acquir'd Abaelard ſo much Credit, that the Perſon who had ſucceeded William in teaching Logick at Paris, ſurrendred his place to him. William ſoon after outed both of them, ſo that Abaelard return'd to Melun, from whence he ſoon came back to Paris, and held his publick Lectures at St. Genevieve, where he had a great many Pupils, who were very frequently engag'd in Diſputes with the Scholars of William. But when his Father became Monk, and his Mother Lucia was deſirous likewiſe to live retiredly, Abaelard was forc'd to take a Journey into his own Countrey. At his return, he found that William was made Biſhop of Chalons, and he went to that City to ſtudy Divinity under Anſelm, Canon and Dean of the Church of Laon, who profeſs'd it with a great deal of Repute. Abaelard did not find that this Man's Learning anſwer'd the Fame thereof, and ſoon left off going to his Lectures. Several of the Scholars having ask'd him what he thought of reading the Holy Scriptures; he reply'd, that it was a very uſeful Study, but that he wonder'd that Men of Learning ſhould not be ſatisfyd with the Commentaries and Gloſſes of the Holy Fathers, without having recourſe to other Maſters. When they ſmil'd at the Propoſal, he told them that he was ready to make it appear to them that it was Poſſible, and to give them an Experiment by explaining to them the moſt difficult Books of the Scriptures, with one ſingle Commentator. They took him at his Word, and made choice of the Prophecy of Ezekiel. He began to explain it on the Morrow, and thoſe who were preſent at his Explication, thought he had acquitted himſelf ſo well, that they brought a great many others to hear his enſuing Lectures. Anſelm began to grow jealous of him, and moved thereto by Alberic of Rheims, and Lotulphus or Leutaldus of Novar, who had the repute of being his beſt Scholars. He forbid Abaelard to continue his Lectures, under a pretence, that if he ſhould advance any erroneous Opinion, it might be imputed to him. Hereupon Abaelard return'd to Paris, where for ſome time he profeſs'd very quietly, continuing to expound the Holy Scriptures. The Repoſe which he enjoy'd, the Applauſes which he receiv'd, and the Money which he got by this Profeſſion, puff'd him up with Pride, and caſt him into a debauch'd courſe of Life. But God puniſh'd him for both, by permitting him to be depriv'd of thoſe parts which had ſerv'd as an inſtrument to his Luſt, and to be conſtrain'd to burn with his own Hands that Book which he prided himſelf moſt upon; ſo that he became Chaſt by neceſſity, and humble by Force. We will give you now an account how this came about. There was at Paris a young Woman nam'd Helloiſſa, Niece to Fulbert, Canon of Paris, handſome and well ſhap'd, whom her Unckle who lov'd her tenderly, brought up to Learning. Abaelard who was her Tutor, immediately fell paſſionately in Love with her, and that he might the more eaſily enjoy her, he pray'd the young Woman's Unckle to take him to Board, under a pretence that he could beſtow more time upon her, lodging in the ſame Houſe, that beſides he would do him a Kindneſs by eaſing him of the Trouble of Houſe-Keeping, which was not ſuitable to a ſtudious Man. The Unkle who neither diſtruſted the Virtue of his Niece, nor the prudence of Abaelard, who had hitherto liv'd very regularly, accepted freely of the Propoſal, and intruſted him with Helloiſſa, whom Abaelard courted ſo much the more eaſily, becauſe the pretence of ſtudy furniſh'd him with an opportunity of being often alone with her. Sub occaſione diſciplinæ (ſays Abaelard himſelf) amori penitus vacabamus, & ſecretos receſſus, quos Amor optabat, ſtudium Lectionis offerebat: Aperti itaq; Libri plura de Amore quam de Lectione verba ſe ingerebant, plura erant oſcula quam ſententiæ. i. e. Under the pretence of Learning we had our full of Love, and our ſtudy afforded thoſe private Receſſes which our Love required. We opened our Books indeed, but Love not the Leſſon was the Burthen of our Diſcourſe, and more Kiſſes were intermingled than Sentences read. The young Woman it ſeems was not ſo hard-hearted, but ſhe anſwered his Flame, and in a ſhort time the Buſineſs was known to every Body; beſides the Unckle who was the laſt that found it out. As ſoon as he was inform'd of it, he turn'd Abaelard out of Doors; within a few days time after, Helloiſſa, whoſe Love was ſtill the ſame, notwithſtanding this Separation, writ word to Abaelard that ſhe was with Child. He brought her off from her Unckle's Houſe, and carryed her to his own Countrey, diſguis'd in the Habit of a Nun, where ſhe was brought to Bed of a Boy, who was nam'd Aſtrolabe. The Unkle of Helloiſſa overwhelm'd with Grief at the loſs of his Niece, would have reveng'd the Affront upon Abaelard's Perſon, had he not been affraid that ſhe would have underwent the ſame Fate. Abaelard to pacifie him, went to wait upon him, and offered to marry his Niece, provided the Marriage were kept ſecret. The Unkle conſented to it, and Abaelard went away immediately to fetch her and make her his Wife. She oppos'd the Reſolution a long time, foreſeeing that ſhe ſhould be the Ruine of the Fortune, and the Reputation of a Perſon whom ſhe paſſionately lov'd. At laſt, yielding to the preſſing Importunities of Abaelard, ſhe return'd with him to Paris, where ſhe was marryed privately in a Church in the preſence of her Unckle, and of ſeveral of their Friends. After they were marryed they parted, and came together very ſeldom and very privately. The Unkle and his Friends immediately publiſh'd the Marriage abroad; but Helloiſſa who preferr'd the Honour and Intereſts of Abaelard to her own, and who fear'd that if the Marriage were diſcover'd, he would loſe a Prebend which he had, and his Reputation too; ſwore that nothing could be falſer. This gave her Unkle an occaſion of abuſing her, ſo that Abaelard reſolv'd upon putting her into the Monaſtery of Argenteuil, where ſhe had been formerly Educated, and making her take upon her the Habit of a Nun, but without the Veil. This made her Unkle and her Relations believe that he mock'd them, and deſign'd to abandon her; whereupon they reſolv'd upon being reveng'd of him after a moſt barbarous manner, and in effect, enter'd the Chamber of L'Auberge, where he was; and puniſh'd him, by depriving him of thoſe parts whereby he had injur'd them. It cannot be imagined what Confuſion Abaelard was in, to ſee himſelf in that Condition. He owns that it was this more than Devotion, which induc'd him to embrace the Monaſtick Life, after he had perſwaded Helloiſſa to become a Nun. They both made profeſſion at the ſame time; Abaelard at St. Denys, and Helloiſſa at Argenteuil. The Diſgrace which Abaelard fell into, did not hinder ſeveral Perſons from waiting upon him at St. Denys, and intreating him to continue his Lectures to them; ſo that the Abbot and the Religious of St. Denys made uſe of this pretence, to ſend him to teach School in one of their Houſes, that ſo they might be free from the Reproaches which he caſt upon them for their Diſorders. His Reputation drew thither ſo many Scholars from all parts, that the place where he was, was not capable of receiving them, nor the Country of providing for them. He taught them the Liberal Arts and Theology. This great concourſe of Scholars, ſoon rais'd the Jealouſie and Envy of other Maſters againſt Abaelard; who to ſuſpend him from all ſorts of Profeſſions, gave out that it was not proper for a Monk to teach the Liberal Arts, and that he could no longer expound the Holy Scriptures, ſince he had learn'd it without a Maſter.

The Life and Adventures of Abaelard.

The Treatiſe which he compoſed about the Unity of God and about the Trinity, gave his Adverſaries an occaſion of accuſing him of Error. Alberic and Lotulphus who taught at Rheims; and who would after the Death of William of Champeaux and Anſelm of Laon, ſucceed alone to their Reputation, being jealous of Abaelard, excited Rodulphus Arch-Biſhop of Rheims againſt him, who having ſent for Conon Biſhop of Paleſtrina the Pope's Legat in France, held a Council at Soiſſons, in the Year 1121. and cited Abaelard thither, ordering him to bring his Book along with him. He obey'd that Order, preſented his Book to the Pope's Legat, and ſubmitted it to his Judgment, aſſuring him, that if he had written any thing contrary to the Catholick Faith, he was ready to correct it, and to make Satisfaction. The Legat order'd him to put his Book into the hands of the Arch-Biſhop of Rheims, who ordered it to be ſhown to his two Adverſaries, who read it over and over, to ſee if they could find any Error in it. Alberic met with a paſſage, wherein Abaelard deny'd that God could be ſaid to generate himſelf. Abaelard juſtifi'd it by the Authority of St. Auguſtin, which he had cited, and maintained to his Face, that if he ſhould aſſert the contrary, he would fall into the ſame Hereſie with thoſe who believed that the Father was the Son of himſelf. Alberic was not ſatisfi'd with this Reply, but continu'd his Proſecutions againſt Abaelard. In the laſt Seſſion of the Council, they put it to the Queſtion, what Order they ſhould make about his Book and about his Perſon. Geofrey Biſhop of Chartres ſaid, that they ought to interrogate Abaelard, and give him liberty to make his Defence, but his Adverſaries would not venture to ſtand it out with him. The Legat thought it adviſeable to refer this Affair to a more numerous Council; and in the mean time to ſend Abaelard back to his Monaſtery, where he ſhould be tryed. But his Adverſaries made the Legat alter his mind, and perſwaded him to condemn his Book, to order it to be burnt publickly, and to ſhut up the Author for ever in a Monaſtery; ſaying there was ſufficient Grounds to condemn him for having undertaken to teach publickly, without having had a Miſſion from the Pope or the Church. When the Biſhop of Chartres perceived that this Reſolution was taken, he advertiſed Abaelard of it, and adviſed him to ſuffer it patiently, and the rather, becauſe this Violence would be more prejudicial to his Enemies than to himſelf, aſſuring him that he ſhould not be long confin'd, becauſe the Legat who did all this againſt his Will, would quickly ſet him at liberty. Upon this Promiſe he came into the Council, caſt his Book into the Fire with his own Hand, and there recited St. Athanaſius's Creed as a Declaration of his Faith. Afterwards he was ſhut up in the Abby of St. Medard of Soiſſons. The Monks of that Monaſtery treated him very civilly, and did what they could to comfort him, but he was a great deal more concern'd at the Affront which had been then offer'd him, than at that Misfortune which happened to him formerly. However the Legat kept to the Promiſe which the Biſhop of Chartres had made him, and within a few days after ſent him back to his Monaſtery. He was as unacceptable to his fellow Monks, as he had formerly been, and they took occaſion to give him freſh Diſturbance, becauſe he had aſſerted that St. Denys of France was not the Areopagite, founding his Aſſertion on what Bede ſays, that the Areopagite had been Biſhop of Corinth, whereas 'tis believed that Denys of France had been Biſhop of Athens. This Propoſition did ſo far incenſe the Abbot and the reſt of the Religious againſt him, that he not thinking himſelf ſecure in that Abby, made his eſcape by Night, and retired into the Territories of Thibaud, Count of Champagne, and dwelt in Provence in an Hoſpital belonging to the Monks of Troyes, the Prior whereof was one of his Friends. His Abbot would fain have had him out again, but dy'd within a ſhort time after. Abaelard with much ado, obtain'd leave by the Intereſt of ſome great Lords to live in what place of Solitude he would, provided he would not enter into any other Monaſtery. After he had obtain'd this leave, he retir'd to a Solitude near Troyes, where he built a Chappel in a Field, which was given him by ſome private Perſons of the place, by conſent of the Biſhop of Troyes. He was no ſooner ſettled there, but he was follow'd by a great number of Scholars, who built little Cells round about his Lodge, ſo that one would have thought that they were rather Hermits than Scholars. They furniſhed him with all that he had occaſion for, either for his Nouriſhment or Refreſhment, and built him a Church which was dedicated to the Holy Trinity. Abaelard gave it the Title of Paraclete, in memory of the Conſolation which he had received in that place. His Adverſaries found fault at that Appellation, pretending that one could not dedicate a Church to the Holy Ghoſt alone. Upon this Abaelard obſerves, that the name of Paraclete might be very well applyed to all the three Perſons of the Trinity; and that if it were only the peculiar Title of the Holy Ghoſt, yet one might without any ſcruple dedicate a Temple to the Holy Ghoſt, though it might not be ſo Cuſtomary. His Enemies perceiving that they were not ſtrong enough of themſelves to ruin him, ſtirred up two great Perſons againſt him, who were Men of the higheſt Eſteem. One was the reſtorer of the ancient Life of the regular Canons, and the other of the Life of the Monks. ('Tis St. Norbert and St. Bernard which he here means.) Theſe two Men declaim'd againſt both his Life and Morals, before the Eccleſiaſtical and Secular Powers. To eſcape this Storm, he accepted of the Abby of St. Gildors of Ruy's in the Dioceſs of Nantes in Bretagne, though the Monks thereof were very Barbarous and Cruel, with whom it was very difficult for him to converſe. This happened at the ſame time when the Abbot of St. Denys took to himſelf the Abbey of Argenteuil, and the Nuns of that place being diſpers'd, Abaelard gave to Helloiſſa, who was Prioreſs thereof, and to ſeveral other of the Religious who had follow'd her, the Church of the Paraclete and its Dependencies. This Donation was confirmed by the Biſhop of Troyes, and by Pope Innocent II. and by Degrees, this Covent which was very poor at its firſt Riſe, was plentifully endowed by the liberality of the Faithful. Abaelard went often thither to aſſiſt them in their Needs, which gave occaſion to the Malicious of accuſing him, of having ſtill a Paſſion for Helloiſſa, and of attributing to the Motions of his fleſhly Luſts, what he did out of a pure motive of Charity, or to avoid the ill treatment of his Monks, who perpetually ſought for an Opportunity to get rid of him.

The Letters of Helloiſſa to Abaelard.

This Letter of Abaelard fell into the Hands of Helloiſſa, whereupon ſhe ſent him word, that having known his Hand-writing, ſhe could not forbear to read it over with all the eagerneſs which the Paſſion ſhe had for him could inſpire into her. That it was but very reaſonable ſince ſhe had ruin'd him, that ſhe might at leaſt receive ſome Conſolation by the reading of his Letters. That this however had very much afflicted her, by putting her in mind of the Miſeries which had happened to him, and letting her know of the Danger wherein he was: That ſhe conjur'd him to ſend her often word how he did, that ſo ſhe might partake with him either in his Grief or his Joy: That ſince he had been pleaſed for the ſatisfaction of his Friend to ſend him an account of his Misfortunes, he lay under greater Obligations to write to her and her Religious, whom he ought to eſteem not only as his Friends, but as Perſons entirely at his Devotion; not as Companions, but as his own Daughters, who were beholden to him alone for the Monaſtery which they were in poſſeſſion of: That it was he who firſt rendred that ſolitude Habitable, and was the Founder of that Houſe: That it was his Duty likewiſe to beſtow all his Cares upon it; and that having done ſo much for others, it was very reaſonable he ſhould be ſerviceable to them alſo. That he was farther oblig'd thereto, upon Conſideration of the Relation ſhe had to him, of the extream Love which ſhe always had had for him, and the great loss which she had suffer'd by parting from him. Afterwards she expresses the Sentiments of her quondam Passion to him, so as not only to say that she never lov'd any thing in him beside his own Person, but also that the name of Concubine seemed more Eligible to her than that of Wife, because it would wound his Reputation less, and have made her a greater Sacrifice. She adds, that when the Emperor would have had her in Marriage, and bestowed the whole Empire upon her; yet she chose to be Abaelard's Mistress, rather than Empress. (By this you may perceive the Violence of a Womans Passion.) To this she subjoyns the Remembrance of several other reciprocal Testimonies of Love, which they had given each other; and afterwards she upbraids him for that, though in Obedience to him she was made a Nun; yet that he had so far slighted or rather forgot her, that she had received no Refreshment by his Visits, nor Comfort by his Letters. Is it (says she) because the Bond which tyed you to me was rather the Heat of Lust than the Force of Love? She avows, that it was not out of Devotion, but in Obedience to her Husband's Commands, that she had embrac'd the Monastick Life; that she could not expect any Reward from the Lord for it, for whose Sake she had not done it: That she had follow'd, or rather preceeded her Husband, and that one of those things which troubled her most was, that he had ingag'd her to dedicate her self to God, before he had resolv'd upon it himself, as if he had some distrust of her Fidelity. She assures him, that even at present, she had him still in her Mind, and lov'd him still. She intreats him to consider what a piece of Ingratitude it would be in him to refuse to visit her, and comfort her with his Letters, since that would be a means of her serving God with the less Detraction. And lastly, that since he had formerly writ so many Love Letters to excite a dishonourable Passion in her, it was very reasonable that he should write some to her now to incline her to God.

Abaelard's Letter to Heloissa.

Abaelard return'd an Answer, That it was not out of Negligence that he had deferr'd writing to her, but because he had so much Confidence in her Piety and Learning, as to think that she stood in no need of his Advice: That if she thought that she wanted it, she might inform him of the Points wherein she desir'd his Instruction, and that he would satisfie her therein. He thanks her for being so kind as to participate in his Afflictions, and recommends himself to her Prayers, and the Prayers of her Fraternity. From this he takes an occasion to shew how grateful the Prayers of Holy Virgins are to God. In particular he takes notice to her of a Form of Prayers which he desired, that they would say for him at the Close of the Canonical Hours; and tells her, that after his Death, he would have his Body be brought to their Monastery to be there interr'd, that they might pray to God for the quiet of his Soul.

Another Letter of Heloissa.

This Letter very sensibly affected Heloissa, because Abaelard therein speaks of his Death, as if near at Hand. She had so much Affection for him, that she could not bear this thought, without being very much disturbed at it. She declares those thoughts to him in a very pathetical manner in the Letter, which she sent back to him, wherein she could not forbear reflecting upon the Misfortune which had happened to Abaelard through her means. She desir'd that she might undergo a Penance worthy of her Fault, and owns that she is still so weak, as not to efface out of her Memory the remembrance of past Pleasures, but that they continually present themselves to her Mind, which gives her great cause of Humiliation, and of rejecting the Praises which he had bestowed upon her.

Abaelard's Reply.

Abaelard endeavoured to comfort her by excusing himself of the Reproaches which she had cast upon him in that Letter, which he reduced to four Heads. The first was about the Complaint which she made of his having nam'd her first in the Inscription of this Letter. The Second about the Reproach which she had cast upon him, of having increased her Grief, rather than afforded her any Consolation. The Third about the Reflections which she had made upon their past Misfortunes. And the last about her refusal of the Praises which he had given her. As to the first Head, he satisfyed her by saying, that since she was become the Spouse of Jesus Christ, she was according to St. Jerom's Phrase his Mistress, and that upon that account, he had reason to name her first. From thence he took an occasion to give her some Instructions about the Virtues requisite for the Spouse of Jesus Christ. Upon the Second Head, he says that he had not mention'd any thing of his Death, or the Danger wherein he was in his Letter, if she had not conjur'd him to do it. Upon the third Head, he approves of her rejecting all Praises, provided it were sincere, and if she did not contemn them out of a principle of Pride. As to the Fourth Head, he intreats her to make no farther Complaints of a Misfortune which he really deserv'd, as due to his Sins, whereof he was throughly sensible. He advises her rather to give God Thanks for the favour he had shewn to both of them, by bringing them out of a disorderly Course of Life, to lead a more regular one. He look'd upon that Pain which had been inflicted on him as very light, in Comparison of the Crimes which he had committed, and thought himself very happy in being deliver'd from that which had been the cause of his Sin. He concludes with a Prayer which the Religious of the Nunnery of Paraclete ought to say for him and Heloissa.

The Letter of Heloissa.

In the next Letter Heloissa in Obedience to the Order which Abaelard had given her, made no more mention of their Misfortunes, but intreated him on behalf of her self and her Religious, in the first place to inform them of the Original of their Order, and of the Authority thereof. In the Second place, to compose a particular Rule, and such as might be proper for them, which had not as yet been done, the Monks and Nuns professing the same Rule of St. Benedict, wherein were a great many things which were only applicable to Men; as for instance, that which is said about Habits, Functions, the Abbot, the entertaining of Strangers, Manufactures, and other practises which their Sex was not capable of: That if according to the Intention of St. Benedict, the Rule ought to be moderated in favour of the Weak, it was very reaſonable to do ſo in favour of the Virgins; that the external Exerciſes which are ſuch as they were the leaſt capable of, were likewiſe the leaſt neceſſary. For this Reaſon ſhe exhorts Abaelard to draw up a Diſcretionary Rule for them, which might be ſuited to their Weakneſs, particularly with relation to the Faſts and Service of the Church, it being very reaſonable that he who under God was the Founder of their Monaſtery, ſhould be likewiſe the Inſtitutor of their Rule.

Abelards Reply to Heloiſa. Abaelard anſwers the firſt Queſtion of Heloiſſa in the Seventh Letter, wherein he pretends that the Monaſtical Orders as well of Men as of Women, drew its Original from the manner of Jeſus Chriſt's livnig here on Earth. That there were ſeveral Examples of this in the Old Law: That the Women who attended our Saviour and the Bleſſed Virgin, who liv'd in common with the Apoſtles; the Virgins and Widows of the Primitive Church, led a Religious Life. Afterwards he enlarges himſelf on the Praiſes of the Sex, and particularly on thoſe of Virgins, of whom he makes a learned Encomium throughout the whole Letter.

He ſatisfied Heloiſſa in her ſecond Demand, by ſending to her a full inſtruction about Continence, voluntary Poverty, Silence and Solitude, to which are annex'd particular Conſtitutions for the Abbeſs, and for the other Officers of the Covent, and about the Order which they ought to obſerve in the Divine Service, in Meats, in Habits, and in reading of the Holy Scriptures, to which he adviſes them above all things. This Rule is full of very uſeful Inſtructions, and of fine Paſſages out of Scripture, and the Writings of the Fathers apply'd very much to the purpoſe. There is to be found in the Manuſcript of the Abbey of Paraclete another Collection of particular Rules which are attributed to Heloiſſa.

The Letters of Abaelard. Fulcus Prior of Deuil bore likewiſe a ſhare in the Misfortune which happened to Abaelard, and wrote him a Conſolatory Letter upon that Subject, wherein he adviſes him to ſtay in his Monaſtery, and not to undertake a Journey to Rome to demand Juſtice of the Canon, who had been the Cauſe of his being ſo abus'd. This is the firſt Letter of the ſecond Collection which relate to Abaelard.

The Second is a Memoir of Abaelard, directed to Adam, Abbot of St. Denys, and to the Monks of that Monaſtery, and to prove againſt the Teſtimony of Bede, that Denys the Areopagite was not Biſhop of Corinth, but Biſhop of Athens.

In the Third directed to a Regular Canon, who deſpis'd the Monks and extoll'd the Regular Clerks, and maintained that the Monaſtical Order was inferiour to the Clerical; Abaelard takes the Monks part, and maintains that the Monaſtical Order was not in the leaſt inferiour to that of the Regular Canons, whether one regard the Figure which they make among Men, or that which Religion gives them in the ſight of God. The Reaſons which he alledges for this were, that we ſee every day Clerks who embrac'd the Monaſtical Life, and that after they had done ſo, were not permitted to re-enter into the Clerical Order. That the Monks who were made choice of to execute the Clerical Functions, never quit their Habit: That they often made choice of Monks to make them Biſhops, whereas they never choſe Clerks to preſide over Monaſteries: That in the Litanies and Prayers of the Church, the ſuffrages of the Monks were implor'd: That the Monks are advanc'd to Holy Orders, and even to Prieſthood it ſelf: That St. Jerom prefers the Monaſtical State to that of Clerks, as being more perfect: That St. John Baptiſt quitted the Prieſthood to lead a ſolitary Life: That the Monks are in leſs danger of their Salvation, than the Clerks who are oblig'd to converſe ſo much with the World: That the Monks embrace the Contemplative Life which our Saviour preferr'd before the Active Life: That the Regular Canons whoſe Inſtitution was but new, imitate the Monks in living in Common in Cloyſters: That laſtly, the Life of Monks is more painful and more Auſtere than that of the Clerks.

The fourth Letter is againſt thoſe who condemn the uſe of Logick. Abaelard compares them to the Fox in the Fable, who ſlighted the Fruit at which he could not get. He ſays, that thoſe Doctors do in the ſame manner deſpiſe Logick, becauſe they have not a Genius to comprehend it. He makes it appear, that the Holy Fathers, and particularly St. Auguſtine have commended this Art, and thought it neceſſary for the right Explication of the Holy Scriptures. He owns that one ought to avoid the love of Diſputing, and the deſire of deceiving others by Sophiſms; but he would have Men have an inſight both into Logick and Sophiſtry, to diſcern good Argumentations from falſe Ones. He maintains, that without Logick 'tis very difficult to refute Hereticks.

The Fifth is writ to St. Bernard, about the Intelligence which Abaelard had received from Heloiſſa Abbeſs of Paraclete, that that Saint coming to that Monaſtery, had obſerved them to repeat the Lord's-Prayer quite different from what was done in other Churches, and looked upon it as a Novelty, which he though Abaelard had introduc'd. All the difference conſiſted in that they ſaid our Super-ſubſtantial Bread, inſtead of our Daily Bread. Abaelard obſerves, that the firſt Phraſe being in the Text of St. Matthew, who has given us the Lord's-Prayer more entire and compleat than Saint Luke, and whoſe Phraſes are follow'd except in this; it ſeem'd more reaſonable to change nothing in the Text, and to make uſe of the Phraſe which St. Matthew has uſed, than to inſert into St. Matthew's Text a Phraſe taken out of St. Luke's Goſpel. That therefore one ought not to accuſe thoſe of a Novelty, who in repeating the Lord's-Prayer, ſay, Give us our Super-ſubſtantial Bread, inſtead of our Daily Bread, ſince they are the very Words uſed by St. Matthew, whoſe Form was follow'd. That however he did not blame the contrary Uſage; but that he did not believe this Uſage was to be preferr'd to the Truth, and the rather, becauſe the Greek Church had retain'd the proper Terms of St. Matthew's Goſpel. That St. Bernard had the leaſt reaſon of any Man

Man to find fault with this Alteration, ſince there were in his Order a great many Novelties contrary to the Ancient Cuſtoms and Uſages of the Monks and Clerks, even in the Divine Service; ſuch as for inſtance the Singing of New Hymns, the Singing of the ſame Hymn on different Feſtivals; the not repeating the Suffrages which were elſewhere ſaid after the Lord's Prayer; the omitting the Commemoration of the Virgin, and of the Saints at the End of the Office; the having excluded almoſt entirely the Uſage of Proceſſions; the Singing Alleluiah even to Quinquageſima-Sunday; the not reciting the Apoſtles Creed at Prime and the Veſpers, and the Singing of the Invitatory, the Hymn and the Gloria Patri the laſt three days in the holy Week. Tho' thoſe Practices were contrary to the common Uſage of the Church, yet Saint Bernard did not think himſelf oblig'd to leave them, becauſe he eſteem'd them more reaſonable and more Conformable to the Rule. From hence Abaelard concludes, that upon a ſtronger Reaſon one could not well diſapprove the Alteration which he had made in the Lord's Prayer, tho' it might ſeem a Novelty; and the Rather becauſe the Novelties which are prohibited are not thoſe of Expreſſions, but thoſe of Opinions, ſince the Church has invented new Phraſes to explain our Myſteries: That Laſtly there be a World of different Cuſtoms in the Church with reſpect to Ceremonies; That in Rome no Church beſide the Lateran obſerves the ancient Uſage of the holy See: That in Milan only the Cathedral Church obſerves its ancient Rites: That the Church of Lions is the only Church which has retain'd it's Ancient Office; and that the Diverſity of Ceremonies has likewiſe it's Advantages. Laſtly he concludes by ſaying that every one might abound in his own Senſe, and repeat the Lord's Prayer in the way which he ſhould think moſt proper: That he does not pretend to perſwade others to imitate him therein: That he left thoſe who would at their Liberty to change the Words of Jeſus Chriſt, but for his part he would endeavour all he could to keep to the proper Terms of Jeſus Chriſt, as well as to his Words.

The ſixth Letter is an Exhortation to the Religious of Paraclete to ſtudy that they might be capable of Reading and underſtanding the Holy Scriptures: It hardly conſiſts of any thing elſe but paſſages out of Saint Jerom upon that Subject. He congratulates their Happineſs in having ſuch a Learned Abbeſs as was able to teach them Latin, Greek, and Hebrew; the Languages which were neceſſary for their rightly underſtanding of the Scriptures. He recommends to them the having recourſe to the Original Text which is the foundation of all Verſions, and to ſtudy Hebrew and Greek, the Study whereof he complains was very much neglected in his Time. He wiſhes that thoſe Nuns would recover that Learning, which the Men had ſuffer'd to be loſt. And takes notice that they might apply themſelves to it the more eaſily, becauſe they were leſs Capable of working with their Hands than Men, and were the more oblig'd to it by the Quietneſs and Sedateneſs of their Lives, and becauſe the Weakneſs of their Sex render'd them more liable to temptations, which they might divert by being thus employ'd.

The Seventh is a Panegyrick on Saint Stephen dedicated to the Nuns of Paraclete.

The Charge brought againſt Abaelard.

From the year 1121. wherein Abaelard was forc'd in the Council of Soiſſons to caſt his Book of Theology into the Fire, he had met with no diſturbance about his Doctrine, tho' he had ſtill continu'd to write and teach the ſame things as before. The firſt who renew'd the Charge of Errors againſt him was William Abbot of Saint Thierry, who having read two Books of Theology compos'd by Peter Abaelard, and therein found ſuch Propoſitions as put him to ſome diſturbance, and which he thought to be contrary to ſound Doctrine, ſent an account of them to Geofrey Biſhop of Chartres and to Saint Bernard Abbot of Clairvaux; exhorting them to declare themſelves againſt thoſe Novelties and to get them to be condemn'd. His Letter is the three hundred and twenty ſixth among the Letters of Saint Bernard. He therein ſays that he is very much abaſh'd to ſpeak his mind at a time wherein thoſe whoſe duty it was to do it held their Peace; but that he could not be ſilent when he ſaw the Faith of the Church corrupted by Very Dangerous Errors, and the rather becauſe the Conteſt was about the Faith which related to the Trinity, the Perſon of our Mediator, the Holy Ghoſt, the Grace of Jeſus Chriſt, and the Sacrament of our Redemption; and becauſe the New Notions which Peter Abaelard taught and writ, were ſpread through the World, and taught and Maintain'd publickly, and had (as 'tis ſaid) ſome repute even in the Court of Rome. He exhorts Geofrey and Saint Bernard to undertake the Defence of the Faith, and tells them that he apply'd himſelf more particularly to them, becauſe Abaelard fear'd them more than all the World beſide. He afterwards relates thirteen Propoſitions which he ſaid he had taken out of the Writings of Abaelard: viz. (1.) That he defin'd Faith to be the Idea of things not ſeen. (2.) That he aſſerts that the Names of Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, are not properly applicable to God. But that 'tis only a Deſcription of the Plentitude of the Soveraign Good. (3.) That the Father is a full Power, the Son a Certain Power, and the holy Ghoſt no Power at all. (4.) That the Holy Ghoſt does not partake of the Subſtance of the Father and the Son, in the ſame manner as the Son does of the Subſtance of the Father. (5.) That the Holy Ghoſt is Anima mundi, i.e. the Soul of the World. (6.) That one may do either Good or Evil by one's own free Will without the Influence and Aſſiſtance of the Grace of God. (7.) That Jeſus Chriſt was not made man, and did not ſuffer to deliver us from the Bondage of the Devil. (8.) That Chriſt as God-Man is not one of the three perſons of the Trinity. (9.) That in the Sacrament of the Altar, the form of the Subſtance of Bread and Wine which was there before the Conſecration, remains the ſame afterwards. (10.) That he maintains that the Suggeſtions of the Devil are infus'd into Man by Phyſical Cauſes. (11.) That we do not contract the Guilt, but the puniſhment only ouly of Original Sin. (12.) That there is no Sin, unleſs in the Conſent we give to Sin, and in the Contemning of God. (13.) That there is no ſin of Concupiſcence, Luſt or Ignorance. Theſe are the Articles which William Abbot of Thierry ſays that he drew out of the Book of Abaelard's Divinity. He adds that he heard ſay that he had written likewiſe ſeveral other Opuſcula, whereof one was Intituled the Yea and the No; another, Know thy ſelf, and ſeveral others, the Doctrine of which he was affraid was as Monſtrous as the Titles were extraordinary and ſingular. After this Letter William writes a Treatiſe levell'd expreſsly againſt thoſe Errors, which is to be met with in the Library of Ciſteaux, and to which this Letter ſerves as a Preface.

Saint Bernard return'd William this Anſwer, that he perceiv'd that the Zeal which he expreſs'd againſt the Errors of Abaelard was reaſonable and neceſſary, and that the Book which he had compos'd to refute him ſeem'd very uſeful, tho' he had not as yet time but only to read it curſorily, and not exactly; but that ſince this was a buſineſs of great Conſequence, he deſir'd to have a Conference with him about it, which yet he thought could not be before Eaſter, for fear of interrupting his Devotions in the Seaſon of Lent. That beſides he would not have been ſo long ſilent, if he had had a perfect Knowledge of the Errors of Abaelard.

When he was inform'd of them and had examin'd Abaelard's Book himſelf, he very charitably admoniſh'd him to retract his Errors and to correct his Books, and adviſ'd his Diſciples to read them no more. This Admonition ſerv'd only to exaſperate Abaelard, who made loud complaints againſt Saint Bernard: So that this Saint perceiving that the private Admonition which he had given him prov'd ineffectual, he thought it his Duty to tell it the Church, and wrote againſt him to Innocent II. and to ſeveral Prelates of the Court of Rome, accuſing him of making Degrees in the Trinity with Arius, of preferring Free-Will before Grace with Pelagius, of dividing Jeſus Chriſt with Neſtorius, by excluding him out of the Number of the perſons of the Trinity. He exhorts them warmly to oppoſe thoſe Errors and Condemn them. This is the Subject matter of the hundred and Eightieth, the three hundred and thirtieth, the three Hundred and thirty firſt, thirty ſecond, thirty third, thirty fourth, thirty fifth, and thirty ſixth Letters of Saint Bernard.

The Decrees of the Council of Sens againſt Abaelard.

Abaelard ſeeing himſelf thus accus'd, made his Application to Henry Arch-Biſhop of Sens, and intreated him that he would ſummons Saint Bernard to the Council which was to be held, that ſo he might enter into diſpute with him about the Principal Errors which he imputed to him. The Arch-Biſhop of Sens wrote to Saint Bernard to come on the day appointed on the Octave of Pentecoſt in the year 1140 to the Synod, that he might enter into a Conference with Abaelard in preſence of the Biſhops. Saint Bernard made ſome Scruple at firſt of coming thither, whether he thought (as he ſaid) that he was too ſtrong for him in Diſputes, or whether he thought that the truths of the Chriſtian Faith ought not to be expos'd to the Argumentation of Humane Reaſonings. He at firſt anſwer'd that the Writings of Abaelard were ſufficient to convince him, and that it was not his Buſineſs, but the Biſhops to whom of right did belong the Determination of the Doctrines of Faith. Abaelard made an Advantage of this Refuſal, and ſpread abroad that he would be at Sens on the day appointed to anſwer Saint Bernard. Upon this, Saint Bernard's Friends fearing that his Abſence would prove an Offence to the People, and create a Confidence in his Adverſary, and confirm his Error, adviſ'd him to go to the Council of Sens. He adverti-ſes the Biſhops and his Friends of it in a Circular Letter, which is his hundred and Eighty ſeventh, and exhorted them to undertake the Defence of a Cauſe which was more properly theirs than his own.

The Biſhops met at Sens on the Octave of Whitſontide, when the Relicks were to be ſhown in the Cathedral Church of that City. All the Biſhops of the Province of Sens met there, except the Biſhops of Nevers and Paris, viz: Geofrey of Chartres Legate of the holy See, Elias of Orleans, Hugh of Auxerre, Hatto of Troyes, Manaſſes of Meaux. Sampſon Arch-Biſhop of Rheims was likewiſe there with three of his Suffragans, viz: Joſſelin Biſhop of Soiſſons, Geofrey of Chalons, and Alviſus of Arras; a great many Abbots, Deans and perſons of Learning and Piety were likewiſe there. The King himſelf (Lewis the Young) was likewiſe preſent with William Count of Nevers. The Council being ſet, Saint Bernard produc'd there Peter Abaelard's Book, recited the Erroneous or Abſurd Propoſitions which he had extracted thence, and urg'd Peter Abaelard either to diſown that he had writ them, or if he would acknowledge them to be his, to prove or retract them. Peter Abaelard had recourſe to ſhifts, and would not anſwer expreſly, tho' he had Liberty given him to do it, had very favourable Judges, and was in a place where he need not to fear any thing: But whether he fear'd an Inſurrection of the People, if Otho of Friſingen's Word be to be taken in the Caſe, or whether he thought he ſhould have greater Advantage at Rome, where were Cardinals and Prelats who thought it an honor to be his Diſciples, he appeal'd to the Pope, and afterwards withdrew from the Aſſembly attended with thoſe of his Party. Thô' the Biſhops were of Opinion that this Appeal was not Regular, becauſe he appeal'd to Judges of his own Chooſing; yet out of Reſpect to the holy See, they would not pronounce any ſentence againſt his perſon; but they condemn'd his Opinions after they had been read over ſeveral times and refuted Publickly by Saint Bernard. This Sentence being paſs'd, the Arch-Biſhop of Sens and his Suffragans, and the Arch-Biſhop of Rheims with his three Suffragans who were at the Synod wrote ſeverally to Pope Innocent II. to deſire him to confirm the Sentence which they had paſs'd againſt the Errors of Abaelard and to intreat him to prevent his teaching any Longer, and his having any Countenance at the Court of Rome. Their Letters are the hundred and Ninety firſt, and the three hundred and thirty ſeventh among the Letters of Saint Bernard, who doubtleſs compos'd them himſelf. He wrote likewiſe in his own Name to the Pope the hundred and Eighty Ninth Letter wherein he earneſtly exhorts him to proſcribe the Errors of Abaelard, and to hinder him from having any Countenance in the Court of Rome. He likewiſe ſent him the Heads which he had found fault with in Abaelard's Book, with an Ample Refutation of his Errors. This is the hundred and Ninetieth, or Ninty firſt Opuſcule. Laſtly to prevent Abaelard from making uſe of that Credit which he had at Rome in his favour, he wrote to three Cardinals his Friends, to do what they could, that Abaelard might not ſucceed in his Deſigns. This is the Subject Matter of the hundred and ſecond, the hundred and third and three hundreth and thirty Eighth Letters.

The Confirmation of the Sentence paſs'd by the Counſil of Sens by the Pope.

The Pope return'd Anſwer to the Prelates of the Council of Sens, and to Saint Bernard, that he commended the Zeal which they had expreſs'd againſt the Errors of Abaelard: That after he had advis'd with the Biſhops and Cardinals he had condemn'd the Heads which they had ſent him, and all the Errors of Peter Abaelard with the Author of them, on whom he impos'd a perpetual ſilence as on a Heretick, and that he had adjudg'd that all the Followers and Defenders of his Errors ought to be Excommunicated. This Letter which is the hundred and Ninty fourth among Saint Bernard's bears date July the 16*th* in the Year 1140. In an Order of the ſame or the foregoing day, directed to the ſame Biſhops and Saint Bernard, he joyns Peter Abaelard to Arnulphus of Breſſe, and orders the Biſhops to impriſon them, and to burn their Books where-ever they found them.

Abaelard's Apology.

Abaelard to juſtify himſelf compos'd an Apology, or rather a Confeſſion of Faith, wherein after he had taken Notice, that it was a hard matter, when one writ, to avoid reproach; he proteſts in the preſence of God, that he is not at all ſenſible of being guilty of thoſe things whereof they accus'd him; and that if he were ſatisfied of his having advanc'd any Error, he was reſolv'd to maintain it no longer: That it might happen that by careleſneſs he might have writ what he ought not to have writ; but that he calls God to Witneſs, that as to thoſe Points whereof he was accus'd he had advanc'd nothing out of an ill Deſign, or Pride; That he always ſpoke in Publick, and never conceal'd his Writings: That if in that great Number of Lectures which he had held, he had faln into any extravagancies, he would never be ſtiff in the Maintenance of them, but would be always ready to give ſatisfaction by Correcting or blotting out what he might have advanc'd improperly: But that as it was his Duty to correct the faults which he had committed, he was likewiſe oblig'd to refute thoſe Accuſations of Error which had been falſly laid to his Charge, becauſe as Saint Auguſtine ſays, he who is negligent of his Reputation is an Enemy to himſelf, and ſilence is a kind of Confeſſion: That 'tis for this Reaſon that he Anſwers thoſe Heads which are publiſh'd againſt him, to let all the Faithful know that he is a true Son of the Church; that he receiv'd whatever it receiv'd; that he rejected whatever it rejected, and that he always continu'd in the Union of the Church, tho' he were not equal to others in the ſanctity of his Life. He thereupon in this Apology rejects the Errors whereof he was accus'd, and profeſſes the Contrary Truths, by declaring (1.) That he abhorr'd the Propoſition which had been maliciouſly imputed to him, That the Father had a perfect Power, that the Son had only a Certain Power, and that the holy Ghoſt had no Power at all; and he profeſſes that he believes that the Son and Holy Ghoſt are of the ſame Subſtance with the Father, and that they have the ſame Power, and the ſame Will, and pretends that it was either out of Malice or Ignorance that they had accus'd him of having ſaid that the Holy Ghoſt was not of the ſame Subſtance with the Father. (2.) That he profeſſes to believe that the Only Son of God was made man to deliver us from the Slavery of Sin and from the Bondage of the Devil, and to open an Entrance to us to Heaven by his Death. (3.) That Jeſus Chriſt is the true and only Son of God, Born of the Subſtance of the Father before all Worlds; and that the holy Ghoſt is the third perſon of the Trinity who proceeded from the Father and the Son. (4.) That the Grace of God is ſo neceſſary to all men, that neither Nature, nor Free-will are ſufficient to Salvation, becauſe Grace Prevents us that we may Will, follows that we may do what we Will, and accompanies us that we may perſevere. (5.) That God cannot do any thing but what is agreeable to his Nature for him to do, and that he has indeed Power of doing a great many things which he will never do. (6.) That there are ſins of Ignorance, eſpecially when it proceeds from an Omiſſion of having learn'd what we are oblig'd to know. (7.) That God often hinders Evils, either by preventing the Evil Wills of Wicked men, or by changing them. (8.) That we have All contracted the Guilt and Puniſhment of Adam's Sin, which has been the Cauſe and Original of all our Sins. (9.) That thoſe who crucified Jeſus Chriſt committed a notorious ſin by nailing him to the Croſs. (10.) That the Perfection of Charity was in Jeſus Chriſt. (11.) That the Power of Binding or Unbinding was granted to the Apoſtles and their Succeſſors, and that all Biſhops be they Worthy or Unworthy have that Power, ſo long as the Church acknowledges them as Biſhops. (12.) That all thoſe who are equal in Charity, are equal likewiſe in Perfection and Merit. (13.) That the Father is as Wiſe as the Son, and the Son as Beneficent as the holy Ghoſt, becauſe the Glory of the three perſons of the Trinity is coequal. (14.) That one cannot Attribute to the Father the laſt Judgment or Advent. (15.) That the Soul of Jeſus Chriſt did not only deſcend into Hell in Power, but likewiſe really and ſubſtantially. (16.) That he had not maintain'd, that neither Action, nor the Will, nor Luſt, nor Pleaſure were ſins, and that we ought not to pray for the quenching of our Luſts. Laſtly he aſſerts that they did him wrong attributing a Book of Sentences to him which he had never compos'd; and conjures all the Faithful not to injure his Innocence, which the Truth ſhelters from all the faults aſcribed to him, and the rather becauſe Charity requires us to put the beſt Senſe on Doubtful matters.

The Retreat of Abelard to Cluny and his Death.

After he had publiſh'd this Apology, he ſet out on his Journey towards Rome; but being arriv'd at Cluny, he was detain'd there by Peter the Venerable, Abbot of Cluny. Whilſt he was there, the Abbot of Ciſteaux coming thither likewiſe, endeavour'd to bring him to make his Peace with Saint Bernard. Peter the Venerable urg'd the ſame thing to him alſo, perſwaded him to go and Wait upon him with the Abbot of Ciſteaux, and adviſ'd him that in caſe he had ſaid or writ any thing which might be Offenſive to the Ears of the Catholicks, to advance no ſuch thing for the future, and to ſtrike it out of his Books. He took his Advice, waited upon Saint Bernard, and was reconcil'd to him by the Mediation of the Abbot of Ciſteaux. He return'd afterwards to Cluny, where he reſolv'd to ſpend the reſt of his Days in Repoſe free from the Hurry and fatigue of the Schools. Peter the Venerable thought himſelf oblig'd to allow this favour to his Age, to his Weakneſs and to his Piety; not queſtioning withall but that his Learning would be very advantageous for the Inſtruction of his Monks. He wrote about it to Pope Innocent and pray'd him to grant that Abaelard might ſpend the remainder of his Life with them. 'Tis to be believed that the Pope granted him that favour; for Abaelard reſided in that Community till he dy'd, and behav'd himſelf with a great deal of Piety and Humility for two Years together. Towards the End of his Life he found himſelf very much oppreſs'd with Infirmities, and was ſent to the Monaſtery of Saint Marcellus of Chalons upon the Seyne, as being a more healthful and pleaſant place, where he dy'd in the year 1142. in the ſixty third year of his Age. Peter the Venerable acquainted Heloiſſa of his Death by a Letter, wherein he gives her an Encomium of his manner of Living ever ſince he had retreated to their Society, annexes thereto an Epitaph in his praiſe, and ſent his Body to the Abbey of Paraclete to be there interr'd. He afterwards went himſelf to viſit that Abbey, where he ſaid Maſs, made an Exhortation to the Religious in the Chapter houſe, gave them the Euchariſt, and promis'd Heloiſſa to put up Prayers to God for her in the Society of Cluny for thirty days together after her Death. She thank'd him for all thoſe Favours in a Letter which ſhe ſent to him, and at the ſame time intreats him to ſend her Abaelard's Abſolution, and to procure a Prebend for her Son Aſtrolabe. Peter the Venerable ſent her this Abſolution, and promis'd her to do his beſt for the procuring a Prebend for her Son, tho' the Biſhops were very Scrupulous in granting thoſe Sort of Benefices.

The Works of Abaelard.

The Works of Abaelard which are now extant are the Letters which we have mention'd in the Courſe of his Hiſtory, Expoſitions of the Lords Prayer, of the Apoſtles Creed, and of the Creed of Saint Athanaſius, A Reply to the Queſtions or Problems propos'd by Heloiſſa, a Book about Hereſies, a Commentary on the Epiſtle to the Romans divided into five Books, thirty two Sermons on the Feſtivals of the year, an Introduction into Theology divided into three Books, the laſt of which is imperfect. Thoſe which are loſt, or have not as yet been printed, are his Logick, of which he makes mention in his firſt Letter and in the third Book of his Theology; his Notes upon Ezekiel, his Morals intituled Noſce Teipſum, Know thy ſelf; another Book intituled, Sic & Non, Yea and No, which is to be met with in Manuſcript in the Library of Saint Germain of Prez, ſo intitul'd, becauſe 'tis a Collection of ſuch Sentences out of holy Writ, as are in appearance contrary to each other, and a Treatiſe of the Creation of the World, dedicated to Heloiſſa, which is likewiſe a Manuſcript in the ſame Library.

In abſtracting his Works we will begin with his Introduction into Theology; which is the Book which has made ſo great a Noiſe in the World, it being that which Contains the Principles of his Doctrine, and the Heads upon which he was reprehended and condemn'd.

He begins the Firſt Book with the Explication of Faith, Hope and Charity; he ſays that there are three things neceſſary to Salvation, Faith, Charity, and the Sacrament; for he believes that Hope is comprehended in Faith, as a Species in its Genus. He defines Faith to be the Eſtimation or Idea of Inviſible things; and Hope the Expectation of ſome Good Faith, according to him, has Reſpect to Good and Evil, both preſent and future; whereas Hope has only regard to future Good. He defines Charity to be an honourable Love directed to its due End or Object; and Luſt on the Contrary to be a ſhameful and diſhonourable Love. Love in General is that Good Will and Affection which one has for another, whereby one wiſhes to an other ſome Good upon the Sole Eſteem which he has for him: Charity is the Love of God; Luſt or Concupiſcence is the Love of the World: God is the Ultimate End or Object of the former, Man is the Ultimate End or Object of the Latter. He obſerves that Man is the Cauſe, but ought not to be the End of his Actions, and that what he does for himſelf ought to have a Reſpect to God. As for the Sacrament he defin'd it to be an outward and Viſible Sign of the Inviſible Grace of God: Thus for inſtance (ſays he) when a man is baptiz'd the outward waſhing of the Body which we behold, is the ſign of the Inward Waſhing of the Soul. Faith is the Foundation of other Virtues, becauſe we only hope for what we believe: For which reaſon 'tis defin'd by the Apoſtle Heb. 11. 1. to be the Subſtance, i. e. the Foundation and Origin of things hop'd for; things Inviſible or future are properly the Object of Faith, tho' ſometimes we apply this Term to things which are ſeen. Among the things which may be believ'd, there be ſome which 't is no matter whether they be believ'd or no; ſuch as whether it pleaſe God it ſhould or ſhould not rain to morrow: But when one ſpeaks of Faith, one means only that which relates to ſuch things which we are oblig'd to believe under the Pain of Damnation; and which belong to the Catholick or Univerſal Faith, the which is ſo neceſſary that without it no man can be ſav'd. This Faith has for it's Object the Nature of God and his Benefits ſhown to mankind. In the firſt place 'tis requiſite to retreat of that which relates to the Nature of God, and to explain how there is but one God and three persons. The Works of Abaelard.

After he had Establish'd the Unity, Simplicity, and Immutability of God, he treats of the Trinity of Persons. He says that one of the Divine Persons is not the Other; That the Father, for Instance, is not the Son, nor the Son the holy Ghost, because they are of the same nature and distinguish'd only personally; That the Property of God the Father is, not to be begotten: That of the Son, to be begotten, but not made nor Created; That of the holy Ghost, to proceeed from the Father and the Son, but not made nor Created. The Names of the three persons comprehend the Essence which is supremely or infinitely perfect. The Power of God is denoted by the Name of Father, the Wisdom by that of the Logos or the Son, and the Love of God towards men by that of the Holy Ghost, the three things which make up the Supreme Good. The Distinction of these three persons serves to perswade men, to render to God the Worship and Adoration which they ow to him; for two things inspire into us Respect, viz, Fear and Love: The Power and Wisdom of God make us to fear him, because we know that he is our Judge; that he can punish us, and that nothing is hid from his Eyes; and his Goodness makes us to love him, because 'tis but just and reasonable to love him who does us so much Good. This likewise serves to render the Works of God the more admirable; since he can do whatsoever he pleases; that he knows how to preserve what he has made, and Wills that every thing should be made and subsist in its Order. He takes notice that yet we ought not to believe that those Attributes do so agree to each of the Divine Persons, but that they may be common to them all; so that we are not to believe that the Father is only Powerful, the Son Only Wise, and the holy Ghost only Merciful; but on the Contrary that these three persons have the same Power, Wisdom and Mercy: That these three Properties are only attributed to the three Divine Persons in an Especial Manner, as their particular Operations are attributed to them, tho' all the Divine Operations which relate to the Creatures, are Common to all the three Persons, namely the Creation to the Father, the Incarnation to the Son, and the Regeneration to the holy Ghost. Afterwards he proves the Mystery of the Trinity by several passages out of the Old Testament, and by the Testimonies of the heathen Philosophers of whom he quotes a great many.

He foresaw that these Citations out of the Heathen Philosophers concerning the Mystery of the Trinity would seem extraordinary, and displease a great many People, therefore he makes use of part of the Second Book to justifiy himself in this particular. (1.) By the Example and Testimonies of Saint Jerom and the other Fathers. (2.) By demonstrating that Logick and the other Sciences are not useless to Religion, provided a right use be made of them. (3.) By showing that 'tis usefull to explain Mysteries as well as one can, by Instances and Comparisons, and to demonstrate that they are not contrary to Reason, especially when they were to treat with Jews, Heathens, and Hereticks. (4.) By refuting those who maintain'd that one ought not to make use of Reason, but only Authority to prove the Mysteries of Faith. (5.) By maintaining that one might have some Knowledge of Mysteries, and that as we have Terms whereby to explain them, 'tis requisite likewise that we have Ideas to answer those Terms. (6.) Because without taking any Notice of Jews and Pagans, there are likewise some Hereticks or Persons erroneous about our Mysteries; viz. a certain Laick nam'd Tacheline in Flanders, who caused himself to be stil'd by the People the Son of God; and Peter of Bruis in Provence, who had so far subverted the Order and Discipline of the Church, as to oblige a great many People to be rebaptiz'd, and taught that one ought not to Celebrate the Sacrament of the Altar any Longer, nor make use of the Cross; That it was not requisite any longer to pass by in silence the Publick Professors who taught Errors contrary to the Catholick Faith and Sound Doctrine, among whom he opposes four, one in France, another in Burgundy, a third in Angers, and a Fourth in Bourges. He gives a particular account of their Errors, which it may not be amiss to insert here. "The "first (says he) asserts that several of those who liv'd before the Coming of Jesus Christ were "sav'd without having believ'd his future Coming; That our Saviour proceeded out of the Vir-"gins Womb after the same manner as Other Men, and that God begat himself. The Second tea-"ches that the three Properties which distinguish the three Divine Persons, are three Distinct Essen-"ces of the same Person, and of the Divine Nature: That the Body of our Saviour did not "increase, but was of the same Bigness in the Virgins Womb and in the Manger, as it was upon "the Cross. That the Marriages of Monks or Nuns are Valid, and that one ought not to di-"vorce them, but only to injoyn them Penance. The third not only maintains that the Attri-"butes of the Divine Persons are things distinct from the Godhead, but likewise that all the other "Attributes, such as Justice, Mercy, &c. are Qualities and things distinct from God. The fourth "has been so Extravagant, as to assert that since things may happen otherwise than God foresaw "they would, 'tis possible for him to be deceiv'd.

From this Digression he returns to his Subject, and treats of the Divine Nature. He says that God is not an Accident, nor properly a Substance, if you take that word to signifie an Essence which supports Accidents; that he may be call'd an Essence; that he is not comprehended under any of Aristotle's Ten Categories; that we want proper Terms whereby to express his Nature and Perfections, but that we make use of Energical and figurative Terms, and give Examples and Similitudes to explain imperfectly what agrees to this ineffable Nature. He produces several of these about the Mystery of the Trinity, and in the first place observes that things may be One, either by Resemblance, or in Number, or in Propriety, and that as in one and the same thing there are a great many properties, so in one and the same Divine Essence there are three distinct Persons who have distinct Properties, because the Father begets, the Son is begotten, and

The Works of Abaelard.

Holy Ghoſt proceeds from the Father and the Son. That 'tis true indeed, that we have not among created Beings any Inſtance wherein one and the ſame Eſſence are three Perſons; but that we are not to ſeek for a perfect Reſemblance, ſince 'tis ſufficient to bring ſome Compariſons. He produces that of a Seal, compoſed of the Material, and the Figure engraven thereon. The Seal is neither the ſimple Material, nor the ſimple Figure, but a ſort of an Integer compoſed of both, and yet in reality the Seal is nothing elſe but the Material, thus or thus engraven, though the Figure is not the Material, nor the Material the Figure.

After this he diſtinguiſhes between the proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, and the Generation of the Word, in that the Logos being Wiſdom, partakes of the power of the Father, and may therefore be ſaid to be of the ſubſtance of the Father; whereas the Holy Ghoſt being denoted by the Name of Love or Charity, which is not a Power, is not of the ſubſtance of the Father. He immediately corrects the Notion of Arianiſm, which thoſe Words ſeem to imply, by ſaying that the Holy Ghoſt is of the ſubſtance of the Father, in the Sence that he ſo proceeds from him, as to have the ſame ſubſtance with him; but that though he be Conſubſtantial to the Father, yet properly ſpeaking, he is not begotten of his ſubſtance. (This is a hard and improper Expreſſion, contrary to the manner of the Father's ſpeaking, and conformable to that of the Arians, though Abaelard rejects their Error.) He ſays that the Holy Ghoſt proceeds from the Father and the Son, becauſe Love, or rather the effect of Love proceeds from Power and Wiſdom, ſince the Reaſon of God's doing Good, is becauſe he has Power to do it, and Wiſdom to know that it is Good.

This gives him an occaſion of refuting the Opinion of the Greeks concerning the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt from the Son alone, and of ſhewing that one might add ſomething to the Creed, provided it were not contrary to the Faith. He explains the Coeternity of three Divine Perſons, by the Inſtance of the Light and Rays which proceed from the Sun, and which exiſt the ſame moment with the Sun. Laſtly, he pretends that the Heathen Philoſophers have acknowledg'd the Trinity.

In the Third Book he treats particularly of the Power of God, and maintains that God cannot do any thing but what he does do, and cannot do all that he does not do, becauſe God can only do what he Wills; but he cannot Will to do any thing but what he does do, becauſe it is neceſſary for him that he ſhould Will whatever is convenient; from whence it follows, that whatever he does not do is not convenient; that he cannot Will to do it, and conſequently cannot do it. He himſelf owns, that this is his own particular Notion, that ſcarce any Body elſe is of this Opinion, that it ſeems contrary to the Doctrine of the Saints and to Reaſon, and to derogate from the greatneſs of God. Hereupon he ſtarts a very difficult Objection. "A Reprobate (ſays he) may be ſav'd; "for he knows no Being but what God does ſave, wherefore God may ſave him, and conſequent-"ly do ſomething which is not neceſſary to be done." To this he replys, that one might very well aſſert that ſuch a Man may be ſav'd by the Relation to the poſſibility of Human Nature, which is capable of Salvation; but that it could not be affirm'd that God could ſave him, if we have reſpect to God himſelf, becauſe 'tis impoſſible that God ſhould do any thing, but what he ought to do. He explains this by ſeveral Examples: A Man who ſpeaks may hold his Tongue, but that 'tis impoſſible for one who ſpeaks to be at the ſame time ſilent. A Man's Voice may be heard, but one who is Deaf cannot hear it. A Field may be Cultivated and Till'd, though a Man may not cultivate it, &c.

From the Power of God he proceeds to his Immutability; he ſays that God does not change himſelf when he produces new effects, becauſe in him there are not ſuch new Motions and new Inclinations as are in us, but only new effects proceeding from an Eternal Will; that he cannot change Places, ſince he is Omni-preſent, and that when 'tis ſaid that he deſcended into the Virgin's Womb, 'tis to denote his Humiliation; but that in being made Man, he was not chang'd, becauſe the Divine Subſtance is united to the Humane Nature without a change of its Nature; and that the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt is a Compound of the Divine Logos, the Soul, and of the Fleſh; That thoſe three Natures are united in ſuch a manner as that they retain each their own Nature; and that as the Soul is not chang'd into Fleſh, ſo the Divine Nature is not chang'd, though it be perſonally united to the Soul and the Fleſh. Laſtly, he treats of the Divine Knowledge and Wiſdom. He ſays that God has foreſeen and pre-ordained all things; and ſo with reſpect to God nothing happens by chance, though his preſcience does not deſtroy Free-Will. He defines it to be a free Determination of the Will, and aſſerts that it has been frequently experienc'd, that the Will is not conſtrain'd by any Violence, and that it has a power of doing or not doing a thing. He obſerves that this kind of Freedom in the Will does not relate to God, but only to Men, who may alter their Will, and do or not do a thing. He produces the Opinion of ſome who believ'd that this Freedom conſiſts in a Power of doing both Good and Evil; but he maintains that thoſe who are ſo happy as to have no power of Sinning, are nevertheleſs Free, and are ſo the more becauſe of their being delivered from the ſervitude of Sin. From hence he concludes, that generally and properly ſpeaking Free-Will is when one may voluntarily and without conſtraint accompliſh that which it has reſolved upon; a Liberty which is in God as well as in Men, and in all who are not deſtitute of the Faculty of Willing. He adds ſeveral Philoſophical Niceties about the Preſcience and Determination of Propoſitions concerning future Contingencies.

The Explications of the Lord's-Prayer, and of the Creeds of the Apoſtles, and of St. Athanaſius, contain nothing in them which is very remarkable.

The Problems or Queſtions which were propos'd to him by Heloiſſa, are almoſt all of them upon hard Texts of Scripture, which Abaelard explains with a great deal of Juſtice and Accuracy.

The Book of Hereſies is a ſummary Account of the principal Errors of the Hereticks, againſt which which he produces ſeveral Paſſages out of the Holy Scriptures. He therein particularly refutes the Errors againſt the Sacraments of the Euchariſt and of Baptiſm, againſt the Adminiſtration of Penance, againſt the Ceremonies of the Church, and againſt the Invocation of Saints. Some have thought that this Piece was not Abaelard's; but 'tis not unworthy of him, and there is nothing to hinder us from thinking it to be his. Abaelard's Doctrine examin'd.

The Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Romans, is a literal Explication of that Epiſtle, wherein he ſhews the Coherence and Conſequence of the Apoſtle's Diſcourſe, and renders his Terms intelligible by paraphraſing upon them.

Abaelard's Sermons are not very Eloquent, but ſuch Diſcourſes as contain in them Reflections upon the Words of Scripture, which agree to the Myſteries whereof he Treats, together with ſeveral Moral Inſtructions. The Sermon upon St. John the Baptiſt, is a very ſharp Satyr againſt ſome Monks, and ſeveral Canons of his time, and particularly againſt St. Norbert.

St. Bernard in the general, accuſes Peter Abaelard of treating of the Trinity like Arius, of Grace like Pelagius, and of the Incarnation like Neſtorius; of having bragg'd that he was ignorant of nothing, and of being never willing to ſay, Neſcio, i. e. I do not know; of being willing to expound inexplicable things, and to comprehend incomprehenſible Myſteries: Of giving a reaſon for that which was above Reaſon; of believing nothing but what Reaſon diſcovers to us, of placing Degrees in the Trinity, Terms and Limits to the Majeſty of God, and Numbers in Eternity. Theſe are the general Reflections which he caſt upon him. Abelaard's Doctrine Examined.

In particular, he finds fault with thoſe Expreſſions of Abaelard concerning the Holy Ghoſt, viz. That he is not of the ſame ſubſtance with the Father, as the Son is. He is aſtoniſh'd to find him on one ſide, owning that he is Conſubſtantial to the Father and the Son; and on the other ſide, denying that he proceeds from the ſubſtance of the Father and the Son. He maintains that the abſolute Attributes of God, ſuch as his Omnipotence, Wiſdom and Mercy, does not agree more to one than to another of the Three Divine Perſons. He oppoſes Abaelard's Compariſon taken from a Seal and the material whereof 'tis made. He finds fault with the Definition of Faith which Abaelard makes uſe of, becauſe he therein gives to Faith the name of Eſtimation, which is of too looſe a Signification.

He omits ſpeaking to ſeveral other Propoſitions of Abaelard; that Jeſus Chriſt had not the Spirit of Fear: That the fear of God will not ſubſiſt in the other Life: That the Accidents of the Bread and Wine after the Conſecration are in the Air: That the Demons do not tempt Men, but only by the Virtue of ſome Stones, and of ſome Herbs, which they know and make uſe of: That the Holy Ghoſt is the Soul of the World. Proceeding afterwards to what relates to the Incarnation, he in the firſt place cites the Propoſition wherein Abaelard maintain'd that Jeſus Chriſt did not come into the World on purpoſe to redeem Mankind; upon this he urges the Buſineſs very home to him, and ſhews, that neither Scripture nor Tradition acknowledge any other end of the Incarnation, beſide the redeeming of Mankind from the Bondage of the Devil, into which they had faln by the Sin of their firſt Parent. He charges him with ſuch things as he only advanc'd in his Commentary by way of Query. He demonſtrates in oppoſition to Abaelard, that the end of Redemption does not conſiſt in the Love of Jeſus Chriſt, ſince Infants are redeem'd by Baptiſm, before they arrive to the uſe of Reaſon, and conſequently before they are capable of loving at all. Laſtly, he conſiders three things in the Incarnation; The example of Humility which God has given us by thus abaſing himſelf; The meaſure of Charity, which he extended ſo far as to the Death upon the Croſs; and the Sacrament of Redemption, whereby he has deliver'd Men from Death by his Death. Theſe are the Heads whereof St. Bernard treats in his large Letter againſt Abaelard, directed to Pope Innocent II. which makes the Eleventh of his Opuſcula.

But to come to an exact knowledge of all the Errors charg'd upon Peter Abaelard, 'tis ſufficient only to conſult the Collection of the Propoſitions extracted out of his Works, which was read in the Council of Sens, and ſent to the Pope. It conſiſts of Fourteen Propoſitions. The firſt is the Compariſon which he makes of a Seal of Copper, to explain the myſtery of the Trinity. The ſecond is that which he ſays of the Holy Ghoſt, viz. That the Holy Ghoſt is not a Power, nor of the ſubſtance of the Father, though the Three Perſons of the Trinity are of the ſame ſubſtance. The third, that God cannot do any thing elſe but what he does do. The fourth, that the end of the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt, was not only to redeem Mankind, but to inlighten the World with the Luſtre of his Wiſdom. The fifth, that ſpeaking properly and without a Figure, we cannot ſay that Jeſus Chriſt is a third Perſon of the Trinity. The ſixth, that God has not given more Grace to him who is ſav'd, than to him who is not, before the former has cooperated with his Grace; that he offers his Grace to all the World, and that it depends on the Freedom of Men's Will, whether they will make uſe of it or reject it. The ſeventh, that God ought not nor cannot hinder Evil. The eighth, that when 'tis ſaid that Infants contract Original Sin, this ought to be underſtood of the Temporal and Eternal Puniſhment, which is due to them becauſe of Adam's Sin. The ninth, that the Accidents which remain after the Conſecration of the Euchariſt, are not joyn'd to the ſubſtance of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, as they were to the Bread and Wine, but are in the Air: That the Body of Jeſus Chriſt retains its Figure and Lineaments, and that what we ſee are falſe appearances under which the Body of Jeſus Chriſt is hid. The tenth, that 'tis not the outward Action, but the Will and the Intention which render Men either Good or Bad. The eleventh, that the Jews who crucified Jeſus Chriſt in ignorance and out of Zeal for the Law, did not commit any Sin in ſo doing, and ſhall not be condemn'd for this Action, but for their former Sins which merited this Blindneſs. The twelfth, that thoſe Words, whatſoever you ſhall bind on Earth ſhall be bound in Heaven, are to be underſtood thus: Whatſoever you ſhall bind in this preſent Life, ſhall be bound in the preſent Church: That none but the Apoſtles had this Power, and that if it had been communicated to their Succeſſors, 'tis to be underſtood only of thoſe who have the Holy Ghoſt. The thirteenth, that neither the Suggeſtion nor the Pleaſure which follows it are ſinful, but the conſenting to an Evil Action, and the contempt of God. The fourteenth, that Omnipotence belongs only to the Father as a Perſonal Attribute.

Abaelard in his Apology diſowns the Heretical meaning of thoſe Propoſitions, but the Queſtion which ſtill remains is to know in what Senſe he advanc'd them. It cannot be deny'd, but that he had Catholick Notions about the myſtery of the Trinity, and did believe that the Three Divine Perſons were of the ſame Nature. The Compariſon of a Seal which he makes uſe of to explain this Myſtery is not altogether exact, nor does he pretend that it is; but he owns that we can find nothing among the Creatures, which perfectly reſembles this incomparable Myſtery. Nor does he deny that Power, Wiſdom and Love are ſuch Attributes as are common to the Three Divine Perſons; he declares the contrary even in expreſs Terms; but he attributes Power to the Father, Wiſdom to the Son, and Love to the Holy Ghoſt, only by way of Appropriation; wherein he ſeems not to diſagree from the Doctrine of the Fathers and Divines. But in the third Propoſition, he does not agree with others in the manner of thinking and expreſſing his Thoughts; wherein he ſays that God can only do what he does do, and cannot do what he doth not do. This does not proceed from his diſ-believing, that the Power of God in its own Nature can extend it ſelf to other Objects; but he pretends that it being conſider'd as joyn'd to the Wiſdom and Will of God, he could not do any thing beſide what he Wills, nor does any thing beſides what he Wills and actually does.

As to that which relates to the end of the Incarnation, (which is the fourth Propoſition) 'tis not to be believ'd that he deny'd that Jeſus Chriſt had redeemed and deliver'd Men from the ſlavery of Sin by his Death; he aſſerts the contrary in ſeveral places; but he might have pretended that this redemption of Mankind from the Captivity of Sin and the Devil, was not the only Motive of the Incarnation, nor the only Advantage which Men reap'd from thence, and the Divine Logos was likewiſe come into the World to enlighten the Nations thereof, and to give them an Example of Virtue; the Holy Fathers have ſaid the ſame thing in a great many places of their Writings.

The fifth Propoſition is only a Queſtion about a Name. He owns that the Divine Logos is one of the Perſons of the Trinity; but diſapproves of this Expreſſion, viz. That Jeſus Chriſt is a Third Perſon in the Trinity, a way of ſpeaking which is not uſual in the Fathers or the Schoolmen.

The ſixth Propoſition about Grace, is not agreeable to St. Auguſtine's Principles, nor is it Pelagianiſm nor Semipelagianiſm, ſince he acknowledges the Neceſſity of Grace for the producing of any Good in us, and only maintains that God has given equal Grace to all Men, whereof every one might make a good uſe or reject.

The ſeventh Propoſition is a Conſequence from his way of ſpeaking in the third.

The eighth is not to be met with in Abaelard's Writings which are now extant; he acknowledges on the contrary in his Apology, that Original Sin conſiſts in the Guilt.

The Ninth depends upon a Philoſophical Diſpute about the nature of Accidents, and is of no prejudice to the Faith about the myſtery of Tranſubſtantiation, which Abaelard own'd; and when he ſays that they are falſe Appearances, by this he underſtands that they reſemble Bread which is not there.

The Tenth may be taken in a good Senſe, ſo that by Works we underſtand only the external Actions, which are not expreſly Good or Bad, but as they become Voluntary.

The eleventh Propoſition is inſufferable.

The twelfth is an extraordinary and intolerable Expoſition of our Saviour's Words about the Power of Binding and Looſing.

He diſowns the thirteenth as that which he never writ.

With reſpect to the Fourteenth we have explained in what ſence he attributes Power to the Perſon of the Father. He declares in his Apology, that when he deny'd the Fear of God to be in Jeſus Chriſt and in his Elect, he thereby only underſtood a ſervile Fear and not a filial Fear, which he owns will laſt to all Eternity: And he therein maintains that he had never deny'd that the Soul of Jeſus Chriſt deſcended really into Hell. By the Name of Eſtimation which he applys to Faith, he does not mean an uncertain Opinion, but an Idea which we form to our ſelves of the Myſteries which are reveal'd to us, and which we firmly believe.

As to the General Reflections which are caſt upon him, it muſt be own'd that his Way of ſpeaking and explaining the Myſteries was Novel; that he rely'd too much upon his own Reaſonings; and that he was for prying too curiouſly into Incomprehenſible Myſteries. But at the ſame time it muſt likewiſe be own'd that he happen'd to be in ſuch times when this kind of Learning was in its Infancy; and that if in ſome places he ſwerv'd from the Truth, yet he argues very juſtly and very ſolidly on a great many Subjects. In a Word no body can deny but that he had great parts, much Learning and Logick, a profound Genius and penetration of Thought. We have only one Edition of his Works publiſh'd by the care of Francis Amboeſa Councellor of State, and printed at Paris in 4to. in the Year 1616.

CHAP. VIII.

An Account of the Errors and Condemnation of Gillebert de la Porree, Bishop of Poitiers.

GILLEBERT DE LA PORREE, a Native of Poitiers, after having been Professor of Divinity in that City, was chosen Bishop of the same Diocess, A. D. 1141. He had the most able Divines of his time for his Tutors, viz. Hilary at Poitiers, Bernard at Chartres, Anselm and Radulphus at Laon; but forasmuch as it is difficult, when one takes too great a Latitude in Philosophizing on the Mysteries of the Christian Religion, not to wander out of the right way; he maintain'd in his Commentaries on the Book of Psalms, on St. Paul's Epistles, and on the Works of Boethius, certain Propositions about the Godhead, which gave Offence to those who were not accustomed to handle Theological Matters after such a manner. He was more especially censur'd for asserting four Points concerning the Godhead, viz. 1. That the Divine Essence was not God. 2. That the Properties of the Divine Persons were not the Persons themselves. 3. That the Divine Persons were not an Attribute in any Proposition. 4. That the divine Nature was not incarnate; as also upon account of two other Articles, which were look'd upon as less considerable, viz. That there is none that Merits but Jesus Christ, and that the Elect only are truly Baptiz'd. The particular Opinion of Gillebert de la Porree.

Gillebert continuing to maintain this Doctrine, even when advanc'd to the Episcopal Dignity, and not forbearing to assert those Propositions, in a Discourse that he made to his Clergy; an Information was brought against him by his two Arch-deacons, Arnold and Calon to Pope Eugenius III. who was then at Sienna, ready to set forward in his Journey to France. The Pope deferr'd the taking cognizance of the Affair till his arrival in that Kingdom; and the Arch-deacons in the mean while engag'd St. Bernard on their side.

The Examination of Gillebert's Doctrine was begun at Auxerre in an Assembly conven'd there in the beginning of the Year 1147. and continued in another held at Paris on the Festival of Easter in the same Year. Gillebert appear'd in the latter before the Pope, the Cardinals, the Bishops and the other Prelates of the Assembly, whilst two Doctors, viz. Adam de Petit Pont Canon of Paris, and Hugh de Champfleuri, the King's Chancellor vigorously oppos'd him, deposing upon Oath, That they had heard him justifie some of the Errors of which he was accus'd; but St. Bernard was the first and principal of his Accusers. Gillebert deny'd that he maintain'd those Opinions that were laid to his charge, and some of the Bishops, who had been his Pupils, were call'd to Witness on his behalf, among whom were Raoul or Radulphus Bishop of Evreux, and Ives Doctor of Chartres, who declar'd that they never heard him assert any thing of the like nature. Therefore to convict him, his Adversaries demanded that his Commentary on Boethius's Book of the Trinity might be produc'd, in which (as they averr'd) those Errors were laid down in divers places. But this Book not being to be found, certain Propositions were alledg'd, taken out of the loose Papers of his Scholars, and amongst others, That as Man is call'd Wisdom, by reason of the Form of Wisdom; after the same manner, God is said to be his Goodness, his Wisdom, &c. St. Bernard oppos'd that Expression, and Gillebert continu'd to deny, that he ever taught or wrote, That the Godhead was not God, or that there was in God any Form or any Essence that was not God himself. He prov'd what he said, by the Testimony of the two Persons but now mention'd, and nevertheless maintain'd in the heat of the Dispute, That that which constituted God the Father, was different from that which constituted him God: This Expression gave Offence to Josselin Bishop of Soissons. Gillebert was likewise censur'd for calling the three Divine Persons, in a Prose or Hymn on the Trinity, three SINGULARS; and Hugh III. Arch-bishop of Rouen on the contrary affirm'd, that it ought to be said, That God was a SINGULAR. The Pope wearied with these Disputes, which continued two days, and not having at hand, Gillebert de la Porree's Book, that was call'd in question, thought fit to refer the determination of that Affair to the Council of Rheims, which was held in Lent in the following Year. The Council of Paris about the Affair of Gillebert de la Porree.

In the mean while Gillebert sent his Commentary on Boethius's Book of the Trinity to Pope Eugenius, who deliver'd it to be examined by Goteſcalchus Abbot of Mount St. Eloy, of the Order of Premontre, afterwards ordain'd Bishop of Arras, who having carefully perus'd it, made an Extract of some Propositions, which he judg'd to be erroneous, and annex'd to them certain Passages of the Fathers contrary to those Opinions: He presented this Memorial to the Pope with Gillebert de la Porree's Book. Alberic Cardinal Bishop of Ostia, and Legate of the See of Rome in Aquitaine, in like manner made an enquiry into Gillebert's Life and Conversation, and about the Errors that he had spread abroad; but he died before the meeting of the Council of Rheims. In that Council, the Propositions contain'd in the Memorial which the Abbot Gotheſchalchus had drawn up, were examin'd, but in regard that he had not a ready A Council at Rheims.

Tongue, the Pope caus'd the ſaid Paper to be put into St. Bernard's Hands. The Council was compos'd of the Pope, the Cardinals, and divers Biſhops of France, Germany, England and Spain; the chiefeſt among thoſe of France were Geffery de Loroux Arch-biſhop of Bourges, Gillebert's Metropolitan, Milo Biſhop of Terouane, Foſſelin Biſhop of Soiſſons, and Suger Abbot of St. Denis, who had the Adminiſtration of the Government in the abſence of King Lewis the Young, during his Expedition in the Holy Land. Theſe Prelates publickly condemn'd Gillebert de la Porree's Propoſitions, except Geffrey, who acted more cautiouſly, becauſe he had heard it given out, that the principal Cardinals were inclin'd to be favourable to the accus'd Party.

The Condemnation of Gillebert de la Porree, in the Council of Rheims.

On the firſt day of the Aſſembly, Gillebert caus'd large Volumes of his Works to be brought, ſaying, That his Adverſaries only produc'd a few mutilated and miſ-interpreted Paſſages taken out of them. Then a certain Propoſition found in his Book, was alledg'd, viz. That the Name of God does not ſignify the Subſtance that is, but that by which he is. When that Propoſition began to be debated, St. Bernard told Gillebert de la Porree, That 'twas not neceſſary to enter upon ſuch Diſputes, and that the Scandal proceeded only from hence, that many were perſuaded that he was in an Error, and that he gave it out, That the Eſſence, or the Nature of God, his Godhead, Wiſdom, Goodneſs, and Omnipotence is not God, but the Form by which he is God. Now declare (ſaid he to him) whether this be your Opinion or not? Gillebert had the boldneſs to reply, That the Form of God, or the Godhead by which he is God, is not God himſelf. Then St. Bernard ſaid, we have an Anſwer to our Queſtion, let this Declaration be committed to Writing: The Pope order'd the ſame thing, and Henry of Piſa, Cardinal brought Pen, Ink and Paper. Gillebert, as he was writing, cry'd out to St. Bernard, Write that the Godhead is God: St. Bernard anſwer'd without any heſitation, Yea, let it be written with a Steel-pen and on a Diamond, or let it be engrav'd on Stone, That the Divine Eſſence, Form, Nature, Godhead, Goodneſs, Wiſdom, Virtue, Omnipotence and Greatneſs is truly God. Afterwards that Propoſition was debated, and St. Bernard preſs'd Gillebert de la Porree, telling him, That if the Form of God were not God, it would be more perfect than God. He likewiſe cited divers Proofs out of St. Auguſtin's Works, which he ſent for from the Library of the Church of Rheims, in which that Saint aſſures us, That the Goodneſs, Omnipotence and other Attributes of God, are not different from God himſelf. Geffrey, afterwards Abbot of Clairvaux, objected againſt Gillebert, that he diſown'd the preceding Year the ſame Propoſition that he now aſſerted. Gillebert reply'd, That whatever he ſaid then, he maintain'd it at preſent.

Afterwards they paſs'd from that Propoſition to a ſecond, viz. That one God is not the three Perſons, nor the three Perſons one Thing; altho' they be one God by the ſame Godhead, as far as they are one by the ſame Thing. This Propoſition was likewiſe committed to writing, and St. Bernard oppos'd divers Paſſages of the Fathers. The next day, they continued to produce many other Teſtimonies of the Fathers contrary to that Doctrine; and then the other two Articles were propos'd and written, viz. That the Perſonal Properties and the Eternal Attributes of God, are not God, and that it cannot be ſaid, That the Divine Nature aſſum'd the Humane Nature, but that it ought to be ſaid, That the Perſon of the Son took our Nature. When they had diſputed for a long time about thoſe Propoſitions, the Cardinals declar'd in the end of the Aſſembly, that after having duly conſider'd what was alledg'd on both ſides, they would decide the Matter, and determine what ought to be believ'd. The Arch-biſhops and Biſhops being juſtly offended, that the Cardinals ſhould take upon them arbitrarily to paſs their Judgment in that Affair, and fearing leſt they ſhould acquit Gillebert de la Porree, whom they apparently favour'd; went the next day to meet St. Bernard: Then they drew up with his Advice, a Writing that contain'd Gillebert's Propoſitions, as alſo a contrary Confeſſion of Faith; and after having Sign'd it, put it into the Hands of Hugh Biſhop of Auxerre, and of Milo of Terouane, with Orders to make application to the Abbot Suger, to get it preſented to the Pope and the Cardinals; and to acquaint them, that they had patiently heard ſeveral Diſcourſes which ought not to have been made, purely out of reſpect to their Character; but being inform'd that they deſign'd to proceed to Sentence, they thought fit to offer them their Confeſſion of Faith, to the end that they might be enabl'd to paſs a right Judgment between both Parties: Laſtly, That their Eminences already had Gillebert's Confeſſion, who deliver'd it with a Proteſtation to Correct it, if they ſhould judge it expedient; but as for their parts, they proteſted that they would not ſuffer any alteration to be made in their Form. The Cardinal at firſt took it very ill, that the Biſhops and St. Bernard had prepar'd a Confeſſion of Faith before-hand, and by that means prevented their Judgments; imagining, that it belong'd only to the Holy See to make ſuch Forms, and to judge definitively of Matters of Faith. But St. Bernard qualify'd their Reſentments, by remonſtrating to them, That neither he, nor the Biſhops pretended to exhibit a final Deciſion, but only an Explanation of their Sentiments. Whereupon the Pope declar'd that they all approv'd the Doctrine contain'd in the Biſhops Confeſſion of Faith, and that if ſome of the Cardinals were favourable to Gillebert's Perſon, yet none approv'd his Errors. However, he did not confirm this Determination by a ſolemn Decree, but contented himſelf only to cauſe Gillebert to appear in an Aſſembly held in the Arch-biſhop's Palace at Rheims; and after having oblig'd him to retract his four Propoſitions, positions, he condemn'd them, and forbid the reading or the transcribing of his Book, till it were corrected by the Church of Rome. Gillebert promis'd to do it, but the Pope answer'd, that he should not be left at liberty to correct it at his pleasure: But nothing was decreed against his Person, so that he return'd to his Diocess reconcil'd with his Arch-deacons. St. Bernard was satisfy'd, that his Recantation was sincere, and that he really acquiesc'd in the Judgment of the Synod; nevertheless, some of his followers could not be persuaded to abjure his Opinions, but still persisted to maintain them, and therefore St. Bernard endeavours to confute those Miscreants, in his 80th Sermon on the Canticles, and treats them as Hereticks. Those erroneous Doctrines were likewise impugned by Geffrey Abbot of Clairvaux, in a Treatise written purposely on that Subject, in which he collects divers Passages of the Fathers, directly opposite to Gillebert's four Propositions.

Some other Errours were also attributed to him, but forasmuch as they were not found in his Books, 'twas judg'd sufficient to tear in pieces the loose Papers that were in the Hands of his Scholars or Pupils, and in which they were written. Geffrey cites a passage taken out of this Author's Gloss on the Psalms, in which he asserts, that the Humanity of Jesus Christ ought not to be ador'd with a Worship of Latria, but with that of Dulia; as also another extracted out of his Gloss on St. Paul's Epistles, where he says, That the name of God, and of the Son of God, is not attributed to the Humane Nature in Jesus Christ, unless by Adoption.

The Works of Gillebert de la Porree, were never as yet Printed, except one Letter on the Eucharist, publish'd by Father Luke Dachery in the Notes on Guibert de Nogent. His Commentaries on the Psalms, and on St. Paul's Epistles, and his Theological Treatise of the Trinity, are extant in Manuscript in divers Places; but we may judge by the Passages that are cited out of them, that the too great subtilty of that Man's Genius, caus'd him to fall into Expressions contrary to the simplicity of the Faith; a Misfortune that very frequently happens to those, who deviate from the Scripture and Tradition to Philosophize on the Mysteries of the Christian Religion. He died, A. D. 1154. The Writings of Gillebert de la Porree.

The Letter but now mention'd, is directed to Matthew Abbot of St. Florin, who had consulted him to know what ought to be done, in reference to a certain Priest, who thro' inadvertency had perform'd the Consecration, when there was no Wine in the Chalice, and having perceiv'd his mistake, made a new Consecration of the Bread and Wine. He returns for Answer, that 'twas requisite that that Priest should forbear saying Mass for some time, and that he should do Pennance for his Transgression. For the rest, that he had done ill, in making a new Consecration of the Bread and Wine, because the Body of Jesus Christ is altogether entire under each Species, and in regard that his Body and Blood was under the Species of Bread, altho' no Wine were consecrated: And that therefore the Communion might have been administer'd with the consecrated Bread; as Children receive it under the single Species of Wine, and sick Persons under that of the Bread. This Letter is very remarkable. Gillebert de la Porree's Letter.

CHAP. IX.

An Account of the Lives and Letters of the Popes who possess'd the See of Rome from Eugenius III. to the end of the Century.

ANASTASIUS IV. was a Citizen of Rome, and was call'd Conrad before his promotion to the Papal Dignity. He was at first Abbot of St. Anastasius, in the Diocess of Velitri, afterwards Cardinal Bishop of St. Sabina, and succeeded Pope Eugenius July 10. A.D. 1153. He possess'd the See of Rome only during one Year four Months and some Days, and died December 4. 1154. Anastasius IV.

He had for his Successour ADRIAN IV. an English-Man by Nation, who was nam'd Nicolas Break-spear before he attain'd to that Station, and was Cardinal Bishop of Albano. Eugenius III. sent him in quality of a Missionary into Norway, where he converted a great number of Infidels. He was generally reputed to be a Man of a gentle and liberal Disposition. In the beginning of his Popedom, Arnold of Brescia and his followers excited some troubles in Rome, and wounded Cardinal Gerard. Whereupon the Pope having suspended the City from Divine Service till the Romans had expell'd him and his Adherents, so that the latter were forc'd to make their escape by flight and retir'd to Otricoli in Toscany, where they were favourably receiv'd by the People; who look'd upon Arnold as a Prophet, but he was apprehended soon after, and notwithstanding the opposition made by the Viscounts of Campania, who had rescu'd him, he was deliver'd up to the Prefect or Governour of Rome, who caus'd Adrian IV.

him to be burnt at a Stake, and his Aſhes to be thrown into the River Tiber, leſt the People ſhould honour him as a Saint. This Pope pronounc'd an Anathema againſt William King of Sicily, who had refus'd to receive his Letters, becauſe he did not give him the Title of King, and who had ſeiz'd on ſome Territories belonging to St. Peter's Patrimony. Then his Holineſs went as far as Sutri to meet Frederic, who was arriv'd in Italy, accompany'd him to Rome, and ſet the imperial Diadem on his Head. A little while after, he made Peace with William King of Sicily, and granted him the Royal Style of King of both Sicilies. In writing to the Emperor Frederick about the Affair of the Biſhop of London, he incurr'd the diſpleaſure of that Prince, by inſinuating that the Empire was a Donation receiv'd by him from the Holy See; inſomuch, that the Pope was oblig'd to explain himſelf in a ſecond Letter, and to ſay, that he meant only with reſpect to his Coronation and Conſecration. However this did not fail to ſet them at variance, and their Quarrel was inflam'd, becauſe his Holineſs refus'd to confirm a certain Perſon, whom the Emperor had nominated to be Arch-biſhop of Ravenna. 'Tis alſo reported that the Pope deſign'd to excommunicate the Emperor if he had liv'd longer, but he died of a Quinſie in the City of Anagnia, September 1. A. D. 1159. But his Body was tranſlated to Rome, and interr'd in St. Peter's Church.

Alexander III.

After the ſolemnization of his Funeral Obſequies, 23 Cardinals met together, and choſe at the end of three Days, Roland Cardinal Prieſt, with the Title of St. Mark, and Chancellor of the Church of Rome, who was nam'd ALEXANDER III. But there were three Cardinals, viz. Octavian, John of St. Martin and Guy of Crema, who undertook to carry on another Election, and Octavian having obtain'd the Suffrages of the two others, aſſum'd the Quality of Pope, and the Name of Victor III. Afterwards he caus'd himſelf to be Cloathed in the Pontifical Habit; took poſſeſſion of St. Peter's Church by force, and ſet a Guard of Senatours over Alexander and his Cardinals, who were confin'd in the Fort during nine Days. The latter was remov'd to a Caſtle on the other ſide of the Tiber, and after having been ſhut up therein three Days, the People began to raiſe a Mutiny, inſomuch, that he was conducted with divers Biſhops and Cardinals a-croſs the City, to a Place call'd Nero's Victory, and there Conſecrated. The Emperor Frederick was then in Italy beſieging Cremona, and the two Competitours having made application to him to get their Intereſt maintain'd, he order'd them both to repair to Pavia, to take their Trial in a Council. Alexander not thinking fit to go thither, retir'd to Anagnia; and the Emperor in the mean while caus'd the Parties to be ſummon'd to the Council which he had conven'd: The former refus'd to appear, but Octavian preſented himſelf according to Order. Then the Emperor after having inform'd the Biſhops, that the Right of calling Councils belong'd to Princes, referr'd the Deciſion of that Quarrel to their Judgment. The Council was compos'd of fifty Arch-biſhops and Biſhops, and of a great number of Abbots. Victor, who was preſent there without an Adverſary, carry'd the Cauſe without any difficulty, upon making Proof, that he was firſt inveſted with the Pontifical Mantle; put in poſſeſſion of the Holy See; and acknowledg'd by the Clergy. Thus his Election, notwithſtanding its irregularity, was confirm'd by the Council, and that of Alexander declar'd null: The next Day, the latter and his Adherents were ſolemnly excommunicated. We have ſtill in our poſſeſſion the Acts of that Council, held, A. D. 1160. with the Synodical Letter of the Fathers aſſembled therein, that of the Emperor, that of the Biſhop of Bamberg, and that of the Canons of St. Peter at Rome, concerning the Election of Victor, and the Judgment paſs'd in his favour. They accuſe the Cardinals, who choſe Alexander, of having met together even in Pope Adrian's Life-time, to ſubſtitute Roland in his room, and of having carry'd on the laſt Election in a tumultuous manner. Alexander being inform'd of what was tranſacted againſt him in the Aſſembly of Pavia, excommunicated the Emperor Frederick.

The Declaration of the Kings of England and France, in favour of Alexander.

The other Princes of Europe were ready to do more Juſtice to Pope Alexander; for Henry II. King of England and Philip II. King of France, being perſuaded by their Prelates of the equity of their Cauſe, favour'd him under Hand; but not to do any thing raſhly in an Affair of that importance, they call'd Aſſemblies of the Prelates of their reſpective Kingdoms, viz. the former at Newmarket in England, and the other at Beauvais in France. It was agree'd in thoſe Conventions that Alexander's Right was moſt preferrable; but the Princes before they openly declar'd their Sentiments, ſollicited Frederick to own him as Pope, and to abandon Octavian. But perceiving him to be altogether inflexible to authorize their Declaration to the beſt advantage, they call'd a general Aſſembly of the Prelates and Noble-men of their Kingdoms, in which the Legates of the two Competitors were alſo preſent, in order to take a full cognizance of the Cauſe, and afterwards to declare for him, who ſhould be acknowledg'd as lawful Pope in that Aſſembly, for hitherto out of reſpect to the Emperor they did not think fit publickly to eſpouſe Alexander's Cauſe, altho' they were well inform'd of the validity of his Right. The matter being debated for ſome time in the Council, it evidently appear'd, from the Relation of the Cardinals, the Teſtimony of many Witneſſes, and even the Confeſſion of thoſe of Victor's Party, That the latter ſeiz'd on the See of Rome by force; was Cloath'd in the Pontifical Veſtments by Lay-men, without any Canonical Form; was excommunicated before his Conſecration; and was choſen by three excommunicated Perſons: On the other ſide, That Alexander was elected by all the other Cardinals; that he might have been immediately inveſted with the Pontifical Ornaments, if he had not at firſt refus'd to accept of them thro-thro' Humility; that he afterwards assum'd them in a solemn manner; and receiv'd Consecration from the Hands of those, who had a right to administer it. It was also made appear, That the Emperor declar'd for Octavian, a long time before the meeting of the Assembly of Pavia; that that Convention was not compos'd of 153 Bishops, as his Imperial Majesty gave it out, but only of 44; that the Prelates had taken a Resolution to suspend their Judgment, and not to own either of the two Competitors as Pope, till a general Synod were call'd, consisting of the Prelates of divers Kingdoms, or till they knew which of them was approv'd by the sound part of the Church; that they agreed to give the same Advice to the Emperor, but that he could not be induc'd to follow it; and that on the contrary, he had compell'd the Bishops, to confirm him whom he had already receiv'd; except 24, among whom was the Bishop of Pavia, in whose City, that Assembly was held: Therefore the Prelates of England and France, being well satisfied with these Reasons, acknowledg'd Alexander as lawful Pope, at the same time Excommunicating Octavian with his Adherents, and the two Kings in like manner follow'd the Judgment of the Council.

The Emperor being inform'd of the Transactions in France, held a second Assembly at Lodi, in which assisted Pilgrin Arch-bishop of Aquileia, Guy elect Arch-bishop of Ravenna, divers Bishops, a great number of Abbots and some Noble-men. He caus'd the Election of Octavian to be confirmed therein, and several Letters of Excuse were read, that (as it was given out) were sent by the Kings of Denmark, Norway, Hungaria and Bohemia, as also by six Arch-bishops, twenty Bishops, and many Abbots, as well of the Order of Clairvaux as of other Congregations, and in which they acknowledg'd Octavian as Pope: Hubert Arch-bishop of Milan, the Consuls of that City, and the Bishops of Placentia, Brescia, Bononia and some others were excommunicated in that Council, which was held in the Month of June, A. D. 1161. and continu'd during some Days.

In the mean while Alexander took Sanctuary in the Dominions of William King of Sicily, because the Emperor Frederick was Master of a great part of Italy, and waited for a favourable Opportunity to pass over from thence into France, where the distress'd Popes always met with a Place of Refuge, during the Persecutions that were rais'd against them. At last he found means to set out to Sea, and arriv'd in France on the Festival of Easter, A. D. 1162. where he was receiv'd by the Kings of France and England, who went to meet him as far as Torcy sur Loire, alighted in his presence, and conducted him on the Road, each of them holding the Reins of his Horse's Bridle. Frederick perceiving that Alexander retir'd to a place of safety, and was own'd by all the Christians of Europe, except the Germans and some Italians, caus'd a Proposal to be made to the King of France, that there should be an Interview between them at Avignon, or in some other Frontier-Town; that he would bring Victor along with him, and that the King should in like manner cause Alexander to appear there; that the Election of both should be thoroughly examin'd in an Assembly compos'd of the Prelates of Germany, France and Italy, and that all Parties should entirely submit to their final Decision. His Design was to cause both Competitors to be rejected, and to procure the Election of a third Person. However, the King of France approv'd his Proposal, and went to the Place appointed, but Alexander being more mistrustful than that Prince, refus'd to accompany him, and contented himself only to send some Cardinals thither to maintain his Right. The Emperor was highly offended, that the King had not brought Alexander, and forasmuch as he was the stronger 'twas much to be fear'd lest he should hem him in on every side, and take him Prisoner, if the King of England had not speedily caus'd his Troops to march on purpose to rescue him. This unexpected Recruit having broken Frederick's Measures, he caus'd another Proposal to be made to the King, viz. that he should come to meet him with the Prelates of his Kingdom, to receive the Sentence that should be pronounc'd by the Prelates of the Empire, as to the Contest between the Competitors to the Popedom; affirming, That they only had a right to judge of the validity of the Election of a Pope: The King reply'd, That his Prelates and Clergy being the Sheep of the Pope of Rome, 'twas their Interest to take cognizance of the Person, who was to be their supreme Pastor. Whereupon the intercourse was discontinu'd, and the King retir'd with his Forces.

Alexander passes into France.

A Conference at Avignon.

Pope Alexander arriv'd at Paris, A. D. 1163. and at his departure from that City, held a Council at Tours, where he renew'd the Anathema's publish'd against Octavian and Frederick. The Antipope Octavian died the next year at Lucca on the Festival of Easter, and his followers substituted in his room, Guy of Crema, who took the Name of Paschal III. The Death of Octavian weaken'd his Party, and the Italians wearied with the Emperor's tyrannical Government, began to incline towards Alexander's side; besides that Conrad chosen Arch-bishop of Mentz, and many other Bishops of Germany, declar'd in his favour. Therefore Alexander taking the advantage of so favourable a Conjuncture return'd to Italy, and made his publick Entry into the City of Rome in the Month of November, 1165. after having resided three Years in France. He was joyfully receiv'd by the People: But on the other side, Frederick us'd his utmost endeavours to maintain Paschal the Antipope, and to that purpose call'd an Assembly at Wurtzburg, A. D. 1166. in which he himself took an Oath, and caus'd the like Oath to be given to the most part of the Lords and Prelates of the Assembly, that they would not acknowledge any other Pope but Paschal, and that they would cause all those who depended on them, to submit to his Authority. The Deputies of the King of England, who was at variance with Pope Alexander, by reason of the Contests he had with Thomas Arch-bishop of Canterbury, took the same Oath.

Afterwards Frederick appear'd at the Head of an Army, and pass'd into Italy to put Paschal in possession of the Papal See: He enter'd Lombardy, besieg'd Ancona, and the next Year encamp'd near Rome; then he defeated the Romans in Battel; took part of the City; seiz'd on St. Peter's Church, and would have made himself Master of the whole City, if a Distemper, that rag'd in his Army had not oblig'd him speedily to retire to Lombardy. Alexander being thus deliver'd form so imminent a danger, had recourse to his thundering Bulls, and pronounc'd a Sentence of Deposition against Frederick in a Council held at Lateran, A. D. 1168. The Italians animated by that Sentence, revolted against the Emperor, submitted to Alexander, and expell'd the Schismatical Bishops. Frederick having attack'd the Milanese Troops, lost Twenty thousand Men, and was forc'd to shut himself up in Pavia, but not believing himself to be safe there, in regard that the whole Country of Lombardy had declar'd against him, he at last found means to escape into Germany, not without much difficulty. In the mean while Paschal continu'd in possession of St. Peter's Church, and Alexander resided at Benevento: The latter return'd from thence in the end of the Year 1169. and receiv'd the City of Frascati under his Protection: Whereupon the Romans were incens'd against him, and only promis'd to give him admittance into Rome, as their Sovereign, on condition that he should cause the Walls of Frascati to be demolished. He did it accordingly; but the Romans not having kept their word, he caus'd that Place to be fortified again, left a Garrison therein, retir'd to Anagnia: and from thence pass'd to Benevento, where he receiv'd in 1170. the Proposal made to him by Manuel Comnenus Emperor of the East, to re-unite the Greek Church to the Latin, and to own the supreme Authority of the See of Rome, on condition that he should Crown him Emperor of the West. The Pope commended his Design about the Re-union of the two Churches, and promis'd to contribute, as far as 'twas possible towards the carrying it on; but as for the demand of the Empire, he answer'd, That the matter appear'd to him to be too difficult, and that it did not lye in his Power to grant what he desir'd.

Some time after, Paschal the Antipope died at Rome, and those of his Party chose for Pope, John Abbot of Struma: Altho' Frederick had own'd his Authority, yet he did not forbear to send the Bishop of Bamberg to Alexander to negotiate a Treaty of Peace with him. That Prelate had a Conference with Alexander in Campania, and told him that his Master did not design any longer to act contrary to his Interest, but forasmuch as he refus'd to declare plainly, that he would acknowledge him as lawful Pope, or to promise Obedience to him, they parted without concluding any thing. Altho' Alexander's Affairs prosper'd every day more and more; nevertheless the Romans could not be induc'd to receive him into their City, and he usually resided either at Frascati or in Campania.

Frederick carry'd on a War in Italy, A. D. 1175. but not being successful in his Enterprizes, he renew'd the Negotiations of Peace; so that the Pope sent Legates to treat with him about it, but they were not able to come to any Agreement. The next Year Frederick's Army was entirely defeated by the Milanese Forces, insomuch that he was constrain'd to send Ambassadors to Alexander to conclude a Treaty of Peace: The Conditions were propos'd and were at last ratify'd in 1177. at Venice, where the Emperor and the Pope had an Interview: The former abandon'd the Party of Octavian, Guy and John of Struma, and promis'd Obedience to Alexander, who took off the Excommunication denounc'd against Frederick, and re-admitted him to the Communion of the Church of Rome. Some Authors relate divers fabulous Circumstances concerning this Reconciliation, and amongst others, that the Pope made an escape to Venice in a Disguise; that he was forc'd to implore the assistance of the Doge; that the Emperor sent his Son Otho with a Fleet to oblige the Venetians to deliver up the Pope into his Hands; that they defeated him and took him Prisoner; that the same Son agreed upon certain Articles of Peace with the Pope; that Frederick came in Person to confirm the Treaty; that he prostrated himself before all the People, at the Feet of the Pope, who set his Foot on his Neck, pronouncing these Words; It is written, thou shalt tread upon the Basilisk, and trample under Foot the Lion and the Dragon; that Frederick answer'd, I do not obey you but Peter; and that Alexander reply'd, both me and Peter. All these particulars are so many Fables, the Falshood of which is prov'd by Alexander's Letters, and by the Testimony of the Historians of that time. 'Tis worth the while to observe, after what manner Alexander speaks upon occasion of that Peace in his Letter.

" On the 21st Day of July (says he) by the Emperor's Order, the Son of the Marquess Albert, " and his Imperial Majesty's Chamberlain, took an Oath in the presence of divers Ecclesia- " stical and Secular Princes of the Empire; that upon the Emperor's arrival at Venice, he should " ratify by Oath, the Articles of the Peace of the Church that were already agreed upon; " that he should grant Peace to William King of Scicily for fifteen Years, and a Truce for Se- " ven, to the Lombards. On the 24th Day of the same Month, the Emperor came to the " Church of St. Nicolas, at the distance of a Mile from Venice, and having abjur'd the Schism, " as well as all the Bishops and German Princes, he receiv'd Absolution with them; after- " wards being arriv'd at Venice, he gave us the marks of his Obedience, with all man" ner of Humility, at the entrance of St. Mark's Church, in the preſence of an innumerable " Multitude of People; receiv'd from us the Bleſſing of Peace; gave us the right Hand; " and conducted us with Devotion to the Altar. The next day, being the Feſtival of St. James, " we went to St. Mark's Church to celebrate Maſs; the Emperor came to meet us without " the Church; gave us the right Hand; re-conducted us when Divine Service was ended; " held the Stirrup, whilſt we got up on Horſe-back; and perform'd all the Devoirs and Re- " ſpects due to us, that his Predeceſſors were wont to do. The Matters of Fact are thus re- lated by the Pope himſelf in three Letters.

" ner

The next day, the Emperor went to pay a Viſit to the Pope, and on Auguſt 1. he himſelf took an Oath, the ſame thing being likewiſe done by the German Lords, to obſerve the Peace that was concluded. Afterwards Abſolution was given to thoſe that had taken part with the Antipopes, and who promis'd for the future, to obey Pope Alexander and his Succeſſors. On September 16. the Pope held a Council of the Biſhops of Italy and Germany, in which the Treaty of Peace was confirm'd, and the Anathemas renew'd againſt the Schiſmaticks, who were not as yet return'd to the Boſom of the Church, and the Emperor ratify'd it by publick Letters. Laſtly, the Emperor before he left Venice, concerted with the Pope Matters relating to the reſtitution of the Revenues of the Church of Rome; and ſet forward in his Journey to Lombardy, whilſt the Pope went to Anagnia, where he arriv'd December 14. and from whence the next Year, he was re-call'd to Rome by the Clergy, Senate and People of that City. Thus an end was put to the Schiſm of the Church of Rome, and Alexander continu'd in the peace- able Poſſeſſion of that See till his Death, which happen'd in the Month of Auguſt, A. D. 1181.

Cardinal HUMBALD, a Native of Lucca, was choſen in his Place, and ſirnam'd LUCIUS III. He was expell'd Rome by the Senators, and retir'd to Verona, where he died, November 25. A. D. 1185. Lucius III.

LAMBERT Arch-biſhop of Milan, ſucceeded him under the Name of URBAN III. Theſe two Popes had ſeveral Conferences at Verona with the Emperor Frederick, about the putting of the Treaty of Peace in Execution, and the Election of the Arch-biſhop of Trier. The lat- ter had alſo ſome Conteſts with the Emperor, about certain Territories left by the Princeſs Mathilda to the Church of Rome; the diſpoſal of the Eſtates of the Biſhops after their de- ceaſe, which the Emperor claim'd as his Right; and the Taxes that were allotted to be paid to the Abbeſſes. And indeed, Matters were carry'd to that height, that Urban threaten'd to excommunicate the Emperor, and that Prince call'd an Aſſembly of the Prelates and Princes of Germany at Geinlenhuſen, A. D. 1186. to maintain his Rights, in which it was determin'd to write to the Pope about that Affair. Their Letter extremely incens'd his Holineſs, and caus'd him to take a reſolution to denounce a Sentence of Excommunication againſt the Em- peror, which would have been actually put in Execution, if the Inhabitants of Verona had not entreated him not to do it in their City. Therefore he departed from thence with that deſign, but was prevented by Death, which happen'd October 17. A. D. 1187. Urban III. An Aſſembly at Geinlen- huſen in 1186.

The next day, ALBERT, Cardinal Prieſt of St. Laurence, and Chancellor of the Church of Rome, was plac'd on that See, and bore the Name of GREGORY VIII. His Popedom did not continue during two entire Months; for he died December 16. in the ſame Year. Gregory VIII.

After a vacancy of twenty days, the See of Rome was fill'd up by PAULINUS Cardinal of Paleſtrina, choſen Jan. 26. A.D. 1188. and nam'd CLEMENT III. Under his Popedom the Chriſtian Princes undertook a Cruſade for the recovering of the Places that Saladin had taken from them in the Levant. The Emperor Frederick, Richard I. ſirnam'd Cœur de Lion King of England and Philip II. King of France, were engag'd in that Expedition. The firſt was drowned in 1190. as he was waſhing himſelf in a ſmall River between Antioch and Nice, and his Son Henry ſucceeded him in the Imperial Dignity. Pope Clement III. died April 10. A. D. 1191. Clement III.

HYACINTHUS, Cardinal Deacon with the Title of St. Mary, was choſen in his Place, under the Name of CELESTIN III. and after having been ordain'd on Holy Saturday, was plac'd in St. Peter's Chair on Eaſter-day. At that time, Henry arriv'd with an Army near Rome, and determin'd to enter the City to be Crown'd Emperor. Foraſmuch as the Pope put him off from time to time, the Romans ſent Deputies to promiſe him, That if he would engage to preſerve their Rights and Privileges, and to demoliſh the Caſtles that were built at Fraſcati, they would admit him, and would oblige the Pope to ſolemnize his Coronation. He accordingly conſented, and took an Oath before the Pope, at the Door of St. Peter's Church, that he would maintain the Eccleſiaſtical Rights; reſtore St. Peter's Patrimony; and raſe the Citadel of Fraſcati. Afterwards the Pope caus'd him to enter the Church, and actually Crown'd him Emperor, and Conſtance his Wife, the Daughter of Roger King of Sicily, Empreſs. William ſirnam'd the Good King of Sicily, the Nephew of that Princeſs, dying, ſhe laid claim to the Crown; but Tancred her Baſtard Brother excluded her, and got Poſſeſſion of the Throne, which gave occaſion to the War that Henry undertook to ſubdue that Kingdom. He march'd into Italy with a formidable Army, A. D. 1196. and treated the Nobility of Sicily in ſo outragious a manner, that his own Wife being ſenſibly afflicted with the Calamities of her Nation, joyn'd with them againſt her Husband, and compell'd him by force to grant them reaſonable Celeſtin III.

reaſonable terms of Peace. Henry did not long ſurvive that Reconciliation, for he dy'd at Meſſina in 1197. Pope Celeſtin excommunicated him ſome time before, for detaining Priſoner, Richard King of England, whom Leopold Duke of Auſtria had ſold to him, after having ſeiz'd on that valiant Prince in his Territories, as he was returning from his Expedition to the Holy Land. Upon account of that Excommunication, the Arch-biſhop of Meſſina refus'd to bury him in conſecrated Ground, till he had conſulted the Pope. Therefore he went to meet his Holineſs, and requeſted of him three Things, viz. 1. A Licence to interr the Emperor's Body according to due Form. 2. The deliverance of Marcowald his Imperial Majeſty's Chief Juſtice, who was beſieged by the Romans. And 3. That Frederick the Son of Henry, might be Crown'd King of Sicily. Celeſtin reply'd as to the firſt Article, That the Emperor could not be bury'd without the conſent of the King of England, and till the Mony were reſtor'd to that Prince, which he had exacted from him for his Ranſom: As to the ſecond Article, That the ſetting of Marcowald at Liberty depended on the Pleaſure of the Romans. He granted the laſt Article, on condition that the Sum of a thouſand Marks of Silver ſhould be paid to him, and as many to the Cardinals; and after that the Empreſs had taken an Oath upon the Holy Goſpels, That Frederick was begotten in lawful Wedlock of Her and Henry: As for the Succeſſion to the Empire, it was conteſted between Philip the Brother of Henry deceaſed, and Otho the Son of the Duke of Saxony, as we ſhall have occaſion to ſhew hereafter. Pope Celeſtin did not long ſurvive the Emperor Henry; for he fell Sick on the Feſtival of Chriſtmas in the ſame Year, and died Jan. 8. A. D. 1198.

It remains only for compleating the Hiſtory of theſe Popes, to give ſome account of their Letters.

Anaſtaſius IV's Letters.

The Letters of Anaſtaſius IV. are few in number. In the Firſt, he reprehends Engebaud Arch-biſhop of Tours, for neglecting to acquaint him with the high Miſdemeanours of which the Biſhop of Treguier is accus'd, and orders him inceſſantly to Summon that Prelate to appear in his Court; and if he find him guilty of the Crimes laid to his charge, that is to ſay, of having riotouſly waſted the Revenues of his Church; of having conferr'd Orders contrary to the Canonical Conſtitutions; and of having committed Simony and Perjury; to ſend him to the Holy See, to the end that he might be puniſh'd according to the ſeverity of the Canons.

In the Second, he writes to Hugh Arch-biſhop of Sens and to his Suffragans, to look upon the Inhabitants of Vezelay, as under a Sentence of Excommunication, by reaſon of the Perſecutions that they rais'd againſt Ponce Abbot of the Monaſtery of that place. He writes the ſame thing to the Count and Lords of Burgundy in the Third, which only differs from the former in the Superſcription.

By the Fourth, he orders Peter Arch-biſhop of Bourges to excommunicate the Count of Nevers and the Inhabitants of Vezelay, unleſs they gave Satisfaction to the Abbot and Monaſtery of Vezelay, within thirty days after the Monition is exhibited to them.

He writes again on the ſame Subject to Lewis VII. King of France, to the Biſhops of that Kingdom, and to Ponce Abbot of Vezelay, in his Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Letters.

In the Eleventh, he confirms the Statutes of the Regular Canons of St. John at Lateran.

In the Twelfth, he takes into his Protection, the Order of the Knights of St. John at Jeruſalem, and ratifies their Privileges.

The Firſt of the Letters attributed to Pope Adrian IV. is a Privilege granted to the King of England, to make himſelf Maſter of Ireland, referr'd to by Matthew Paris. But it is a very doubtful Piece, and there are no grounds to rely upon it.

The Second, is the Letter that gave offence to Frederick, and in which the Pope complains, That the Biſhop of London was miſus'd in the Emperor's Dominions, as he was returning from the Holy See, and that he did not take care to revenge that Indignity. To induce him to do it, he entreats him to call to mind, with what kindneſs he was receiv'd at Rome the preceding Year, as alſo the Honour and Dignity that he had conferr'd upon him in ſetting the Imperial Crown on his Head. He declares at the ſame time, That he does not repent of having given him Satisfaction, and that he ſhould be very glad to find an opportunity, to beſtow on him greater Favours if it were poſſible.

This Letter being deliver'd to Frederick, by Bernard Cardinal of St. Clement, and by Roland Cardinal Prieſt of St. Mark, whom the Pope had ſent on purpoſe to bear it: That Prince at firſt entertain'd them very honourably, but at the ſecond Audience, having read that Paſſage of the Letter, in which it was expreſs'd, That the Pope had conferr'd on him the notable Benefit of the Crown, he fell into ſo great a Paſſion, that he could not forbear reviling the two Legates who had brought it, ordering them immediately to retire out of his Dominions. After their departure, he prohibited all his Subjects to go to Rome, and ſet Guards on the Frontiers, to ſtop thoſe who were about to travel thither. Adrian having heard this News, wrote the Third Letter to the Biſhops of France and Germany, in which after having related the Matter as it happen'd, he entreats them to uſe their utmoſt endeavours to oblige Frederick to return to his Duty. At the ſame time he wrote to him in the Fourth Letter, That it was not his meaning that the Word Beneficium ſhould be taken for a Fee, but for a good Action; that in that that ſenſe, it might well be ſaid, That he had done him a Favour in conferring on him the Imperial Crown, becauſe he perform'd an Act of Kindneſs in ſo doing; and that when he wrote, that he gave him the Imperial Crown, Giving denotes no more than that he ſet it upon his Head: That they who had otherwiſe interpreted thoſe Terms, were ſpiteful Perſons, that only ſought for an opportunity to diſturb the Peace of the Church and of the Empire: Laſtly, if that Expreſſion were offenſive to him, he ought not nevertheleſs to have acted as he had done, nor to forbid all his Subjects in general to go to Rome, but he might have given him notice of it by his Ambaſſadors. He gives him to underſtand that he ſent two other Cardinals, by the advice of Henry Duke of Bavaria, and entreats him to receive them favourably, to the end that the Buſineſs might be accommodated through the Mediation of that Duke.

The Letter in which Frederick deſires the confirmation of Guy the Son of the Count of Blandrata choſen Arch-biſhop of Ravenna, follows the former. It is written in very reſpectful and ſubmiſſive Terms.

The Pope denies him that favour in the Fifth Letter, under pretence, that he was unwilling to remove Guy from the City of Rome; and in the Sixth, complains of Frederick's Letter, becauſe he ſet his own Name before that of the Pope, exacted Homage and Fidelity of the Biſhops; refus'd to admit his Legates to Audience, and hinder'd his Subjects from going to Rome.

The Seventh is written to the Arch-biſhop of Theſſalonica, whom he exhorts to be reconcil'd with the Church of Rome, and to procure the Re-union of the Greek Church.

The Eighth is a Confirmation of the Treaty made with William King of Sicily.

The Fifteen following, are taken out of the fourth Tome of the Hiſtorians of France by Du-Cheſne. The Ten firſt and the Twenty Fourth, are written in favour of Hugh, Chancellor of that Kingdom, to whom he grants an Arch-deaconry of Arras, and the Revenues of a Prebend in the Cathedral of Paris: He likewiſe wrote to the Biſhops of Arras and Paris, and to ſome other Perſons on the ſame Subject. The Three other Letters are directed to King Lewis; and in the Twenty firſt, he adviſes him to bring the Inhabitants of Vezelay under ſubjection to the Abbots of that place, and to oblige them to reſtore what they had taken from him.

The Twenty fifth, twenty ſixth, Twenty ſeventh and Twenty eighth, relate in like manner to the Abbey of Vezelay.

By the Twenty ninth, he renders the Abbey of Baune in the Dioceſs of Beſanſon, ſubject to the Juriſdiction of that of Cluny, as a Priory that ought to depend on it.

The Six following, relate to the Primacy of Toledo, and the Affairs of Spain.

The Thirty ſixth, Thirty ſeventh, Thirty eighth, Thirty ninth and Fortieth, treat of Matters concerning the Primacy, Patriarchate and Rights of the Arch-biſhop of Grado.

In the Forty ſeventh and laſt, publiſh'd by M. Baluzius and directed to Berenger Metropolitan of Narbonne, he confirms the Declaration made by Ermengarda Lady of the Mannor of Narbonne, by which ſhe prohibitted the Alienation of the Revenues and Eſtates of the Arch-biſhop of that Province after his deceaſe, and denounces an Anathema againſt thoſe who ſhould preſume to do it.

Father Dachery has inſerted in the firſt Tome of his Spicilegium, a Privilege granted by Pope Adrian IV. to the Monaſtery of Caſaure.

The Firſt Letter of Alexander III. is written to the Canons of Bononia about his Election. Alexander III's Letters.

The Second to Arnulphus Biſhop of Liſieux on the ſame Subject, and about the Aſſembly of Pavia.

The Third is the Bull for the Canonization of Edward I. King of England.

The following relate to the Affair of Thomas Becket Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, except the Thirty ſecond, which is an Inſtruction to the Sultan of Iconium, who was deſirous to embrace the Chriſtian Religion.

The Forty fifth, Forty ſixth and Forty ſeventh, are the Letters which were written by him, concerning the Treaty of Peace, that he made at Venice, with the Emperor Frederick.

In the Forty eighth, he recommends to a certain Indian King, commonly call'd Preſter John, the Legate, whom he ſent into his Country.

In the Forty ninth, he returns thanks to Hugh, for a Book which he had ſent to him, and entreats him to endeavour to procure the Reconciliation of the Emperor of Conſtantinople, with the Church of Rome.

The Fiftieth, is the Letter for the calling of the General Council at Lateran.

The Fifty firſt, is a Letter about the Opinion of Peter Lombard, who maintain'd, That Jeſus Chriſt, quatenus Man, is not a Thing.

The Fifty ſecond, is a Confirmation of the Rights and Privileges of the Arch-biſhop of Colen.

The Two following, relate to the Erection of the Biſhoprick of Alexandria della Paglia, a City newly built in the Milaneſe Territory. He nominated the firſt Biſhop, but to the end that that Nomination might not be prejudicial to the Inhabitants, he left them the liberty of proceeding to an Election for the future.

The Fifty fifth, Fifty sixth and Fifty seventh, contain the Confirmation of the promotion of John to the Bishoprick of St. Andrew in Scotland, against Hugh who was nominated by the King.

By the Fifty eighth, directed to Casimir Duke of Poland, he ratifies certain Constitutions made by that Prince for the preservation of Church Revenues.

The Fifty ninth, is a circular Letter directed to all the Christian Princes, in which he exhorts them to afford succours to the Christians of the Holy-Land, and renews to those that do so, the Privileges and Immunities granted by Urban and Eugenius his Predecessors, and puts their Estates, Wives and Children under the protection of the Holy See.

The Sixtieth, is directed to all the Bishops of Christendom on the same Subject, to the end that they might publish the preceding Letter in their respective Dioceses, and induce the Princes and People to so pious an Undertaking.

In the Three following Letters, directed to certain Prelates of England, he gives them an Account after what manner he concluded a Treaty of Peace with the Emperor at Venice.

These are the Letters of Pope Alexander III. that are contain'd in the first Collection, to which three Additions have been since annex'd; the first of those Additions comprehends Fifty six Letters, publish'd by Father Sirmondus, in the end of the Works of Peter Abbot of Celles.

In the first Eighteen, which are almost all directed to Peter Abbot of St. Remy at Rheims, he nominates him in a Commission with others to determine divers particular Affairs.

The Nineteenth, directed to the Arch-bishop of Upsal in Sweden and his Suffragans, contains several Constitutions against Simony, and against the Privileges of Clergy-men, taken out of the Councils and the Decretals of the Popes.

In the Twentieth, he recommends to the Charity of the Northern Christians, Fulcus Bishop of the Estons, a People of Sweden.

In the Twenty first, he exhorts the Northern Kings and Potentates, to perform the Duties of Christian Princes, to endeavour to procure the advancement of the Church by encountering its Enemies.

In the Twenty second, directed to the Arch-bishop of Upsal and his Suffragans, he specifies the Pennances that they ought to impose for the Crimes of Incest and Uncleanness, and inveighs against two Abuses that prevail'd in their Country, viz. the first, That the Priests were wont to celebrate Mass with the Lees of Wine, or with Crums of Bread steept in Wine; and the second concerning clandestine Marriages, that were contracted without the Benediction of the Priest.

The following relate to many particular Affairs of Churches or Monasteries, which he himself decides, or for the determination of which he grants a Commission to other Persons in the respective places.

In the second Addition, are compris'd 109 Letters directed to Lewis VII. King of France, or to the Prelates of his Kingdom, the greatest part of which relate to the Affairs of the Churches of France; as also some to the Contest between Alexander and Victor, and others are only recommendatory Letters or full of Compliments. They are taken out of the Collection of the Historians of France, by Du-Chesne.

The last Addition contains 22 Letters, of which the six first are written on the Schism rais'd by Victor; the two following treat of the Privileges of the Canons of Challon: In the Ninth, he acquaints Henry Arch-bishop of Rheims, after what manner he was receiv'd in Rome: The five following were written in favour of the Church of Vezelay: In the Fifteenth, he commends Hugh Bishop of Rhodez, for establishing a general Peace in his Dioces: The Seventeenth and Eighteenth, are the Bulls for the Canonization of Edward King of England and St. Bernard: The Twentieth, Twenty first and Twenty second, are Acts of Approbation of the Order of the Knights of St. James in Spain; of that of the Monks of the Abbey of St. Saviour at Messina; and of that of the Carthusians, and of their Constitutions. There are also in the Addition to the Tenth Tome of the Councils, five other Letters attributed to Alexander III. of which the four first relate to the Immunities of the Schools and Chapter of Paris, and the last to those of the Chapter of Anagnia.

Lucius III's Letters.

Lucius III. having possess'd the See of Rome but a little while, has left us only three Letters.

By the First, he takes off the Excommunication of William King of Scotland and the Suspension of his Kingdom, denounced by the Arch-bishop of York, in Pope Alexander's Life-time, for opposing the Consecration of John, elected Bishop of St. Andrew.

The Second Letter is directed to Henry II. King of England, in which he exhorts that Prince to permit a Tax to be rais'd in his Kingdom, for the Relief of the Holy-Land.

The Third is a Decree against the Hereticks of that time, in which he pronounces a perpetual Anathema against the Cathari, the Patarins, those that style themselves the Humbled or the poor People of Lyons, the Passagians, the Josepins and the Arnoldists, and prohibits all sorts of Persons to profess Divinity or to Preach publickly, unless they have obtain'd a License from from the Holy See, or from the Diocesan Bishop. He likewise condemns all those who presume to maintain any Doctrines or Practices different from those of the Church of Rome, concerning the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, Baptism, the Remission of Sins, Marriage, or the other Sacraments, with their Abetters and Adherents: He ordains, That Clergymen, convicted of those Errors shall be depos'd, and Laicks deliver'd up into the Hands of the Secular Judges to be punish'd, unless they immediately abjure them, without allowing any Pardon to Relapses: He enjoyns the Arch-bishops and Bishops to make a Visitation every Year, either Personally or by their Arch-deacons, in order to discover such Miscreants: He exhorts the Counts, Barons, Lords and Magistrates vigorously to aid and assist the Clergy-men in the Prosecution of those Hereticks, under pain of Excommunication, and Privation of their Dignities: And in that Case, he grants a peculiar Jurisdiction to the Arch-bishops and Bishops, over such Persons as enjoy certain Immunities and are subject only to the Holy See, provided they be obey'd as the Pope's Delegates, notwithstanding all manner of Privileges.

Urban III. gave notice to all the Bishops, of his Election by a circular Letter, dated January 11. A. D. 1186. which is the first of his Letters. Urban III's Letters.

The Second, dedicated to William King of Scotland, relates to the Contest between the Bishops of St. Andrew and Dunckell, the Tryal of which was referr'd to the See of Rome, in the time of his Predecessor, but could not be determin'd, till the Popedom of Urban, who entreats the King in this Letter to take the Bishop of Dunckell into his Protection, and makes the same Request in the following, to Jocelin Bishop of Glasco.

In the Fourth, he writes to Baldwin Arch-bishop of Canterbury, about the building of a new Church in Honour of St. Stephen and St. Thomas.

In the last, he approves the Foundation of a House of Hospitallers at Bononia, and ratifies their Constitutions and Privileges.

Gregory VIII. was no sooner advanc'd to the Papal Dignity, but he wrote a Circular Letter to all the Faithful, to exhort them to relieve the Holy Land. He gives a lively description of the most deplorable Calamities that befel the Christians, when the City of Jerusalem was taken by Saladin, and earnestly presses the Faithful to undertake an Expedition for the recovery of it out of the Hands of that implacable Enemy of Christianity. He grants Indulgences to those, who shall take upon them the Cross for the Holy War, and renews in their favour, the special Privileges that were allow'd by his Predecessors in the like Case. Gregory VIII's Letters.

In the Second Letter, he ordains, That to deprecate the Wrath of God, the Faithful should be oblig'd to fast during five Years, on all Fridays from Advent to Christmass, and that they should abstain from Flesh on Wednesdays and Saturdays.

By a Third Letter, he confirms the Orders that his Predecessors had given to all the Ecclesiastical Judges to determine the Law-suits of private Persons.

The Five first Letters of Clement III. relate to the Contest that arose between John and Hugh about the Bishoprick of St. Andrew in Scotland. Clement III's Letters.

In the Sixth, he confirms the Rights and Immunities of the Church of that Kingdom.

The Seventh, is the Act for the Canonization of Otto Bishop of Bamberg.

The First Letter of Celestin III. is directed to the Prelates of England, whom he orders to excommunicate all those, who shall refuse to obey William Bishop of Ely Legate of the Holy See and Regent of the Kingdom in the absence of King Richard, who was engag'd in the Expedition to the Holy Land. Celestin III's Letters.

By the Second, he takes off the Excommunication denounced by Geffry Arch-bishop of York, against Hugh Bishop of Durham.

The Third is the Act for the Canonization of St. Ubald Bishop of Eugubio.

The Fourth, is an elegant Exhortation to induce the Christian Princes to make Peace, that they may be in a Condition to regain the Holy Land.

In the Fifth, directed to the Bishop of Lincoln, he gives him a Commission to take cognizance of the Misdemeanours and Crimes of which the Arch-bishop of York was accus'd.

The Sixth, sent to the Dean and Arch-deacon of the Church of Lincoln, is written on the same Subject.

In the Seventh, he constitutes Hubert Arch-bishop of Canterbury, his Legate in England; and in the Eighth, orders the Bishops of England to acknowledge and obey him in that Quality.

The Ninth, is a Fragment of a Letter directed to the Arch-bishop of Sens, in which he declares null the Divorce that Philip King of France had made with Queen Batilda, the Daughter of the King of Denmark, under pretence of nearness of Kin, and enjoyns him to re-take her.

In the Tenth, he entreats Hubert Arch-bishop of Canterbury, to levy Recruits to be sent into the Holy Land to King Richard.

The Three following Letters are written about the Disorders caus'd in the Church of York by the Arch-bishop: He commits the Care and Reformation of that Church to Simon Dean of the Chapter; and forasmuch as the Arch-bishop had appeal'd to the Holy See, before the Bishop of Lincoln exhibited an Information against him, he allows him time to come to Rome till the Festival of St. Martin; but in case he do not then appear, he orders the Bishop of Lincoln to proceed against him, and in the mean while suspends him from the Government of his Province.

In the Fourteenth, he orders Hubert Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, to oblige thoſe who had taken upon them the Croſs for the Expedition to the Holy Land, to ſet forward on their Journey, at leaſt, unleſs they were prevented by a lawful Impediment.

This Letter is follow'd by that of Philip Biſhop of Beauvais, written to Pope Celeſtin; in which that Prelate complains, That the King of England enter'd the Territories of Beauvaiſis with his Forces in a hoſtile manner, and took him Priſoner. The Pope return'd an Anſwer in the following Letter, That he had no reaſon to make a Complaint of the Misfortune that befel him, ſince he preſum'd to take up Arms contrary to the Duty of his Profeſſion; beſides, that the Conduct of the King of England ought not to be blam'd, in regard that the King of France had unjuſtly taken from him divers Towns, contrary to the ſolemn Promiſe that he had made to that Prince not to commit any Hoſtilities againſt him, 'till his return to his Dominions: That inſtead of performing that Promiſe, he determin'd to take the advantage of his Confinement: And that the King of England being at laſt ſet at Liberty, had good reaſon to oppoſe the Enterprizes of the King of France.

In the Sixteenth, he enjoyns the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhop of Lincoln, and the Abbot of St. Edmund, to re-eſtabliſh in one of the Churches of England, the Monks that were turn'd out under colour of the Pope's Bull got by ſurprize, upon a falſe Exhibition.

In the laſt, directed to William King of Scotland, he confirms the Rights and Privileges of the Churches of that Kingdom.

CHAP. X.

A Relation of the ſeveral Conteſts that Thomas Becket Arch-biſhop of Canterbury had with Henry II. King of England.

The Life of Thomas Becket, before he was Arch-biſhop of Canterbury.

THOMAS BECKET was a Native of the City of London, the Capital of England: His Father was nam'd Gilbert and his Mother Matilda. Gilbert, in his Youth, took upon him the Croſs for the Holy War, but upon his arrival at Jeruſalem, he was taken Priſoner and made a Slave by the Saracens. During his Impriſonment, he found means to obtain the favour of the Admiral's Daughter, in whoſe Houſe he was confin'd, and ſhe conceiv'd ſo great an Affection for him, that Gilbert having at laſt made his Eſcape, ſhe travell'd to London on purpoſe to meet him; was baptiz'd there, and afterwards marry'd to Gilbert, by whom ſhe had our Thomas, who was born A. D. 1119. Before his Birth, Gilbert return'd to the Holy Land, where he continu'd three Years and a half, having left his Wife in England. This Gentlewoman took great care of the Education of her Son, who in the very firſt blooming of his Youth, ſhew'd the marks of what might be expected from him in a riper Age. He began his Studies at London, and after having loſt both his Father and Mother, compleated them at Paris. Upon his return to England, he was employ'd in the management of Affairs, and put himſelf into the Service of Theobald Arch-biſhop of Canterbury. At that time, Henry Biſhop of Winchester, Brother to King Stephen, was Legate in England, who abus'd his Quality and Authority, treating the other Biſhops, and even his Metropolitan, with intolerable Arrogancy. Thomas adviſ'd Theobald to ſhake off the Yoke, and was ſent by him to Pope Celeſtin II. to obtain a Revocation of Henry's Commiſſion; inſomuch, that being arriv'd at Rome, he negotiated that Affair ſo ſucceſsfully, that the Pope depriv'd Henry of his Dignity, and conferr'd it on the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury. Thomas was no ſooner return'd to England, but Theobald entruſted him with the management of the Affairs of his Church, made him Arch-deacon of it ſome time after, and beſtow'd on him many Benefices. Afterwards King Stephen dying, and Henry II. Duke of Normandy ſucceeding him, Thomas was conſtituted Chancellor of England, A. D. 1158. and obtain'd the Adminiſtration of the publick Affairs of the whole Kingdom.

Election of Thomas Arch-biſhop of Canterbury.

At laſt he was nominated by the King to the Arch-biſhoprick of Canterbury in 1161. after the Death of Theobald, and was ordain'd on Whit-ſunday in the ſame Year. This Prelate was no ſooner advanc'd to that high Station, but he vigorouſly apply'd himſelf to the maintaining of the Intereſts and Liberties of the Church. In the beginning of his Government, he found means to wreſt the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues out of the Hands of the Noble-men who had uſurp'd them, and perſuaded the King to fill up the Epiſcopal Sees of Hereford and Worceſter, which had been vacant for a long time. But it was difficult for him who had undertaken ſtifly to maintain the Rights of the Church, to avoid falling out with his Prince about particular Intereſts; upon which account, he was oblig'd to reſign the Office of Chancellor. After that ſtep, he made a demand again, with much reſolution, of the Revenues and Rights which he pretended

pretended to belong to the Church of Canterbury, and which were in the poſſeſſion of the King and of the Nobility: He vehemently oppos'd the Outrages and Exactions, with which the great Lords were wont to oppreſs the People and the Clergy: He endeavour'd to aboliſh the Cuſtom that was introduc'd in England, of adjudging to Princes the Revenues of vacant Churches, and of deferring to ſupply thoſe Churches with Miniſters, in order to enjoy them longer; and he aſſerted, That Clergy-men, guilty of Miſdemeanours, were not under the Juriſdiction of Civil Magiſtrates; but that they ought to be brought before the Biſhop, to be degraded and condemned to Eccleſiaſtical Penalties, without delivering them up to the Secular Power; nevertheleſs, if in proceſs of time they committed new Crimes, the Temporal Juſtice might then apprehend them, becauſe they were no longer to be look'd upon as Clergy-men.

The original of the Conteſts between the King of England and Thomas Becket.

The obſtinate defence of the laſt Article, chiefly caus'd Thomas to incur the King's diſpleaſure, and gave occaſion to the Quarrel: For a Canon of Bedford nam'd Philip Brock having abus'd one of the King's Officers, before whom he was ſummon'd, that Prince determin'd to bring him to condign Puniſhment. The Arch-biſhop ſuſpended the Canon from his Eccleſiaſtical Functions and Benefice for ſeveral Years, but the King not being ſatisfied with thoſe proceedings, requir'd that he might be put into the Hands of the Secular Juſtice: Upon the Arch-biſhop's refuſal to do it, the King held an Aſſembly of the Biſhops of his Kingdom, in the Abbey of Weſtminſter; where he made a Remonſtrance, that it was expedient for the publick Benefit, that Clergy-men ſhould be tryed by the Civil Magiſtrates and condemned to afflictive Puniſhments, by reaſon that the ſcandal of Degradation did not at all move thoſe, whom the Sanctity of their Function could not reſtrain from the committing of Crimes. Thomas, who was at the Head of that Aſſembly, after having debated with the other Biſhops, reply'd to the King, That the Biſhops could not relinquiſh a Right, which was granted to them by Henry I. his Grand-Father, and confirm'd by the ſolemn promiſe of King Stephen; and that they entreated his Majeſty to call to Mind the Oath that he took on the Day of his Coronation, to maintain the Church in its Liberty and Rights. Whereupon the King demanded whether they were diſpoſed to obſerve the Cuſtoms and Conſtitutions of his Kingdom? Thomas reply'd, that they were ready to do it, provided their Rights were ſecur'd, Salvo Ordine Suo, and all the Prelates made the ſame Anſwer, except the Biſhop of Chicheſter nam'd Henry, who chang'd the laſt Words, and ſaid, that he would punctually obſerve thoſe Cuſtoms.

King Henry, was extremely incens'd at the reſtriction they put on their Promiſe, after he had ſo often preſs'd them to no purpoſe, to engage abſolutely to obſerve the Cuſtoms of the Kingdom without any limitation, and left the Aſſembly, quite tranſported with Anger. The next Day, he ſent to demand of the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, the Grants for all the Governments that were conferr'd on him, whilſt he was Chancellor of England, and ſpeedily departed from London, ſhewing evident marks of his high diſpleaſure againſt the Biſhops. Inſomuch that their dread of his Anger and of the ill effects that it might produce, and the ſollicitations which that Prince caus'd to be made, induc'd many of them to yield to give ſatisfaction to his Majeſty, and theſe us'd their utmoſt endeavours to bring the others to the ſame Temper. Thomas ſtood to his Reſolution for a long time, but being at laſt overcome by the frequent and preſſing entreaties of the Prelates and of his beſt Friends, he ſuffer'd himſelf to be prevail'd upon; went to meet the King at Oxford, and promis'd to obſerve the Cuſtoms of the Kingdom for the future, without any manner of Reſtriction.

An Aſſembly at Clarendon.

The King to render this Declaration more Authentick, call'd an Aſſembly of the Biſhops and Noble-men of the Kingdom at Clarenden, A. D. 1164. in which he oblig'd the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury and the other Prelates to take an Oath, that they would carefully obſerve the Cuſtoms of the Kingdom, and at the ſame time caus'd a verbal Proceſs to be drawn up containing the Articles of thoſe Cuſtoms that were to be acknowledg'd by the Biſhops, and which were ſixteen in Number. The Firſt imports, That when any Conteſts ariſe between the Laity and Clergy, about the preſentation to Benefices, they ought to be regulated in the King's Court: The Second, That the Revenues of Mannors depending on the King's Demeans cannot be made over to Churches, without his Majeſty's Conceſſion: The Third, That the Clergy-men acquited or impeached by the King's Officers, ſhall be oblig'd to repair to his Court, to the end that enquiry may be made, whether they ought to be tried there, or whether they ought to be ſent back to the Eccleſiaſtical Courts of Judicature; and that being thus ſent back, the King's Chief Juſtice, ſhall depute a Perſon to be Witneſs of the Proceedings of that Court: That if the Clergy-man be convicted, or confeſs his Crime, the Church cannot have a Right any longer to protect him. The fourth Article declares, That the Arch-biſhops, Biſhops, and the King's other Subjects cannot depart the Kingdom, without his Majeſty's leave, and in caſe it be granted, they ſhall give him good aſſurance, that they will not act contrary to his Intereſt: The Fifth, That excommunicated Perſons ſhall not be obliged to give ſecurity for their continuing in the Country, but only to ſtand to the Judgment of the Church, when it ſhall be thought fit to grant them Abſolution: The Sixth, That no other Informers or Witneſſes ſhall be admitted againſt Laicks, but ſuch as are allowed by the Laws: The Seventh, That all thoſe who hold any Lands of the King, or are of the number of his Officers, cannot be excommunicated, nor their Territories ſuſpended from Divine Service, unleſs due notice be

firſt given to the King or to his Chief Juſtice, to the end that that which belongs to the Juriſdiction of the King's Court, may be tried there, and that which ought to be tryed in the Eccleſiaſtical, may be referr'd to it: The Eighth, That an Appeal may be brought from the Arch-deacon's Court to the Biſhop's, and from the latter to that of the Arch-biſhop, and if the Arch-biſhop has not done Juſtice, application may be made to the King, to the end that the Cauſe may be decided in the Arch-biſhop's Court, without liberty to enter an Appeal, unleſs by his Majeſty's ſpecial allowance: The Ninth, That in caſe a Conteſt ariſe, between a Clerk and a Lay-man, about an Eſtate, which one aſſerts to depend on the Church and the other on a temporal Lordſhip, the Chief Juſtice ſhall ſend for twelve Aſſiſtants, to examine to what Juriſdiction it ought to be appropriated; that if they judge it to belong to the Church, the Cauſe ſhall be tried in the Eccleſiaſtical Court, but if they find it to belong to the Lay-Fee, it ſhall be referr'd to the cognizance of the Lord of the Mannor. The Tenth, That if any Perſon be cited by his Arch-deacon or his Biſhop to anſwer to an Accuſation, and he refuſe to appear, he may be ſuſpended, but cannot be excommunicated, till the Chief Juſtice of the Place has ſummon'd him to make his appearance; and that if that Judge ſhould neglect to do his Duty, the King ſhall take the matter in Hand: The Eleventh does not relate to Eccleſiaſtical Affairs: The Twelfth ordains, That the King ſhall enjoy the Revenues of the Arch-biſhopricks, Biſhopricks, Abbeys and Priories during a Vacancy; that to fill it up the King ſhall iſſue out a Conge d' Elire to the moſt eminent Men of the Place, who ſhall carry on the Election in his Chappel, with the King's Conſent, and by the Advice of the Lords, who ſhall be conven'd for that purpoſe, and that the Perſon elected ſhall do Homage to the King before he be ordain'd: The Thirteenth Article imports, That the King ſhall cauſe Juſtice to be done to the Biſhops, and the Biſhops to the King: The Fourteenth, That Cattel ſeiz'd on for a Treſpaſs ſhall not be detain'd by the Clergy, but put into the Cuſtody of the Officers of the Royal Court: The Fifteenth, That Courts of Judicature ſhall be kept by the King's Juſtices: The Sixteenth, That the Sons of the Peaſants ſhall not be ordain'd, but with the Conſent of their Lords. Theſe Articles were not ſign'd by the Biſhops, but were acknowledg'd in the Aſſembly, and three Copies of them were taken, viz. one for the King, the Second for the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and the Third for the Arch-biſhop of York.

The Arch-biſhop of Canterbu-ry repents of having ſign'd the Articles.

The Arch-biſhop of Canterbury being retir'd, his Friends and Domeſticks began to murmur: Some of them excus'd him, in regard that he could not act otherwiſe, by reaſon of ſo unhappy a Conjuncture of Affairs, and others complain'd on the contrary, That all the Immunities of the Church of England were ruin'd by that compliance. His Croſs-bearer who was more bold than the reſt, preſum'd to make a remonſtrance to that effect, and the Arch-biſhop being perſwaded that he had done ill, was affected with a ſenſible grief, took a reſolution to do Pennance, and abſtain'd from celebrating Divine Service, till Pope Alexander III. who then reſided at Sens, wrote to him not to do it any longer, and gave him Abſolution for the Offence he might have committed, upon condition that he ſhould confeſs it to a Prieſt.

The retreat of Thomas Becket.

As ſoon as the King underſtood, that the Arch-biſhop repented of what he had done, he fell into a ſtrange Paſſion againſt him. In the mean while Thomas being inform'd thereof, retir'd to his Abbey of Alintere ſituated near the Sea-ſhore, and embark'd twice to paſs over into France; but the Wind continuing contrary, he return'd to Canterbury, and preſum'd even to preſent himſelf before the King, by whom, he was very ill treated. At laſt that Prince deſpairing to bring over the Arch-biſhop to his Intereſt, made application to the Pope, to compaſs his Deſign; to which purpoſe, he ſent the Biſhop of Liſieux and the Arch-deacon of Poitiers to prevail with him to conſtitute the Arch-biſhop of York his Legate in England, and to order Thomas and the other Prelates to obſerve the Cuſtoms of his Kingdom. The Pope having refus'd to do both, the King ſent new Deputies to demand the ſame thing again with greater importunity, and to entreat him to confirm the Cuſtoms and Privileges of his Kingdom, by the authority of the Holy See. The Pope abſolutely deny'd the latter requeſt, but to amuſe him, he conferr'd the Dignity of Legate on the Arch-biſhop of York, nevertheleſs upon condition, that he ſhould not have any juriſdiction over the Perſon or Arch-biſhoprick of Thomas, and without exempting the Biſhops of England from the Obedience they ow'd to their Primate. Foraſmuch as this Reſtriction render'd the authority of the Arch-biſhop of York uſeleſs with reſpect to the King's deſign, which was to depoſe Thomas, he ſent back the Letter to the Pope, with indignation.

Negotiations between the King and the Pope.

The Pope wrote another Letter to divert him from making any further attempts on the Rights of the Churches of his Kingdom; but that Prince inſtead of ſubmitting to his Admonitions, caus'd the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury to be ſummon'd to appear in Perſon before his Majeſty, to anſwer to divers Informations that were brought againſt him. Thomas on the other ſide, entreated the King not to take it ill, that he ſtood to the Privileges of his Dignity, which exempted him from appearing before Secular Judges. The King being much more exaſperated by that excuſe, gave Orders to the Biſhops and Temporal Lords of his Kingdom to meet together in his Royal Caſtle at Northampton, and compell'd the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury to repair thither in quality of a Criminal rather than of a Judge. The Firſt thing done in the Aſſembly, was to pronounce Sentence againſt him for neglecting to make a perſonal ſonal appearance, when he receiv'd a Summons from the King, and his Eſtate, Goods and Chattels were Confiſcated, upon condition nevertheleſs, that the execution of that Sentence ſhould depend on his Majeſty's pleaſure. Afterwards he was convey'd into one of the Halls of the Court, where he being lock'd in, an Account was demanded of him of the Revenues of the vacant Biſhopricks and Abbeys, that he had enjoy'd for ſeveral years, when he was Chancellor. He reply'd, That he would take advice about the matter. Henry Biſhop of Winchester ſaid, that he remember'd, that when Thomas Becket was choſen Arch-biſhop, he had a general Diſcharge. Gilbert Biſhop of London propos'd that he ſhould reſign his Arch-biſhoprick to appeaſe the King's Anger, and the other Prelates, except the Biſhop of Winchester, were of the ſame Opinion. Thomas would not hearken to that propoſal, but to be ſet at Liberty, he expreſs'd his deſire to ſpeak with two Lords, who were with the King; when they were come, he deſir'd that he might be allow'd time till the next day, and ſaid, that then he would make ſuch an Anſwer as God ſhould direct him. Whereupon the Aſſembly deputed the Biſhops of London and Rocheſter to deliver that Meſſage to the King; but the former ſaid, that the Arch-biſhop was deſirous to have time, in order to look over his Papers, and to prepare to give an account to his Majeſty. The King being ſatisfy'd with that Declaration, ſent him word by the two Lords, with whom he deſir'd to ſpeak, That he was willing to grant him the time he ſued for, provided that he kept his word, in giving an account of the things that were committed to his Charge. Thomas forthwith declar'd that he never made ſuch a promiſe: However, he was permitted to depart, and that very Night he was ſeiz'd with a violent fit of the Colick, which hindred him from riſing the next Morning.

The King ſent two Lords of his Court to enquire whether he were Sick, and at the ſame time to give him a Summons. He excus'd himſelf for the preſent, by reaſon of his Indiſpoſition, of which they were Witneſſes, and promis'd to appear the next day. In the mean while a report was ſpread abroad, that if he went to the Royal Palace, he would be Aſſaſſinated or arreſted, the next day ſeveral Biſhops us'd their utmoſt endeavours to perſwade him to make a reſignation of his Arch-biſhoprick and of all his Poſſeſſions to the King, in regard that they were much afraid leſt he ſhould loſe his Life if he did not ſubmit. He did not ſeem to be at all concern'd at their Remonſtrance, but forbid all the Biſhops to aſſiſt at the Proceedings that were to be carried on againſt him, and declar'd that he appeal'd to the Holy See. The Biſhop of London proteſted againſt the Prohibition ſhe then made, and retir'd with all the Biſhops, except thoſe of Winchester and Salisbury, who continu'd with Thomas Becket. However that Prelate after having Celebrated Maſs went to the Palace, bearing his Croſier Staff himſelf. The King refus'd to admit him into his Preſence, and retiring into a private Chamber, ſent for the other Biſhops, and made great complaints to them againſt Thomas Becket. The Biſhops approv'd the King's Reſentments, avouching that that Arch-biſhop was a perjur'd Traytor, and that it was requiſite to proceed againſt him as guilty of High Treaſon. However they durſt not bring him to a Formal Tryal, but only ſent him word by Hilary Biſhop of Chicheſter, That forasmuch as after having promis'd Obedience to the King, and Sworn to obſerve the Cuſtoms of the Kingdom, he acted contrary to his Oath, they did not take themſelves to be any longer obliged to obey him, that therefore they put their Perſons and Churches under the Popes Protection, and cited him to his Tribunal.

The King likewiſe ſent him word by Robert Earl of Leiceſter, that he expected an account of the Things committed to his Charge. Thomas proteſted that he was diſcharg'd by the King's Son, when he was made Arch-biſhop of Canterbury. Afterwards he refus'd to ſubmit to the Judgment of the King, Biſhops and other Lords of the Kingdom; declar'd that he would acknowledge no other Judge but the Pope; and cited the Biſhops before him. After having made this Declaration, he went out of the Palace, the Doors of which he open'd, with the Keys that were found hanging on the Wall, and was accompanied to his Houſe by a crowd of poor People. On that very Night he took a reſolution to retire, and to the end that it might be done more ſecretly, he feign'd an inclination to lie in the Church, and made his eſcape, having chang'd his Cloaths and Name, but before he embark'd he took ſome turns about the Coaſts of England to avoid being apprehended: Then he paſs'd over into Flanders, arriv'd at Graveline, and retir'd from thence to the Abby of St. Berthin, where he diſcover'd himſelf and ſent Deputies to Lewis VII. King of France, to inform him of his preſent diſtreſs, and to entreat his Majeſty to permit him to ſtay in his Kingdom. They were prevented by the Deputies of the King of England; but the French King did not receive them favourably, and declar'd on behalf of Thomas Becket even before the arrival of his Deputies. Theſe laſt were kindly entertain'd, and the King promis'd all manner of Protection to the Arch-biſhop, in his Kingdom, and ſaid that in that Point, he only follow'd the Cuſtom of the Kings his Predeceſſors, who by a very peculiar Privilege, were always in a capacity to afford a Sanctuary in their Dominions, to Perſecuted Biſhops, and to defend them againſt all their Enemies.

Thomas Becket's Retreat to France.

The Deputies of the King of England, and thoſe of the Arch-biſhop, went to the Pope, who was then at Sens; The former brought over ſome of the Cardinals to their ſide, but the Pope ſtood for the Arch-biſhop, nevertheleſs he gave Audience to the Deputies of the King of England, who preſs'd him to oblige the Arch-biſhop to return to England, and entreated ed him to ſend a Legate a latere to take cognizance of that Affair, and to accommodate it, or to determine it without Appeal. The Pope refus'd to do any thing till the Arch-biſhop arriv'd in Perſon; and having declar'd his reſolution to the Deputies, they departed very much diſſatisfy'd. A little after, Thomas Becket accompanied by the Arch-biſhop of Trier, and the Abbot of Berthin came to Soiſſons, where King Lewis admitted him into his Preſence, and reiterated the promiſes he had made to his Deputies. Afterwards he went to Sens to meet the Pope, whom he ſoon made ſenſible of the Juſtice of his Cauſe, by ſhewing him the Articles that were drawn up at Clarendon, which with common conſent were found contrary to the Intereſt and Liberty of the Church. The next day, he proffer'd to quit his Metropolitical Dignity, and entreated his Holineſs to nominate another Perſon to ſupply his place. But the Pope would by no means allow it, order'd him to keep his Arch-biſhoprick, and recommended him to the Abbot of Pontigny, into whoſe Monaſtery he retir'd.

The King of England being informed of the Pope's Anſwer by his Deputies, confiſcated the whole Eſtate and Goods of the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, with thoſe of his Relations and Friends; baniſh'd them from his Kingdom, and publiſh'd new Ordinances more prejudicial to the Liberty of the Church, than the former. Thomas Becket wrote to him, as alſo to ſome Biſhops of England about that Matter; but thoſe Remonſtrances prov'd ineffectual. However he propos'd a Conference in which the Pope was to aſſiſt; but his Holineſs being return'd to Rome, the King ſent Deputies to him, whom he caus'd to paſs through Germany, where they aſſiſted in the Aſſembly of Wurtzburg againſt Pope Alexander, and bound themſelves by an Oath, with the Biſhops of Germany, to ſtand for Paſchal the Antipope; nevertheleſs they did not forbear to continue their Journey, and to meet Alexander, to whom they deliver'd the Letter of their Prince, who threaten'd to withdraw himſelf from his Obedience, if he did not give him ſatisfaction as to the affair of Thomas Becket.

Thomas Becket made Legate of the Holy See in England.

The Pope to advance a Perſon, whom the King thought fit to depreſs, conſtituted him Legate of the Holy See throughout the whole Kingdom of England, except the Province of York. Thomas being Inveſted with this new Dignity, thought himſelf obliged to ſhew the effects of it. Therefore he condemn'd and aboliſh'd the Cuſtoms, that were publiſh'd at Clarendon; Excommunicated all thoſe who obſerv'd 'em, or caus'd 'em to be obſerv'd by others; ſent word to the Biſhops, that they were by no means oblig'd to the Oath they had taken, and threaten'd the King of England with an Anathema. On the other ſide, the King to prevent him, appeal'd to the Holy See, by the advice of the Prelates of Normandy, and diſpatch'd John of Oxford to Rome, to entreat the Pope to ſend a Legate a latere into England, to the end that they might determine or make up the Buſineſs. However, he threatn'd the Monks of Ciſteaux to deſtroy all the Monaſteries that they had in his Dominions, if they entertain'd the Arch-biſhop any longer at Pontigny. Therefore he was forc'd to depart from thence and made choice of the Monaſtery of St. Columba in the City of Sens for the place of his abode. He Excommunicated many Perſons of the Kingdom of England and ſome Biſhops, more eſpecially the Biſhop of London his greateſt Enemy.

John of Oxford's Negotiation at Rome.

In the mean while John of Oxford having gain'd the favour of part of the Court of Rome, by his Preſents, aſſur'd the Pope, That the King of England, would no longer inſiſt upon the Cuſtoms that he caus'd to be receiv'd in the Aſſembly of Clarendon, and procur'd William Cardinal Biſhop of Pavia, to be nominated Legate, to determine the Affair of the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury; but in regard, that he might be ſurpriz'd, by reaſon of the intimate Correſpondence that there was between him and the King of England, the Pope appointed Cardinal Otho to be his Collegue. He alſo gave Abſolution in particular to John of Oxford, whom Thomas Becket had Excommunicated, granted him the Deanry of Salisbury, and Suſpended Thomas's Authority, till the arrival of his Legates. Theſe advantages, which it ſeems, the King of England obtain'd at the Court of Rome, ſtartled the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury and his Friends; inſomuch that Peter Lombard wrote about it to the Pope, as well as Thomas Becket, who excepted againſt the Judgment of the Cardinal of Pavia. Theſe two Legates being arriv'd in France, inform'd the Arch-biſhop of the occaſion of their being ſent by the Pope, and the Cardinal of Pavia told him, that he came to put an end to the Difference between him and the King of England. Thomas had prepar'd a very ſharp Anſwer, but he ſuppreſs'd it by the advice of William of Salisbury, and wrote to him with greater Moderation.

The Negotiations of the Pope's Legates in England.

The two Legates could not immediately execute their Commiſſion, by reaſon that they were oblig'd to mediate a Peace between the Kings of England and France. The Cardinal of Pavia openly maintain'd the Intereſt of the former, and gave occaſion of complaint to the other; nay the Pope upon his ſollicitation, prohibited Thomas to pronounce any Sentence of Excommunication againſt the Perſon of the King of England, or of Suſpenſion againſt his Dominions. At laſt the Legates gave notice to the Arch-biſhop, to make his appearance on Novemb. 10th. A. D. 1168. on the Frontiers of the two Kingdoms; but he deſir'd and obtain'd a delay for ſeven days, to get together again the Companions of his Exile. At laſt he appear'd with a numerous retinue at Giſors, the place appointed for the Conference, and there met with the two Legates, accompanied by the Arch-biſhop of Rouen, who repreſented to him the inflexibility of the King of England, and the Calamities that the Church endur'd by the the Perſecution, of which he was the Cauſe. Afterwards they inſiſted upon the Grandeur and Power of that Prince, the Kindneſs and Reſpect that he always expreſs'd for the Holy See, and the extraordinary Favours that he had Confer'd on the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury: They related with exaggeration the complaints that he made againſt him, accuſing him of having induc'd the King of France and the Count of Flanders to make War with his Majeſty. Laſtly they exhorted the Arch-biſhop to humble himſelf, and to teſtifie his Obedience to his Sovereign, by making a voluntary ſubmiſſion, and by ſuppreſſing his Anger, and the fierceneſs of his natural Diſpoſition.

Thomas Becket reſolutely made his defence, and clear'd himſelf from the ſuſpicions, that the King of England had conceiv'd againſt him, and more eſpecially, as to the particular accuſation, that he had excited the War between that Prince and the King of France, who condeſcended ſo far as to give Teſtimony to his Innocence, by declaring upon Oath, that it was not true, that he ſollicited him to undertake that War. The Arch-biſhop of Canterbury added that he was well perſuaded, that a Biſhop ought not to have recourſe to thoſe ſorts of means; That he was ready to ſhew to the King all manner of ſubmiſſion and deference, provided that the Glory of God, the Honour of the Apoſtolick See, the Liberty of the Church, the Dignity of the Prieſthood, and the Church-Revenues might receive no detriment. They propos'd that he ſhould promiſe the King to obſerve all the Cuſtoms that were in uſe, in the time of the Arch-biſhops his Predeceſſors, or at leaſt that he ſhould tolerate them, and conceal his reſentments: But he would not engage to do either, no not ſo much as to keep ſilence. Then they inſiſted that he ſhould reſign his Archbiſhoprick, in caſe the King could be prevail'd with, to renounce the Cuſtoms that were conteſted, but he likewiſe rejected that Propoſal. Laſtly the Legates asked him, whether he were willing to acknowledge them as competent Jugdes for the deciding of the Differences between him and the King or not. He was ſomewhat perplex'd at this Demand; for on the one ſide, he was unwilling openly to diſown their Authority, and on the other ſide, he did not look upon it as ſafe, that he ſhould be tryed in any other Tribunal but that of the Pope himſelf. Therefore he reply'd; That when the Goods and Chattels, of which he was depriv'd, were reſtor'd to him, he would readily ſubmit to the Judgment of the Pope, or to that of any other Perſons to whom he ſhould grant a Commiſſion to be his Judges. Thus ended this Conference, which had no effect.

Thomas Becket gave an account of all theſe particular Circumſtances to the Pope in a Letter, and the two Legates went to Communicate them to the King of England: Whereupon that Prince and the Prelates of his Kingdom demanded of the Legates, whether they had not receiv'd Orders from the Pope to bring Thomas Becket to his Tryal, or whether they were not impower'd to do it, by vertue of their Office? They declar'd that they had no ſuch Power, and that all that they could do, was only to cauſe the Pope's Letters to be read publickly; by which he prohibited the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, to Excommunicate the King, or to paſs any Sentence of Suſpenſion on his Kingdom; as alſo to inform him of the purport of them, with a prohibition to attempt any thing to the prejudice of that Order; and to confirm the Abſolutions that were given to the Biſhops, and other Excommunicated Perſons, under pretence, that the Pope allow'd that ſuch Abſolution ſhould be granted them, in caſe they were in danger of Death, and that thoſe Perſons being conſtrain'd by the King's Orders to paſs over the Sea, ran the hazard of loſing their Lives. But the Pope having permitted it only upon Condition, that they ſhould reſtore the Church-Revenues, and the greateſt part of them not having done it, Thomas Becket wrote to the Legates, that they ought to oblige them to make reſtitution, if they were deſirous that their Abſolution ſhould be ratify'd. The Pope himſelf likewiſe wrote to the ſame effect; but the Cardinal of Pavia eluded that Order; alledging, that he could not put it in execution without offending the King.

In the mean while Thomas Becket made great complaints againſt thoſe Proceedings, and ſent word to the Court of Rome at the ſame time, entreating the Pope to recall thoſe two Legates, who ſhewed too much partiality; inſomuch that his Holineſs not being able to withſtand the importunity, of thoſe who adher'd to the Intereſt of that Arch-biſhop at Rome, immediately ſent for the Legates and depriv'd them of all manner of Authority. Cardinal Otho before his departure us'd his utmoſt endeavours to induce the King of England to do Juſtice to the Arch-biſhop, whereupon his Majeſty reply'd, that he would conſent that that Prelate ſhould return to Canterbury, and poſſeſs his Church in Peace, and that he for his part would renounce the Cuſtoms, that were not in uſe in the time of his Predeceſſors; but that he would not hear talk of doing him Juſtice, and thoſe of his Party, as to the Eſtates they enjoy'd for a long time, pretending that they had put them to a good uſe. The Cardinal in like manner ſpoke to the King much to the ſame effect, but all their Remonſtrances ſerv'd only to draw upon them the diſpleaſure of that Prince, who complain'd when they came to take leave of him, that he was betray'd by the Pope and threatn'd to yield him Obedience no longer, if he did not take care to do him Juſtice with reſpect to the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury.

An Interview between Thomas Becket and King Hen. II. in the presence of the King of France.

Afterwards, the King of France interceded at the sollicitation of the Pope to accommodate that Busines with the King of England, and procur'd an Interview, during which the Archbishop of Canterbury threw himself at King Henry's Feet, and after having implor'd his Clemency, declar'd that he would resign to him, every thing that had occasion'd the differences between them, provided that the Glory of God might be indemnify'd. His Majesty receiv'd that Restriction, with a great deal of dissatisfaction, and propos'd to the King of France, that he would leave Thomas in the quiet possession of the See of Canterbury, saying, That he expected to enjoy'd the Rights that were enjoy by the Kings his Predecessors in the time of the Predecessors of the Arch-bishop; who should likewise enjoy the Immunities that his Predecessors had actually enjoy'd. This proposal seem'd reasonable to the Assistants, and even to the King of France; nevertheless Thomas Becket, would not accept of it, alledging, that his Predecessors had Tolerated some Abuses, which his Adversaries would fain compel him to approve against his Conscience. This refusal caus'd a murmuring among the Lords of both Nations, and gave no manner of satisfaction to the two Kings. The Enemies of the Arch-bishop accus'd him of Arrogancy, and even many of his Friends did not approve his Inflexibility. However the King of France soon alter'd his Mind, commended the constancy of that Prelate, and instead of Banishing him out of his Dominions, as it was expected, he admitted him into his Presence, suffer'd him to reside at Sens, and continu'd to assist him. King Henry sent Envoys to complain to that Prince, that he treated a Rebel so kindly, who had refus'd to accept of Peace upon reasonable Terms; but perceiving that the French King, was resolv'd not to abandon him, he sollicited the Pope again by two Deputations, and prevail'd with the King of Sicily, and the Estates of Italy to joyn their entreaties to his, against the Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

Other Legates sent into England and their Negotiation.

However all that could be obtain'd of the Pope, was, that he would send two other Legates to endeavour again to procure a Reconciliation between them. Gratian the Nephew of Pope Eugenius III. and Vivian Advocate of the Church of Rome, were chosen for that purpose. The Pope deliver'd to them the Articles of the Agreement ready drawn up, and oblig'd them to take an Oath, not to go beyond the Orders he had given them. He prohibited them to receive any thing of the King of England, till the conclusion of the Treaty, and order'd them to declare to that Prince, that if he neglected to make Peace upon the Conditions prescribed by him, he would enjoyn the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, to make use of the Authority of the Church against him. These Legates manag'd divers Negotiations in the Year 1169, but none of them took Effect. King Henry offer'd to permit Thomas Becket to return to England, and to re-establish him in his Arch-bishoprick, and in the possession of his Estate, but would have this Condition annexed, Provided always that the Rights of the Kingdom be maintain'd; but the Legates refus'd to admit that Clause, unless this were also Inserted Provided that the Liberties of the Church be not infringed. There was also an Interview at St. Denis between the two Kings, the Legates and the Arch-bishop which prov'd ineffectual, So that the Legates return'd without coming to any manner of Agreement. The King of England who was not well satisfy'd with these Legates, demanded others of the Pope, with much importunity, and even with Menaces. His Holiness was not of Opinion that his request ought to be deny'd; and even Suspended the Arch-bishop's Authority till the Differences were finally determin'd. He nominated Simon Prior of Mont Dieu and Bernard de Corila, to be his Legates, on that occasion, and gave them two Letters for King Henry, viz. one full of Exhortations and gentle Admonitions, and the other of severe Reprimands and Threats, with Orders to deliver the former at first; and in case he obstinately persisted in his Resolution, to add the second. These two Legates conducted the Arch-bishop to the Place appointed for the Interview, where the two Kings were Present, and admonish'd him to humble himself before his Sovereign: He followed their Advice, and only insisted that the Glory of God might be secur'd in these Terms, Ad honorem Dei. King Henry was offended at that Expression, and requir'd, That the Arch-bishop should promise and bind himself by Oath, as a Priest, and a Bishop in the presence of the whole Assembly, sincerely to observe the Customs, that were follow'd by the Reverend Arch-bishops, under the Kings his Predecessors, which he had also engag'd to do upon another occasion. The Arch-bishop promis'd to be faithful to him in every particular, as far as it was possible, Salvo ordine suo, and added, That for Peace sake, he would engage to observe, as far as his Dignity would allow, such Customs as were in use amongst his Reverend Predecessors. The King peremptorily insisted, That he should promise to observe the Customs of his Kingdom, without any manner of Restriction; but the Arch-bishop would by no means consent to it, and upon that refusal his Majesty departed out of the Assembly. The Legates having exhorted him to re-admit the Arch-bishop to his Favour, and to Restore him to his Church, he reply'd, That perhaps he might one day be prevail'd upon to do the latter, but that he would take care never to make him his Confident. During a second interview between the two Princes, they presented to King Henry, the Pope's menacing Letter, but he was not at all concern'd at it, and always insisted upon the Promise that the Arch-bishop of Canterbury had made to act conformably to the Customs of the Kingdom, which the Arch-bishops his Predecessors had observ'd before him: Thomas Becket made Answer, That he was ready to obey his Majesty, as far as it could be done, without infringing the Privileges leges of his Dignity, and thus this Negotiation took no more effect than the others; inſomuch, that the Pope being wearied with the delays of the King of England, revok'd the Suſpenſion of the Arch-biſhop's Authority, and left him at liberty to act as he ſhould think fit.

Some time after, King Henry deſigning to Crown his eldeſt Son, appointed the Arch-biſhop of York to perform that Ceremony; but the Pope being inform'd of his Intention, prohibited that Arch-biſhop and all others, under pain of Suſpenſion, to make any attempt upon a Right that apparently belong'd to the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury. Thomas Becket likewiſe wrote to the Arch-biſhop of York and to his Collegues to notifie to them the ſame Prohibition; whereupon the King was ſo extremely incens'd, that he took a reſolution to oblige his Subjects to take an Oath, That they would not obey the Pope, nor the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and caus'd his Son to be actually Crown'd by the Arch-biſhop of York at Weſtminſter, in a Church belonging to the Juriſdiction of Canterbury. The young King in like manner took an Oath, to obſerve the Cuſtoms of the Kingdom, that were publiſh'd at Clarendon: In the mean while the Pope being preſs'd by the Remonſtrances of the King of France, of the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and of William Arch-biſhop of Sens, declar'd the Arch-biſhop of York ſuſpended from all manner of Eccleſiaſtical Functions, and pronounc'd the ſame Sentence againſt all the Biſhops who aſſiſted at that Ceremony. He ſent word at the ſame time to Rotrou Arch-biſhop of Rouen, and to Bertrand Biſhop of Nevers to meet the King of England, in order to admoniſh him the laſt time in his Name to make Peace; and in caſe he refus'd to do it, to ſuſpend all his Dominions from Divine Service, that were ſituated on the hither ſide, or beyond the Sea. At the ſame time, he diſparch'd a ſmart Reprimand to the King of England, requiring him in the Name of God, and by Virtue of the Apoſtolick Authority, to be reconciled with the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and to give Peace to the Church, if he deſign'd to avoid an Anathema, like to that which was pronounc'd againſt the Emperor Frederick; inſomuch, that thoſe urgent Threats oblig'd King Henry to bethink himſelf ſeriouſly of an Accommodation, and perſonally to entreat the Legates to uſe their utmoſt endeavours to procure it.

The King of England reconciled to Thomas Becket.

Whereupon Thomas Becket went to meet the King, accompanied with the Arch-biſhop of Sens; and his Majeſty receiv'd him with ſuch particular Marks of Kindneſs, as he never ſhew'd him ſince their falling out. The Arch-biſhop demanded Juſtice for the Indignities put upon the Church of Canterbury, and more eſpecially for the injury he had lately done him, by the Coronation of his Son: The King promis'd to give Orders that that Prince ſhould be Crown'd again, and then Thomas Becket caus'd Interceſſion to be made by the Arch-biſhop of Sens (who began to ſpeak,) that his Majeſty would vouchſafe, to reſtore to him the Church of Canterbury, with all the Revenues belonging to it, and to do him Juſtice, as to what relates to the Coronation of the Prince his Son; he for his part, engaging at the ſame time, to yield to his Majeſty, all the Reſpect, Obedience and Submiſſion, that is due from an Arch-biſhop to his Sovereign Prince, according to the Ordinance of God. The King accepted of thoſe Terms, and thus the Peace was at laſt effectually concluded. Afterwards the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury humbly entreated the King his Maſter, that he might have liberty to take leave of the King of France, to return Thanks for the many ſignal Favours he had receiv'd from him. He alſo continu'd ſome time longer in France, with a deſign not to paſs over into England, till he had receiv'd Information, that thoſe Perſons were actually put in Poſſeſſion of the Revenues of the Church of Canterbury, whom he ſent thither for that purpoſe. In the mean while, the Arch-biſhop of York and the Biſhops of London and Salisbury, us'd all poſſible means to break off the Agreement, and further, to incenſe King Henry againſt the Arch-biſhop. At that time, one Renulphus, who was the Miniſter of the Arch-biſhop of York's Fury, made no difficulty to pillage the Revenues of the Church of Canterbury; but neither that Injury nor the Coldneſs with which the King then treated Thomas Becket, were ſufficient to divert him from the reſolution he had taken to return to England, notwithſtanding the Advice of his Friends to the contrary, and the Threats of his Enemies.

Thomas Becket's return to England

Therefore he embarked at Calice in the end of the Year 1170. and arriv'd at Sandwich; but before his departure, he ſent into England, the Letter that the Pope had directed to him and which he kept till that time. By vertue of that Letter, his Holineſs ſuſpended the Arch-biſhop of York with the Biſhops, who aſſiſted at the Coronation of the young King, and excommunicated or ſuſpended for divers Cauſes, a great part of the Prelates of the Kingdom. The publication of that Sentence extremely exaſperated the Minds of the Prelates and Engliſh Nobility. The Arch-biſhop upon his arrival, met with divers Perſons who attempted to take away his Life; and he was no ſooner at Canterbury, but ſome of the King's Officers accompanied with Renulphus and three Clergy-men, came (according to the Order they had receiv'd from the Arch-biſhop of York and two other Prelates) to require him in his Majeſty's Name to abſolve all the Biſhops who were ſuſpended or excommunicated; alledging, That what he had done againſt them, was prejudicial to the King himſelf, ruin'd the Cuſtoms of the Kingdom, and was contrary to the Tranquillity of the State. They promis'd at the ſame time, That when the Suffragan Biſhops of the Metropolitan See of Canterbury were abſolved, they would readily ſubmit to his Injunctions, as far as they could do it, without impairing the Dignity of the Crown. The Arch-biſhop reply'd, That it did not lie in his power to repeal a Sentence paſſed by the Holy Apoſtolick See; but they perſiſted in preſſing him more earneſtly, and threaten'd that if he refus'd to do it, the King would revenge the Indignity on the whole Church. Thomas Becket proffer'd, That if the excommunicated or ſuſpended Biſhops would take an Oath in his preſence, in due Form, to ſubmit to what he ſhould think fit to ordain, for the ſake of Peace and upon account of the Reſpect that he bore to his Majeſty, he would do all that he could in their favour. But they could by no means be perſuaded to take ſuch an Oath, without informing the King of its purport, nor to ſubmit in ſuch a manner to the Will and Pleaſure of the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury.

Then the three Prelates above-mention'd, went to meet the King, implor'd his Aſſiſtance, and repreſented to him, that the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury had diſturb'd the Peace of the Kingdom by his Arrival, openly accuſing him of Arrogancy and Tyranny. The King being highly provoked by that Diſcourſe, ſaid in a Paſſion, That he was unfortunate in meeting with none that could take Vengeance of one ſingle Prelate, who created him more Trouble, than all his other Subjects, and endeavour'd by all manner of Means to make void his Royal Authority. The letting fall of theſe Words, gave occaſion to four of his Courtiers to form a Conſpiracy againſt the Arch-biſhop's Life: For they immediately ſet out, and being arriv'd in England, ſhew'd him an Order from the King, to abſolve the excommunicated or ſuſpended Biſhops, and to take an Oath of Allegeance. But the Arch-biſhop having refus'd it, they took up Arms, enter'd the Cathedral Church of Canterbury, where he was Officiating, and Aſſaſſinated him at the Altar, one of the laſt days of the Year, 1170. which was the 52 of his Age, and the 9th ſince his promotion to the Metropolitan Dignity. As ſoon as the News of that baſe Act was brought to King Henry, he expreſs'd a great deal of Trouble for his Death, and ſent Deputies to Rome to aſſure the Pope, That he was by no means conſenting to the Fact. The Pope was tranſported with Grief and Indignation; but the King's Deputies having depos'd upon Oath, that their Maſter was not at all acceſſory to that Murder, and that he was ready to clear himſelf by Oath; his Holineſs contented himſelf only to excommunicate the Aſſaſſins and their Accomplices, and ſent the Cardinals Theodin of St. Vitalis, and Albert of St. Laurence, to receive the King's Oath, and to oblige him to give Satisfaction to the Church.

A Conſpiracy againſt Thomas Becket, and his Death.

Theſe two Legates being arriv'd in Normandy, found the King altogether diſpos'd to ſubmit to every thing that the Church ſhould enjoyn him. He took an Oath upon the Holy Goſpels, That he neither commanded nor was deſirous, that the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury ſhould be kill'd, and that he was more ſenſible of Grief at his Death, than at that of the King his Father; but he confeſs'd, that he had been in ſome Meaſure the cauſe of it, by reaſon of the Animoſity which he ſo often expreſs'd againſt his Perſon, and that therefore he was ready to undergo ſuch Penance, as the Legates ſhould think fit to impoſe on him. The two Cardinals order'd him, 1. To maintain 200 Soldiers during a whole Year, for the defence of the Holy Land. 2. To revoke all Cuſtoms and Ordinances introduc'd under his Reign to the prejudice of the Church, and to reform by the Pope's advice, ſuch as were eſtabliſh'd. 3. To reſtore to the Church of Canterbury all its Revenues and Territories, and to make the ſame reſtitution to all others that were pillaged. 4. and laſtly, To deliver Spain from the Oppreſſion of the Infidels, in caſe it were requir'd by his Holineſs. They likewiſe privately enjoyn'd him, Faſting, Alms-giving and ſome other particular Penances. The King accepted of all thoſe Conditions, with the Marks of an extraordinary Humility, and the Legates gave him Abſolution at the Church-door. The young King took an Oath to obſerve the ſame things, obliging himſelf, that if his Father died without fulfilling his Penance, to perform, what was ordain'd, in his ſtead.

The Canonization of Thomas Becket.

Afterwards Thomas Becket was canoniz'd for a Saint, A. D. 1173. and King Henry being attack'd by his unnatural Son, who rebell'd againſt him, implor'd his Aſſiſtance, going barefooted to his Tomb, as it were an humble Suppliant.

His Letters.

There are ſtill extant Six Books of the Letters of this Prelate, and of thoſe that were written to him during his Troubles, which were collected by John of Salisbury, publiſhed by Chriſtianus Lupus, and printed at Bruxels in Quarto, A. D. 1682. with a Relation of his Life, taken out of four contemporary Authors, viz. Herbert his Clerk, William of Canterbury, the Abbot Alanus and John of Salisbury. The Life and Actions of that famous Man, ſufficiently ſhew his Character, viz. That he was reſolute, of an undaunted Courage, and inflexible to the higheſt degree; and his Letters, that he was eloquent, had the Art of ſtirring up the Affections, and was endu'd with pious and generous Principles.

CHAP. XI.

An Account of the Lives and Writings of the principal Authors who flouriſh'd in the Twelfth Century.

GEFFREY Abbot of VENDOME.

GEFFREY was a Native of Angers deſcended of a noble Family, was educated by Garnier Arch-deacon of that City, and enter'd very Young, into the Monaſtery of Vendome, which was founded A. D. 1050. by Godfrey Martel Count of Angers. A little while after, he was made Abbot in 1093. being as yet only a Deacon. Ives of Chartres gave him the Benediction, and exacted of him an acknowledgment, that he ſhould be ſubject to the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Chartres. However, that Abbot ſoon repented of what he had done, and caus'd himſelf to be freed from that engagement by the Pope; neither could his Succeſſors be induc'd to renew it, becauſe the Monaſtery of Vendome depended immediately on the Holy See. To diſcharge that Obligation to his Holineſs, Geffrey took a Journey to Rome, the ſame Year that he was conſtituted Abbot, where he did Pope Urban II. a very notable piece of Service, in ſupplying him with means for the recovery of the Palace of Lateran, out of the Poſſeſſion of Ferruchius, who kept it for Guibert the Antipope: He receiv'd the Order of Prieſthood from the Hands of that Pope, who made him Cardinal of St. Priſca. Afterwards returning to France, in 1094. laden with Honour, he took upon him the Government of his Monaſtery of Vendome, and was employ'd in the Adminiſtration of the moſt important Affairs of the Church and State. He was invited by the Popes to divers Councils, and was choſen by Lewes the Groſs King of France, to be Arbitrator of a Difference that aroſe between that Prince and the Count of Angers. He vigorouſly maintain'd the Intereſts of the See of Rome; paſs'd over the Alps Twelve times for the Service of the Popes; was taken Thrice by his Enemies, and at laſt for his own part, was involv'd in many Law-ſuits, with Biſhops, Abbots and ſecular Lords, about the Rights and Poſſeſſions of his Monaſtery, which he preſerv'd entire, and even augmented conſiderably. 'Tis not preciſely known in what Year he died, but he was ſtill living in the time of Pope Honorius II. A. D. 1129.

Geffrey Abbot of Vendome.

The firſt Book of the Letters of this Abbot contain 31 directed to the Popes Urban II. Paſchal II. Calixtus II. and Honorius II. and to the Legates of the See of Rome. They are almoſt all written for the preſervation of the Immunities and Poſſeſſions of his Abbey, demanding the Protection of it of the Popes, as a Right unqueſtionably belonging to him; in regard that all the Revenues of his Monaſtery by its Foundation, were an allodial Tenure of the Holy See, for which he paid a certain Duty.

In the ſecond Book are compris'd 32 Letters directed to Ives Biſhop of Chartres, and to Geffrey his Succeſſor, in the greateſt part of which he vindicates the exemption of his Monaſtery, avouching that it depends ſolely on the Holy See; that the Biſhop of Chartres has no right either over their Perſons or Poſſeſſions; that they are not to be look'd upon as † Acephala, becauſe they have Jeſus Chriſt for their Head, and after him the Pope; that the Promiſe he made to Ives Biſhop of Chartres, was extorted by ſurprize, and afterwards declar'd null by Pope Urban. Some of thoſe Letters relate to the Conteſts that he had with the Monks of Marmoutier, and the Counteſs of Vendome. In the Nineteenth, he diſcuſſes the Queſtion concerning the Reiteration of Extreme Unction, and concludes with Ives of Chartres, that it ought not to be re-iterated, by reaſon that it is a Sacrament.

The Third Book comprehends 43 Letters written to ſeveral Biſhops, more eſpecially to thoſe of Angers and Mans: Some of them purely relate to Morality, others to the Monaſtical Diſcipline, and many others to particular Affairs. 'Tis aſſerted therein that a Monk accuſed by his Abbot, ought not to be left to his arbitrary Proceedings. This Author likewiſe vigorouſly oppoſes the Inveſtitures; ſhews that Biſhops are forbidden to exact a yearly Salary, for the uſe of the Altars, which they grant to Monks; and laſtly obſerves, that 'tis reaſonable, that thoſe Churches which have Poſſeſſions in the Territories of other Churches, ſhould pay the Tithes of them to the latter.

The Fourth Book contains fifty Letters directed to Abbots or Monks, which for the moſt part relate either to Morality, or to particular Affairs; among which the 47th directed to Robert d' Arbriſelles has been much talkt of. It is written to adverti'ſe that Abbot Founder of the Order of Fontevrault, that there was a report concerning him, about a Buſineſs, which did not tend to his Credit, and which he ought ſpeedily to reform, if that report were really true, viz. That he convers'd ſo familiarly with Women, that he permitted them to co-habit with him; that he kept private Correſpondence with them; and that he was not aſhamed even to ly with them, under pretence of mortifying himſelf by enduring the Stings of the Fleſh, which is a new kind of unheard of Martyrdom, but very dangerous, and of a very bad bad Example. We have alſo in our poſſeſſion another Letter written by Marbodus Biſhop of Rennes, which paſſes the ſame Cenſure on Robert d' Arbriſſelles. Indeed theſe two Letters plainly prove, that the Enemies of Robert had caus'd thoſe falſe Reports to be ſpread abroad againſt him; but they are no proof that he was guilty of ſuch enormities as were laid to his charge, and his Conduct is ſufficiently juſtify'd, by the advantageous teſtimonies that are given of him by the Writers of that time, who look'd upon him as a Man of great Sanctity.

However, the Monks of Fontevrault imagin'd, that the better to vindicate the Memory of their Founder, it was requiſite to call in queſtion the truth of thoſe two Monuments, and to make them paſs for ſpurious Pieces. Father Mainferme has exhibited this Charge againſt them in the Name of his Collegues, and has made it a part of the Subject of his Book call'd, The Buckler of the Order of Fontevrault. Amongſt all the Conjectures alledged by him againſt Geffrey's Letter, there is only one direct, that deſerves any conſideration, viz. that Abaelard in one of his Letters, ſays that Roſcelin, of whom we have made mention in the preceeding Century, wrote an invective Epiſtle againſt that excellent Preacher of Jeſus Chriſt Robert d' Arbriſelles, whence Father Mainferme concludes it to be that of Geffrey, or that of Marbodus, or perhaps both; but he has miſtaken Abaelard's meaning: For that Author does not ſay, that Roſcelin compos'd one or two Letters under the Name of another Perſon, to declaim againſt Robert d' Arbriſelles, but that he wrote a Letter againſt him and St. Anſelm, ſo that this has no relation to thoſe of Geffrey and Marbodus. As for that of Geffrey now in Queſtion, it cannot be denied but it belongs to him; for, 1. 'Tis apparently his Style, and if it be never ſo little compar'd with the others, we ſhall ſoon be perſwaded, that it was written by the ſame Author. 2. It is not only extant in the Manuſcript of Mans, which Father Sirmond made uſe of; but alſo in Two other Manuſcripts, viz. one in the Library of Chriſtina Queen of Sweden, and the other in that of Santa Croce at Florence, which are referr'd to the time of Robert d' Arbriſelles; Father Mabillon having alſo ſeen and cited the latter in the Relation of his Voyage to Italy.

In the fifth Book are contain'd 28 Letters directed to divers particular Perſons, which are full of moral Diſcourſes and Compliments. In the Sixteenth, he aſſerts the neceſſity of making Confeſſion of all ſorts of Sins; and in the laſt, he maintains, that a Man, who has once aſſum'd the Monaſtick Habit, and liv'd for ſome time in a Monaſtery, cannot return to a ſecular courſe of Life, altho' he made no expreſs Profeſſion nor receiv'd the Benediction.

Theſe Letters are follow'd by ſeveral Tracts about divers Eccleſiaſtical Affairs; the Firſt of which is a Treatiſe of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, in which he endeavours to prove the changing of the Bread and Wine into our Saviour's Body and Blood in the Euchariſt; ſo that after the Conſecration, nothing remains of the matter or ſubſtance of the Bread and Wine, but only the outward appearances, and that 'tis really the very ſame Body of Jeſus Chriſt, that was born of the Virgin Mary, and which ſuffer'd on the Croſs. He adds, That the Wicked receive it in the Sacrament, but do not receive the Effects nor Graces of it, which are only beſtow'd on thoſe, who are in a ſtate of Righteouſneſs.

The Second is made about the Election of Biſhops and againſt the Inveſtitures: He maintains in the former, that as Baptiſm makes a Chriſtian, ſo Election and Conſecration Conſtitute a Biſhop; and as it is impoſſible to be a Chriſtian without receiving Baptiſm, ſo it is likewiſe impoſſible to be a Biſhop without Election and Conſecration. That thoſe two Qualifications are ſo abſolutely neceſſary, that Conſecration without Election, and Election without Conſecration, are not ſufficient to make a Biſhop: That Conſecration ſuppoſes a Canonical Election, and that whoſoever receives it without being Canonically Choſen, is rather Curſed than Conſecrated; by reaſon that nothing can diſannul the Order of Election and Conſecration eſtabliſh'd by Jeſus Chriſt, who himſelf choſe and conſecrated his Apoſtles: That the Clergy ſupply our Saviour's Place in the Election and the Biſhops in the Conſecration: That all the other Chriſtians have a right to demand a Biſhop, but they cannot Elect nor Conſecrate him: That upon that account, all thoſe who aſpire to Eccleſiaſtical Preferments, by any other means, than Canonical Election, ſubvert the Order of the Church: That the Church of Rome cannot diſpenſe with that Inſtitution, or permit it to be done otherwiſe; becauſe the Pope cannot do that, which St. Peter himſelf had no power to do. Now Jeſus Chriſt only empower'd St. Peter to bind that which ought to be bound, and to looſe that which was of neceſſity to be looſed, and not to looſe that which ought to be bound, or to bind that which ought to be looſed; and when St. Peter was about to act otherwiſe, St. Paul tho' a Novice in the Faith, withſtood him to the Face: Laſtly, that the Church of Rome ought not to repeal the Laws eſtabliſhed in the Holy Scripture, but to maintain them, nor to make uſe of the Power given by Jeſus Chriſt, according to a capricious Humour, but according to our Saviour's Tradition.

Afterwards he paſſes to the Inveſtitures, and ſays, That to know the Doctrine of the Catholick and Apoſtolick Church, as to that Point, 'tis requiſite only to peruſe the firſt Article of the Council, held under Gregory VII. in which that Pope excommunicates and treats as Hereticks all thoſe Clergy-men, who ſhall preſume to receive the Inveſtiture from the Hand of Laicks: That that ſort of Hereſy is a more heinous Crime than Simony, in regard that Simony is only practis'd in ſecret, but the Inveſtitures are always made publickly: That the

Apoſtles

Apoſtles forbid Laicks to aſſume the Power of conferring Eccleſiaſtical Orders, and that therefore the Inveſtiture, which is a Sacrament or ſacred Sign, by which the Biſhop is diſtinguiſh'd from other Men, and put in poſſeſſion of the Government of the Church, ought not to be receiv'd from the Hands of Laicks, but from that of the Clerk, who perform'd the Conſecration: And in fine, that Lay-men, who cannot adminiſter the Sacraments of the Church, ought not to deliver the Ring and the Paſtoral Staff, which are Sacraments, ſuch as the Salt and Water, the Chriſm and the Conſecrated Oils, when they are Adminiſter'd by thoſe who have a rightful Power, and with the requiſite Ceremonies.

The Third Tract is written in like manner againſt the Inveſtitures, in which he repeats the ſame Arguments, and concludes that they are to be reputed no leſs Hereſie, than Simony.

He continues to handle the ſame Matter in the Fourth Tract, and proves that Kings cannot confer the Inveſtiture even of ſpiritual Benefices, with the Ring and Staff; becauſe it is an Eccleſiaſtical Ceremony, and that to ſpeak properly they cannot beſtow the Inveſtiture of Eccleſiaſtical Poſſeſſions, by reaſon that they already belong to the Church. But he acknowledges that after a Canonical Election and Conſecration, they may grant the Royal Inveſtiture of Church Revenues, and put him that has the Title, in poſſeſſion of them, affording him their Aſſiſtance and Protection, which may be done by certain outward Signs, that are not at all prejudicial to the Rights of the Church: And laſtly that it is not expedient to Excommunicate Princes upon that account, in regard that ſuch proceedings, would occaſion a greater Miſchief.

In the following Tract, he lays down a Principle, which alſo has relation to the buſineſs of Inveſtitures, viz. That Condeſcenſion may be ſometimes allow'd, and the granting of Diſpenſations; but 'tis requiſite that it be done with a good intention for the Benefit of the Church, or in caſe of neceſſity, and not for Mony or Favour; and that that which is abſolutely evil, ought never to be tolerated or permitted.

In the Sixth, he maintains three Principles, viz. That the Church ought to be Catholick, Free and Chaſte: That Quatenus Catholick, it can neither be Bought nor Sold; that as it's Free it ought not to be brought into Subjection to any Secular Power; and that as 'tis Chaſte, it ought not to be corrupted with Preſents.

The Seventh Tract contains certain Allegorical Explications of the Ark of the Covenant, and of the Tabernacle with reference to the Church.

In the Eighth, he explains, what are the effects of Baptiſm, Confirmation, Extreme Unction, and the Euchariſt. He ſays, That Baptiſm remits Sins by the Vertue of the Holy Ghoſt, That in Confirmation the Holy Ghoſt is invoked that he would vouchſafe to take up his abode in the Habitation which he has Sanctified; that he would alſo Defend and Protect it: That that Sacrament is Adminiſter'd by the Biſhops to ſhew, that it gives the higheſt Perfection: That the Extreme Unction of Sick Perſons confers on them Remiſſion of Sins; to the end that Chriſtians may obtain Mercy both in their Life time, and at the hour of Death: And laſtly, That in the Communion of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt the Chriſtian Soul is Healed of all the Diſeaſes of its Vices, re-eſtabliſh'd in a State of Everlaſting Salvation, and made one Body with Jeſus Chriſt.

In the Ninth, he Treats of the re-iteration of the Sacraments, and ſays, That thoſe are not reiterated; in which it ſeems, as if there were an intention to begin again that which was already done; but the ſame Ceremony may be re-iterated when 'tis perform'd for a different end, and has another effect: That therefore the Holy Chriſm is put on the Fore-head, after having anointed the top of the Head with it; becauſe thoſe ſeveral Unctions produce different Effects: But that Extreme Unction cannot be re-iterated by reaſon that it is a Sacrament.

In the Tenth, he proves, That the Biſhops ought not to exact any thing for Benedictions and Ordinations, and aſſerts it to be a kind of Simony in a Biſhop, not only to receive Money for the Benediction of an Abbot, but alſo to exact of him an acknowledgment, by which he binds himſelf by promiſe to his Dioceſan.

The Eleventh is a Conſtitution about the manner how Monks ought to proceed in accuſing others, and in defending themſelves in their Chapter.

In the Twelfth, he explains in a few words, three Vertues neceſſary for Paſtors of the Church, viz. Juſtice, Diſcretion and Fore-ſight.

The Thirteenth and Fourteenth, are certain Dialogues between God, who upbraids the Sinner with his Ingratitude, and the Sinner, who acknowledges his Offences, and implores the Mercy of God.

The Fifteenth and Sixteenth, are Prayers made by a Sinner to God, in which he humbly ſues for his Mercy, and begs pardon for his Tranſgreſſions.

Theſe Tracts are concluded with four Hymns or Proſes, viz. one directed to the Virgin Mary, and the three others on the Repentance of Mary Magdalen.

All theſe Works are follow'd by eleven Sermons on the Nativity, Reſurrection and Aſcenſion of Jeſus Chriſt; On the Purification and Feſtivals of the Virgin Mary; On Mary Magdalen, whom he confounds with the Sinner; On the penitent Thief; and on St. Benedict. Theſe

Sermons

Sermons are dry and barren, containing nothing that is Eloquent; and indeed, generally ſpeaking, all the Pieces of this Author are not written with much Elegancy or Politeneſs. However his Compoſitions are very natural, and his Explications eaſy and familiar. Father Sirmond caus'd them to be printed at Paris A. D. 1610. from two Manuſcript Copies, and annex'd Annotations on the Letters, which are very ſerviceable to make known the Perſons, and to illuſtrate many Hiſtorical Matters of Fact that are mentioned therein.

HILDEBERT

Biſhop of Mans, and afterwards Arch biſhop of Tours.

Hildebert Biſhop of Mans.

HILDEBERT Born at Lavardin in the Dioceſs of Mans, of Parents of mean Condition, joyn'd the Study of the Liberal Sciences to that of Divinity, and was choſen Biſhop of Mans, A. D. 1098. His firſt Exerciſes of the Epiſcopal Functions were diſturbed by the War that broke forth between William II. Sirnam'd Rufus King of England, and Helie Count of Mans, who being taken Priſoner by that Prince, the City of Mans fell into the Hands of Foulques Count of Angers. The King of England was Marching at the Head of an Army to take it, when the Biſhop and Inhabitants, fearing leſt the Count of Angers ſhould make an Agreement at their Coſt, Surrendred it to him, on Condition that their Count ſhould be ſet at Liberty. Afterwards the Count having got together ſome freſh Troops, re-enter'd the City of Mans, and Beſieg'd the Forts that were poſſeſs'd by King William's Forces; but he was repuls'd, and the King remain'd Maſter of the City. Hildebert was accuſed of having been concern'd in that enterprize, and oblig'd to paſs over into England to clear himſelf. The King enjoyn'd him to cauſe the Towers of his Church to be pull'd down, and Hildebert returning with that Order, found his Church laid waſte by the outrages that were committed againſt the Clergy, by the pillaging of its Revenues and the burning of the City. But the King of England dying a little while after, A. D. 1100. Count Helie re-took the City, granted a Compoſition to the King's Soldiers, who were in the Forts, and re-eſtabliſh'd Order and Peace in thoſe Parts. When Hildebert ſaw his Native Country reſtor'd to its former Tranquillity, he undertook a Journey to Rome, and went to viſit Pope Paſchal II. by whom he was very kindly entertain'd and returned from Rome laden with Honours and Preferments. Some time after, he was apprehended at Nogent le Rotrou, where he went to bear the laſt Will and Teſtament of the Count of Rotrou, who was detain'd Priſoner at Mans. At laſt having procur'd his Liberty, he ſolemniz'd the Conſecration of the Cathedral Church of Mans newly re-built, and continu'd to Govern his Dioceſs in Peace, till the Year 1125. when he was tranſlated to the Arch-biſhoprick of Tours after the Death of Guillebert.

Hildebert, not long after his Promotion to that Dignity, fell out with Lewis the Groſs, King of France, having refus'd to diſpoſe of the Benefices belonging to that Church, more eſpecially the Deanry and Arch-Deaconry at the pleaſure of his Prince, who caus'd the Revenues to be ſeiz'd on, and prohibited him to enter his Dominions. The Perſon who was nominated Dean, was at variance with the Canons, who were maintain'd by the Court, which gave occaſion to diſturbances in the Church of Tours. At laſt theſe diſſenſions being appeas'd, he was reſtor'd to the King's Favour, and died, A. D. 1132, after having poſſeſs'd the Epiſcopal See of Mans 27 Years, and the Metropolitan of Tours, ſix Years and as many Months.

The Letters of this Author are the moſt valuable Pieces amongſt his Works. They are written in a fine Epiſtolary Style, after a very Natural manner, and contain divers Important Points of Morality, Church-Diſcipline and Hiſtory. We ſhall here produce the Extracts of thoſe that Treat of theſe Matters, omitting the others which relate to meer Compliments, or to particular Affairs, ſuch as the ſix firſt.

Therefore we ſhall begin with the ſeventh, in which the Author determines, That a Virgin Betroathed before ſhe was Marriageable, whoſe Husband died without knowing her Carnally, cannot Marry the Brother of her former Husband; becauſe Marriage does not conſiſt in Carnal Copulation, but in the conſent of the Parties. The ſeventeenth is likewiſe written on the ſame Subject.

In the Ninth, he declares, That he refus'd to aſſiſt at the Conſecration of one who was choſen Biſhop of Angers; becauſe he was a Young Man, and not as yet in Orders, and was not Canonically Elected by the Clergy, but proclaim'd in a Popular Tumult, againſt whoſe Election, the Dean, the Chanter, the Arch-Deacons, and the greateſt part of the Chapter had proteſted. He declares the ſame thing to that Elected Perſon in the Twelfth and Thirteenth Letter, and exhorts him not to ſuffer himſelf to be Conſecrated.

By the Fourteenth, he depoſes a certain Perſon, who had given Money, to be Ordain'd a Deacon.

The Eighteenth, is a Letter directed to Paſchal II. and Compos'd with a great deal of Art, to excuſe the Canons of St. Martin at Tours, who had given offence to the Pope, by inſiſting too much on their Privileges.

In

In the Nineteenth, he excuſes himſelf for not being able to be preſent in a certain Council, by reaſon that his Church and City were pillag'd and oppreſs'd by the Tyranny of the Counciſs; alledging alſo, that he was oblig'd to paſs over into England, to give an Account why he refus'd to demoliſh the Towers of his Church; and that he was ready to undertake another Voyage to Rome, which would put him out of a Capacity of defraying the Charges, that were requiſite for a Journey to the Council.

In the Twenty firſt, he entreats a certain Biſhop of England to furniſh him with St. Anſelm's Diſputation againſt the Greeks in the Council of Bari concerning the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, and returns thanks to that Prelate, in the following Letter, for ſending it to him.

In the Twenty third, he intercedes with an Abbot, in behalf of a Monk who return'd to his Monaſtery, after he had left it, to treat him favourably.

In the Thirtieth, he ſharply reproves a Prieſt, who caus'd a Perſon to be put to the Rack, whom he ſuſpected to have committed a Robbery.

In the Thirty firſt, he gives excellent Inſtructions to a Lady who had forſaken the Vanities of the World, and in the Thirty Third, he reprehends a certain Rich Lord for his Pride and Covetouſneſs.

In the Thirty fourth, he declares that he refus'd to approve the intended Marriage of a Count with one of his Kinſ-women; altho' it might put an end to a War that was carry'd on between him and his future Father-in-Law.

In the Thirty ſixth, he repreſents to a Chriſtian Virgin the advantages of a ſingle Life, and gives her wholeſome Advice, more eſpecially relating to the Vertue of Humility.

In the Thirty Seventh, he comforts a certain Perſon, who was much troubled, in regard that he was diverted from the Contemplative Life, to take upon him the Paſtoral Charge, and ſhews, by Examples taken out of Holy Scriptures, that it is profitable to joyn the Active to the Contemplative Life.

In the Thirty eighth, he acquaints the Biſhop of Angouleme the Pope's Legate, with the Irregularities of the Monks of St. Evron, to the end that he might ſend him Word, after what manner he ought to proceed againſt them.

The Thirty ninth, is a Circular Letter written to the Biſhops and Prieſts, and in general to all Chriſtians concerning his Impriſonment. He was ſent for by the Count of Rotrou, who was then a Priſoner; and having receiv'd his Confeſſion, with his laſt Will and Teſtament by which that Noble-man bequeath'd his Eſtate to the Church, carry'd that Will to his Mother, who gave him good Entertainment. But the next day, Hildebert himſelf was taken Priſoner by Count Hubert Chancellor of Rotrou, who detain'd him, notwithſtanding the entreaties of the Inhabitants of the Country and the Sentence of Excommunication publiſh'd by the Biſhop of Chartres, and would not releaſe him till he paid his Ranſom. He declares that ſuch an Act is unworthy of a Biſhop, and that he choſe rather to loſe his Life, than to redeem it with Money.

In the Fortieth, he exhorts Serlo Biſhop of Seez to Excommunicate Hubert, who kept him in Priſon.

The Forty firſt contains wholeſome Inſtructions to a Young Widow, who after having lead a diſorderly Life for ſome time, devoted her ſelf to God. He furniſhes her with proper Remedies againſt Temptations.

In the Forty ſecond, he adverties a Biſhop, that Lifiard ought not to be Excommunicated for committing Sacrilege and a Rape; ſince the Virgin whom he took to Wife, was only put into a Monaſtery, to be Inſtructed, and in regard that ſhe left it to Marry him, by the Order of her Mother and Aunt.

In the Forty fourth, he determines, that a Prieſt, who offer'd the Sacrifice of the Maſs, with ordinary Bread, having no other at Hand, ought to be puniſh'd, rather upon the ſcandal he had given, than for the Fault, which was not great.

In the Forty ninth, he commends the Action of a Biſhop, who had hinder'd the removing of certain Perſons out of the Church, who had taken Sanctuary therein.

The Fifty firſt, is a large Confutation of a certain Perſon, who reviv'd the Error of Vigilantius, and maintain'd, that the Invocation of Saints was unprofitable, becauſe they do not hear our Prayers, and have no knowlege of Tranſactions on Earth. This Man gave it out, that Hildebert was of his mind; which oblig'd him not only to diſown that Opinion, but alſo to ſhew, by the Teſtimony of the Fathers, that the Saints hear our Prayers, and that they make Interceſſion for us with God.

In the Fifty third, he excuſes himſelf to Clarembaldus Canon of Oxford, for not having ſent to him ſooner, the Hiſtory of the Miracles which happen'd in that City, becauſe they had ſlipt out of his Mind: He gives him to underſtand, That the ſecond Memorandum, which he directed to him, contain'd ſome of the ſame Miracles, with different Circumſtances; but nevertheleſs, he did not judge it expedient to alter his firſt Relation, yet he left him at liberty, either to correct or to ſuppreſs it according to his Diſcretion.

In the Fifty fifth, he congratulates the Biſhop of Clermont, for beſtowing an Arch-deaconry, on one of the Sub-deacons of the Church of Mans, a Perſon very worthy to be promoted to that Dignity, upon account of his Learning and Virtue; and declaims againſt the Cuſtom that was introduced to retain Spiritual Livings in a Family, as it were by right of Succeſſion; citing divers Paſſages againſt that Abuſe.

The Fifty ſixth, is a conſolatory Letter to a King, upon occaſion of the Death of his Son. It contains divers excellent Moral and Chriſtian Maxims, touching the Conſtancy, with which Wiſe and Chriſtian People ought to bear Afflictions.

In the Fifty ninth, he diſſuades a certain Count, from undertaking a Voyage to St. James of Compoſtella, becauſe his Duty oblig'd him to continue in the Country, where his Preſence was neceſſary.

In the Sixtieth, he writes to the Biſhop of Chartres, with reference to a Prieſt, who having been attack'd by a Robber, knock'd him on the Head with a Stone, ſo that he died of the Wound. His Biſhop after having ſuſpended him for ſeven Years from the Celebration of Divine Service; at laſt conſulted Hildebert, to know whether he ought to reſtore him to his Functions. The latter declares, That it ſeem'd to him, that a Prieſt who has committed Man-ſlaughter, ought no longer to offer the Holy Sacrifice, although he did it in his own defence. He maintains with St. Ambroſe, That it is not lawful for one Man to kill another, even in defending his own Life; and although it were permitted, yet it ought not to be done. He concludes, That if the like caſe had happen'd to one of his Dioceſans, he would have referr'd the Matter to the Holy See.

In the Sixty firſt, he reproves certain Monks, who refus'd to entertain the Biſhop of Chartres at their Table: He ſhews, that the perfection of the Monaſtick Life does not conſiſt in performing the outward Duties, but in the Practice of Humility and Charity: As for what thoſe Monks alledg'd as an Excuſe for their neglect, viz. That they were not able to give Entertainment to the Biſhop, by reaſon of their Poverty; he aſſerts, That they ought to ſell or pawn the Ornaments of their Church, to exerciſe Hoſpitality towards their Dioceſan.

In the Sixty ſecond, he recommends to a Widow, who had devoted her ſelf to God, the giving of Alms to the Poor.

In the Sixty third, he commends the Counteſs Adela, in regard that after her Converſion, inſtead of undertaking a Pilgrimage to the Holy Land, ſhe had embrac'd the Monaſtick Life.

In the Sixty fourth, he cenſures the Cuſtom of a Monaſtery, where both the Species of the Euchariſt were not adminiſter'd ſeparately; but that of the Bread ſteept in the other of the Wine. He maintains, That the ſopt Bread which our Saviour gave to Judas was not the Euchariſt.

In the Sixty fifth, written by Hildebert, as well as the next, after his Tranſlation from the Biſhoprick of Mans to the Arch-biſhoprick of Tours; he acquaints the Pope, That he had taken a Journey to Bretagne, where he held a Synod at Nantes, A. D. 1127. for the Reformation of the Church, chiefly as to what concerns inceſtuous Marriages, and the Succeſſion of Relations to Eccleſiaſtical Preferments: That the Prince had remitted in that Synod, the Right which was claim'd by the Lords to ſeize on the moveable Goods of deceaſed Perſons, and even his own Royal Prerogative, by vertue of which all manner of Wracks at Sea belong to his demeans: That it was alſo ordain'd, That the Biſhops ſhould publiſh in their Synods, and the Prieſts in their Churches, That thoſe who preſume to contract unlawful Marriages, for the future, ſhall be excommunicated; and that the Children born in ſuch Wedlock were declar'd illegitimate: That the Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions were reviv'd, concerning the Qualities requiſite in Perſons, who deſign to receive Orders: That it was prohibited to ordain the Sons of Prieſts, unleſs they turn'd Regular Canons or Monks; and that as for thoſe who were already ordain'd, they were not allow'd to ſerve their Fathers Pariſhes in that Quality, leſt they ſhould find means to ſucceed them: And laſtly, That very ſtrict Prohibitions were made that Benefices ſhould be tranſmitted, as it were by Succeſſion. He entreats the Pope to confirm what they had done, more eſpecially the Reſignation that the Prince had made of his Right to the Shipwracks. Pope Honorius II. grants him this Confirmation in the Letter which immediately follows that of which we have but now made mention.

In the Sixty ſeventh, he complains to that Pope, that the King of France had confiſcated the Revenues belonging to his Church, and would not ſuffer him to enter the Territories of his Kingdom, becauſe he refus'd to diſpoſe of the Benefices according to the pleaſure of that Prince. He likewiſe wrote to him about the Conteſts that happen'd in the Church of Tours, between the Dean and ſome of the Canons, which was carry'd on to that height, that one of the Canons was maimed, by one of the Collegues and by the Dean's Friends. The latter was accuſed of being acceſſory to the Fact, but he deny'd it, and no Proof being brought againſt him, he clear'd himſelf by his own Oath, and by that of ſeven other Prieſts.

In the Sixty eighth, he tells the Pope, that the had done what his Holineſs requir'd of him, having reſtor'd Bracerius to his Prebend, which he deſerv'd to loſe, by reaſon of the enormity of his Crimes, and in ſending to him Radulphus Dean of St. Maurice, of whom mention is made made in the preceding Letter. He justifies the Innocence of that Dean, and acquaints the Pope with the Judgment passed in his favour.

In the Sixty ninth, he entreats the Pope to confirm a Donation, that the King of England made to the Church of Fontevrault.

In the Seventieth, he comforts the Queen of England for her Barrenness, and gives her to understand, that she ought not to look upon it as a disgrace, but as the means of procuring her Salvation, by adopting the Poor for her Children.

In the Seventy first, he exhorts to perseverance, a Countess, who had quitted worldly Affairs to embrace the Monastick Life.

The Seventy fourth, is a Reprimand given to a Clergy-man, who did not lead a regular Course of Life.

In the Seventy fifth, he complains that none of his Friends undertook to maintain the Interests of his Church, in the Court of the King of France.

In the Seventy ninth, he determines, That Nuns who live in a Monastery, ought not to go out of it alone, but accompanied with one of their Matrons: He reproves those who act otherwise on Holy-days; and observes, that about thirty Years were pass'd since he wrote a Treatise of Virginity. Lastly, he declaims against some Nuns, who dwell in private Houses, to lead a more dissolute Course of Life.

The Eightieth, is a Letter by Marbodus Bishop of Rennes, which we shall mention in its proper place.

The Eighty second is an excellent Letter directed to Pope Honorius, in which he expresses himself with Submission and Freedom, against the Appeals made to the See of Rome, which were so frequent in that Age. He entreats him at first not to be offended at his Letter, nor to attribute that to Presumption, which he was oblig'd to do by necessity, and lest the Church should be oppress'd by force of Arms; the effects of which he himself knew by Experience. He adds, that he has reason to hope that his Remonstrance will not be unacceptable to him, because it is written for the sake of Justice. Afterwards he declares, That that Custom was never approv'd on the hither side of the Alpes, and that it is not an Article grounded on the Ecclesiastical Laws that all sorts of Appeals should be receiv'd at Rome: That if that Innovation prevail, the Authority of the Popes will be disannull'd, and the whole vigour of Church-Discipline will be subverted: "For (says he) where is the Oppressor that does not "enter an Appeal, as soon as he is threaten'd with an Anathema? Where is the Clerk who "will not continue in his exorbitant Courses, defending himself by a declinatory Appeal? "Or by what means can the Bishops inflict any Punishment for the least Act of Disobe-"dience? An Appeal will certainly put a stop to his Censure, weaken his Constancy, baffle "his Resolutenes, impose Silence upon him, and cause all manner of Crimes to go un-"punished. However, Hildebert owns, that the Church on the hither side of the Alpes has acknowledg'd some Appeals, and 'tis but reasonable that those who have lawful Grievances, should get them redress'd by that means, as also that those Persons, whose Judges are their Enemies, or suspected, or who fear the Outragiousness of the People, should have the same liberty to secure themselves: But he maintains, that Appeals which are only enter'd on purpose to put a stop to the Course of Justice, and to procrastinate Affairs, ought not to be authoriz'd; and therefore he entreats the Pope no longer to admit any of that Nature.

The Eighty third Letter, which is the last of this Collection, does not belong to Hildebert, but is part of the Preface written by Ives of Chartres on his Decree. Therefore that Piece was only inserted amongst Hildebert's Letters by a Mistake.

Father Dacbery publish'd in the Fourth Tome of his Spicilegium, Nine Letters of Hildebert, among which are Three very eloquent ones about the Imprisonment of Pope Paschal II. and afterwards the same Author set forth Fifteen others, which are annexed in the end of the Thirteenth Tome. There are some amongst these last, that relate to the Persecution which Hildebert suffer'd by reason of the displeasure of the King of France, and the Quarrel that arose between the Dean of Tours and his Canons. In the Ninth, he entreats the Pope not to grant the Pall to the Bishop of Dol.

Hildebert's other Pieces, are two Hymns on our Saviour's Nativity; A Paraphrase on the Canon of the Mass in Verse; A Sermon on these Words of Isaiah, Chap. 35. Then the Eyes of the Blind shall be opened; Another on these Words of Jesus Christ in St. Luke, Chap. 12. Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required; A Synodical Discourse to his Curates. All these Works and Letters are extant in the Collections call'd Bibliotheca Patrum.

There are also to be seen in different places, some other Works attributed to Hildebert; viz. The Life of St. Hugh Abbot of Clumy, in the Bibliotheca Cluniacensis, publish'd by Du-Chesne; The Epitaph of Berenger, referr'd to by William of Malmesbury; A Letter written to Reginald the Monk, and the Preface to the Life of St. Radegonda, set forth by Father Mabillon in the First Tome of his Analecta, with the beginning of that Life, of which that Father has a Manuscript Copy in his Possession. Rosweida makes mention of the Life of St. Mary the Egyptian, in Verse by Hildebert, which (as they say) is kept in the Library of Lipsick. There are also in the Libraries, several Tracts ascribed to Hildebert, but we have lost his Treatise of Virginity. Besides these Works, Father Hommey has likewise published some in his Collection, which he attributes to Hildebert, but it is not probable, that they belong to that Author.

The other Works of Hildebert, fall very much short of the Elegancy and Politeness of his Letters. His Poetical pieces are gross; neither has he observ'd the Rules of Quantity. His Sermons are written in like manner, in a weak and very mean Style. However he was a noted Prelate, who shew'd a great deal of Prudence, Discretion and Constancy in the Management of Affairs, during the whole Course of his Life.

GUIBERT Abbot of Nogent.

Guibert Abbot of Nogent.

GUIBERT Abbot of Nogent sous Coucy, was born in a Village belonging to the Diocess of Beauvais, of a rich and noble Family. He lost his Father Evrard in his Youth, and was brought up by his Mother, who took a particular care of his Education, but having afterwards retir'd to a Monastery, and being inform'd, that her Son did not follow the Instructions she had given him, she oblig'd him to take Lodgings in the Abby of St. German in the Diocess of Beauvais, to live under the conduct of his old Tutor, who became a Monk in that Abbey. Guibert did not continue long there, before he had an inclination to assume the Monastick Habit, and actually put that Design in execution, contrary to the Advice of his Mother and Tutor. After having turn'd Monk, he was afflicted with many Temptations, but at last was deliver'd from them, by the means of Prayer and Study, and was chosen Abbot of Nogent sous Coucy in the most remote part of the Diocess of Laon, where he died in 1124.

A certain small Tract about Preaching, is usually prefix'd to Guibert's Works, being the Preface to his Moral Commentaries on the Holy Scripture, which is full of Instructions, and very methodical. He begins with observing, that it is very dangerous for a Person obliged to Preach by the Duty of his Function, to neglect the performance of that Duty, by reason that as it is a matter of pernicious Consequence to shew bad Examples; so it is a very great Offence, not to endeavour to contribute somewhat to the reclaiming of Sinners by wholsom Instructions. He adds, That Men have different Motives to abstain from Preaching; that some are induc'd to do it by Pride, for fear of passing for Preachers, a Quality commonly reputed contemptible in the World; others by Envy, not to communicate their Knowledge to others, and others by Disgust or Slothfulness, in regard that they do not think themselves to lie under any Obligation, because they have no cure of Souls. He maintains, that all Christians, who have attain'd to any Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, are oblig'd to Preach the Word of God, and that they ought to propose no other end of their Preaching, but God himself, who is the Subject of it: That Bishops, Abbots, Curates and all Christians in general, are not only obliged to abstain from doing Evil, and from giving bad Examples, but are also under an obligation to do all manner of Good that lies in their power, both by their Example and Doctrine. He concludes from that Principle, that the practice of Virtues and the Instruction of others ought to be joyn'd together: Thus a Preacher ought to lead an innocent Life, and he who lives well, ought to apply himself to the Instructing of others.

This Author advises that Preaching be preceded by Prayer, to the end that the Soul inspir'd with the Love of God, may ardently express the Sentiments it has of God, to inflame the Hearts of the Auditors with the same Zeal, with which it is transported it self. "For "(says he) a Discourse pronounced in a luke-warm and languid manner, not being agreeable "even to him that pronounces it, cannot give satisfaction to the Hearers; and it would be "wonderful, that a Discourse deliver'd by a Person who is not animated himself, should be "capable of animating others. Care ought also to be taken (continues he) since the Word "is spread abroad according to the effusion of the Heart, that the Discourse be not too te"dious by reason of its length, and do not clog the Auditors: Therefore how fervent soever "the Zeal of the Preacher may be, how copious soever his Subject, how strong soever his "Memory, and how extraordinary soever his fluency of Discourse, yet he ought to have "regard to the weakness of his Auditors, and to consider, that 'tis more commendable to "lay down a few Truths, which will be receiv'd attentively, than to deliver an infinite num"ber of Things, that cannot be retain'd; and that 'tis expedient to leave off before his Au"ditors be tir'd, to the end that when there shall be an occasion to Preach to them at another "time, they may be disposed to hearken to his Doctrine. He likewise admonishes Preachers, that they ought to render their Sermons profitable both to the Ignorant and to the Learned, and to explain the Matters they handle in such a manner, as may be intelligible to all sorts of Capacities; and that it is requisite, to intermix some Sentences taken out of the Old Testament in their Discourses, because they appear new, and serve to stir up the Affections of their Auditors.

Afterwards he treats of the Subjects that ought to be chosen by Preachers, and refers them to the Four senses of Scripture, viz. the Literal, the Allegorical, the Tropological and Anagogical.

gogical. He obſerves, that altho' Allegories mingled in the connection of a Diſcourſe be agreeable, and it be ſometimes convenient to explain the literal ſenſe of ſome Paſſages of Scripture; nevertheleſs the principal aim of a Preacher ought to be, to diſcover the inward diſpoſition of the Man; that is to ſay, his Thoughts, Affections and Paſſions, and to make ſo natural repreſentations of them, that every one may acknowledge therein the ſecret impulſes of his own Mind. "Furthermore, (ſays he) Admonitions ought not only to be given "concerning the practice of Vertues, but alſo with reference to the connection of Vices, and "the means of ſhunning them.---Sometimes a Diſcourſe on the Nature of Vice is no leſs profitable than one on Vertue: For how can a Man take delight in the beauty of Vertue, if he be not ſenſible of the deformity of Vice? Or how can he avoid the latter, if he have no knowledge of the former? Therefore 'tis requiſite to make known both, to cauſe a Man to be acquainted with himſelf, and to repreſent to him the inward diſpoſition of his Mind.

This inward Diſpoſition of a Man is perfectly deſcrib'd according to Guibert in St. Gregory's Treatiſes of Morality and in Caſſian's Conferences, but it cannot be well learnt, but by Experience and the exerciſes of a Spiritual Life. He would not adviſe thoſe that are not accuſtomed to the practice of it, to venture upon new Allegories, and he gives Rules to thoſe who have attain'd to perfection in ſpiritual Exerciſes, to walk ſafely in a Path, from whence without due circumſpection they may eaſily go aſtray.

He admoniſhes Preachers, to deliver their Sermons after ſuch a manner, as it may appear that they have no other intention, but to inſtruct, and to promote the Salvation of their Auditors, and that they do not ſeek for vain Glory by their Eloquence: "For nothing (ſays he) "gives greater offence to an Auditor, than when he is perſwaded that the Preacher is only "indue'd to ſpeak, by Oſtentation or private Intereſt; ſo that a Preacher, that has ſuch a Cha-"racter, exaſperates rather than inſtructs, and by how much the more his Diſcourſes abound "with Rhetorical Ornaments, he renders himſelf ſo much the more contemptible to his "Auditors.

Laſtly, he treats of the principal Matters, that ought to ſerve as a Subject for Preachers, and adviſes them not only to repreſent to Sinners the everlaſting Puniſhments that they ſhall undergo hereafter in the future State, but alſo the Troubles, Torments, Vexations and other Calamities, to which they are obnoxious in this Life. This is the Subject of the Preface, which he apparently made to ſerve inſtead of an Apology againſt the Opinion of his Abbot, who was unwilling to permit him either to Preach or to Write. It is followed by ten Books of Moral Commentaries upon Geneſis, written in imitation of thoſe of St. Gregory on Job, and by Ten other Books of Commentaries of the ſame Nature on the Prophecies of Heſea and Amos, and on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, on which he impoſ'd the Title of Tropologica.

Guibert's Treatiſe againſt the Jews is a Confutation of a certain Piece full of Blaſphemies againſt Jeſus Chriſt. He Diſcourſes particularly of our Saviour's Conception in the Womb of a Virgin, and upon occaſion of that Queſtion, proceeds to Treat of Original Sin and Concupiſcence. There is a remarkable Paſſage about Images, in which he ſays, "That we "honour the Inviſible Things in the viſible Signs; or rather, that we fix our wandring Mind "on the Contemplation of ſpiritual Things, by looking upon Pictures, which ſerve as it "were to admoniſh us of our Duty.

In his Treatiſe of the reality of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, he debates two Queſtions, viz. one on the Sop that was given by him to Judas, and the other about the reality of our Saviour's Body in the Euchariſt. As to the Firſt, he determines, that Judas receiv'd the Sacrament with the other Apoſtles, but that the Sop which our Lord gave him, was not a Sacrament, or ſacred Sign, but the Sign of his Treaſon. In diſcuſſing the ſecond Queſtion, he confutes the Opinion of thoſe, that deny the real Preſence, and who believe, that the Body of Jeſus Chriſt is only a Figure in the Euchariſt.

The Treatiſe of the Praiſes of the Virgin Mary, contains many Encomium's on the Bleſſed Mother of our Lord, and the Hiſtory of ſome Miracles wrought by her Interceſſion. He concludes with a Proſe or Hymn in her Honour.

In the Tract about Virginity, he does not only Treat of its Excellency, but alſo of the means of preſerving it; of the Vertues that ought to accompany it, and of the Vices that are deſtructive of it.

In the Treatiſe of the Pledges or Relicks of the Saints, Guibert after having juſtified himſelf in the Preface, as to the Expreſſion utter'd by him that the Euchariſt ſupplies the Place of Jeſus Chriſt, he proceeds to treat of the Honour due to Saints, of their Relicks, and of the Abuſes committed upon that account; alledging, 1. That the Cuſtoms of Churches may be different, as to matters of Diſcipline, as about Faſts, the manner of Singing, &c. 2. That it is neceſſary to receive the Sacrament of Baptiſm and of the Lord's Supper; in ſuch manner nevertheleſs, that one cannot be Sav'd without being Baptiz'd, and yet one may attain to Salvation without actually receiving the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, as it appears by the Examples of ſome Martyrs, who never receiv'd the Communion, and of ſome Hermits, who receiv'd it very ſeldom. 3. That there are ſome Cuſtoms, which are not neceſſary for Salvation, and yet are obſerv'd in the Churches, as the Relicks of Saints, and certain Things that serv'd for their use, which we respect and honour to follow their Example, and to obtain their Protection. 4. That they only ought to be taken for Saints, who are acknowledged as such either by an ancient Tradition, or by authentick Records, and not those to whom that quality is attributed by Fancy or in some fabulous Relations. 5. He censures those who invent false Tales, and requires that the Histories of the Lives and Actions of the Saints be carefully examined, and that those only be Honour'd of whose Holiness we have a certain Account, and who undoubtedly died the Death of the Righteous. 6. He distinguishes several sorts of Persons, by whom God thinks fit to work Miracles; some of them being as it were the Canals or Instruments that he makes use of in the performing of preternatural Operations, which tend to the advantage of others; and are unprofitable to themselves: God bestows special Graces on others, which they never deserv'd, and makes them worthy by his meer Mercy: Sometimes he affords them to the Faithful, as a recompence for their Faith and Uprightness. 7. He insists, that severe Punishments ought to be inflicted on those who Forge false Miracles. 8. He enquires who they are that ought to be Honour'd as Saints; of these the Martyrs are the First, but it ought to be certainly prov'd, that they suffer'd for the Christian Faith. As for Confessors, he determines, that they only are to be respected in that Quality, who were eminent for their extraordinary Sanctity, and of whose Salvation we are morally certain: For when there are grounds to doubt of it, he would by no means have them invok'd. Upon that occasion, he proposes the Example of the Church, which would not avouch that the Body of the Virgin Mary was raised from the Dead and Glorified, altho' there are many Reasons that induce us to believe it. 9. He observes, in reference to the acknowledged and avouched Saints, that there are many Errors concerning their Relicks; in regard that the Body, Head and other Members of the same Saint are to be found in different Places, and every one pretends to have the true Relick. 10. He maintains, That forasmuch as the Bodies of the Saints are made of Earth, as those of other Men; it were more expedient to leave them in their Tombs, than to set them in Shrines of Gold and Silver, to carry them about; and to divide them, as it is usually done. "Indeed (says he) if the Bodies of the Saints had continu'd in the Places where they were, according to the order of "Nature, that is to say, in their Tombs; there would have been no mistake nor contest "about the reality of their Relicks: For that happens, only because they are taken out of "their Tombs; cut in Pieces; and carried about from one place to another. 'Tis true, "that Piety gave occasion to the removing of them, but Curiosity, in process of time, corrupted that which was done at first with simplicity.—Let others judge as they shall think fit; for "my part, I make no scruple to assert, that they have not done a thing acceptable to God "or his Saints, in opening their Tombs, or in dividing their Members after such a manner; "since the Heathens themselves had a respect for the Sepulchres of the Dead. St. Gregory "return'd for Answer to an Empress who importun'd him upon the like occasion, that he durst "not send her St. Peter's Head, and the Saints have often shewn notable marks of their In"dignation against those, who have presum'd thus to dismember their Bodies. 11. He acknowledges nevertheless, that those, who honour false Relicks without knowing them to be so, and supposing them to belong to some Saint, do not Sin, and that he that invokes a Person, who is no Saint, believing him to be really so, may be heard of God, who knows his good Intention. Lastly, he condemns the filthy Lucre that is made of those Relicks, by selling them, or by exacting Mony for shewing them, carrying them in Procession, exposing them, &c. These are the principal Points decided by Guibert in his first Book of the Pledges of the Saints, and they are accompany'd with great variety of Examples of real and counterfeit Miracles, of true and false Saints, and of genuine and supposititious Relicks, which are capable of affording much satisfaction and delight to the Reader.

In the second Book, to confute those, who set a great value on certain Relicks, which they asserted to belong to our Saviour, as his Teeth, Fore-skin, &c. our Author treats of the Mystery in which he has really left us his Body: He maintains, That Jesus Christ left no Relicks of his Body, but that he has given it us entire in the Eucharist: That that Body is not divided and distributed to the Faithful by Parcels, but that it is given altogether entire under every Host: That this Sacrament is receiv'd by the Unworthy, as well as by the Worthy, altho' the former do not receive the Grace of the Sacrament: That it may perhaps be devour'd by Rats and other Animals and pass thro' their Belly, yet nothing unworthy can befal the Body of Jesus Christ; for that the corruption and other alterations that appear to our Senses happen only to the Species, and not to the real Body of our Saviour: Lastly, That that Body is not in the Eucharist in the state of a dead or crucified Person, but in that of a living and glorified Redeemer. He starts another Question by the way, viz. Whether the Bread that remain'd in the Pyx on the Altar, during the Consecration, unknown to the Priest, were Consecrated? He determines in the negative, and that if an Host were put under the †Palle, or a Drop of Wine in the Chalice, without the knowledge of the Priest; they would not be consecrated.

† A square Past-board cover'd with white Linnen which is usually laid upon the Chalice in Popish Churches.

After having discoursed of the true Relick of Jesus Christ in the second Book, Guibert proceeds in the Third, to confute the false ones, which some Persons pretended to have in their possession. He begins with this fine Maxim, "'Tis requisite to approve the Devotion and "Respect that People have for God and the Saints, but only as far as that Devotion does not deviate

" deviate from the bounds of true Religion; otherwise it happens, that the devout Person, " instead of receiving the recompence of his Action, becomes culpable by his Error: For when " any thing is said of God, or a Worship is render'd to him, contrary to the testimonies of " Truth, the Party sins so much the more dangerously, in regard that Piety is made use of " for a Pretence; since nothing is more pernicious, than to do Evil, and at the same time " to imagine it to be a good Action: For how can any Man correct a Fault, if he do not only " not believe it to be an Error, but is also perswaded, that it is an action which deserves to be well rewarded? Afterwards he vigorously opposes the Opinion of the Monks of St. Medard, who boasted, that they had a Tooth of Jesus Christ, and grounds his assertions chiefly on this Argument, that our Saviour being raised from the Dead, all his Members and Parts ought to be re-united to his glorified Body. 'Tis true indeed, that those Monks might object, that it may reasonably be suppos'd, that our Saviour's first Teeth were shed, as those of other Children, and that which they had was one of those. Guibert in like manner proposes this very Objection in their Name, and eludes it, by averring, that there are many other Reasons to disprove their Argument, and that they had none to establish it. The principal that he alledges is, that 'tis not probable, that the Hair, Teeth, Fore-skin and other Things that fell from the Body of the Child Jesus, were kept at that time, and that there are no grounds to believe that they were preserved by the Virgin Mary. He likewise derides the pretended Milk of the Blessed Virgin, which was kept in the Church of Laon, and in some other Places. The Monks of St. Medard having alledged divers Miracles in vindication of their Relick, Guibert replies, that that Tooth perhaps might be the Tooth of some Saint, or that those Miracles were wrought, upon account of the Faith of those Persons, who came thither to honour a Relick, which they suppos'd to belong to Jesus Christ.

In the last Book that bears this Title, Of the Internal World, he Treats of Visions and of the Apparitions of Demons or Souls, and shews that the Visions of the Prophets, were Visions of Corporal Things: He acknowledges that Demons are disper'd in several places, and that they are present in this Visible World. He maintains, That the Happiness of the Elect, and the punishments of the Reprobates, are not Corporeal, for the present, but Spiritual, and is of Opinion that Hell-fire, with which the Devils are Tormented, is not a Material and Corporeal Fire, but the extreme anguish they have, to see themselves depriv'd for ever of the blissful State, and of the Beatifick Vision; as the Happiness of the Blessed Spirits consists, in the delight they take in beholding the Glory of God. Lastly, he proves that Souls are of a Spiritual Nature; That they have no Figure; That they are only capable of Spiritual Sympathies, and that Bodies cannot act on them.

His Piece call'd, Gesta Dei per Francos, or an Account of the Actions that God perform'd by the French, is divided into Eight Books, and Dedicated to Lisiard Bishop of Soissons. It contains a large and accurate History of the first Crusade undertaken by the French, and of the Conquests they made in the Levant, and in the Holy-Land, more especially under the Conduct of Boemond Duke of Apulia, and of Godfrey of Bouillon King of Jerusalem. This Work is written in a swelling Style, some Verses being intermixed with the Prose; but the Author has every where acted as a very faithful Historian, and has ever declin'd to insert such Narratives, as had no other Grounds but popular Reports.

The Life of Guibert written by himself, is not a simple Relation of what befel him, but a Work partly Moral in imitation of St. Augustin's Confessions, and partly Historical. He makes long Digressions on different Subjects, relating the History of the Abbeys of St. German, and Nogent sous Coucy, with that of the Churches of Laon, Soissons, &c. There are also divers Narrations, as a great number of Miracles, Visions and Apparitions, and of other Historical Matters of Fact that happen'd in his time.

Among the Works, of St. Bernard is likewise to be found a Sermon on these words of the last Verse of the XI. Chapter of the Wisdom of Solomin. Vice shall not prevail against Wisdom; she reacheth from one end to another mightily, and sweetly doth she order all things, which is attributed to Guibert of Nogent; because he intimates in the XVI. Chapter of the first Book of his Life, that he made a Sermon on that Text.

Besides these Works Guibert wrote a Treatise on the Sentences taken out of the Gospels, and the Books of the Prophets, of which he makes mention in the XVI. Chapter of the first Book of his Life; but this Work was not brought to Light and perhaps was never Compleated. Father Oudin informs us, that he found in the Library of the Abbeys of Vaucler and Igny, certain Commentaries written by Guibert in the Prophecies of Obadiah, Jonah, Micah, Zachariah, Joel, Nahum, Habbakuk and Zephaniah.

This Author having spent much time in the Study of Grammar and Poetry, wrote in a very clear Style, and Compos'd indifferent good Verses. He argues with a great deal of Judgment in his Dogmatical Treatises, and handles the Matters Methodically. He gives a very Natural Description of the inward Dispositions and Passions of Men, in his Treatises of Morality, but is too florid and prolix in the Historical.

His Works were publish'd by Father Luke Dachery, in Folio, by Billaine at Paris, A. D. 1651. He has Illustrated them with Learned Notes and large Observations, in which he refers to a great number of Ancient Monuments, and produces the History of divers Abbeys.

He

He has likewiſe inſerted in the ſame Volume to render it of a Competent largeneſs, the Lives of St. Germane, St. Simon, Count of Crepy, and St. Salberga the firſt Abbeſs of St. John at Laon, who Founded that Monaſtery, A. C. 640. as alſo three Books of Hugh Arch-biſhop of Rouen againſt the Hereticks of his Time, and the Continuation of Sigebert's Chronicle by Robert of Torigny Abbot of St. Michael's Mount, with a Treatiſe of the ſame Author about the Reformation of divers Abbeys, and ſeveral Liſts of the Deans of the Cathedral Church of Laon, and of the Abbots of St. John and St. Martins in the ſame City. Guibert's Hiſtory of the Cruſade was already ſet forth by Jacobus Bongarſius in his Collection of Hiſtorians, printed in 1611. under the ſame Title that Guibert impos'd on his Work, viz. Geſta Dei per Francos.

SIGEBERT A Monk of Gemblours.

Sigebert Monk of Gemblours.

SIGEBERT a Monk of Gemblours, after having been publick Profeſſor of Divinity in the Monaſtery of St. Vincent at Mets return'd to his own Convent, where he apply'd himſelf entirely to Study, and to the Compoſing of Books. He vigorouſly maintain'd the Intereſt of the Emperors Henry IV. and Henry V. againſt the Popes, and died A. D. 1113. The following Catalogue of his Works was made by himſelf.

He Compos'd during his abode at St. Vincent at Mets, the Life of St. Thierry Biſhop, of the ſame City, and Founder of the Abbey, with an Encomium on that Saint in Heroick Verſe. The Paſſion of St. Lucia in Alcaick Verſe: An Anſwer to thoſe, who cenſur'd the Prophecy of that Saint, in which (as it is reported) ſhe foretold that the Perſecution would ceaſe within a little while, upon the Expulſion of Dioclefian and the Death of Maximilian: A Sermon in commendation of the ſame Saint, in which he relates the Hiſtory of the ſeveral tranſlations of her Body from Sicily to Corfu, and from thence to Mets: And the Life of St. Sigebert King of France, who founded the Church and Abbey of St. Martin near Mets.

Sigebert after his return to the Monaſtery of Gemblours, compos'd the following Works, viz. The Hiſtory of the Paſſion of the Theban Martyrs in Heroick Verſe, and the Life of St. Guibert Founder of the Church of Gemblours: He likewiſe corrected the old Relation of the Life of St. Lambert, and made a new one illuſtrated with Compariſons taken out of the ancient Writers, as alſo an Anſwer to a Letter that Pope Gregory VII. wrote to Herman Biſhop of Mets. To theſe Pieces are to be added, an Apology for the Emperor Henry, againſt thoſe who inveigh againſt Maſſes ſaid by married Prieſts: A Letter written in the Name of the Churches of Liege and Cambray, againſt Paſchal II's Letter, in which that Pope excites the Count of Flanders to make War with the People of thoſe Territories: An Anſwer to the Inhabitants of Trier concerning the Faſt of the Ember-Weeks. The Book of Eccleſiaſtes in Heroick Verſe, according to the literal, allegorical and mythological Senſes: The continuation of Euſebius's Chronicle after St. Jerome to the Year 1111. A Treatiſe about the Reformation of the Cycles, and another of Illuſtrious Perſonages in imitation of St. Jerom and Gennadius.

Of all theſe Works there only remain in our Poſſeſſion, the continuation of St. Jerom's Chronicle from A. C. 381. to 1112. The Treatiſe of Eccleſiaſtical Writers: The Letter written in the Name of the Clergy of Liege and Cambray: And the Lives of St. Sigebert, St. Guibert and St. Maclou, refer'd to by Surius.

This Author is very accurate in his Writing, and attain'd to conſiderable proficiency in the Study of the Liberal Sciences, and in all ſorts of Humane Learning.

HONORIUS SOLITARIUS A Scholaſtick Divine of the Church of Autun.

Honorius Solitarius, a Scholaſtick Divine of Autun.

HONORIUS, a Prieſt and Scholaſtick Divine of the Church of Autun ſirnam'd the Solitary, flouriſh'd under the Emperor Henry V. A. D. 1120. We have little account of his Life, but many of his Works are ſtill extant.

The moſt conſiderable, is his Treatiſe of the Lights of the Church, or of the Eccleſiaſtical Writers, firſt publiſhed by Suffridus, and afterwards by Auberius Miræus in their Collections of Authors, who wrote thoſe that treated of Eccleſiaſtical Affairs. Honorius has divided this Work into four Books, the Three firſt of which are only an Abridgment of the Treatiſes on the Eccleſiaſtical Writers by St. Jerom, Gennadius and Iſidorus. He gives an account, in the laſt, of ſome Authors ſince Venerable Bede to his time. This Treatiſe contains almoſt nothing elſe but the Names and Characters of the Authors, and the Titles of their Works: It is follow'd by another Treatiſe of the ſame Nature, containing the Names of the ancient Hereticks and their principal Doctrines Printed at Baſil in 1544. To theſe two Treatiſes may be be added a Chronological Table of the Popes, from St. Peter to Innocent II. which is extant among the other Works of this Author.

The Treatiſe call'd, The Pearl of the Soul; or, Of the Divine Offices, is divided into four Books. In the Firſt, he treats of the Sacrifice of the Maſs; Of its Ceremonies and Prayers; Of the Church; Of its Parts and Ornaments; Of the Miniſters of the Altar and their Habits, &c. In the Second, he diſcourſes of the Canonical Hours, and of the Eccleſiaſtical Offices for the Day and Night. In the Third, of the principal Feſtivals of the Year; And in the Fourth, of the Concord or Agreement of the Offices of the whole Year, with the particular Days and Times on which they are celebrated. Theſe Books are full of a great number of Arguments and myſtical Explications that have no other Grounds but the Author's Imagination. They were printed at Lipſick, A. D. 1514. and in the Collections of the Writers who have treated of Eccleſiaſtical Offices.

The Treatiſe of the Image of the World is divided into three Books: In the Firſt of theſe, he treats of the World and of its Parts: In the Second, of Time and its Parts; and the Third is a Chronological Series of Emperors, Kings and other Sovereign Princes, from the Creation of the World to the Emperor Frederick Barberoſſa.

The Piece that bears the Title of The Philoſophy of the World, divided into four Books, is a Treatiſe of the Syſtem of the World, and of its principal Parts: It is follow'd by another Tract of the ſame Nature, touching the Motion of the Sun and Planets.

The Treatiſe of Predeſtination and of Free-will, is written in form of a Dialogue, and has for its Subject the Explication of that common Queſtion, How can Free-will be reconciled with the Certainty of Predeſtination? He defines Predeſtination to be an eternal preparation to Happineſs, or Miſery of thoſe that have done Good or Evil: He affirms, That it impoſes no neceſſity of doing either; becauſe God does not predeſtinate to Happineſs or Miſery, but with reſpect to the Merits of the Perſon: He rejects the Opinion of thoſe who aſſert, That Free-will conſiſts in the Power of doing Good or Evil, and defines it to be a Capacity of performing Righteouſneſs voluntarily and without conſtraint: He maintains, That Man by his Nature, is endued with a Power to act according to the Rule of Righteouſneſs, although he ſtands in need of Grace to do it, and is capable of reſiſting that Grace: He ſays, That God made all reaſonable Creatures for his Glory, but that he left them free to do either Good or Evil by their own Will, and that he would have all Men to be ſav'd, but that 'tis their free Will, which is the cauſe of their Damnation. Afterwards he explains, why God made Creatures, when he foreknew that they would ſin againſt him, and that they would be damned: Why the Word was incarnate: Upon what account, Mankind having deſerved nothing but Puniſhment, after the committing of Sin, God leaves ſome in the Maſs of Perdition, who are damned by their free Will, and ſaves others by his ſpecial Grace, which they by no means deſerv'd: And how Salvation ought rather to be attributed to Grace than to free Will, although free Will co-operates with Grace. He obſerves, That Children, that incur Damnation, are juſtly condemn'd to that Puniſhment; and that thoſe who attain to Salvation, are ſav'd by Grace, which they never merited: And as for adult Perſons, that they are ſav'd by Grace and free Will, and that thoſe who are damned, are doom'd to that Sentence by Juſtice, and by their free Will: That Predeſtination neither ſaves nor damns any Perſon by force; although all the Elect are infallibly ſav'd, and the Reprobates infallibly damned: But foraſmuch as 'tis not known, whether one be of the number of the Elect or of the Reprobates, that 'tis requiſite to uſe all poſſible endeavours for the attaining to Salvation: And that the number of the Elect is certainly determined, becauſe God from all Eternity, knew thoſe who would die in that State. He adds, That Man ſince Adam's Tranſgreſſion, may fall by his free Will, but that he cannot riſe again but by Grace; and that God ſometimes denies that Grace, to thoſe who are too Preſumptuous: That every Thing which happens in the World, ought to be referr'd to God; either becauſe he does it, or becauſe he permits it, or in regard that he does not prevent it; that he cauſes all things to tend to the promoting of his own Glory; that he ſhews Mercy on whomſoever he thinks fit, by affording them his Grace; that he hardens others at his Pleaſure, by leaving them in their Wickedneſs and in the State of Reprobation. Laſtly, after having made ſome Moral Reflections, our Author concludes this Work, with a Recapitulation of the Principles that he had already eſtabliſh'd.

In the Catalogue of the Works of Honorius of Autun, no mention is made of certain Queſtions relating to the Books of Proverbs and Eccleſiaſtes, but they come very near his particular Style and Genius.

His Commentary on the Canticles is preceded by a Preface, concerning the different ſenſes of Holy Scripture, the Diviſion of the Sacred Books, and the general Queſtions which relate to that Book in particular. He explains the Text of it according to the four Senſes expreſſed in his Preface, viz. the Hiſtorical, the Allegorical, the Tropological and the Anagogical.

This Treatiſe is follow'd by another call'd. The Seal of the bleſſed Virgin Mary; in which he applies to Jeſus Chriſt and to the bleſſed Virgin, what is expreſs'd in the Book of Canticles, concerning the Bridegroom and the Spouſe.

All theſe Works were collected by Andreas Schottus and Joan. Covenius, and printed in the Twelfth Tome of the Bibliotheca Patrum of the Colen Edition, and in the Twentieth of that of Lyons.

The following Works compos'd by the ſame Author are loſt, viz. An Illuſtration divided into three Books, the firſt of which treats of Jeſus Chriſt; the ſecond of the Church, and the third of Eternal Life. It cannot be that which is attributed to St. Anſelm, and which is extant amongſt his Works, becauſe the Subject of the three Books written by the latter, is altogether different: The Mirror of the Church conſiſting of Moral Diſcourſes: A Treatiſe call'd, The Scandal raiſed by the Incontinency of Prieſts: An Hiſtorical Abridgment: A Treatiſe of the Euchariſt: The Knowledge of Life; or a Treatiſe of God, and of Eternal Life: The Ladder of Heaven, or the Degrees of Viſion: Some Extracts out of St. Auguſtin, in form of a Dialogue between God and the Soul: A Treatiſe of the Pope and the Emperor: A Commentary on the Books of Pſalms and Canticles: Certain Homilies on thoſe Goſpels that were not explain'd by St. Gregory: The Key of natural Philoſophy, concerning the Nature of Things: The ſpiritual Nutriment, about the Feſtivals of our Saviour and the Saints, and ſome Letters. Mention is made of theſe Works; and of thoſe that are ſtill extant, in the end of his Treatiſe of Eccleſiaſtical Writers, and in Trithemius.

In the end of the Works of Honorius of Autun, is annexed a certain Commentary on the Canticles, that is more Moral than Myſtical, and which ſome attribute to him; but it is not his genuine Commentary. This Author is not of good eſteem, upon account of his Style or Accuracy, but for his Induſtry, and the Pains he has taken in making Enquiries.

ERNULPHUS or ARNULPHUS Biſhop of Rocheſter.

Ernulphus or Arnulphus Biſhop of Rocheſter.

ERNULPHUS or ARNULPHUS, a Monk of St. Lucian at Beauvais, left his Monaſtery by reaſon of the Diſorders that happen'd therein, and made Application to Lanfrank Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, under whom he had ſtudy'd in the Abbey of Bec. He continu'd for a long time in the Quality of a ſimple Monk in his Monaſtery at Canterbury, was made Prior of it by St. Anſelm, and afterwards Abbot of Burck. At laſt he was ordain'd Biſhop of Rocheſter in 1115. and govern'd that Church during nine Years and ſome Days. He died, A. D. 1124. in the 84th Year of his Age.

Father Dachery publiſh'd two Letters written by this Prelate in the ſecond Tome of his Spicilegium, which are two ſmall Tracts The firſt is directed to Waquelin Biſhop of Windſor, as an Anſwer to a Queſtion, which that Biſhop propos'd to him in a Conference they had together at Canterbury; viz. Whether a Woman, who has committed Adultery with her Huſband's Son, whom he had by another Wife, ought to be divorced from her Husband? He maintain'd the Affirmative, and the Biſhop to whom he wrote, aſſerted the Negative. In this Treatiſe Ernulphus anſwers the Objections of that Prelate; ſhewing, that all the Paſſages of Holy Scripture, in which 'tis forbidden to part Man and Wife, ought only to be underſtood of a voluntary Separation, between Perſons who are not guilty of Adultery, and afterwards confirms his Opinion, by making it appear, that the Biſhops, to prevent Diſorders, have often condemn'd Adulterers, to abſtain for ever from the uſe of Marriage; that it is the uſual Cuſtom of the Church; that this Puniſhment is ordain'd in the Penitential Books; and that a Divorce is juſtly allow'd upon account of Spiritual Alliance, although it be not expreſs'd in the Scripture as Adultery. He adds, that 'tis not unjuſt, that a Husband ſhould be divorced from his Wife, although he be innocent of the Crime committed by her, and that there are many other Cauſes, for which a Husband is obliged to put away his Wife.

The ſecond Letter of the ſame Author, is directed to a certain Perſon nam'd Lambert, who had propos'd five Queſtions, although he was unknown to him. The firſt is to know why the Euchariſt is adminiſter'd at preſent after a different and almoſt contrary manner, to that which was obſerv'd by Jeſus Chriſt; becauſe it was cuſtomary at that time, to diſtribute an Hoſt ſteept in Wine to the Communicants; whereas Jeſus Chriſt gave his Body and Blood ſeparately? Ernulphus replys to that Queſtion, That our Saviour, being come into the World, for the Salvation of Men, preſcrib'd to them what was neceſſary to be done in order to obtain it, without expreſſing the manner in particular: That therefore, he did not tell them, Baptize in this or that manner; let the Baptized Perſon be plunged three ſeveral times in the Water; do not permit the Catechumens to be conſecrated at firſt with Holy Chriſm, &c. but only ſaid ſimply, Baptize them: That by this means, the Things which are abſolutely neceſſary may be eaſily known, and thoſe that may be ſometimes omitted or alter'd: That upon that very account, ſome Cuſtoms, which were in uſe in the Primitive Church, were not long obſerv'd: That it is certain, for Example, That the Apoſtles receiv'd the Communion after Supper, although it be now receiv'd Faſting: That they celebrated it on a wooden Table, although at preſent it is offer'd on a Stone-Altar; that the Bread they made uſe of was ordinary Bread, and that that which is now us'd is finer and more looſe: That therefore 'tis not to be admir'd, if this Bread be given ſteept; although there was no ſuch Cuſtom heretofore, that the Prieſt ſhould mingle ſome part of the Species of Bread with the Wine: That this manner of Adminiſtration is obſerv'd, leſt any ill Accidents ſhould happen in the diſtribution of the Wine alone, and leſt it ſhould ſtick on the Hairs of the Beard or Whiskers, or ſhould be ſpilt by the Miniſter.

The ſecond Queſtion is, Why a fourth part of the Hoſt is put into the Chalice? He anſwers, That it is not cuſtomary to divide the Hoſt into four Parts, but only into three; yet that third part, which is put into the Chalice, is as large as the fourth part of the Hoſt; although care be taken in ſome Churches, to make it exactly of the bigneſs of the third part. He affirms that this Cuſtom was introduc'd, becauſe the Prieſt or Biſhop who Officiates, ought to communicate with that part which is put into the Chalice, and to diſtribute the two others to the Deacon and Sub-deacon, who are Aſſiſtants. He produces another myſtical Reaſon of the ſame Cuſtom, viz. That the Body of Jeſus Chriſt which is offer'd upon the Altar, is the Sacrament or the Figure of his Myſtical Body, which is the Church, compos'd of three Orders; that is to ſay, Superiours, Virgins and married Perſons; or elſe that it is done to be a Figure of the Myſtery of the Trinity, or to denote the three States of Jeſus Chriſt, viz. the Mortal, the Dead and the Raiſed.

The Third Queſtion is, Why the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt is receiv'd ſeparately from his Body, and why it is receiv'd in his Body? He returns for Anſwer, That they who receive the two Species ſeparately, do it in imitation of Jeſus Chriſt; and although his Body be receiv'd entire, under each Species, nevertheleſs each Species is receiv'd ſeparately, becauſe our Saviour has diſtinguiſh'd thoſe two Things; deſigning to expreſs to us by his Body, his Fleſh and Members, ſuch as they appear'd, ſolid and entire, and by his Blood, that which was ſhed by him on the Croſs.

The Fourth, is to know, Whether the Body of Jeſus Chriſt be received with, or without a Soul? He anſwers at firſt, That theſe ſorts of Queſtions are uſually ſtarted by Perſons who affect to ſeem learned, and who endeavour to lay Snares for the Faith of weak Chriſtians, who humbly believe what the Holy Ghoſt teaches them: That 'tis moſt expedient not to enter upon the debate of ſuch Queſtions: That although one cannot comprehend how the Bread and Wine are made the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt; nevertheleſs it cannot be doubted, ſince our Saviour ſaid, This is my Body, this is my Blood: That it argues Fooliſhneſs to endeavour to penetrate into the incomprehenſible Secrets of the Myſteries of Chriſtianity, and into that in particular, which is a Myſtery of Faith: That it is certain, that the Subſtance of the Bread and Wine is chang'd into the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt; although it ſtill appear to the Senſes to be Bread and Wine, and that it retains all the Qualities of them: Laſtly, that as the Qualities of the Bread and Wine are to be found, although the Subſtance does not appear; ſo it may be ſaid after the ſame manner, That the Qualities of the Body, are not to be found therein, although its Subſtance remains: And that therefore 'tis impertinent, to ask whether the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, in the Euchariſt, be dead or immortal, or whether it be endu'd with a Soul or not.

The laſt Queſtion is about the Senſe of theſe Words of the Prophet Joel, Chap. 2. verſ. 14. Who knoweth if God will turn and repent, and leave a Bleſſing behind them? He ſays that the turning of God conſiſts in the remiſſion of Sins, which he grants to thoſe who are converted; and that when it is ſaid, That he leaves a Bleſſing behind him, the meaning is, to thoſe who follow him.

St. BRUNO and GUIGUE,
Priors of the Carthuſian Monaſtery at Grenoble.

ST. BRUNO, Founder of the Carthuſian Order, was born in the City of Colen, and his Parents, tho' of mean Condition, took care that he ſhould apply himſelf to ſtudy; in which he ſoon made a Conſiderable Progreſs, and attained to much skill both in Divinity and Humane Learning: After having officiated for ſome time in Quality of Canon of St. Cunebert at Colen, he was invited to Rheims, made Canon and Scholaſtick Divine or Prebend of that Church, and nominated publick Profeſſor of Divinity. He had ſome Conteſts with Manaſſes his Metropolitan, whoſe Irregularities he could not endure, and was one of his Accuſers. Whereupon he was oblig'd to leave the City of Rheims, and took a reſolution to retire entirely from Worldly Buſineſs. He had for his Aſſiſtants in carrying on that Deſign, Lauduin, two Canons of St. Rufus, both nam'd Stephen, one of Burgos and the other of Die; Hugh whom they call'd their Chaplain, becauſe he was the only Prieſt among them, and two Lay-men nam'd Andrew and Guarin. Theſe ſeven Perſons, who were excited by an earneſt deſire to promote their own Salvation, ſeeking for a place convenient to lead a ſolitary Life, ſeparated from all manner of Commerce with other Men, went to Grenoble, and made Applica- St. Bruno.

tion to Hugh Biſhop of that City, a Prelate of great Sanctity, who receiv'd them with all the Marks of Charity, that they could wiſh for, and appointed the ſolitude of La Chartreuſe for their Habitation, where they ſettled, A. D. 1086. St. Bruno, who was the moſt able Divine among them, was choſen their firſt Prior; but he was ſent for to Italy, in 1090. by Pope Urban II. and retir'd with his Permiſſion to a ſolitude of Calabria, call'd La Torre, where he died October 6. 1101. Lauduin ſucceeded him in the Priory of La Grand Chartreuſe, and one Peter ſupplied his Place; after whom John was promoted to that Dignity, whoſe ſucceſſor was Guigue de Caſtre a Native of Valence in Dauphine the fifth Prior of that famous Monaſtery, who committed the Statues of the Order to Writing, and govern'd it during 27 Years, that is to ſay, from A. D. 1110 to 1137.

The Works of Bruno Biſhop of Segni, are commonly attributed to this St. Bruno, and among thoſe that bear his Name, printed at Colen in 1611. and publiſh'd by Theodore de Camp a Carthuſian Monk of that City; there are only two Letters that really belong to St. Bruno, which were written concerning his ſolitude in Calabria; one of them being directed to Radulphe le Verd, Provoſt of the Church of Rheims, whom he exhorts to retire from the World, and the other to his Monks of La Chartreuſe.

Guigue Prior of La Grande Chartreuſe.

GUIGUE in like manner compos'd divers Works, beſides the Statutes of his Order, lately printed in the firſt Tome of the Annals of the Carthuſian Monks, viz. the Life of St. Hugh Biſhop of Grenoble, referr'd to by Surius in April 1. Certain Meditations, or rather Moral Notions, printed in the Bibliotheca Patrum: A Treatiſe of the Contemplative Life, or the Ladder of the Cloiſter; or of the four Exerciſes of the Monaſtick Cell, which are annexed to St. Bernard's Works: A Treatiſe of Truth and Peace, a Manuſcript Copy of which is kept in the Library of the Carthuſians at Colen; And divers Letters, four of which are ſtill extant, and were ſet forth by Father Mabillon, in the ſecond Tome of St. Bernard's Works.

The Firſt is directed to Haimeric Chancellor of the Church of Rome; in which he inveighs againſt the Pride and Luxury of the Clergy-men of his time, eſpecially thoſe of the Church of Rome; and aſſerts, that recourſe ought not to be had to Arms or to the Secular Power, to maintain the Intereſt of the Church, or to augment its Grandeur.

In the Second, written to Hugh Prior of the Knights Templars, he declares, That he does not exhort him to make War with the viſible Enemies of the Church, but to oppoſe its inviſible Enemies, and that he would adviſe him to ſubdue Vice, rather than to attack the Infidels.

In the Third, he comforts Pope Innocent II. and exhorts him, not to be ſurpriz'd at the Efforts made againſt him by the Schiſmaticks; avouching at the ſame time, that there can be but one Pope, and that the whole World ought, in a manner, to be look'd upon as his Dioceſs.

In the laſt, he writes to the Monks of the Carthuſian Convent at Durbon near Marſeilles, That he had caus'd a Collection to be made of St. Jerom's Letters, and had corrected a great number of Faults which had crept into them; declaring alſo, That he retrench'd from that Collection thoſe Letters, which the meanneſs of the Style, or the difference of the Conceptions, made it appear to be unworthy of that great Man. He likewiſe makes a Catalogue of the latter, and paſſes a very judicious Cenſure upon them; which ſhews that Solitude and the practice of Piety, do not hinder a Man from applying himſelf to Study, and that the Art of Critique is not incompatible, with Morality and Spiritual Exerciſes.

St. NORBERT.

St. Norbert.

ST. NORBERT, a Native of Santen, a Village of the Country of Cleves; the Son of Herbert and Hatwiga, was educated in the Palace of Frederick Arch-biſhop of Colen, and afterwards brought to the Court of the Emperor Henry V. He was admitted among the Clergy, and receiv'd the Orders of a Deacon and Prieſt on the ſame day. He was made a Canon in his native Country, and enjoy'd divers other Spiritual Livings: But being afterwards tranſported with an extraordinary Zeal, he addicted himſelf to Preaching, with the Permiſſion of Pope Gelaſius II. and having quitted his Benefices, and diſtributed his whole Eſtate to the Poor, he embrac'd a more regular Life. He converted by his Preaching, many Hereticks and a great number of Sinners. Upon his arrival at Laon, being entreated by Bartholomew Biſhop of that City, not to leave his Dioceſs, he was prevail'd upon, by the requeſt of that Prelate, and choſe for the place of his abode, a diſmal ſolitude call'd Premontre, where he retir'd A. D. 1120. and there founded the Order of Regular Canons which bears that Name, and which was confirm'd five Years after, by Pope Honorius II. in 1126. Some time after, St. Norbert was ſent for to Antwerp to confute Tanchelin or Tanchelm, accus'd of Hereſie, and was conſtrain'd the next Year to accept of the Arch-biſhoprick of Magdeburg. He aſſiſted in the Council held at Rheims, A. D. 1131. in favour of Innocent II. took a Journey to Rome, when that Pope was re-eſtabliſhed by the Emperor Lotharius, and died in 1134.

There

There is only extant a ſmall moral Diſcourſe written by him in form of an Exhortation, and directed to the Monks of his Order.

STEPHEN HARDING Abbot of Ciſteaux.

ROBERT, Abbot of Moleſme, who firſt founded the Monaſtery of Ciſteaux, A.D. 1098. with 21 Monks of his Abbey, whom he brought into that Solitude, had not long the Government of it; for the next Year, he was oblig'd by the Pope's ſpecial Order, to return to his own Monaſtery. Alberic, who ſucceeded him, and govern'd Ciſteaux during nine Years and a half, gave no other Rule to his Monks but his Example. Afterwards STEPHEN HARDING deſcended of a noble Family in England, one of the 21 Monks who came from Moleſme with Robert, being choſe Abbot of Ciſteaux, apply'd himſelf to the compleating of that Order, and may juſtly be reputed the Founder of it: For he was the firſt that held general Chapters of the Convents of the Ciſtercian Monks and made a kind of Rule, which was common to all thoſe Monaſteries. He call'd it the Charter of Charity, and publiſh'd it in 1119. It was approv'd by Pope Calixtus II. It is divided into Thirty Chapters, which contain the particular Rules to be obſerv'd by thoſe Monks, and is compriz'd in the Monologia Ordinis Ciſtercienſis, printed at Antwerp in 1635. and in the Annals of the ſame Order, printed at Lyons in 1642. There are alſo extant in the Bibliotheca Ciſtercienſis, a Treatiſe call'd, The ſmall beginning of the Ciſtercian Order: A Sermon on the Death of Alberic: And a Diſcourſe made to St. Bernard, when he receiv'd the Monaſtick Habit, which bear the name of that Abbot of Ciſteaux.

Robert Abbot of Moleſme.

Stephen Harding Abbot of Ciſteaux.

BRUNO Biſhop of Segni.

BRUNO of Aſti, Canon of the Cathedral Church of that City, and afterwards of that of Sienna, went to Rome in the time of Pope Gregory VII. in whoſe preſence he diſputed againſt Berengarius, and by way of recompence, was made Biſhop of Segni: He retir'd to Mount Caſſin under Paſchal II. who was offended at his retreat, and drew him out of that Monaſtery, to ſend him in Quality of his Legate into France and Sicily. He govern'd the Abbey of Mount Caſſin for ſome time, but afterwards return'd to his Biſhoprick, and died there A. D. 1123.

Bruno Biſhop of Segni.

The Works of this Author were publiſh'd by Maurus Marcheſius, a Monk of Mount Caſſin, who caus'd them to be printed in two Tomes at Venice in 1651.

The Firſt contains his Commentaries on the Pentateuch, on the Books of Job, Pſalms and Canticles, and on the Revelation of St. John; in which he adheres more to the Moral, than to the other Senſes of the Text.

In the Second, are compris'd Forty five Sermons on the Goſpels of the whole Year, the greateſt part of which were printed under the Name of Euſebius of Emiſa and St. Eucherius: A Treatiſe on the Song of Zachariah: Another of the Incarnation and Burial of Jeſus Chriſt, in which he enquires how long our Saviour continued in the Sepulchre: A Tract to prove the uſe of Unleaven'd Bread againſt the Greeks: An Explication of certain Ceremonies of the Church: The Life of Pope Leo IX. A Treatiſe about the Corruption of the Age, proceeding (as he ſays) from Simoniacal Practices; in which he diſcourſes of the Invalidity of Ordinations made by Simoniſts, and of thoſe of Perſons guilty of that Crime: The Life of St. Peter of Anagnia: Two Letters, viz. One directed to the Biſhop of Porto, and the Other to Pope Paſchal: Six Books of Sentences or Moral Diſcourſes on divers Subjects, which ſome have attributed to St. Bruno Founder of the Carthuſian Order, and which Marcheſius reſtor'd to Bruno of Segni upon the Credit of Petrus Diaconus, by reaſon of the conformity of the Style, and in regard that the Author of theſe Diſcourſes makes it appear, that he obſerv'd St. Benedict's Rule, and that he wrote on the Apocalypſe.

To theſe Works are annexed a Commentary on the Book of Pſalms, by ODO a Benedictin Monk of Aſti, dedicated to Bruno of Segni.

Odo a Benedictin Monk of Aſti.

The Treatiſe of the Sacraments or Rights of the Church, by Bruno Biſhop of Segni, were publiſhed by Father Luke Dachery, in the Twelfth Tome of the Spicilegium, as a new Piece, although it was printed in the Venice Edition.

MAR-

MARBODUS Bishop of Rennes.

Marbodus Bishop of Rennes.

MARBODUS, flouriſh'd at Angers in the end of the preceding Century in quality of Canon, Arch-deacon and principal Maſter of the Schools of that Church. Afterwards he was nominated for the Biſhoprick of Rennes by Pope Urban II. was ordain'd in the Council of Tours, A.D. 1096. and govern'd that Church during twenty eight Years. When he perceiv'd himſelf to draw near his end, he left his Biſhoprick, and retir'd to the Monaſtery of St. Aubin at Angers, where he aſſum'd the Habit of St. Benedict, and d.ed in the beginning of the Month of September, A.D. 1123. Sigebert aſſures us that he wrote a Commentary on the Book of Canticles, but it is no longer extant.

Marbodus compos'd divers Poetical Works Printed at Rennes, in 1524. in which Edition are to be found certain Hymns on Mary Magdalen: Three Prayers to God: One to the Virgin Mary: Several Epigrams and Letters in Verſe: Divers moral Poems: A Piece on the caſting away of Jonas: Another on the Martyrdom of the Maccabees: The Paſſions of divers Martyrs in Verſe: The Life of St. Maurillus of Angers in Verſe: Sixty Poetical Pieces on the precious Stones, and on other Subjects: Ten other Poetical Pieces on the following Subjects, viz. on the manner of Writing; on Time; on Eternity; againſt lewd Women; in commendation of vertuous Women; on Old Age; againſt thoſe who imagine that the Stars have any influence over the Bodies of Men; againſt Voluptuouſneſs; on true Friendſhip, and on the Advantages of Death and of the Reſurrection.

Theſe Poems are follow'd by ſix Letters, in the Firſt of which directed to Renaud Biſhop of Angers, Marbodus complains, That that Prelate after having perſecuted and traduc'd him, publickly condemn'd him, for writing to the Pope, that the diſturbances raiſed by the Biſhop of Angers hinder'd him from going to Rome. He upbraids him with the Services he did him, in cauſing him to be choſen Biſhop, and the aſſiſtance he gave him in expediting his Journy to Rome, to get his Election confirmed; that in ſtead of a grateful acknowledgment of that Kindneſs, he was no ſooner return'd from Rome, but he depriv'd him of thoſe Favours and Privileges, which were granted to him by his Predeceſſors, without ſo much as allowing him ſix Months Reſpit, to make an honourable retreat; and, that after having made complaint of his being treated ſo unworthily, the Biſhop of Angers cited him to Rome, knowing that he was not in a condition to go thither; obtain'd power to condemn him, and actually pronounc'd Sentence againſt him under colour, that he had receiv'd Induction into two Churches. After having thus ſmartly reprehended Renaud, he adviſes him to moderate his Anger; not to be too far tranſported with the heat of his Youth; to have a greater reſpect for his Elders; and to take care leſt his irregular Conduct ſhould verifie the report given out by ſome Perſons, viz. that Proſperity and the high Station to which he aſpir'd, had ſufficiently diſcover'd the corruption of his Manners. Marbodus adds, that he does not give him this Admonition to the end that he might be more favourable to him, but leſt he ſhould abuſe his Authority in treating others after the ſame manner.

The ſecond Letter is directed to Robert d' Arbriſelles, whom he reproves, as Geffrey of Vendome had done, for keeping too familiar a correſpondence with Women, and for ſuffering Men and Women to cohabit together. He repreſents to him the danger of that intimate Converſe, and the Scandal that it might occaſion. He likewiſe blames him for wearing a torn Garment, as not being ſuitable to the Profeſſion of a Regular Canon, which he embrac'd at firſt, or to the Sacerdotal Dignity, to which he was afterwards advanced. He accuſes him of affecting ſingularity in that particular, and adviſes him to reſume the Habit of a Regular Canon, and to return to his former courſe of Life. But he is much more offended at him for taking upon him to reprove the Vices of abſent Clergy-men in his Sermons, and for inveighing againſt certain Orders and Perſons of great Eminency: He affirms, that that ſerves only to bring Superiors into contempt, to ſubvert the order of the Church, and even to induce many to believe, that his deſign in declaiming againſt others, was only to gain popular Applauſe. He declares at the ſame time, that altho he had a better Opinion of him, yet it cannot be deny'd that his Preaching has the ſame effect, and that many of his Hearers abandon their Curates and refuſe to receive the Sacraments from them, or to pay them Tithes; whereas they run after him inceſſantly, being excited by Curioſity and an inclination to Novelty rather than a true principle of Piety; ſince it does not appear, that there is any manner of reformation in their Lives and Converſations: Laſtly, he rebukes him, for giving the Monaſtick Habit, to all thoſe who being mov'd by his Sermons, were deſirous to receive it, without making any trial of their integrity and conſtancy, as alſo in regard that he took no care, that they ſhould be thoroughly converted, provided the number of his Followers were encreas'd: That after they had once given in their Names, he took no farther cognizance of their Affairs, but left them at liberty to act as they thought fit: That ſome of them met together, and ran about the Towns and Countries, cloathed with Habits of ſeveral Colours, wearing long Beards, and walking bare-footed: And that when they were ask'd who they were, they made Anſwer,

That

That they belong'd to their Maſter. Our Author is unwilling, to impute to him the Extravagances committed by thoſe People, but obſerves it to be a matter of dangerous Conſequence, that they ſhould thus make uſe of his Authority for a cloke to their Folly, and call themſelves his Diſciples.

As for the Nuns which Robert d' Arbriſelles in like manner caus'd to be ſhut up in Cells; without any Probation, he ſays, that ſome of them broke thro' the Paſſages to make their Eſcape, and that others were brought to Bed in their Appartments, which would not have happen'd (continues he) if the prudence of the Governor, had made a trial of their Strength. He concludes with remonſtrating to him, that he was cenſur'd for quitting the Canonical Life which he had embrac'd, and for leaving the Monaſtery, where he had made a Vow of Conſtancy, and where he was conſtituted Superiour of his Colegues, to lead an extraordinary kind of Life, and to take upon him the Government of a Nunnery. Therefore Marbodus demands of him a ſatisfactory Anſwer, as to thoſe particular Articles, othe wiſe he declares that he ſhould have very good reaſon to doubt of his Salvation. 'Tis probable, that Robert d' Arbriſelles clear'd himſelf from theſe Imputations that were laid upon him, even to our Author's ſatisfaction; but there is no likelihood, that this Letter was Forged, as Father Mabillon has aſſerted. In a certain Manuſcript of the Abbey of St. Victor, it is attributed to Hildebert Arch-biſhop of Tours, nevertheleſs the ſtyle comes nearer to Marbodus's manner of Expreſſion than to that of the former.

In the third Letter, he reproves a certain Hermit nam'd Ingilquier, and thoſe of his Congregation for their indiſcreet Zeal againſt unworthy Prieſts, with which they were tranſported too far; inſomuch that they not only refus'd to aſſiſt at their Obl tions, but alſo forbid the Laicks to receive the Sacraments from their Hands. He ſhews by many Paſſages of St. Auguſtin, that the Sacraments may be duly adminiſter'd by unworthy Prieſts, and that they ought not to be deſpis'd by reaſon of the unworthineſs of thoſe who adm niſter them. The Hermit having return'd for Anſwer, that he did by no means recede from the Doctrine of the Church relating to the validity of the Sacraments adminiſter'd by unworthy Prieſts, but that he was perſuaded that Hereticks ought to be ſhun'd, and that Prieſts guilty of Fornication ought to be depos'd; Marbodus replies in his fourth Letter, that he is of his Opinion, but that he conceives that it does not belong to every one to try or Condemn them, and that it ought only to be done according to the Rules of the Church. Therefore he adviſes thoſe Hermits, to reprehend ſuch Offenders with gentleneſs; to pray for them; and to accuſe them (if they ſhall think fit) before competent Judges who have a right to bring them to their Trial; to the end that they may be depos'd if they be convicted, or confeſs their Crime.

The Fifth is a requeſt that he makes to Vitalis, the Founder of a Nunnery to receive a certain poor Orphan, who altho' ſhe was well inſtructed in matters of Rel gion, yet could have no hopes of being admitted into the old Monaſteries, where, by an ill Cuſtom, that was then too common, Money was prefer'd before Learning and Piety.

The laſt Letter is directed to a Nun nam'd Agenorida, to whom he gives a great deal of wholſome Advice, for her inſtruction in the Chriſtian courſe of Life and religious Exerciſes.

Theſe are all the Works that are contain'd in the old Edition of Marbodus, wh ch is become very ſcarce. His Copies of Verſes are not very elegant, nor of a very Poetical ſtrain, but compriſe many judicious and ſolid Notions. His Letters are accurately written, and full of good Maxims and Paſſages of the Holy Scripture and the Fathers, admirably well apply'd. The Monks of St. Aubin at Angers, wrote a Circular Letter, to give notice of his Death, according to the Cuſtom of the Order of St. Benedict, in which they celebrate his Praiſe, and Ulger Biſhop of Angers likewiſe wrote a Copy of Verſes in his Commendation: Theſe two Monuments are prefix'd to Marbodus's Works.

ARNULPHUS Biſhop of Liſieux.

Arnulphus Biſhop of Liſieux.

ARNOUL or ARNULPHUS, Biſhop of Liſieux, Arch-deacon of Seez, was inſtall'd in the Biſhoprick of Liſieux, A. D. 1141. and in 1147. accompany'd Lewes ſirnam'd the Young King of France in his Expedition to the Holy Land. In 1160. he was ſent into England by Pope Alexander III. in quality of his Legate, and afterwards employ'd in the Negotiations between King Henry II. and Thomas Becket Arch-biſhop of Canterbury; but having too obſtinately taken part with the latter, he incurr'd the King's diſpleaſure, and was oblig'd to retire in 1180. to the Monaſtery of St. Victor near Paris, where he died Auguſt 11. A. D. 1182.

This Arnulphus made a Collection of his own Letters at the requeſt of Gilles Arch-biſhop of Roan, to whom he Dedicates them by his firſt Letter. Theſe are written in a fine Style, being full of ingenious Notions and moral Sentences, which render them both uſeful and delightful. There are many that contain only Compliments, or relate to certain private Concerns; but there are others about Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, comprehending divers Points of Diſcipline, particularly, thoſe directed to Pope Adrian IV. in the Firſt of which, this Biſhop recommends to him the doing Juſtice to a certain Perſon, who had recourſe to the See of Rome, to get ſatisfaction for the ill treatment he had receiv'd in his own Country, where he could not obtain any relief of his Dioceſan. Arnulphus obſerves in that Letter, that People began not to have the same Respect for the Holy See as formerly, and that those who appeal'd to it, were so far from getting their Grievances redress'd, that they were more injuriously treated than before, which befel him in whose favour he wrote, who had no sooner enter'd an Appeal, but he was put in Prison; neither could he procure his liberty, but by paying a Sum of Money to his Persecutor, and by submitting to the Bishop's Sentence. Therefore he exhorts the Pope to revenge the Indignity, by reason that if they were suffer'd thus to elude the Decisions of the Holy See, its Protection would become altogether unprofitable.

In another Letter directed to the same Pope, he entreats him to send back the Bishop of Baieux, whose presence was much wanted in his Dioceſs, where he had done a great deal of good.

He wrote again to that Pope, about the Contest that arose between the Abbot and the Monks of Jumieges. Those Monks had accus'd their Abbot of many Crimes, and more especially of Incontinency, and divers Witnesses had made Depositions against him, but they gave their Testimony about different matters of Fact, so that there was not any compleat positive Proof against him, because every Fact was prov'd only by one single Witness. Whereupon Arnulphus admitted him to clear himself by his own Oath, and by that of three Abbots and three Monks of known Probity. The Monks appeal'd from his Court to the See of Rome, and demanded Letters of Reference, which he calls Apostolos (this is the first time I met with this Term in that Signification.) He acquaints Pope Adrian, that he had granted their Request, and that in the mean while, he order'd both Parties to do nothing, that might tend to the prejudice of the Appeal.

He likewise wrote to the Abbot of St. Evrou, that he was oblig'd to discharge the Debts that were actually contracted by his Predecessors, and threatens to suspend him, unless he gives satisfaction to his Creditors before Whitsontide. He enjoins that Abbot by another Letter, under pain of Suspension, to re-admit a certain Monk, whom he had turn'd out of his Monastery, without hearing what he alledg'd in his own Defence.

In another Letter to William Bishop of Mans, he desires him to appoint another Place in stead of Poitiers, for the Trial of the Treasurer of Rouen; because he would be oblig'd to take a much longer Journey thither, than his Adversary, who was nearer that City.

Arnulphus being at variance with a certain Lord, who refus'd to acknowledg his Jurisdiction, it was order'd by the Legates of the See of Rome, That the said Lord should restore what he had taken from him; that he should cause satisfaction to be made by those of his Vassals, who were excommunicated; that he should make a due presentation of a Priest to govern that Church and People, under his Authority, as belonging to his Dioceſs. The Nobleman offer'd Arnulphus to present a Priest to him by the Hands of Hugh Arch-bishop of Rouen; but Arnulphus reply'd to that Arch-bishop, who made him the Proposal, That if matters were so order'd, it might be taken for granted, that the possession of that Place was not adjudg'd to him, but only resign'd by way of sequestration, which would be prejudicial to his Right, when the † Claim should come to be debated: Besides that 'twas not sufficient to present a Priest to him, but that 'twas requisite that every thing which was ordain'd, should be effectually put in Execution: Lastly, as for the rest, that if they were willing to come to such an Agreement, as would entirely put an end to the Difference, he would readily take such Measures, as should be judg'd most expedient; but that 'twas not reasonable, for him to supply his Adversary with Arms, who was preparing with all his might for the Encounter.

† Petitoire.

The Schism that happen'd in the Church of Rome after the Death of Pope Adrian IV. between Alexander III. and Octavian, gave occasion to Arnulphus to write many Letters; the First of which is directed to Alexander III. to congratulate his Election. He assures him in that Letter, That God, who never abandons his Church, altho' he suffers it to be sometimes Persecuted; would give him the Victory over his Enemies, and put him in the peaceable possession of the Holy See, as he had done Pope Innocent, altho' he had a more formidable and a more potent Antagonist than Octavian: He expresses the great Joy he had at his Promotion, and gives him to understand, that he had taken care to prepossess the King his Master (meaning Henry II. King of England) with respect to that Affair, and to make him sensible of the validity of his Election, and of the Deficiency of that of his Adversary; That upon his Testimony that Prince had declar'd for him, and had promis'd with a great deal of satisfaction, that he would not acknowledg any other Pope; That having afterwards receiv'd a Letter from the Emperor, who entreated him to defer the declaring in his favour, he had superseded the publishing of his Declaration; but that he still persisted in his former Resolution, and that whatever course the Emperor might take, he would not follow him, if he did not find it expedient.

Pope Alexander reply'd to Arnulphus, That he was very sensible of the Affection that he expres's'd towards him in his Letter; that he had caus'd it to be read publickly as a proof of the sincerity of his Intentions and of his Eloquence; that he was not ignorant by what means an end was put to the Schism which arose in the time of Pope Innocent; that he hop'd that thro' the divine Assistance, the Storm which at present disturb'd the tranquillity of the Church of Rome, would ere long be dispers'd; that he gave Thanks to God, that King Henry continu'd strenuously to maintain the Unity of the Church; that he entreated him to use his best Interests with his Majesty to hinder the frequent sollicitations of the Emperor from obliging him to alter his Mind; and that to that purpose he thought fit to nominate him his Nuncio in the Court

Court of that Prince, with Authority over the Biſhops of his Dominions. He acquaints him, That the Emperor Frederic never ceas'd, ſince his acceſſion to the Imperial Crown, to perſecute and oppreſs the Church of Rome; that in Adrian's Life-time he cauſed the Prelates, who were returning from Rome, to be taken Priſoners; that he miſus'd the Legates of the Holy See; that he ſeiz'd on the Revenues belonging to the Church of Rome; and that he us'd his utmoſt efforts to expel Adrian, and to cauſe Octavian to be made Pope in his ſtead: That what he was not able to put in execution, whilſt that Pope was yet living, he endeavour'd to compaſs, after his death, by favouring the intruſion of that Man, who attempted to get poſſeſſion of the Holy See, and whoſe uſurpation was abetted only by three Prelates, to the prejudice of the Canonical Election of himſelf, which was carry'd on by the others in due Form: That to maintain it, he call'd an Aſſembly of the Prelates at Pavia, and that Octavian reſign'd the Marks of the Papal Dignity in his Preſence: That the Emperor afterwards reſtor'd 'em to him, inveſted him with the Pontifical Habits and Ornaments, particularly with the Ring and Croſier-ſtaff, and by force conſtrain'd the Biſhops of that Council to own him as Pope. Laſtly, he further informs Arnulphus, that he had actually excommunicated Frederic and his Adherents.

Arnulphus having receiv'd this Letter, wrote one to the Arch-biſhops and Biſhops of England, to make 'em ſenſible of the Juſtice of Alexander's Cauſe. He ſays, That if the Perſons of the two Competitours be compar'd, it will appear, that Alexander is endu'd with all the accompliſhments of Learning and Vertue, that can be wiſh'd for in a Prelate; whereas his Adverſary has no other perſonal Merits to recommend him but his Quality; and if the two Elections be duely examin'd, one may be ſoon convinc'd, that that of Alexander, is regular, ſolemn and reaſonable, and that that of the other, on the contrary, is raſh and altogether unreaſonable. "For can it be affirm'd (ſays he) that an Election manag'd by a ſingle Biſhop and two Car- "dinals, ought to be ſet up in oppoſition to the Authority of the whole Church? Or that a "precarious Conſecration made by a few private Perſons, ought to be preferr'd to that which "was perform'd with the requiſite Solemnities, and with the general approbation of all the "People? Can Octavian's Proceedings be juſtify'd, who aſſum'd the Pontifical Habits, who "by an unheard of raſhneſs plac'd himſelf in St. Peter's Chair, and ſeiz'd on the Palace, "whilſt Alexander choſen with an unanimous Conſent refus'd, thro' Humility and Modeſty, "to accept of that Dignity? Or can the violence that Octavian afterwards offer'd, in be- "ſieging Alexander and his Electors with armed Men give him any manner of Right or "Title? Or could he under that pretence averr, that he was in poſſeſſion of the Holy See "nine Days before Alexander? Indeed the latter was choſen by the Senate, and conducted "to the Ward-robe, where the Pontifical Habits were kept: He was alſo ordain'd by the "Biſhop of Oſtia, to whom the Right of conſecrating the Popes legally belongs; he was ac- "knowledg'd by the Legates, who reſided in different Countries; and the whole Church would "have continu'd in Peace; if his Adverſary had not fled for refuge to the Emperor, whom he "knew to be ready to afford him his Aſſiſtance. He adds, That that Prince was glad to meet with ſo fair an opportunity, which he ſought for after the example of his Predeceſſours, who had long ago form'd a Deſign to bring the Church of Rome under ſubjection to their Dominion, and upon that account favour'd the Schiſmaticks, and excited Diviſions in that City: That Octavian had abſolutely made him the Maſter of his Fortune; that he laid the Marks of the Pontifical Dignity at his Feet; and that he afterwards receiv'd from him the Inveſtiture of the Church of Rome, by the Ring and Staff, cauſing the Imperial ſecular Power to triumph over the Prieſthood: That the Emperor call'd a Council to confirm that Choice, and compell'd the Biſhops by force to ſign a Writing, by which they own'd Octavian as lawful Pope: That that Writing was full of manifeſt Untruths, and that the Biſhops could not by their definitive Sentence render an Election valid, that was null in its Original. Beſides that the Gallican Church which always had the good fortune to maintain Juſtice and Truth, and to afford a Sanctuary to the Popes when perſecuted by the German Princes, after having examin'd the Elections of Alexander and Octavian in a Council call'd by the King's Order, for that purpoſe, had determin'd in favour of the former; but that the King had prudently defer'd the Publication of that Reſolution, by reaſon of the union between him and the King of England, to the end that they might act jointly together: That the latter had in like manner ſufficiently declar'd on Alexander's behalf, in regard that he receiv'd his Letters, and more eſpecially proteſted, that he would not own any other Pope, having alſo rejected thoſe of Octavian. In the mean while, he admoniſh'd them to take care that Injuſtice might not prevail over the Truth, through the ſiniſter practices of ſome Engliſh Noble-men, who gave it out, that they were related to Octavian, and exhorted them, when ever they met together, ſtrenuouſly to maintain the Truth without fear of offending thoſe Opponents.

In another Letter written to the Cardinals, he gives a particular account of divers remarkable Circumſtances of the Elections of Alexander and Octavian, viz. That the Biſhop of Fraſcati, who was the firſt of the three Electors of the latter, being a voluptuous Man, took great delight in Feaſting, and ſoon retir'd from the Conclave becauſe Dinner-time drew near: That one of the two others took it ill, that he was deny'd the Office of Chancellor, and that the third was Octavian's Kinſman: That as ſoon as thoſe three had given their Votes for him, he himſelf took the Cope, and threw it over his Shoulders with ſo great Precipitation, that that part which ought to lie on the Neck, fell to the Ground; that he got upon the Papal Throne in that Equipage; and that having caus'd the Doors of the Church to be ſet open, it was immediately fill'd with his Guards, who conducted him to the Palace: That the King of France call'd an Aſſembly of the Eſtates of the Realm, as well of the Clergy as of the Nobility, to determine which of the two Elections ought to be ratify'd: That ſome were of Opinion, that nothing ſhould be done in a hurry about an Affair of that importance, and that it ought to be deferr'd for ſome time longer, becauſe it was dangerous to excite a miſ-underſtanding between the King and the Emperor upon that account: That they alſo added, that the Church of Rome was always burdenſome to Princes; that 'twas requiſite to ſhake off the Yoke, ſince ſo fair an Occaſion offer'd it ſelf to that purpoſe; that the Death of the two Competitors would put an end to the Conteſt; and that the Government of the Biſhops might be ſufficient, till God ſhould more clearly make known his Will: Laſtly, that the Reſpect due to the Emperor's Ambaſſadors, who were preſent, and to the King of England, whoſe Sentiments the King of France declar'd himſelf ready to follow, caus'd thoſe Meaſures to be taken in the Aſſembly. Arnulphus, in the end of this Letter, adviſes the Cardinals not to exaſperate the King of England by their Threats, but to pacifie him, ſince the Obedience of the Kingdoms of England, France, Spain, Ireland and Norway depended on his Declaration.

Although Arnulphus had done ſuch notable Services to Alexander III. nevertheleſs that Pope, upon the Accuſations brought againſt him by Sylveſter, Treaſurer of his Church, and by John, Nephew to the Biſhop of Seez, did not forbear to nominate the Biſhops of Mans and Avranches Commiſſioners, to take cognizance of that Cauſe. Arnulphus appear'd before them, and William Biſhop of Paris and Cardinal, was preſent at the Tryal. The Treaſurer own'd before the Judges, the Falſhood of the Complaints that he had made againſt his Dioceſan, and promis'd that he would not renew them for the future. John ſtill maintain'd what he had averr'd, but the Sentence not being favourable to him, he appeal'd from that Court to the See of Rome, although the Pope gave Commiſſion to the two Biſhops to paſs Judgment without any Appeal. However Arnulphus, who upon that account might have exempted himſelf from going to Rome, and might have refus'd to ſuffer his Cauſe to be tried again there; after having inform'd the Pope of the manner of the Proceedings, aſſur'd his Holineſs, that he would repair to Rome, as ſoon as it was poſſible, and entreated him to detain John till he arriv'd, to ſhew how that Perſon and the Biſhop of Seez his Uncle, have committed a Treſpaſs againſt the Church and the Holy See.

He explains this in the following Letter directed to Alexander. One of his Relations was ſometime Biſhop of Seez, who ſubſtituted Regular Canons in that Church in the room of Secular. This Reformation was approv'd by the Popes Honorius II. Eugenius III. and Adrian III. and by Henry II. King of England, who made them a Donation. Theſe Canons were to have all their Goods in Common, according to their Original Inſtitution, and the Biſhops his Succeſſors were likewiſe oblig'd, before they were inſtall'd, to maintain that Settlement. The Biſhop then incumbent, deſign'd to ruine it, or at leaſt to obtain a Licenſe of the Pope, to confer the Arch-deaconries on Lay-men, that he might have wherewithal to beſtow on his Nephews and Relations. Arnulphus ſent word to the Pope, That that Biſhop palliated his Carnal Affections with the pretence of Piety; giving it out, That there was not any Perſon in that Dioceſs, capable of performing thoſe Functions; as if the Simplicity of the Canons were not to be preferr'd to the worldly Wiſdom of others; or in caſe there were none to be found at Seez, worthy of poſſeſſing thoſe Benefices, ſome might not be taken out of the Church of St. Victor and St. Rufus. He adds, that having been Arch-deacon of Seez, and educated in that Church, he thought himſelf oblig'd to maintain its Rights and Privileges, and that for that reaſon, he judg'd it expedient to certifie his Holineſs thereof by a Letter.

Notwithſtanding this Information, the Pope granted to the Biſhop of Seez a Licenſe to Secularize his Arch-deaconry; but Arnulphus wrote a very ſmart Letter to him on that Subject, in which he remonſtrates, That he had no Authority thus to aboliſh an Inſtitution made by his Predeceſſors, under colour that they could not impoſe Laws on their Succeſſors: He maintains, That that Maxim is falſe, and that it tends to the ruin of all the Eſtabliſhments of the Saints: That the Privileges of the Popes of Rome, are as it were Teſtaments, which are not made void, but rather confirm'd by the death of the Teſtators: That 'tis true indeed, that the Errors of Predeceſſors may be corrected by their Succeſſors, and that the latter may make ſome alteration for the better in the Sanctions of the others, when 'tis requiſite for the publick Advantage, and when it may be done without any detriment to Religion: That for that very reaſon, Secular Canons may be chang'd into Regular, becauſe the Order of the latter is more perfect; but a more ſtrict Inſtitution cannot be chang'd into one leſs perfect; by which means Remiſsneſs in Diſcipline would be authoriz'd: And laſtly, that there are ſome Perſons ſo prodigal of Diſpenſations, that they retain nothing as an unalterable Law, and Sacrifice every thing to the Intereſts and inordinate Paſſions of private Men. He reproves the Pope for not ſhewing ſufficient Conſtancy in maintaining the Rights of the Church; and gives him to underſtand, that he had ſcandaliz'd it by revoking revoking the Sentence of Excommunication, denounc'd by his Predeceſſors againſt Laicks who ſhall attempt to get themſelves admitted into the Chapter of Seez; by adjudging to a Layman all the Revenues of the Arch-deaconry that the Regular Canons enjoy'd in Common, and part of which they diſtributed to the Poor; and by permitting a Man, adorn'd with gorgeous Apparel to take place amongſt the Canons cloath'd in Sack-cloth. He adds, That 'tis further to be fear'd, leſt the Arch-deaconry ſhould be left vacant, by reaſon that it is already appointed for another young Nephew, when he ſhall be of Age: That in the mean while, the Biſhop has turn'd out the Prior of the Canons, and ſubſtituted a Perſon of no Repute in his Place, to the end that he might make himſelf Maſter of the Church-Revenues. Therefore he exhorts the Pope to revoke what was extorted from him by ſurprize, in order to re-eſtabliſh the Rule in that Chapter, and to put an end to the Complaints and Murmurings occaſion'd by that Innovation.

The four following Letters are directed to the ſame Pope, and contain an account of particular Affairs. In the laſt he acquaints him, That the King of England was diſſatisfied with his Holineſs, becauſe he deny'd him thoſe Favours he ſu'd for at Rome.

He congratulates in another, Gilbert Biſhop of London, in regard that the Pope had ordain'd, that his Cauſe ſhould be decided without an Appeal, and obſerves that Appeals to Rome often put falſe Accuſers in a Capacity to oppreſs innocent Perſons, and give them an opportunity to avoid the Puniſhment due to their Crimes,

In another Letter, he reproves a certain Abbot for leaving his Monaſtery to ſollicit Lawſuits at Court, and enjoyns him to return thither.

In a Letter that he wrote to Henry Cardinal Biſhop of Piſa, ſending him the Works of Ennodius; he paſſes a very diſadvantageous Judgment on that Author.

In his Letter to the Biſhop of Angouleſme, he determines that the Engagements that a certain Child was under, whom his Uncle had bound to a Clerk, upon Payment of a Sum of Money, ought not to be ratify'd, and that that Biſhop cannot ſuffer the ſaid Child to be detain'd by him.

In a Letter written to Arnold Abbot of Bonneval, he treats of the Uſefulneſs of the Sacrifice of the Maſs. " Nothing (ſays he) can be offer'd up more precious than JESUS " CHRIST; nothing more efficacious than this Sacrifice; nothing more advantageous " both to him who offers it, and to him for whom 'tis offer'd, if the unworthineſs of the " Perſons doth not render it unprofitable: 'Tis requiſite that he who offers it have pure Hands, " and that he, for whom it is offer'd, ſhould know the Value of it by Faith; that he ſhould " earneſtly deſire it; and that he ſhould embrace it with a perfect Charity. Oh, how great " is this Benefit, which is ſufficient for the Perſon who receives it, and for him that admini- " ſters it! For how extenſive ſoever the Prieſt's Charity may be towards certain Perſons, " this Sacrifice remains altogether entire for every one in particular. It is communicated " to many, ſo as its Efficacy is not diminiſh'd, with reſpect to every Individual; and altho' " different Perſons partake of it, yet it does not ſuffer any Diviſion. Quoſcunque enim Sacerdos effuſa charitatis latitudine complectatur, totum ſimul omnium, totum uniuſcujuſque eſt Sigillatim, nec integritatem dividit communicatio plurium, nec ſoliditatem minuit participatio diverſorum.

He has alſo inſerted amongſt his Letters, a Diſcourſe that he made in the Council of Tours, A. D. 1163. in the preſence, and by the Order of Pope Alexander III. In the beginning of it he ſays, that there are three Qualities requiſite in a Preacher, viz. Sanctity of Life, to procure reſpect for what he delivers; a perfect Knowledge, to be capable of teaching the neceſſary Truths; and Eloquence to cauſe them to be approv'd, to the end that his Sermons may be Holy, Learned and Sublime. In the Body of this Sermon, he treats of the Unity and Liberty of the Church, ſhewing that thoſe two Qualities are neceſſary therein, and that the Miniſters ought to uſe their utmoſt endeavours to maintain them, more eſpecially at a time when both are attack'd; that is to ſay, the former by the Ambition of Schiſmaticks, and the other by the Oppreſſion of Tyrants: That nevertheleſs, 'tis impoſſible that either ſhould compaſs their Deſign: For although the former ſeparate themſelves from the Communion of the Church, yet it is not divided by that means, but the Chaff is only ſeparated from the Wheat; and although the latter ſeizes on the Temporal Revenues of the Church, nevertheleſs it does not ceaſe to be free, and to exerciſe its Power with Spiritual Authority. However, that the Biſhops ought to make uſe of all poſſible means to re-unite the former to the Communion of the Church, and to oblige the others to quit their unjuſt Claim to the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues. This is the Subject of a long and very pathetical Exhortation made by him to the Biſhops of the Council; and in the ſequel of the ſame Diſcourſe, he wiſhes that the Emperor would humble himſelf under the Almighty Hand of God; that he would acknowledge that the Dominion of the Church is above his, and that he would ſubmit to the See of Rome, which conferr'd the Empire on his Predeceſſors. He obſerves that Biſhops may poſſeſs large Revenues, provided they do not take themſelves to be the Proprietors, but only the Diſpenſers of them, and are perſuaded that the Patrimony of JESUS CHRIST is the Inheritance of the Poor, which ought to be diſtributed to them, and that they who put it to another uſe are to be look'd upon as Robbers.

This Diſcourſe is follow'd by another, pronounc'd in a Synod held for the Ordination of a Biſhop. He begins with the Commendation of the Church, and afterwards rejects the Perſon of Girard, who was propos'd, alledging, That although there was a form of Election in his favour, nevertheleſs he ought not to be ordain'd, by reaſon that it is not to be endur'd that the Liberty of Elections, which was introduc'd for the Benefit of the Churches, ſhould be made prejudicial to them, and therefore that the Election of Girard was null as having been carry'd on only by ſome few Perſons devoted to his Intereſt.

He acquaints that Pope in another Letter, That he had paſs'd Sentence in favour of Hugh Abbot of Senlis, in a Cauſe that was depending between that Abbot and Garnier a Prieſt, concerning the Church of Marine, for the Tryal of which he was nominated a Commiſſioner with Henry Biſhop of Senlis. He likewiſe gave him notice in the following Letter, that the King of England had favourably receiv'd his Letters and Nuncio's, and that he had re-inſtated the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury; but he complains that the Nuncio's did not promote the making of Peace, and entreats the Pope to do it.

In another Letter, he informs the ſame Pope, That he had put an end to the Conteſt between the Abbot of La Couture and Hermier the Prieſt, about the Church of Breule.

In one of the Letters directed to the Pope's Legates, Albert and Theodin, he determines, That it is not expedient to beſtow Altars, that is to ſay, Benefices on the Sons of Prieſts, leſt it ſhould occaſion diſorders.

Afterwards he writes to Pope Alexander againſt thoſe Monks, who refuſe to obey their Biſhop, and claim a right to retain Cures and Tithes.

He complains in particular of the Abbot of St. Evrou, who preſum'd to celebrate Divine Service; notwithſtanding the Sentence of Suſpenſion he had pronounc'd againſt him.

The Poems of this Author are not very conſiderable as to the Subjects, but they are exact in reference to the Rules of Poetry, and the Verſes are very fine. The firſt is on the Nativity of Jeſus Chriſt, the ſecond is an Encomium of the Biſhop of Windſor; and the reſt on the alteration of the Seaſons, and on ſome other profane Subjects. There are alſo two Epitaphs of Queen Mathilda, one of Algarus Biſhop of Coutances, and another of Hugh Arch-biſhop of Roan.

Father Dachery has publiſh'd in the ſecond Tome of his Spicilegium, an excellent Diſcourſe dedicated to Geffrey Biſhop of Chartres, and compos'd by Arnulphus, when as yet Arch-deacon of Seez, againſt Peter de Leon the Antipope, and Gerard Biſhop of Angouleſme his Legat. It is written with a great deal of earneſtneſs and energy, ſo that the Author gives us a very lively deſcription of the Irregularities and Vices of that Antipope and of his Legate; maintains the Election and Proceedings of Innocent II. and makes it appear that the latter is the true Pope.

Father Dachery has likewiſe ſet forth in the end of the Thirteenth Tome of the Spicilegium, a Sermon upon the Annunciation of the Virgin Mary, and five Letters by the ſame Author.

The other Works of Arnulphus, Biſhop of Liſieux, were printed at Paris, from a Manuſcript of Adrian Turnebus's Library, A. D. 1585. and afterwards in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

PETER de CELLES Biſhop of Chartres.

Peter de Celles Biſhop of Chartres.

PETER, ſirnam'd de Celles, from the Name of his firſt Abbey, commonly call'd Monſtier-la-Celle, in the Suburbs of the City of Troyes, was deſcended of an honourable Family of Champagne. He apply'd himſelf to Study at Paris, and was apparently a Novice in the Monaſtery of St. Martin des Champs. He was choſen Abbot of Celles, A. D. 1150. tranſlated from thence to the Abbey of St. Remy at Rheims in 1162. and at laſt made Biſhop of Chartres in 1182. in the place of John of Salisbury. After having govern'd that Church during five Years, he died Feb. 17. 1187.

The following Works of this Author, were collected and publiſh'd by Father Ambroſius Januarius, of the Congregation of St. Maur, and printed by Lewis Billaine in 1671. But the firſt of his Works is a Courſe of Sermons on all the Feſtivals of the Year, which were never as yet printed. However, notwithſtanding the Reputation they might have in his time, Father Januarius obſerves, that they are weak, and that Peter de Celles is not very ſollicitous to prove a Truth thoroughly, but paſſes lightly over from one Subject to another; although his Writings are full of pious Conceptions, Flowers of Scripture and very uſeful Inſtructions. He might alſo take notice, that they are full of Puns, affected Antitheſes, ſorry Alluſions, mean Deſcriptions and Notions, which have not all the Gravity that is requiſite in Diſcourſes of that Nature. In his Eighth Sermon on the Lord's Supper, we find the Term of Tranſubſtantiation, which is alſo in Stephen Biſhop of Autun, who liv'd in the ſame Century: And indeed, thoſe two Authors are the firſt that made uſe of it. The three Books of Bread, dedicated to John of Salisbury, contain a great number of myſtical Reflections ctions on all the ſorts of Bread mention'd in the Holy Scripture. The Myſtical and Moral Expoſition of the Tabernacle is a Work almoſt of the ſame Nature. The Treatiſe of Conſcience, dedicated to Aliber the Monk, relates altogether to Piety, and that of the Diſcipline of the Cloiſter, comprehends many Moral Inſtructions in the Exerciſes of the Monaſtick Life, which he follow'd above Thirty Years. This Piece was ſet forth by Father Dachery, in the third Tome of his Spicilegium.

The laſt Work in this Edition, is a Collection of the Letters of Peter de Celles, which were already publiſh'd with Notes by Father Sirmondus, A. D. 1613. They are divided into nine Books, and relate either to pious Subjects or to certain particular Affairs, or are merely Complimental. Indeed, they are written with greater Accuracy than his other Works, being of a more natural and leſs affected Style; nevertheleſs they are full of verbal Quibbles and Puns. In this Collection are three Letters on the Feſtival of the Conception of the Virgin Mary, in which Peter de Celles ſtrenuouſly maintains St. Bernard's Sentiments on that Subject. NICOLAS, a Monk of St. Alban, was of a contrary Opinion, and averr'd, That the bleſſed Virgin was never obnoxious to Sin. This is the Subject of the Twenty third Letter of the Sixth Book; but the Monk vindicates his Opinion in the Ninth Letter of the laſt Book, and confutes that of St. Bernard, yet not without expreſſing a great deal of Reſpect for the Perſon of that Saint. However, he does not treat Peter de Celles with the ſame Moderation, who being nettled, returns him a ſomewhat ſharp Anſwer in the Tenth Letter of the ſame Book. Peter was then Biſhop of Chartres.

Nicolas Monk of St. Alban.

JOHN of SALISBURY Biſhop of Chartres.

JOHN of Salisbury the intimate Friend of Thomas Becket Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and his Companion during his Exile, was at laſt made Biſhop of Chartres, A. D. 1179. and died three Years after. He was one of the moſt ingenious, moſt polite and moſt learned Men of that Age, as is evident from his Book call'd Policraticon; or, A Diſcovery of the Fopperies of the Lords of the Court. Juſtus Lipſius aſſures us, that many conſiderable pieces of Purple and Fragments of a better Age, are to be found in that Work: Peter of Blois in like manner declares that he was even charm'd with it, having diſcover'd therein a well regulated ſort of Learning and abundance of Things, the Variety of which renders them extremely delightful. And indeed, 'tis an excellent Work, treating of the Employments, Occupations, Functions, Vertues and Vices of the Men of the World, but more eſpecially of Princes, Potentates and great Lords; in which is contain'd a vaſt Treaſure of Moral Notions, Sentences, fine Paſſages of Authors, Examples, Apologues, Extracts of Hiſtory, common Places, &c. 'Tis divided into Eight Books, and compos'd in a plain and conciſe Style.

John of Salisbury Biſhop of Chartres.

But this Style is more proper for the numerous Letters which the ſame Author wrote to the Popes Adrian and Alexander; to the Kings of England and divers other Princes; to Thomas Becket Arch-biſhop of Canterbury; to ſeveral Engliſh Biſhops; and to many other Perſons; either about general Occurrences and Tranſactions, as the Schiſm of Octavian the Antipope, and the Election of Alexander III. the conteſt between the Pope and the Emperor Frederick; and that between the King of England and the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury; or relating to particular Affairs of the Churches of England; or to certain Points of Doctrine and Diſcipline: As the 172d Letter concerning the Number of Writers of the Canonical Books of the Old and New Teſtament; the 67th about the nullity of a ſecond Marriage which a certain Woman had contracted after ſhe was divorc'd from her former Husband who was a Prieſt; the 68th about the cohabitation of Women with Clerks; and the 69th about the Sums of Mony that were exacted of the Vicars of Churches. In theſe Letters he appears to be much addicted to the Intereſt of Thomas of Canterbury, whoſe conduct nevertheleſs he ſometimes cenſures, and ſeems likewiſe to be much devoted to the Pope's Service, although he does not always approve every thing that is done at Rome, and condemns the Vices of the Cardinals on certain Occaſions. He openly approves the depoſing of the Emperor Frederick, and the Proceedings of Pope Alexander againſt him. His Letters are full of Alluſions to the Sacred Hiſtory, and of Examples taken out of Holy Scripture; in which he alſo intermixes many Paſſages of Profane Authors. The number of theſe Letters amounts to 301. and they were printed at Paris, A. D. 1611. with the Life of Thomas Becket Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, by the ſame Author; to whom are likewiſe attributed certain Commentaries on the Epiſtles of St. Paul, printed at Amſterdam in 1646.

PETER

PETER of BLOIS Arch-Deacon of Bath.

Peter of Blois Arch-deacon of Bath.

PETER, ſirnam'd of Blois, from the Place of his Nativity, deriving his extraction from Bretagne, ſtudy'd the Liberal Sciences at Paris; the Civil and Canon Law at Bononia, and after having attain'd to a profound skill in all ſorts of Humane Learning, apply'd himſelf entirely to the Study of Divinity, under the Tuition of John of Salisbury Biſhop of Chartres. It is alſo probable that Peter of Blois was Canon of that City; however, having paſs'd into Sicily, A. D. 1167. with Stephen the Son of the Count of Perche, and the Couſin of the Queen of Sicily, he was choſen Tutor and afterwards Secretary to William II. King of Sicily, but he was ſoon oblig'd to leave that Country, when Stephen Count of Perche, who was made Chancellor of the Kingdom and Arch-biſhop of Palermo, was baniſh'd from thence. Upon his return to France, he was invited over into England by King Henry II. and after having ſpent ſome time at Court, he retir'd to the Palace of Richard Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and became his Chancellor. He was ſent by that Arch-biſhop to King Henry II. and to the Popes Alexander III. and Urban III. to negotiate Affairs relating to the Church of Canterbury, and after the Death of King Henry, he continued for ſome time in the Court of Queen Eleonora. In the end of his Life, he was depriv'd of the Arch-Deaconry of Bath, which was conferr'd on him at his arrival in England, but ſome time after, he obtain'd that of London; in the diſcharging of which Duty, he took a great deal of pains, and enjoy'd only a ſmall Revenue. He died in England A. D. 1200.

Peter de Blois himſelf made a Collection of his Letters, by the Order of Henry II. King of England, as he intimates in his firſt Letter directed to that Prince, in which he obſerves, That they are not all alike; that ſometimes the great number of urgent Affairs oblig'd him to write with leſs accuracy; that ſometimes the Subject did not allow him to enlarge; and that ſometimes the meanneſs of the Capacity of thoſe Perſons to whom he wrote, conſtrain'd him to make uſe of a more plain Style. He excuſes himſelf for citing profane Authors, as alſo, for ſpeaking freely, and even for preſuming to reprove his Prince. He proteſts, that to the beſt of his remembrance, he never wrote any thing with a Deſign to Flatter, but that Integrity and an unfeigned Zeal for maintaining the Truth, always excited him to ſet Pen to Paper.

The Second is a Letter of Conſolation directed to the ſame King on the Death of his Son Henry III. in which he induces him to hope for the Salvation of that young Prince, who died in a courſe of Repentance.

In the Third, he ſeverely reprehends a certain great Lord, who had reproach'd his Chaplain with the meanneſs of his Birth, and gives him to underſtand, that none ought to be puff'd up, either upon account of Nobility or Riches.

In the Fourth, he congratulates the Prior of Ciſteaux upon the Tranquillity he enjoy'd in his Solitude, proteſting that he even envy'd his Condition, and entreats the ſame Prior to remember him in his Prayers and Oblations.

In the Fifth, he reproves Richard the Succeſſor of Thomas Becket in the Arch-biſhoprick of Canterbury, for applying himſelf with greater earneſtneſs to the maintenance of the Temporal Intereſts of his Church, than to the Spiritual Government of his Dioceſs; remonſtrating, that his Dioceſans and Prince are very much ſcandaliz'd at thoſe Proceedings.

In the Sixth, to wipe off the reproaches that a certain School-Maſter who undertook to teach the Liberal Sciences, had put upon the Clerks, who live in the Palaces of Biſhops; he aſſerts, That his Profeſſion was more contrary to the Eccleſiaſtical Function, than the conduct of thoſe Clergy-men.

In the Seventh, he rebukes a Profeſſor, who was addicted to Drunkenneſs.

In the Eighth, he vindicates the compariſon he made of the different States of the Church, to the various Phaſes or Apparitions of the Moon, and maintains, that Terms and Maxims of Philoſophy and of the Civil Law may be us'd in treating of matters of Religion, when it can be done conveniently.

In the Ninth, he reproves one of his Pupils, who after having compleated his Philological Studies, determin'd to reſt for two Years, before he apply'd himſelf to that of Divinity; and ſhews, that that negligence would be extremely prejudicial to him.

In the Tenth, written to one of the Chaplains of the King of Sicily, againſt the Deſign which that Prince had, to cauſe to be inſtall'd in the Biſhoprick of Agrigento, a certain young Lord, who was by no means capable of performing the Functions of the Epiſcopal Dignity, he admoniſhes the ſaid Chaplain, that his Office obliges him to continue to make Remonſtrances to the King, to hinder him from diſpoſing of the Biſhoprick after ſuch a manner.

In the Eleventh, he exhorts a Clergy-man, who had ſolemnly engag'd to embrace the Monaſtick Life, to perform his Vow.

The

The Twelfth is a conſolatory Letter directed to one of his Nephews, afflicted with the Death of his Uncle, the burning of his Houſe, and a Wound he receiv'd in his Foot.

In the Thirteenth, he reprehends a Young Monk, who endeavour'd to get a Priory, under pretence, that he ſhould thereby have an opportunity of converting more Souls, and makes it appear, That a Monk ought not to covet Secular Employments, nor to aſpire to Dignities, nor to affect to inſtruct others.

In the Fourteenth, directed to the Chaplains of the King of England, he communicates to them certain Reflections that a Fit of Sickneſs caus'd him to make on the miſerable condition of thoſe Clergy-men, who are oblig'd to reſide in the Courts of Princes; of which he gives a very lively Deſcription, and exhorts them to follow his Example in quitting that courſe of Life.

The Fifteenth is an Inſtruction to Rainaud newly choſen Biſhop of Chartres, concerning the Epiſcopal Qualities and Functions. He ſays, That the firſt thing that is ſometimes done, is to make enquiry into the Revenues belonging to the Biſhoprick, and not into the preſent condition of it: He cenſures the Luxury and Magnificence of ſome Biſhops of his time, the pains that they took to heap up Riches and to gratifie Princes, and the Secular Courſe of Life that they lead.

In the Sixteenth, he exhorts a certain Biſhop immers'd in the management of many Affairs to make choice of a more quiet manner of Living, in order to promote his own Salvation.

In the Seventeenth, he ſhews, That a Clerk who drives a Trade, is no leſs culpable than one that follows Uſury, and that all manner of inordinate endeavours to get and heap up Riches are unworthy of a Clergy-man.

In the Eighteenth, he gives us a lively deſcription of the Irregularities of a certain Biſhop, who was addicted to that Vice.

In the Nineteenth, he reſolves two Queſtions, which were propos'd to him by one of his Friends who ſtudied the Law at Paris, viz. 1. Whether a Woman, who turn'd Nun, upon a ſuppoſition that her Husband was dead, be oblig'd to leave the Convent, if he return? And 2. In caſe ſhe be oblig'd to follow her Husband, whether ſhe ought to aſſume the Veil again after his Death? He anſwers, That the Vow of Chaſtity made by her, being in the Husband's Power, is not obligatory; and that ſhe ought to return with her Husband, and may marry again after his Deceaſe. In that Letter, there is a remark very advantageous to the Schools of Paris, of which he ſaies, that as there was formerly a Proverbial ſaying, that thoſe who had any Queſtion to propoſe ought to repair to Avila; ſo in like manner at preſent it paſs'd into a Proverb, that thoſe who were deſirous to have any Queſtion decided need only go to Paris, where the greateſt Difficulties are fairly reſolv'd.

In the Twentieth he complains, That the Domeſtick Servants of Rainaud Biſhop of Chartres remov'd him from the Palace of that Prelate, whom he blames for his too great Liberality.

In the Twenty firſt, he reprehends the haughtineſs and arrogancy of a Canon, who was formerly one of his particular Friends.

In the Twenty ſecond, directed to John of Salisbury, he commends his Conſtancy, and that of Thomas Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and adviſes them to perſevere, and not to ſuffer themſelves to be mov'd by any manner of Adverſity or Perſecutions.

In the Twenty third, written to Octavian the Pope's Legate, he declames againſt the Abuſe that was then predominant, to fill up the vacant Biſhopricks with unworthy and uncapable Perſons, who obtain'd them by the means of ſiniſter practices or purchas'd them with Money.

In the Twenty fourth, he entreats the Friends of Thomas Arch-biſhop of Canterbury to prevail upon that Prelate, to forgive the Arch-Deacon of Salisbury, who was deſirous to be reconcil'd with him.

In the Twenty fifth, he exhorts an Official to quit that Employment, which he looks upon as very dangerous. " I am apt to believe (ſays he) that the Officials were ſo call'd, " not from the name of their Office, but from the Verb Officio, which ſignifies to be hurt- " ful, or to do Miſchief: For the whole Function of an Official is to ſheer and flea at the " pleaſure of the Biſhop the poor Sheep that are under his Juriſdiction: They are the Bi- " ſhop's Horſe-leeches, that caſt up the Blood they have ſuck'd out, and which as it were " ſo many Spunges, that being ſqueez'd reſtore the Water wherein they were ſoak'd, pour " into their Maſters Boſom the Treaſure that they have extorted; inſomuch that of all thoſe " execrable Purchaſes they have only left the ſtain of Sin: For that which is thus hoarded " up by oppreſſing the Poor, ſerves to gratify the unruly Appetite of the Biſhops, and draws " Puniſhments on the Officials; who may be well compar'd to thoſe private Doors, thro' " which the Prieſts of Bel were wont ſecretly to convey the Sacrifices that were laid on the " Altar of that Falſe God; ſince the Biſhops make uſe of their Hands to pillage the Eſtates " of other Men, caſting upon them all the marks of Infamy and the whole guilt of thoſe " Crimes, of which they make the ſole advantage,------The Office of the Officials at pre- " ſent, is to confound Right, to create Law-ſuits, to diſannul Agreements, to prolong Trials, " to ſuppreſs the Truth, to maintain Falſhood, to ſeek for nothing but filthy Lucre, to ſell

" Juſtice,

" Juſtice, to commit all manner of unjuſt Actions, and to deviſe Cheats and Artifices to " deceive the People. Theſe are the Men, who over-load their Landlords with a nume- " rous Retinue of Attendants and coſtly Equipages; who hunt after dainty Diſhes; being " very prodigal of the Eſtates of other Perſons, and as covetous of their own: They are " very critical in ſearching out the etymology and ſignification of Words, and make Gloſſes " upon all manner of Syllables, on purpoſe to lay Snares for others, in order to drain their " Purſes: They take upon them to interpret the Laws according to their own capricious " Humour, admitting ſome, and rejecting others at their Pleaſure; they corrupt that which " is ſound, over-rule juſt Allegations, foment Diviſions, conceal Crimes, make void law- " ful Marriages, penetrate into the Secrets of Families, defame innocent Perſons, abſolve " the Guilty, and in a Word, leave no Stone unturn'd to get Mony. This is the Cha- racter that Peter of Blois gives us of the Officials of his time, very different (as 'tis to be hop'd) from that of thoſe Gentle-men, who now diſcharge thoſe Functions in our Churches.

In the Twenty ſixth, he adviſes a Friend of his to enter upon a Courſe of Divinity at Paris, after having left the ſtudy of the Civil-Law, to which he apply'd himſelf at Bononia; becauſe a Clergy-man ought not to be entirely immers'd therein. He cenſures, by the way, the ſiniſter Practices of the Advocates of his Time, who made it their whole buſineſs to get Money and to enrich themſelves.

In the Twenty ſeventh, he acquaints the Canons of Beauvoir with the Death of Thomas Becket Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, and tells them that there was reaſon to be ſo far from be- wailing his Death, that they ought to rejoice at his Happineſs. He likewiſe makes mention of the Diſſenſions that happen'd in his Church, about the Election of a Succeſſor.

The Twenty eighth, is written in the Name of Rotrou Arch-biſhop of Rouen, to William Arch-biſhop of Sens and the Pope's Legate, whom he exhorts to uſe his utmoſt endeavours to divert thoſe Calamities, which were ready to break forth in the Territories belonging to the Church of Roan by reaſon of the War that was carry'd on by the two Kings.

In the Twenty ninth directed to the Abbot and Monks of St. Alban, he complains that one of their Priors had refus'd to entertain him at his Table, and ſhews how much Hoſpitality is recommendable, more eſpecially in Monks.

In the Thirtieth, he communicates to his Friend Rainaud choſen Biſhop of Bath, the Dream that he had upon his promotion to the Epiſcopal Dignity.

The Thirty firſt is written to the Abbot of Fontaines, concerning a Diſtemper with which Peter of Blois was afflicted.

The Thirty ſecond is a recommendatory Letter directed to the Prior of Canterbury.

The Thirty third is written in the Name of Rotrou Arch-biſhop of Roan to Henry III. the Son of Henry II. King of England, who was preparing to make War with his Father, to entreat him to take into his Protection, Andely and the other Territories of the Church of Roan.

In the Thirty fourth, he excuſes himſelf to the Biſhop of Perigueux, who had offer'd him his Houſe; for not accepting of his Propoſal, becauſe he was detain'd by the Promiſes of his old Patron.

The Thirty fifth and Thirty ſixth, are Exhortations to a certain Nun.

The Thirty ſeventh, is a Letter of Excuſe to the Prior of Jumieges for neglecting to ſend back a Book that he had borrow'd of him.

The Thirty eighth, is an Apology directed to Albert Cardinal of the Church of Rome, for the Conduct of the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, who was accuſed of being ignorant of the Laws, covetous and too much inclin'd to raiſe his Family.

The Thirty ninth, is a Letter written by way of a ſecret Truſt to one of his Friends, in which he ſends him word, That the Court of Rome, according to the uſual Cuſtom had charged him with many Debts, and that if he could once find means to diſcharge them, he would take care not to fall into that Abyſs for the future.

In the Fortieth, he condemns the Deportment of a certain Biſhop who ſpoke ill of his Prince.

In the Forty firſt, he entreats Henry II. King of England to give him notice of the Place where he was, to the end that he might wait on him, and acquaints him that his Majeſties Envoys are return'd from Rome, clear'd of their Silver and loaded with Lead, without being honour'd with any conſiderable Preſents, and that the Ambaſſadors of the King of Spain were come to meet him to conſtitute him Mediator of the Peace between them.

The Forty ſecond, is written to Robert Provoſt of Aire in Flanders elected Biſhop of Cambray, to whom he gives a ſmart Reprimand for contenting himſelf to enjoy the Revenues of his Biſhoprick, without taking care to perform the Epiſcopal Functions, and for leading a Secular and Scandalous courſe of Life.

The Forty third, is a very appoſite Conſolation compos'd by him upon occaſion of the Sickneſs of a certain Perſon, in which he ſufficiently makes it appear that he had ſtudy'd the Art of Phyſick.

In the Forty fourth, he adviſes Arnulphus Biſhop of Liſieux not to leave his Biſhoprick, by reaſon of any oppoſition that might be made by his Prince, his Chapter or the People of his Dioceſs; but he would perſwade him to reſign it, in caſe he aſpir'd to that Dignity by under-hand dealings.

In the Forty fifth, he vindicates Rainaud Biſhop of Bath, from the imputation of having perſecuted or occaſion'd the Death of St. Thomas of Canterbury, and obſerves, that if he made ſomewhat too ſevere a Reflection upon him, at the time when that Arch-biſhop excommunicated the Biſhop of Salisbury, it ought to be forgiven him, as well as what he might have done againſt him thro' Ignorance, and ſo much the rather, in regard that he had expiated that Fault by a very rigorous Penance.

In the Forty ſixth, directed to Richard Biſhop of Syracuſe, after having excus'd himſelf for returning to Sicily, he enlarges on the Commendation of Thomas Becket Arch-biſhop of Canterbury.

The Forty ſeventh is written in the Name of Richard Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, who exhorts Henry the Son of Henry II. King of England to deſiſt from making War with his Father, and threatens to excommunicate him, unleſs he ſubmit to his Remonſtrances.

In the Forty eighth, he congratulates William Cardinal Biſhop of Pavia, upon account that at laſt an end was put to the Quarrel between Pope Alexander and the Emperor Frederick, by his mediation, and declames againſt Octavian and his Electors.

In the Forty ninth, he complains, That ſome of the Canons of Chartres, whom he took for his Friends, had brought an Information againſt him in a Trial depending between him and Robert of Salisbury, for a Prebend of Chartres, and that not being able to ſully his Reputation, they had ſlanderouſly traduc'd the Memory of his Father.

In the Fiftieth, he entreats the Biſhop of Bayeux to abſolve a certain Perſon, who had committed Man-ſlaughter in his own defence, and who being afflicted with a very ſenſible Grief for that unfortunate Accident, had done Penance in due Form.

In the Fifty firſt, he admoniſhes Jocelin Biſhop of Salisbury to pay his Debts, and not to beſtow too great Favours upon his Nephews.

In the Fifty ſecond, he acquaints the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, who had ſent him to the King of England, That he met with a furious Storm, during his paſſage into Normandy, and aſſures him, that he was ready to undertake every thing, and to endure all manner of hardſhip in his Service.

The Fifty third, is a Circular Letter to all the Biſhops of England, written in the Name of Richard Arch-biſhop of Canterbury and Primate of the Kingdom, in which he enjoyns them, not to ſuffer Perſons, whoſe Ordination is not valid, to exerciſe the Epiſcopal Functions in their Dioceſſes, and to denounce a Sentence of Excommunication againſt thoſe who forge the Pope's Bulls or counterfeit the Seals of the Biſhops.

In the Fifty fourth, he adviſes the Arch-deacon of Poitiers, not to compel Adelicia his Niece, to become a Nun; becauſe the Monaſtick State, ought not to be embrac'd with leſs freedom than that of Marriage.

In the Fifty fifth, he congratulates Adelicia, upon the deſire ſhe expreſs'd to take the Vail, and in regard that ſhe had actually made a Vow to that purpoſe, and exhorts her to put ſo laudable a Deſign in execution with all convenient ſpeed.

In the Fifty ſixth, he endeavours to divert Walter Biſhop of Rocheſter from the ſtrong Inclination he had to Hunting.

In the Fifty ſeventh Letter, directed to one of his Friends a Monk of the Abbey of Aulnay in Normandy, who expected to be deliver'd from Temptations immediately after his admittance into a Religious Order; he treats of the continual Conflict between the Fleſh and the Spirit, and ſends him a Proſe or Sermon on that Subject.

In the Fifty eighth, he complains to Renaud Biſhop of Bath, by reaſon that the latter had ſuſpended his Vice-Arch-deacon, without diſpatching any Canonical Monitions before-hand, and to the prejudice of a Privilege that was granted him in the Council of Lateran, that he ſhould not be excommunicated nor any Perſon that belong'd to him by any Biſhop, and declares that he had ſo much the greater reaſon to take it ill, in regard that that which gave occaſion to thoſe rigorous Proceedings, was only a ſmall ſum of Money that was due to the Biſhop, and that he had already given Orders for the payment of it.

In the Fifty ninth, he exhorts that Biſhop to be reconciled with a certain Perſon nam'd Henry, and to turn one Simon out of his Company, who was a dangerous Flatterer and a Sycophant.

In the Sixtieth, he approves the Complaints made by one of his Friends, who was much offended that the Biſhops ſhould enrich their Nephews with the Church-Revenues, inſtead of maintaining the Poor. He obſerves that that was no new Diſorder, and that Poverty ought to be preferr'd before Riches.

In the Sixty firſt, he diſſwades an Arch-Deacon from the exerciſe of Hunting.

In the Sixty ſecond, he writes in the Name of Geffrey Biſhop of Lincoln to one Le Blond, whom he reproves for his Diſobedience in leaving that Biſhop to follow divers Employments, and forbids him to oppoſe the Intereſt of the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury.

The Sixty third, is a Letter of Thanks to Peter Biſhop of Arras.

The Sixty fourth, is written in the Name of Gautier Arch-biſhop of Roan and of the Biſhops of Normandy, to Pope Celeſtin III. to entreat his Holineſs to uſe his utmoſt endeavours to procure the deliverance of Richard King of England, who was taken Priſoner at his return from the Holy Land by the Duke of Auſtria.

The Sixty fifth, is written againſt the Superſtitions of thoſe, who pretend to fore-tell future Events by Dreams, or by other means of the like nature.

In the Sixty ſixth, he congratulates Gautier Arch-biſhop of Palermo upon his promotion to that Dignity: He gives that Prelat a Character of Henry II. King of England, and clears him from the Murder of Thomas Becket Arch-biſhop of Canterbury.

In the Sixty ſeventh, he proves by many Reaſons to King Henry II. that he ought to cauſe his Son to apply himſelf to Study.

The Sixty eighth, is written in the Name of Richard Arch-biſhop of Canterbury to Pope Alexander III. againſt the Abbot of Malmesbury, who endeavour'd to withdraw himſelf from the Juriſdiction of his Biſhop. He declames in that Letter, againſt the Privileges that are granted at Rome to the Abbots for Money, which gives them occaſion to inſult over their Primates and Dioceſans, to loſe the Reſpect they ought to have for them, and by degrees to ſhake off the Yoke of Obedience, which was formerly the only means to reclaim them, and to reſtrain their Ambition. "The Abbots (ſays he) cannot endure to have a Superior ſet over "them, to reform the Abuſes committed by them; They would willingly have an abſolute "power to do every thing with impunity, and neglect the Monaſtical Diſcipline to gratify "their unruly Paſſions. Upon which account it is, that almoſt all the Revenues of the Mona- "ſteries are left at Rack and Manger, and are liable to be pillag'd by every Invader: For on "the one ſide, the Abbots mind nothing elſe but following their Pleaſures, and are intent on- "ly on making good Cheer; and on the other ſide, the Monks being as it were deſtitute of "a Head, ſpend their Life in Idleneſs and continual Quarrels. The miſchief (adds he) re- "quires a ſpeedy remedy; for if it be not timely apply'd, 'tis to be fear'd leſt as the Abbots "ſhake off the Yoke of the Biſhops, ſo the latter ſhould throw off that of the Arch-biſhops, "and the Deans and Arch-Deacons ſhould likewiſe find means to exempt themſelves from the "Juriſdiction of their Dioceſans. Alaſs what form of Juſtice is this! or rather, what manner "of deformity of the Law! to hinder Pupils from hearkening to their Tutors; Children "from obeying their Parents; Soldiers from ſerving their Prince; and Servants from ſub- "mitting to their Maſters! What is it to free Abbots from the Juriſdiction of their Biſhop, "unleſs it be to authorize Diſobedience and Rebellion, and to arm Children againſt their Fa- "ther? 'Tis their Office, who ſit as ſupreme Judges, to determine this Caſe, and to take "care leſt unjuſt Actions ſhould take their riſe from the Courts of Judicature, where ap- "plication is made for the redreſſing of Grievances.

In the Sixty ninth Letter, directed to Radulphus Biſhop of Angers, he laments the Failings of the Inhabitants of that City, who had abandon'd King Henry II. in the War that he maintain'd againſt his Son.

In the Seventieth, he adviſes John Biſhop of Chartres, rather to beſtow Benefices on his Nephews, who were upright and poor Men, than on Foreigners, who are not ſo worthy of them.

The Two following Letters contain nothing remarkable.

The Seventy third, written in the Name of Richard Arch-biſhop of Canterbury to all the Biſhops of England, is againſt a Cuſtom that prevail'd in that Kingdom, only to puniſh with Excommunication, thoſe who aſſaſſinated Biſhops and other Clergy-men, whereas capital Puniſhments were inflicted on other Murderers.

The following Letters to the Eighty ſecond comprehend nothing very remarkable relating to Church-Diſcipline.

In the Eighty ſecond, directed under the Name of Richard Arch-biſhop of Canterbury to the Ciſtercian Monks, after having commended that Order, he takes notice of one Fault committed by them, which is their refuſing to pay Tithes to Clerks and Monks: He gives them to underſtand, that it is an Act of Injuſtice; that altho' they might enjoy that Immunity, whilſt they were Poor, yet they had no right to it at preſent, ſince they were become Rich; and that what Privileges ſoever they might obtain from Rome, they could not in Conſcience make uſe of them to uſurp the Eſtates of others: Laſtly, he threatens to excommunicate them if they continue to retain thoſe Tithes.

In the Eighty third, written in the Name of Walter Arch-Deacon of Oxford to Bartholomew Biſhop of Exeter, he adviſes him to declare the Marriage null, that was contracted between Robert and Iſmenia his Kinſ-woman; according to the expreſs Order he had receiv'd from the Pope.

The Eighty fourth is directed to Pope Alexander III. under the Name of Richard Archbiſhop of Canterbury to vindicate the Conduct of the Biſhops, who reſide in the King's Court, in order to maintain the Intereſt and Rights of the Church. "For (ſays he) if there were "no Biſhops in the Council, nor in favour with the Prince; the Wicked would ſoon find "means to harraſs the Church, and the Preſumption of Laicks would oppreſs the Clergy after

" after an intolerable manner: But at preſent, if any thing be attempted to the prejudice " of the Church, the Biſhops are ready to oppoſe it; and if the King ſhould be exaſperat- " ed againſt innocent Perſons, his Anger is appeas'd by their Entreaties. By this means, the " rigour of Juſtice is moderated; the Cries of the Poor reach the Prince's Ear; the Dig- " nity of the Church is maintain'd; the Indigence of diſtreſſed People is reliev'd; the De- " votion of Lay-men is encreas'd; Religion is protected; the Sentences in Courts of Judi- " cature are directed; the Laws are ſubmitted to; the Decrees of Rome are receiv'd; and " the Revenues of the Churches are augmented: He adds, That the Arch-biſhops and Bi- " ſhops of Sicily were wont in like manner to reſide in the Court of their Prince, and that " there was a Deſign on foot in England to abrogate that Cuſtom, but that divers prudent " and judicious Perſons had determin'd that it was abſolutely neceſſary for them to continue " there, and that if they were hinder'd from having acceſs to the Prince; at the ſame time " the Monaſteries would be depriv'd of their Tranquility, the Afflicted of Conſolation, and " the Church of its Liberty. Therefore our Author concludes, That although the Biſhops were very deſirous to leave the Court, by reaſon of the Inconveniences they ſuffer in that Station, nevertheleſs they are detain'd, as it were by force, upon account of the Publick Advantage.

The Eighty fifth Letter, contains a ſharp Reprimand made to Robert Biſhop of Salisbury, for taking too great delight in Feaſting, and for laying out ſo vaſt Expences in furniſhing his Table, that he let the Buildings of his Church fall to ruin.

In the Eighty ſixth, he diverts a Carthuſian Monk nam'd Alexander, from the Deſign he had to quit his Order, under pretence that Maſs was not ſaid every day in the Monaſtery; and ſhews, That St. Benedict never was a Prieſt, and that he ſpent a great deal of time without hearing Maſs, even not knowing one Eaſter-day, that it was that great Feſtival: That St. Paul and St. Antony, the firſt Hermits, paſs'd many days without hearing Maſs, and that we do not read that ſome great Saints offer'd up the Holy Sacrifice daily: That ſuch a frequent Adminiſtration of the Sacraments might render them contemptible, and that the ſeldomneſs of it, encreaſes the Reſpect due to them: That indeed we ſin inceſſantly, and that a continual Remedy is requiſite for the expiation of our Guilt; but that nevertheleſs this Hoſt, of an infinite Value, ought not to be offer'd up, but with a Spirit of Humility and a contrite Heart. To that purpoſe, he quotes many Paſſages of the Fathers, and at laſt affirms, That the ſecret Motive which induc'd that Monk to think of quitting his Order, was to lead a leſs auſtere, and a more free Courſe of Life.

In the Eighty ſeventh Letter, he comforts William Biſhop of Ely, who was diſcharg'd from the management of the Affairs of State in England, by the treachery of certain Noblemen, who had miſ-repreſented him to King Richard; which gave an occaſion to Peter of Blois to declaim againſt thoſe Counſellors who give bad Advice to Princes. The Eighty ninth is written on the ſame Subject to a Biſhop, who had contributed to the ſaid William's diſgrace at Court.

In the Eigty eighth, he entreats an Abbot to receive a certain Monk, who was deſirous to return to his Monaſtery.

In the Ninetieth, he gives an account to his Brother William Abbot of Mani, of the reaſons of his departure from Sicily, and takes notice at the ſame time of the News that was ſpread abroad, That that Abbot had obtain'd a Licence of the Pope, to wear the Mitre, Ring and Sandals. He maintains, That the uſe of thoſe Ornaments in any other Perſon but a Biſhop, is an arrogant Vanity, and a preſumptuous Oſtentation; That they ought only to be us'd on ſome extraordinary Occaſions; ſuch as the Dedication of Churches, the Conſecration of Virgins, and the Ordination of Clerks, and that therefore they can be of no uſe to an Abbot, who has no right to perform thoſe Functions; That they are actually more chargeable to him than profitable, and that they do him a greater diſhonour than credit; That that Abuſe has no Grounds neither in the Goſpel, nor in St. Benedict's Rule; That it foments the Refractorineſs of the Abbots and the Conteſts they have with the Biſhops, and that no Man ought to flatter himſelf, that the Privilege of Rome can be a ſufficient excuſe for ſuch Acts of Diſobedience before God. Therefore he conjures him by the Salvation of their common Father, and by the Breaſts of their Mother, to lay aſide thoſe Pontifical Ornaments, or if it cannot be done without Scandal, to chooſe rather to quit his Dignity. William being mov'd with this Remonſtrance, reſign'd his Abbey into the Pope's Hands, as it appears by the 93d Letter, in which Peter of Blois congratulates him; That he preferr'd the Humility of a ſimple Monk to the Dignity of an Abbot, and a place of abode in France to one in Sicily.

In the Ninety firſt, he taxes Radulphus Biſhop of Liſieux with Covetouſneſs, and the practice of Uſury, more eſpecially in regard that he did not open his Granaries in a time of ſcarcity and dearneſs of Proviſions.

The following Letters contain nothing very remarkable.

In the Ninety ſeventh, directed to the Abbot of Eveſham, he ſhews that the diverſity of Monaſtick Orders is advantagious to the Church, but that none ought to paſs lightly from one Order to another. He obſerves in the end, that ſinging of Pſalms for a conſiderable time, is very uſeful, if it could be continu'd with Devotion, and that although it be accompany'd with wearineſs, yet it does not ceaſe to be a good Employment. As for Handy-work, he neither blames, nor commends it in a Monk, Labores autem manuales in Monacho nec arguere, nec laudare præſumo.

The Ninety eighth and the Ninety ninth, are written in the Name of Richard Arch-biſhop of Canterbury; viz. the former to his Suffragans about the neceſſity of relieving the Holy Land, and the ſecond to Pope Urban III. to congratulate his promotion to the Pontifical Dignity, and to thank his Holineſs for the Pall, which he had ſent to him.

In the Hundredth Letter, he vindicates an Arch-biſhop who was accus'd of being too meek and moderate.

The Hundred and firſt, directed to Robert Arch-deacon of Nantes, is a Judgment that he paſſes on the Diſpoſition of two of his Nephews, whom he had put under his Tuition.

The Hundred and ſecond, contains a long Complaint made by the Abbot of Redding who was deſirous to renounce his Dignity, with Peter of Blois's Anſwer, in which he adviſes him not to do it.

The following Letters contain nothing of any great moment as to Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline.

In the Hundred and twelfth, ſent to the Biſhop of Orleans, he maintains the Immunities of the Church, and aſſerts that the King of France ought to exact no other Supplies of the Clergy, than their Prayers to carry on the War, that he was preparing to manage againſt the Saracens in the Holy Land.

In the Hundred and thirteenth, he exhorts Geffrey Arch-biſhop of York, to oppoſe the new Hereticks who appear'd in his Dioceſs, and to publiſh ſo ſtrict an Ordinance againſt them, that the others might be terrify'd with the Severity of their Puniſhment.

In the Hundred and fourteenth, he congratulates John of Salisbury upon his Inſtalment in the Biſhoprick of Chartres, and commends the Relation that he wrote of the Life of Thomas Becket Arch-biſhop of Canterbury.

In the Hundred and fifteenth, after having ſhewn in what degrees of Conſanguinity Robert and Adelecia were related one to another, he produces the ſeveral Impediments of their Marriage, and comprehends them in ſix Verſes.

The Hundred and ſixteenth, is written to Hugh Abbot of St. Denis, to whom he ſends one of his Books to be examin'd, and comforts him for the Indignity that was put upon him by the King of France.

In the Hundred and ſeventeenth, he reprehends Geffrey Abbot of Marmoutier, by reaſon that he had cauſ'd an Action to be commenc'd againſt the Prior of St. Come, for certain Lands which he claim'd, as belonging to his Juriſdiction.

There is nothing remarkable in the following Letters to the 123d, in which he refuſes to accept of the Sacerdotal Dignity, not through contempt, but an extraordinary reſpect for that Function.

In the Hundred twenty fourth, he comforts Gautier Arch-biſhop of Roan, baniſh'd from his Church, and juſtifies his retreat.

In the Hundred twenty fifth, he admoniſhes the ſame Prelate, to avoid ſlothfulneſs during his Exile, and to apply himſelf to the reading of the Holy Scriptures.

In the Hundred twenty ſixth, directed to the Abbot of Gloceſter, he gives an Encomium of Odo Chanter of Bourges choſen Biſhop of Paris; to whom he writes the Hundred twenty ſeventh, to renew their old Friendſhip and the Correſpondence that formerly paſs'd between them.

In the Hundred twenty eighth, Peter of Blois complains to William Arch-biſhop of Sens, that he had not as yet perform'd the Promiſe that he made to entertain him in his Houſe, and to conferr a Benefice upon him.

In the Hundred twenty ninth, he writes againſt the Arch-deacon of Orleans, who had introduc'd Simoniacal Practices into his Church.

In the Hundred and thirtieth, directed to John Biſhop of Chartres, he clears himſelf from the Charge brought againſt him, that he made uſe of the Recommendation of the King of England, of divers Lords, and of the Pope, to procure a Prebend in the Church of Chartres.

In the Hundred thirty firſt, he reproves one of his Nephews, the Prior of a Monaſtery, by reaſon that neglecting the ſtudy of the Liberal Sciences and abandoning his Solitude, he frequented publick Places, and endeavour'd to curry favour with Noble-men.

The Hundred thirty ſecond and the Hundred thirty fourth, directed to Perſons newly made Abbots, contain very uſeful Inſtructions for the conduct of Superiours.

In the Hundred thirty third, written to the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury, he maintains that he is not oblig'd to reſide in his Prebend in that City, in regard of the ſmalneſs of the Revenue, which was not ſufficient for defraying the Charge of a Journey thither.

The Hundred thirty fifth, is a Diſpenſation for Non-reſidence granted by the Arch-biſhop of Canterbury to a Canon of Salisbury.

The

The Hundred thirty ſixth, is a Letter from Henry II. King of England to Alexander III. in which he complains of the Rebellion of his Children, and implores the aſſiſtance of that Pope.

In the Hundred thirty ſeventh, he congratulates a Novice Monk, and gives him wholſome Advice.

In the Hundred thirty eighth, he expreſſes to Gautier Arch-biſhop of Roan, the Joy that he had upon his return from his Exile.

In the Hundred thirty ninth, he entreats the Abbot and Monks of Ciſteaux to put up their Prayers to God, that he would vouchſafe to grant him his Grace, to enable him worthily to perform the Functions of the Prieſthood, to which Dignity he was lately rais'd; and explains the reaſons why he deferr'd the receiving of that Order till that time.

In the Hundred and fortieth, he exhorts Petrus Diaconus to quit the ſtudy of the Law, and to apply himſelf altogether to that of the Holy Scriptures and of Divinity. In this Letter, he makes uſe of the Term of Tranſubſtantiation in treating of the Euchariſt. "Thus you "ſee (ſays he) in one ſingle Sacrament a deep Abyſs impenetrable to Humane Reaſon; I "mean, in the Bread and Wine tranſubſtantiated by Vertue of the Heavenly Words, into the "Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, the Accidents that were therein, remaining "without a Subject; and although the Body of JESUS CHRIST be Fleſh and not "Spirit, nevertheleſs it Nouriſhes the Soul rather than the Body. The ſame Body is to be "found in ſeveral Places and on divers Altars, againſt the nature of Bodies, without ceaſing "to be in Heaven: For although by its Nature it can only be in one Place after a circumſcrip-"tible Manner, yet it is in many Places by its omnipotent Vertue and Energy, and after a ſpi-"ritual Manner.

In the Hundred forty firſt, he complains to Gautier Arch-biſhop of Roan, that a certain private Perſon had detain'd the Revenues of a Prebend that belong'd to him, and entreats that Prelate to cauſe Reſtitution to be made.

In the Hundred forty ſecond, he comforts the Prior and Monks of Eveſham, who were in great Trouble, and exhorts them to bear it with Patience.

The four following Letters relate to the Confinement of Richard I. King of England, and were written to procure his Liberty.

In the Hundred forty ſeventh, he reproves Robert Biſhop of Bangor, who determin'd to retain a certain Benefice, which he had conferr'd on another Clerk.

In the Hundred forty eighth, he exhorts Savaric Biſhop of Bath to return to his Dioceſs, and not to leave his Church with a deſign to travel.

In the Hundred forty ninth, he complains, that they were about to deprive him of his Arch-deaconry in the end of his Life.

In the Hundred and fiftieth, he mollifies what he had ſaid in the fourteenth Letter, againſt thoſe Clergy-men, who reſide in the Courts of Princes.

In the Hundred fifty firſt, he entreats Pope Innocent III. to augment the Revenues of the Arch-deaconry of London, which was lately conferr'd upon him. He gives his Holineſs to underſtand, that there were about Forty thouſand Men within the Juriſdiction of his Arch-deaconry, and above One hundred and twenty Churches; nevertheleſs that he was not able to collect any of the Duties that are cuſtomably paid to the Arch-deacons.

In the Hundred fifty ſecond, he entreats that Pope, to change a Chapter of which he was Dean, into a Monaſtery of the Ciſtercian Order.

The Hundred fifty third, is written in the Name of Rotrou Arch-biſhop of Roan, and of Arnulphus Biſhop of Liſieux, to Henry II. King of England; in which they give him an account of the Negociations in the Court of the King of France, where they were ſent by that Prince.

The Hundred fifty fourth, is likewiſe written in the Name of the ſame Arch-biſhop, who entreats Eleonora, Queen of England, and her Sons, to be reconcil'd with King Henry II.

In the Hundred fifty fifth Letter, that Arch-biſhop excuſes himſelf to the Prior and Monks of La Charité, for not retiring to their Convent, by reaſon that he could not leave his Flock during the War.

The following Letters to the Hundred eighty third and laſt, contain nothing very remarkable as to Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, and many of them are Conſolatory.

There is no Author, who has fill'd his Letters with a greater number of Quotations, out of the Holy Scriptures and Eccleſiaſtical and Profane Writings, than Peter of Blois; inſomuch, that they are ſcarce any thing elſe but a Contexture of ſuch Paſſages. That which is properly his own Matter, is full of Antitheſes and Puns: However, he diſcourſes with much freedom, ſharply reproves Vices, and maintains Church Diſcipline and the Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions.

His Sermons are written almoſt after the ſame manner as his Letters, in a conciſe and ſententious Style, to the number of Sixty five; neither does he explain therein the Points of Morality in their utmoſt extent, but he fills them with divers Maxims and Notions, which are accompanied with no other Ornaments, but Antitheſes and nice Compariſons of Words:

But

But he handles Matters more at large in his Tracts, which are Seventeen in Number.

The Firſt is a Moral Diſcourſe on the Transfiguration of JESUS CHRIST.

The Second, is another Diſcourſe of the ſame Nature on St. Paul's Converſion.

The Third, is a compendious Chronicle on the beginning and the end of the Book of Job.

The Fourth, is a very pathetical Exhortation to induce the Chriſtian Princes to ſend ſuccours to the Holy Land.

The Fifth, is an Inſtruction written in the Name of Pope Alexander III. to the Sultan of Iconium.

The Sixth, is a Treatiſe of Sacramental Confeſſion and Penance.

The Seventh, is a Tract concerning the Functions and Qualities of a Confeſſor, and the manner how he ought to demean himſelf in the Adminiſtration of the Sacrament of Penance.

The Eighth piece, call'd the Epiſcopal Canon, contains Inſtructions for Biſhops.

The Ninth, is an Invective againſt one who paſs'd a Cenſure on his Works, and charg'd him with being a Flatterer of Princes, and a falſe Accuſer of Clergy-men and Monks: He clears himſelf from both Imputations, by producing a Catalogue of his Writings; in which he aſſerts, there is nothing to be found that can convict him of what was laid to his charge, and ſeveral particulars to the contrary. He enlarges in Commendation of the Monaſtick Life, and explains ſome Paſſages of his Works, that were objected againſt him; and amongſt others, what he had laid down concerning Free Will, which he was accus'd of having confounded with Grace: He maintains, That the former is ſupported by, and depends on the latter, after ſuch a manner, that the Mercy of God is not prejudicial to Merit, nor Grace to Free Will.

The Tenth, is a Treatiſe againſt the Jews, in which he has accurately collected all the Prophecies that relate to JESUS CHRIST.

The Eleventh, is a large Treatiſe of Chriſtian Friendſhip, of the Love of God, and Charity to our Neighbour; in which he inſiſts on the Cauſes, Duties, Parts and Effects of thoſe Vertues.

The Twelfth, is of the Uſefulneſs of Afflictions, of which he ſhews the ſeveral Advantages.

The Thirteenth, call'd, What are they, quales ſunt? is a Satyr againſt unworthy Paſtors. He juſtifies at firſt, what he is about to write againſt them, and declares that 'tis not his deſign to attack the Worthy Paſtors, but only the Unworthy, who have no Faith; who have not enter'd the Sheep-fold through the Gate; who do not deſerve the Names of Paſtor, Pope, Biſhop or Prelate; becauſe they have not any of the Qualities ſignified by thoſe Terms; who enrich their Relations with the Church-Revenues; who confer Canonries and other Spiritual Livings upon them; or who being of mean Extraction, and of an unknown Family, are endu'd with no generous Principles, but with a great deal of ſordid Baſeneſs without Humility, whoſe Dignity ſoon corrupts their Manners. He ſhews, that theſe ſorts of Biſhops ought not to be flatter'd, but that their Faults ought to be expos'd, to the end that thoſe Perſons who preſent themſelves to be admitted into Holy Orders, may be duely examin'd, and that a conſiderable time may be taken, to be well aſſur'd of their demeanour, and of their Courſe of Life.

The Fourteenth, is a Fragment of a Letter, that he wrote about Silence.

The Fifteenth, is a Fragment of his Book of the Changes of Fortune.

The Sixteenth, is a Tract concerning the Sacred Books and Writers of the Old and New Teſtament.

The Seventeenth, is a Poetical Piece on the Euchariſt.

The firſt Edition of Peter of Blois's Works, was printed at Mentz; the ſecond at Paris, A. D. 1519; the third at Mentz in 1600. by Buſæus, who annex'd an Addition of ſome Tracts in 1605. This Edition was copied out in the Bibliotheca Patrum, printed at Colen; but in all theſe Editions, the Sermons of Peter Comeſtor, were inſerted inſtead of thoſe of Peter of Blois: At laſt M. de Gouſſainville, publiſh'd a new Edition of all Peter of Blois's Works, in which are to be found the Genuine Sermons of that Author, printed at Paris in 1667. This was follow'd in the laſt Bibliotheca Patrum, ſet forth at Lyons.

STEPHEN Biſhop of Tournay.

Stephen Biſhop of Tournay.

STEPHEN, Abbot of St. Genevieve, and afterwards Biſhop of Tournay, was born at Orleans, A. D. 1135. and compleated his Studies in the Schools of the Cathedral Churches of that City and of Chartres: He apply'd himſelf more eſpecially to that of the Canon-Law, and became a Regular Canon in 1165. in the Monaſtery of St. Everte, where St. Victor's Rule was eſtabliſh'd in 1158. by Roger, who was the firſt Abbot ſince the Reformation.

Stephen

Stephen ſucceeded him in that Office, but the Abbey of Genevieve being vacant in 1177. by the Death of the Abbot Aubert, he was choſen in his Place. He was promoted to the Biſhoprick of Tournay in 1192. and govern'd it to the Year, 1203. which was that of his Death.

This Author wrote a Commentary on Gratian's Decretal, with divers Sermons and Letters. All his Works are extant in Manuſcript; but Father du Moulinet did not judge, that the Commentary on the Decretal, and the Sermons were worthy to be brought to light, and therefore he only publiſh'd the Preface to that Commentary, the firſt Sermon and the Texts of Scripture, on which the Thirty others were compos'd, with his Letters, which he divided into three Parts; the Firſt of which contain the Letters which he wrote being as yet Abbot of St. Everte, from A. D. 1163. to 1177.

The Firſt, is a very pathetical Complaint, which he recited in the Synod of the Biſhops of the Province held at Sens, concerning the Murder committed on the Perſon of John Dean of Orleans, by a certain Lord, out of whoſe Hands, he endeavour'd to wreſt ſome Revenues belonging to the Chapter of Orleans, which he had uſurp'd.

He was enjoyn'd by the ſame Aſſembly, to write to the King, to demand Juſtice for that execrable Fact. He did it after ſuch a manner, as was capable of exciting him to take vengeance for ſo heinous a Crime. However, the King did not approve that Letter, and conceiv'd much Diſpleaſure againſt Stephen upon that account; which gave occaſion to his Enemies to perſecute him, and to threaten to pillage his Eſtate, and to cauſe him to be put to Death, unleſs he deſiſted from the proſecution of that Suit. Whereupon he had recourſe to William Biſhop of Chartres, the Son of Thibaud or Theobald Count of Champagne, who appeas'd the King's Anger, and reſtor'd Stephen to his Favour, as the latter had entreated him to do in his ſecond Letter.

The Third is a Letter written by Ponce Biſhop of Clermont, in which he deſires Maurice Biſhop of Paris, and Stephen Abbot of St. Everte to give a reſolution of a Caſe of Conſcience touching the validity of the Baptiſm of Infants that are dipt in the Water, theſe Words being recited, viz. In the Name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, without expreſſing the Action by theſe Terms, I baptize thee. A certain Father had Baptiz'd his Child after that Manner, and it was cuſtomary to do ſo, in caſe of Neceſſity.

Maurice returns an Anſwer in the fourth Letter that that Baptiſm is null, and determines the matter with a great deal of aſſurance, in a few Words. Stephen replies on the contrary, in the fifth Letter, that that Baptiſm is valid, provided the three Perſons of the Trinity be invok'd, and that 'tis not abſolutely neceſſary to add theſe Words, I Baptize thee; becauſe it is not ſaid in the Goſpel, Go and Baptize the Nations ſaying, I Baptize you in the Name of the Father, &c. but only, Baptize them in the Name of the Father, &c. He confirms his Opinion by divers Paſſages of the Fathers, which only require the Invocation of the Holy Trinity, for the validity of Baptiſm. He affirms, that theſe Terms I Baptize thee, are added by the Church, that they only have regard to the ſolemnity of the Action, and do not belong to the ſubſtance of the Sacrament: de ſolemnitate Miniſterii, non de ſubſtantia Sacramenti. He adds, that if a different Opinion were admitted, an infinite number of Children muſt unavoidably be Damned, who were Baptiz'd by Laicks in caſe of Neceſſity; by reaſon that the greateſt part of thoſe ignorant People, were wont to Baptize only ſaying, En nome Patres & Files, & Eſpirites Santos. However he declares, that thoſe Prieſts ought to be cenſur'd and put to Penance, who thro' negligence or ignorance omit any thing that relates to the ſolemnity of the adminiſtration of Baptiſm. But he maintains, that a Child which was once Baptiz'd in the Name of the Trinity, ought not to be Baptiz'd again, altho' the Father did not expreſs the Action by theſe Words, I Baptize thee. Laſtly, he ſays that he who Baptizes a Child, contracts a ſpiritual Affinity with the Mother, which renders him uncapable of Marrying her; or of co-habiting with her as his Wife, if they were Marry'd before.

The other Letters contain'd in this firſt Part, are either recommendatory in favour of divers Perſons, or relate to particular Affairs; as the rebuilding of the Church of St. Everte which was burnt by the Normans, to which purpoſe, he deſires ſupplies of the Chapter of St. Martin at Tours, and of his Friends: The reſtauration of a Prior who had waſted the Revenues of his Monaſtery: The Conteſt between the Church of St. Samſon, and the Chapter of St. Croix, &c.

In the ſecond Part, are comprehended the Letters written by Stephen of Tournay whilſt he govern'd the Abbey of St. Genevieve, from A. D. 1177. to 1192. The greateſt part of theſe Letters are complimental or recommendatory, and contain nothing very remarkable. There are ſeveral written in favour of the Arch-biſhop of Tours, about the Conteſt that he had with the Biſhop of Dol, as the Fortieth, the Hundred and ſeventh, the Hundred and eighth, the Hundred and tenth and the Hundred and fortieth: Others againſt the Regular Canons of St. John des Vignes, who were deſirous to enjoy their private Eſtates, and who being provided of good Livings, endeavour'd to withdraw themſelves from their Obedience to the Abbot, to depend only on the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop. He maintains, That they ought always to be ſubject to the Abbot, and to ſubmit to his Will, according to the Cuſtom, which (as he ſays) was always put in practice; otherwiſe all manner of Regular Diſcipline would be entirely aboliſh'd, and there would be as many Abbots as Curates: See the Sixty firſt, the Ninety fifth and the Hundred ſixty ſecond Letters.

In the Seventy firſt, he proves, That thoſe who have made a Vow to paſs from the Order of Grandmont to that of Ciſteaux, ought to perform that Vow, and in general, that Tranſlations from a remiſs Order to a more auſtere are lawful and expedient. In the Hundred forty third, he relates a Sentence paſs'd by the King, in favour of certain Clerks of the Order of Grandmont againſt the Prior and ſome Lay-brothers of the ſame Order, and writes to the Pope in his own Name, in that of the Abbots of St. Germain des Prez and of St. Victor; and even in that of his Clergy; to confirm that Sentence. In the Hundred forty firſt, he adviſes the Dean of the Church of Rheims to hinder the Canons of that Cathedral from abrogating what was left of their ancient Rule, viz. to eat always in common in the ſame Refectory, and to live together in the ſame Cloiſter.

The Hundred forty ſixth, the Hundred forty ſeventh, the Hundred forty eighth, the Hundred forty ninth and the Hundred fifty third are written to the King of Denmark, and to ſome Biſhops of that Kingdom and of Sweden to induce them to procure Lead in England to cover the Church of St. Genevieve, which was burnt and pillaged by the Normans. He makes by the way, a very ingenious Antitheſis, between the Lead that is purchaſed at Rome for Bulls, and that which is bought in England; ſaying, That one ſerves to impoveriſh the Churches, and the other to cover them: Anglico Plumbo teguntur Eccleſiæ, nudantur Romano. He entreats the Pope to grant two Diſpenſations, viz. one in the eighty ſecond Letter for the Chancellor of France, who was denied admittance into Holy Orders, becauſe he was not born in lawful Wedlock, and the other in the Hundred and thirteenth upon the ſame occaſion, in favour of a certain Perſon who had exercis'd the Office of an † Attorney General: He obſerves in the former that the Canon of not admitting baſe born Perſons among the Clergy, was not generally receiv'd in all the Churches. He likewiſe makes a requeſt to the Pope, to confirm the Immunity of the Abbey of St. Everte at Orleans in the Fifty eighth and Fifty ninth Letters, and in the Hundred fifty fifth, to maintain the Revenues belonging to the Prebends of the Cathedral of Paris, appropriated to the Church of St. Victor.

† Procureur Fiſcal.

The Hundred fifty ninth, is concerning the difficulty of leading a ſolitary courſe of Life, and of the means of attaining to it. Evrard of Avesnes Biſhop of Tournay dying, A. D. 1191. the Clergy at firſt choſe Peter Chanter of the Church of Paris, to ſupply his Place, and Stephen wrote the Hundred ſeventy fifth and laſt Letter of the ſecond Part, in his behalf, but that Election being adjudged to be null, he himſelf was inſtall'd in the Biſhoprick of Tournay, and caus'd his Nephew to be choſen Abbot of St. Genevieve in his ſtead.

The firſt Letters of the third Part, relate to his promotion to that Dignity. In the Two hundred and ſecond, he determines, That the Marriage of a Novice who has left his Convent for that purpoſe is valid. In the Two hundred and eighth, he gives a particular account of his Life and Converſation, to juſtifie himſelf againſt Bertier Arch-Deacon of Cambray, who accus'd him of not leading a Life conformable to that of a Biſhop. "I very ſeldom go (ſays "he) out of the City: I aſſiſt as often as is poſſible, at the celebration of all the Divine "Offices; I Preach the Word of God to my Dioceſans, after the beſt manner that I can; "I declaim againſt the modern Hereſies: I freely adminiſter the Sacraments, which I have "freely receiv'd. I deteſt Simoniacal Practices: I do not receive Bribes or unlawful Preſents: I give wholſom Advice to all thoſe, who make Confeſſion to me; and impoſe "on them profitable Penances: I comfort the Afflicted as far as it lies in my Power: I "ſpend my ſpare Hours in reading and meditating on the Holy Scripture: I exerciſe Hoſpitality in entertaining my Gueſts cheerfully, and keeping a good Table, never eating my "Bread alone; yet I do not rioutouſly waſt the Patrimony of JESUS CHRIST in "maintaining Stage-players and Farce-actors. Such is my outward demeanour, and as for "the inward diſpoſition of my Mind, it is known to none but God.

The Two hundred twenty fourth, Two hundred twenty fifth and the Two hundred twenty ſixth Letters have reference to the Abbot of St. Martin at Tournay, whom he ſuſpended for leading a diſorderly Life, and re-eſtabliſh'd him at the requeſt of the Biſhop of Arras, on condition that he ſhould obſerve the Rules, that were preſcribed to him, and which are ſpecify'd in the Two hundred twenty fourth Letter. The Two hundred thirty firſt and the following are written againſt the Sentence of Suſpenſion, which Melior the Pope's Legate was about to denounce againſt the Country of Flanders: In the Two hundred forty third, and the next, he puts up Complaints againſt the Inhabitants of Tournay, who refus'd to ſubmit to his Authority. In the Two hundred forty eighth and Two Hundred forty ninth, he complains, that the Arch-biſhop of Arras conferr'd Orders on the Monks of St. Amand without his leave. The Two hundred fifty firſt is a Declamation directed to the Pope, on this Subject, viz. That the Study of the Fathers was then generally neglected to follow that of Scholaſtick Divinity, and of the Decretals. "The Students (ſays he) having a reliſh for "nothing but Novelties, and the Tutors endeavouring to enhance their own Reputation, "rather than to promote the Inſtruction of others, compile every Day new Sums or Syſtems "of Divinity, and new Theological Works, on purpoſe to amuſe and deceive their Auditors;

" tors; as if the Writings of the Fathers were not ſufficient, who have explain'd the Holy " Scriptures, by the ſame Spirit with which the Prophets and Apoſtles were inſpir'd when they " wrote them. But theſe modern Doctors bring in new, unknown and ſtrange ſorts of Meſ- " ſes, when the King's Wedding Feaſts are quite made ready, when the Oxen and Fowl " are kill'd, and when it only remains that the Gueſts ſhould ſit down at Table to eat: Pub- " lick Diſputations are ſet on foot againſt the Deciſions of the Church, touching the incom- " prehenſible Godhead: Fleſh and Blood take upon them irreverently to diſpute about the In- " carnation of the Word: The Holy Indiviſible Trinity, is as it were divided and torn in " pieces (with reverence be it ſpoken) in the Publick Places; inſomuch, that there are almoſt " as many Errors as Doctors, as many Scandals as Auditories, and as many Blaſphemies as " Places. If there be occaſion to paſs from Theological Diſputes to the Trial of Cauſes " that are uſually decided by the Canon Law, as ſoon as the Judges delegate are appointed, " or when the Ordinaries have taken cognizance of the Matter; a prodigious Labyrinth of " Decretal Letters is immediately produc'd, under the Name of Alexander of happy Memory, " from whence 'tis impoſſible for any Man to extricate himſelf; neither is any regard had to " the ancient Canons, but on the contrary, they are rejected and contemned. During which " confuſion, it ſo falls out, that the wholſome Ordinances of the ancient Councils are not " follow'd in the Modern, and matters are not debated according to their natural Order, " with reſpect to the true merit of the Cauſe, by reaſon that the Decretal Letters have the " Pre-eminence, which perhaps are forged under the Name of divers Popes of Rome by Mo- " dern Canoniſts. Theſe are collected into an entire Volume, which is read in the Schools, " and publickly ſold to the great profit of the Writers, who by that means take leſs pains, " and get more Money, by copying out thoſe ſuſpected Works. The third Objection that " may be made againſt the preſent manner of Studying, is, that the Liberal Arts and Sciences " have loſt their ancient Liberty, and are brought under ſo great Subjection, that the Pro- " feſſors Chairs are fill'd with young Perſons, and the quality of Tutors is attributed to " ſuch as do not deſerve to be look'd upon as Pupils, who without adhering to the Rules of " Art, employ themſelves in ſetting Words in order and deviſing Sophiſms, with which they " ſurprize ignorant and unthinking People; after the ſame manner as ſilly Flies are ſoon " catch'd in a Cobweb. Philoſophy may well cry out, that her Garments are ſnatch'd away " and that her Body is torn in Pieces; ſo that there is no Elder left to comfort her; neither " is ſhe any longer capable of adminiſtring comfort to any Elder. Theſe Abuſes moſt Holy " Father, require your powerful Hand to reform them, and that you ſhould eſtabliſh by your " ſovereign Authority an Uniformity of Teaching, Learning and Diſputing, leſt the moſt " noble Science of Divinity ſhould become contemptible; leſt it ſhould be ſaid that JESUS " CHRIST is here, or there; or leſt Holy Things ſhould be thrown to Dogs, and Pearls " caſt before Swine.

In the Two hundred fifty fifth Letter, he inveighs againſt another Abuſe, that is to ſay, Appeals made to the Holy See by Inferiors to avoid the correction of their Superiors, and requires that Prelates and Abbots ſhould be inveſted with an abſolute Power to correct their Inferiors, and to change the Officers that depend on their Juriſdiction, without any manner of obſtruction made by the means of Appeals to the Court of Rome. In the Two hundred ſixty ſecond Letter, he enlarges on the Commendation of Queen Ingelburga, the Wife of Philip King of France, and adviſes her in the following, not to ſuffer her Marriage to be diſſolv'd. The other Letters do not contain any thing very remarkable. The whole number of them amounts to Two hundred eighty and ſeven in the laſt Edition ſet forth by Father du Moulinet, and Printed at Paris, A. D. 1689. altho' there were only Two hundred and forty in that of Maſſon in 1611. The Style of theſe Letters is conciſe and cloſe, but the Terms are not always pure, nor well Choſen; nevertheleſs they afford much ſatisfaction to the Reader, by reaſon that the Conceptions are regular and natural.

The Authors who wrote againſt the Albigeois and Vaudois.

GRETSER brought to light, A. D. 1614. three Authors who wrote againſt the Albigeois and Vaudois in the end of the Twelfth Century: Theſe three Writers are Ebrard of Bethune in the Province of Artois, Bernard Abbot of Fontcaud and Ermengard or Ermengaud.

Ebrard of Bethune.

EBRARD OF BETHUNE, confutes in his Work, 1. The Error of the Manichees, concerning the Law of Moſes, and the Prophets; by ſhewing, That the Law ought not to be rejected; that the Patriarchs and the Prophets were Saved; and that it is the true God, who gave the Law, and created the World. Afterwards he paſſes to other Errors common to all the Hereticks of that time, about the Sacraments, and the Cuſtoms of the Church; and eſtabliſhes againſt them the following Doctrines, viz. That Children ought to be baptiz'd; that it is lawful to marry; that the Sacrifice of the Euchariſt, contains the Body of JESUS CHRIST; that none but Prieſts have the Power or Right of offering, and that they ought to do it in the Churches: That the Unction of the Sick is profitable; that Pilgrimages upon account of Devotion, are commendable; that it is lawful to take a true Oath; that Malefactors may be punished and even put to Death; that we shall rise again in the the future State with the same Body that we now have; that Faith ought to be preferr'd to good Works; that Crosses ought to be honour'd; that Women shall be Saved, and rise again with the distinction of their Sex; that Salvation may be obtain'd by different means, and in different States; and that it is lawful to eat Flesh: Lastly, he shews that those Hereticks are culpable, in regard that they conceal themselves, and that altho' they boast of renouncing the Possessions of this World, yet they endeavour to enrich themselves by other means; that they mistake the meaning of Holy Scripture; and that all the Characters of Hereticks agree with them. He adds, That some of them call themselves Valois, and others Xabatates; that they are wont to tear off their Shoos, and that they continually expose themselves during the whole Day to the heat of the Sun, till Supper-time, when they appear in the publick Places. He concludes this Treatise with a Catalogue of all the Hereticks taken out of Isidorus, and with the Resolution of divers Questions propos'd by him.

Bernard Abbot of Fontcaud.

The second Author, who is BERNARD Abbot of Fontcaud, dedicated his Book to Pope Lucius III. and confutes the Vaudois, whom Bernard Arch-bishop of Narbonne had twice condemned after having heard their several Pleas. He makes particular mention of the Obedience due to Popes and Prelates; He declaims against the permission that those People allow Lay-men and even Women to Preach; against their Assertion that the Alms, Fastings, Sacrifices and Prayers of the Living do not avail any thing with respect to the Dead; against those who deny Purgatory, and maintain that Humane Souls are neither in Heaven nor Hell till the Day of Judgment; and against their Asseverations, that the People ought not to meet in the Churches to pray. Thus this Author positively opposes none but the Vaudois.

Ermengard.

The Third nam'd ERMENGARD, at first impugns the Errors of the Manichees about the old Law, Marriage, the Incarnation, Passion, Death and Resurrection of JESUS CHRIST, and afterwards passes to other Errors concerning the Sacraments and Church-Discipline. He proves, that it is requisite to have Churches and Altars; That the singing of the praises of God is useful and reasonable: That the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST ought to be celebrated in the Church, and that the Words of its Institution, ought to be understood in a proper and not in a figurative Sense: That Baptism is necessary for Salvation, and that it ought even to be administer'd to young Children: That Repentance is likewise necessary for those who have fallen into Sin, and that it is composed of three Parts, viz. Contrition, Confession and Satisfaction, and that it is requisite to make Confession to a Priest. He refutes in particular the Custom that was in use among those Hereticks in the imposition of Hands, which they call Consolation, and which they administer'd in the following manner:

The Superior amongst those People, after having wash'd his Hands, took the Book of the Gospels, and exhorted those, who came to receive the Consolation, to put their whole trust and hope of their Salvation therein, and afterwards laying the Book of the Gospels on their Head, repeated Seven times, the Lord's Prayer and the beginning of St. John's Gospel from In principio to these Words, Gratia & Veritas per Jesum Christum facta est i. e. Grace and Truth came by Jesus Christ. Thus ended the Ceremony of their Consolation; but if it should happen that no Superior is present, then one of the Comforted performs the same Ceremony, and even Women do it to sick Persons in the absence of Men: They believe that this Consolation remits Sins, even mortal ones, and that without it 'tis impossible to be Saved: Lastly, they maintain, that those who have actually committed a mortal Sin, are uncapable of administring it effectually. Afterwards Ermergard proves against them, that 'tis lawful to eat Flesh, and to take an Oath, and establishes the Doctrines of the Resurrection of the Dead, the Invocation of Saints, and Prayers for deceased Persons.

These three Authors scarce make use of any other Proofs but Passages of the Holy Scripture to confute the Errors they oppose, and to establish the Truths they maintain; nay they produce a great number of them, amongst which there are some which do not clearly prove, what they assert.

CHAP.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors of leſs note, who flouriſh'd in the Weſtern Countries in the Twelfth Century.

AFTER having treated in the preceding Chapter of the moſt noted Eccleſiaſtical Writers, whoſe Works are more numerous, or more conſiderable, we ſhall now give ſome account in this, of a great number of others leſs known, who have compos'd divers ſmall Tracts, reſerving the particular enumeration of the Hiſtorians and Greek Authors, for the following Chapters.

ANSELM, Dean of the Church of Laon, flouriſh'd in the beginning of the Century, and made publick Divinity-Lectures at Chalons, in which he gave Explications of the Holy Scripture. He is alſo ſuppoſed to be in part the Author of the Ordinary Gloſs. Some attribute to him the Commentaries on the Book of Canticles, on St. Matthew's Goſpel, on St. Paul's Epiſtles, and on the Revelation of St. John, which were printed under the Name of St. Anſelm Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, but they really belong to Hervæus a Monk of Bourg near Dol, whoſe Name they bear in the Manuſcripts. Anſelm Dean of Laon.

GISLEBERT or GILBERT, ſirnam'd CRISPIN, St. Anſelm's Pupil, after having follow'd his Study in the Abbey of Bec, took a Journey to Rome; and upon his return, had a Conference with a certain Jew of Mentz. Afterwards he was made Abbot of Weſtminſter, A. D. 1106. He wrote a Relation of that Conference, and dedicated it to St. Anſelm, amongſt whoſe Works it is inſerted in the laſt Edition by Father Gerberon. Dr. Cave aſſures us, That there are ſtill extant in the Libraries of England, divers Manuſcript Homilies written by Gilbert Criſpin on the Book of Canticles, and ſeveral Diſcourſes on St. Jerom's Prefaces to the Bible, with a particular Treatiſe againſt the Sins of Thought, Word and Deed. The Relation of the Conference made by this Author, is different from that which is annexed to St. Auguſtin's Works, under the Title of, The Conteſt between the Synagogue and the Church, and is much more accurate. He died A. D. 1114. as ſome Writers averr, or according to others in 1115. Giſlebert or Gilbert Criſpin, Abbot of Weſtminſter.

PETRUS ALPHONSUS, a Spaniſh Jew, who formerly bore the name of Moſes, was converted A. D. 1106. was baptiz'd at Hueſca, and had Alphonſus King of Portugal for his God-father. He compos'd a Treatiſe by way of Dialogue between a Jew and a Chriſtian, concerning the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion, divided into Twelve Chapters; in the firſt of which he ſhews, That the Jews explain the Writings of the Prophets too carnally, and that they miſtake their meaning: In the ſecond, he makes it appear, that the Cauſe of the Captivity of the Jews, is the putting of the Meſſiah to death; that it was foretold by the Prophets, and that it will not ceaſe till the end of the World. In the third, he confutes the Opinion of the Jews, who believe, that their dead ſhall be raiſed again one day to dwell on the Earth, and that they ſhall multiply therein. In the fourth, he proves that the Jews do no longer obſerve the principal Articles of the Law of Moſes, and that what they do obſerve, is not acceptable to God. In the fifth Chapter, which is written againſt the Mahometan Superſtitions; he ſhews, that Mahomet was a falſe Prophet, who wrought no Miracles, and was deſtitute of Learning, Religion and Probity. In the ſixth, he proves the Doctrine of the Trinity, by Paſſages of the old Teſtament. In the ſeventh, he demonſtrates by the Writings of the Prophets, That the Meſſiah was to be born of a Virgin, and conceiv'd by the Operation of the Holy Ghoſt. In the eighth, That the Word of God was made Man, and that CHRIST is God and Man, In the ninth, That JESUS CHRIST came at the time foretold by the Prophets, and that the Prophecies concerning the Meſſiah are accompliſh'd in him. In the Tenth, That he died voluntarily to redeem Mankind, according to the prediction of the Prophets. In the eleventh, That he aroſe again from the dead, and aſcended into Heaven. And in the twelfth, That the Law of the Chriſtians is not contrary to that of the Jews. This Treatiſe is one of the beſt that we have of that kind, and the Author handles theſe Matters very methodically, with a great deal of clearneſs and ſolidity of Argument. Petrus Alphonſus, a Spaniſh Jew converted.

THIBAUD or THEOBALD, Clerk of the Church of Etampes, and afterwards Profeſſor of Divinity in the Schools of Caen and Oxford, flouriſh'd in the beginning of the Century, and wrote ſeveral Letters, which were publiſh'd by Father Dachery in the Third Tome of his Spicilegium. Theobald Clerk of the Church of Etampes.

The Firſt is written to the Biſhop of Lincoln, about certain Perſons who were doubtful of the Mercy of God: He ſhews, That a Sinner may have recourſe to Repentance at all times; That he may obtain the Remiſſion of his Sins, and that a good Diſpoſition is ſufficient for an entire Converſion.

In the Second, directed to Faricius Abbot of Abbington; he proves, That Children who die without receiving Baptiſm are damned.

The Third, is a Complimental Letter to Margaret Queen of England.

The Fourth, is a Conſolatory Letter to one of his Friends, who was unjuſtly ſlandered.

The Laſt Letter is written againſt Roſcelin; in which he ſhews, That the Sons of Prieſts are uncapable of being admitted into Holy Orders.

Radulphus Ardens.

RADULPHUS ſirnam'd ARDENS, a Native of Poitiers and Chaplain to William III. Duke of Aquitaine, flouriſh'd in the beginning of this Century. He compos'd a great number of Sermons on the Sundays and Feſtivals of the Year, printed at Paris, A. D. 1568. & 1583. at Antwerp in 1576. and at Colen in 1604.

Odo Biſhop of Cambray.

ODO, Abbot of St. Martin at Tournay, was ordain'd Biſhop of Cambray, A. D. 1105. and expell'd for refuſing to receive the Inveſtiture from the Emperor Henry IV. He retir'd to Doway and died there in 1113. He wrote a Commentary upon the Canon of the Maſs, in which he explains the Text literally, with a kind of Paraphraſe: Three very Scholaſtick Books concerning Original Sin: A Treatiſe in form of a Dialogue againſt a Jew, touching the neceſſity of the Incarnation of the Son of God, and of the Grace of JESUS CHRIST: Another of the Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt: A Tract to explain the Harmony of the Evangeliſts, and a Sermon on the Parable of the unjuſt Steward. There is a great deal of Philoſophy in theſe Treatiſes.

Gilbert Biſhop of Limerick.

GILBERT, Biſhop of Limerick in Ireland, and the Pope's Legate in that Country, held a Council there A. D. 1110. to regulate the Limits of the Biſhopricks of that Kingdom, and aſſiſted in 1115. at the Ordination of Bernard Biſhop of St. David's, which was perform'd at Weſtminſter. But being no longer able to diſcharge the Functions of his Legateſhip, he reſign'd it to the Pope in 1139. and died a little while after. He wrote a ſmall Tract about the State of the Church, and two Letters, viz. one to the Biſhops and Prieſts of Ireland, and the other to St. Anſelm Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, which are inſerted in the Collection of the Letters of Ireland, publiſh'd by Arch-biſhop Uſher.

Franco Abbot of Affligem

FRANCO, the ſecond Abbot of the Monaſtery of Affligem near Bruxels, compos'd in the beginning of the Century, Twelve Books concerning the Grace and Mercy of God, which contain an Hiſtory of the principal Benefices that God has beſtow'd on Men from the Creation of the World, to the day of everlaſting Happineſs: A Letter in which he ſhews, That a Monk, who has quitted his Habit and Profeſſion cannot be ſaved: Another Letter directed to certain Nuns, to ſerve them inſtead of a Conſolation and Exhortation. The Poetical Piece about the Glory of the future State, apparently is not different from certain Copies of Verſes on that Subject, which are to be found at the end of his Twelfth Book of the Grace of God; but his Sermons on the Virgin Mary, mention'd by Trithemius, are no longer extant. This Author was made Abbot, A. D. 1111. and died under Pope Innocent II. He began theſe Works being as yet a ſimple Monk and compleated them, when advanc'd to the Dignity of an Abbot.

William de Champeaux.

WILLIAM de CHAMPEAUX, ſo call'd from the Name of the Village of Champeaux near Melun in the Province of Brie, after having apply'd himſelf to ſtudy at Laon under Anſelm Dean of the Cathedral Church of that City, was ordain'd Arch-deacon of Paris, and appointed to read Lectures of Logick in the Schools of that Church. Some time after, he retir'd with ſome of his Pupils to a Monaſtery, in which was St. Victor's Chappel near Paris, and there founded the Abbey of Regular Canons. He continu'd to teach in that Convent, and (as it is generally believ'd) was the firſt publick Profeſſor of Scholaſtick Divinity. He was made Biſhop of Chalons, A. D. 1113. and died in the end of the Month of January, 1121. 'Tis very probable, that being a Perſon of ſo great Learning, he wrote ſome Works, yet we have none of them in our Poſſeſſion: For the Dialogue between a Chriſtian and a Jew, which was publiſh'd under his Name in the Bibliotheca Patrum of the laſt Edition at Lyons, belongs to Gilbert of Weſtminſter. However, 'tis reported that he wrote a Book of Sentences before Peter Lombard, of which a Manuſcript Copy is ſtill kept in the Library of Notre Dame at Paris.

Stephen Biſhop of Autun.

STEPHEN, ordain'd Biſhop of Autun in the Year 1113. left that Biſhoprick in 1129. to turn Monk in the Abbey of Cluny, and ſpent the reſt of his Life there. He is the Author of a Treatiſe concerning the Prayers and Ceremonies of the Maſs, and about the Functions of the Miniſters of the Altar, ſet forth by John de Montalon, Canon and Chanter of Autun, and inſerted in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

Gautier Biſhop of Maguelone.

GAUTIER or GAUTERIUS, Biſhop of Maguelone in Languedoc and the Pope's Legate, govern'd that Biſhoprick from A. D. 1103. to 1129. He publiſh'd in the beginning of the Century a Treatiſe call'd Flowers on the Pſalms, compoſed by Letbert or Lietbert Abbot of St. Rufus, and dedicated it to Robert Provoſt of Liſle, his Kinſman, and to the Chapter of that Church, by an Epiſtle which Father Mabillon has ſet forth in the firſt Tome of his Analecta.

DROGO or DREUX, Prior of St. Nicaſius at Rheims, was conſtituted the firſt Abbot of St. John at Laon, by Bartholomew Biſhop of that City, A. D. 1128. and afterwards invited to Rome in 1136. by Pope Innocent II. who made him a Cardinal and Biſhop of Oſtia. He wrote the following Tracts, viz. a Sermon on the Paſſion of JESUS CHRIST: A Treatiſe of the Creation and Redemption of the firſt Man: Another of the ſeven Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, and a third on the Divine Offices. This Author died in 1138. Drogo Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia.

PETER the Library keeper of Mount Caſſin, was put into that Monaſtery, A. D. 1115. being then aged only eleven Years, by his Father nam'd Giles, who was deſcended of a noble Family at Rome. After having compleated his Studies under the Abbot Girard, from whom he receiv'd the Monaſtick Habit, he was made Deacon of the Church of Oſtia, and Library keeper of Mount Caſſin. He was turn'd out of that Monaſtery in 1128. through the envy of his Collegues; and afterwards employ'd in ſeveral Negociations by the Emperor Lotharius, who gave him good Entertainment in his Court, and conſtituted him his Chaplain and Secretary of State: He compos'd a Treatiſe of the Illuſtrious Perſonages of Mount Caſſin, printed at Rome in 1655. and inſerted in the laſt Bibliotheca Patrum. He is likewiſe the Author of the Fourth Book of the Chronicle of Mount Caſſin, and of another Tract about the Roman Letters, dedicated to the Emperor Conrad, which was printed at Venice in 1525. In the laſt Chapter of his Treatiſe of Illuſtrious Perſonages, he gives us a Catalogue of his Works; in which are reckon'd up, the Lives of divers Saints; ſeveral Sermons; the Hiſtory of the famous Men of Mount Caſſin; an Expoſition of St. Benedict's Rule; certain Scholia or Notes on the Old Teſtament; and Hymns; divers Books relating to Hiſtory or Humane Learning, and ſome Letters. Peter Library keeper of Mount Caſſin.

His Book of the Illuſtrious Perſonages of Mount Caſſin, was continu'd by RICHARD Abbot of that Monaſtery, who died in the following Century. Theſe two Writers (after St. Jerom's Example) uſually produce a Catalogue of the Works of thoſe Authors who are mention'd by them. Richard Abbot of Mount Caſſin.

ANSELM, Biſhop of Havelberg, in the Marquiſate of Brandenburg, flouriſh'd under the Emperor Lotharius II. who ſent him in quality of his Ambaſſador to the Court of the Greek Emperor at Conſtantinople. He had divers Conferences there, about Matters of Religion, which were afterwards collected by him, and committed to writing in three Books, dedicated to Pope Eugenius III. This Work was publiſh'd by Father Luke Dachery in the Thirteenth Tome of his Spicilegium. In the firſt Book, he ſhews, That Faith was always the ſame, even from the Creation of the World, although Cuſtoms and the particular manner of Living were different, He applys to the ſeven States of the Church, what is expreſs'd in the Apocalypſe, concerning the opening of the ſeven Seals, and the Horſes that went out as they were open'd. The firſt is that of the Primitive Church, famous for its Miracles, and the purity of the Faith and Manners of the Believers: The ſecond is that of the Church, perſecuted by the Jews and Gentiles: The third is that of the Church, infeſted by Hereſies: The fourth is that of the Church, full of falſe Brethren and Hypocrites; to whom he oppoſes the Orders of Monks and Regular Canons: The fifth is the State of the Souls of the Righteous, who are at reſt, waiting for the Reſurrection: The ſixth is the Perſecution raiſed by Antichriſt; and the laſt is the State of everlaſting Happineſs. In the ſecond Book, compos'd by way of Dialogue, between himſelf and an Arch-biſhop of Nicomedia; he confutes the Opinion of the Greeks, touching the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, and diſcuſſes divers Queſtions relating to the Myſtery of the Trinity. The third is likewiſe written in form of a Conference with the ſame Arch-biſhop, about the other Controverſies that were on foot, between the Greeks and the Latins; more eſpecially as to what concerns the uſe of Unleaven'd Bread, in the ſacred Myſteries, Primacy, and the Authority of the Church of Rome, which he vigorouſly maintains. In like manner, he inveighs againſt the Cuſtom of the Greeks, who were wont to put no Water in the Chalice, till after the Conſecration, and cenſures another Cuſtom that prevail'd among them, viz. to make uſe of Unction, upon the reception of thoſe Latins, who were admitted into their Communion. Laſtly, a General Council is propos'd on both ſides to procure the Re-union of the two Churches. This Treatiſe is learned and very accurately written. Anſelm Biſhop of Havelberg.

HERVÆUS, a Benedictin Monk of Dol, flouriſh'd in the Year of our Lord 1130. He wrote a Commentary on St. Paul's Epiſtles, which is annex'd to St. Anſelm's Works of the Colen Edition. Father Labbe aſſures us, that there is alſo extant a large Manuſcript Commentary on the Prophecy of Iſaiah by this Author, in the Library of the College of Clermont. An account of his Life is continu'd in a Circulatory Letter written by the Monks of that Monaſtery after his death. They alſo produce a Catalogue of his Works; which are, an Expoſition of the Book call'd, The Hierarchy of the Angels, attributed to St. Dionyſius the Areopagite: Certain Commentaries on the Book of Iſaiah, on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, on the end of the Prophecy of Ezekiel, on the Books of Deuteronomy, Eccleſiaſtes, Judges, Ruth and Tobit; in which he applys himſelf to illuſtrate the literal Senſe, for the benefit of Perſons of a mean Capacity: A large Commentary on St. Paul's Epiſtles: Another on the Twelve leſſer Prophets, and on the Book of Geneſis: Divers Sermons on the Goſpels, and on ſome of the Canticles: A Treatiſe of the Leſſons that are read in the Churches, in which he ſhews the different readings of thoſe Leſſons from the Sacred Text: A Book of the Hervæus a Benedictin Monk of Dol.

Miracles

Miracles of the Virgin Mary; and an Explication of the Treatiſe of the Lord's Supper, attributed to St. Cyprian.

Hugh de Foliet a Monk of Corby.

HUGH de FOLIET, a Monk of Corby, flouriſh'd A. D. 1130. and compos'd divers Treatiſes, which are aſcrib'd to Hugh of St. Victor, viz. The four Books of the Cloiſter of the Soul: That of the Phyſick of the Soul: The two firſt Books of Birds, dedicated to Rainier: Two Books of the Carnal and Spiritual Wedding: A Treatiſe of the ſhunning of Marriage: And a Piece call'd, The Sinner's Mirrour, printed among the ſuppoſititious Works of St. Auguſtin.

Stephen Biſhop of Paris.

STEPHEN, Biſhop of Paris, had a Conteſt in the Year 1132. with an Arch-deacon of his Dioceſs, who had unadviſedly ſuſpended the People of his Arch-deaconry from Divine Service, and with Stephen de Guarlande his Adverſary. Theſe Quarrels are the Subject of divers Letters written by this Prelate, by Henry Arch-biſhop of Sens, by Geffrey Biſhop of Chartres, by the Clergy of Paris, and by ſome others, which are inſerted in the Third Tome of Father Dachery's Spicilegium, page 153. & ſequ.

Hugh Arch-biſhop of Roan.

HUGH paſs'd over from Amiens, the place of his Nativity, into England, and was made Abbot of Redding in that Kingdom. Afterwards he was choſen Arch-biſhop of Roan, and conſecrated A. D. 1130. He was one of the greateſt, moſt pious, and moſt learned Prelates of his time, and govern'd the Church of Roan with a great deal of Reputation, to the Year 1164. which was that of his death. He wrote three Books to ſerve as an Inſtruction for the Clergy of his Dioceſs, againſt the Hereticks of his time. In the firſt, after having explain'd in a few Words, what ought to be believ'd concerning the Trinity and the Incarnation; he treats of the Sacraments of Baptiſm, Confirmation, and the Lord's Supper, and confutes the Errors of thoſe Hereticks, who deny the neceſſity of Baptiſm, more eſpecially of that of Infants, and the uſefulneſs and neceſſiety of the Euchariſt. In the ſecond, he treats of Holy Orders, and of Eccleſiaſtical Functions. In the laſt, he diſcourſes of the Dignity of the Clergy; Of the Manners of Clerks; Of the Celebacy which they are obliged to obſerve; Of the Vow of Chaſtity; Of Unity, and of other Marks of the Catholick Church. There are alſo two Letters written by this Arch-biſhop, viz. one dedicated to Thierry or Theodoric Biſhop of Amiens, concerning the Abſolution that was granted to Penitents, who took care of the building of the Church, provided they made Confeſſion of their Sins, did Penance, and were reconcil'd with their Enemies: The ſecond is a complimental Letter to the Count of Toulouſe. Theſe Pieces were publiſh'd by Father Luke Dachery, at the end of the Works of Guibert of Nogent.

Hugh Metellus a Regular Canon.

HUGO METELLUS, a Regular Canon of the Abbey of St. Leon in the Dioceſs of Toul, and the Pupil of St. Anſelm at Laon, flouriſh'd in the beginning of this Century, and wrote divers Letters which are to be found in Manuſcript, in the Library of the Jeſuits College at Clermont. Father Mabillon caus'd one of them to be printed in the Third Tome of his Analecta, which was directed to a certain Monk nam'd Gerard or Gerland; and in which he proves the real Preſence of the Body of JESUS CHRIST in the Euchariſt, and anſwers the Paſſages of St. Auguſtin, on which that Monk grounded his Doubts, as to that Article.

Thomas Abbot of Maurigny

THOMAS, Abbot of Maurigny, wrote a Letter to St. Bernard, which is contain'd in the Miſcellaneous Works by M. Baluzius, Tom. 4. p. 459.

Bernard Monk of Cluny.

Under the Tuition of Peter, Abbot of Cluny, there was a certain Engliſh Monk of that Convent, nam'd BERNARD, who dedicated to him three Books on the Contempt of the World, in riming Verſe. This Work was printed at ſeveral times in Germany, particularly at Bremen in 1597. and at Luneburg in 1640.

Ulger Biſhop of Angers.

ULGER, Biſhop of Angers, ſent a Letter to Pope Innocent II. on behalf of the Abbey of St. Mary at Roe, which was at variance with that of Vendome, about the Right they claim'd to a certain Church. This Prelate not only obtain'd his Requeſt of the Pope, but alſo a peculiar Privilege in favour of the Abbey of Roe, and another for his own Church at Angers. This Letter and a Copy of thoſe two Privileges were ſet forth by M. Baluzius in the ſecond Tome of his Miſcellaneous Works. Ulger likewiſe made an Encomium in Verſe on Marbodus Biſhop of Rennes, which is prefix'd to the Works of that Author.

Rodulphus Abbot of St. Trudo.

RODULPHUS, a Native of Munſter, after having follow'd his Studies for ſome time at Liege, travell'd into Germany, during which Journey, he took a Reſolution to embrace the Monaſtick Life, and enter'd divers Monaſteries: But finding none that were well regulated, he retir'd at laſt to that of St. Trudo or St. Tron in the Dioceſs of Liege, which was leſs irregular than the others, and the Inſtruction of the young Monks was committed to his Care. Thierry, who was then Abbot, choſe him for Prior; and they both us'd their utmoſt endeavours jointly to bring about an entire Reformation of that Monaſtery. Upon the death of Thierry, Rodulphus was elected Abbot in his place, A. D. 1108. but his Monaſtery was pillag'd and burnt a little while after. However, he reſtor'd it to its former State, yet was expell'd from thence, and took two Journies to Rome. He in like manner reform'd the Monaſtery of St. Pantaleon at Colen, made Sibert one of the Monks of his Abbey, Prior of it, and died after the Year 1136.

Rodulphus Compos'd a Chronicle of the Abbey of St. Trudo, from its firſt Foundation to the Year 1136. which was publiſh'd by Father Dachery, in the Seventh Tome of the Spicilegium. It is very large, and divided into Thirteen Books, the Five laſt of which contain a Relation of the Affairs that were Tranſacted in his time in that Abbey.

He is likewiſe the Author of the Life of St. Lietbert, Biſhop of Cambray, which is annexed at the end of the Seventh Tome of the Spicilegium. Beſides, theſe Pieces, he compil'd ſeveral other Works, more eſpecially a Treatiſe againſt Simoniſts, divided into Seven Books, which Father Mabillon found in Manuſcript in the Library of Gemblours, with a Letter written by Sibert, Prior of St. Pantaleon, to Rodulphus, and the Anſwer that was made to it by the latter.

We ſhall here ſubjoin the Arguments of the Books of Simony, as they are related by Father Mabillon. Rodulphus ſhews in the Firſt Book, that Simony is the firſt and greateſt Hereſie. In the Second, he complains of an Abuſe that was then predominant, viz. that there was nothing that belong'd to the Houſe of God, that was not expos'd to Sale. In the Third, he gives an account, after what manner Spiritual Livings are diſpos'd of in the Country: In the Fourth, he deſcribes the manner of Trading for Prebends, and other more conſiderable Benefices. In the Fifth, he ſays, that perhaps it might be objected againſt him, that he endeavour'd to conceal the Simoniacal Practices that were committed by the Monks, and relates the Cenſures that were paſs'd frequently upon them. In the Laſt, he returns an Anſwer to the Objections, and clears them from that Imputation.

Father Mabillon has publiſh'd a certain Letter written by SIBERT, of whom we have already made mention, and Rodulphus's Anſwer. Sibert is deſirous to be inform'd by that Prelate, what Anſwer ought to be made to a certain rich and covetous Perſon, who deſign'd to put his Son into the Monaſtery of St. Pantaleon, without giving him his Portion; that is to ſay, whether the Monks ought to exact any thing of the Party, or to receive him Gratis. Rodulphus does two things in his Reply: On the one ſide, he condemns the Avarice of that rich Man, and accuſes him of a kind of Sacrilege, in regard that having determined to dedicate his Son to God, he denies him that ſhare of his Eſtate, which belongs to him by right of Inheritance: He obſerves alſo, that the Monaſteries are not eſtabliſh'd for the benefit of Opulent Families, but to receive and maintain the Poor, who are devoted to the Service of God. On the other ſide, Rodulphus does not allow the Monks to exact any thing for the Reception of Children, and ſays, That they would do well to admoniſh their Parents, that 'tis their Duty to offer part of the Hereditary Portion of their Children, but that they ought not to be Conſtrain'd to do it by force: That as the Monaſtery may either admit or reject a Monk according to Diſcretion; ſo the Parents ought to be left at liberty, either to beſtow Children in ſuch a manner, or to retain them, and that nothing can be exacted for the Admiſſion of a Monk, without incurring the Guilt of Simony. For (ſays he) every Thing that is exacted, or is demanded, or even every Thing that is done in hopes of getting a Recompence, as for what relates to Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, is Simony, and altho' it does not appear ſo to the Eyes of Men, nevertheleſs 'tis look'd upon as ſuch by God. At the end of this Letter, a Diſcourſe is ſubjoin'd, in which he adviſes thoſe who take upon them the Monaſtick Vows, to divide their Eſtate into three Parts; to the end, that one may be given to the Poor, another to the Monaſtery where they retire, and the third to be left to their Family. He likewiſe exhorts Parents who would make their Sons Monks, to allow them ſome part of their Hereditary Portion to be brought along with them into the Monaſtery, where they are admitted.

Sibert, Prior of St. Pantaleon.

Rodulphus wrote in an indifferent good Style, was well vers'd in the Canon Law and Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions, and had perus'd the Writings of the Latin Fathers.

WASELINUS, ſirnam'd MOMALIUS, Prior of the Monaſtery of St. Laurence, in the Suburbs of Liege, who died A. D. 1147. wrote a Letter directed to Gauſelin, Abbot of St. Florin, in the ſame Dioceſs, in which he Debates this Queſtion, viz. Whether a Man and his Wife, who have coupl'd together Carnally in the Night preceding a Feſtival, may receive the Communion the next Day? He makes it appear by many Arguments and Authorities cited to that purpoſe, that Continency is enjoyn'd thoſe Perſons who are deſirous to partake of the Holy Sacraments; nevertheleſs, he is of Opinion that thoſe, who having fallen in the Night into that inconveniency thro' frailty, may be admitted to the Communion, provided they beg Pardon of God the next day, make Confeſſion of their Offence; and do Penance for it. Laſtly, he leaves it to the Diſcretion of the Prieſt, either to permit them to Communicate, or to deny them that Privilege. This Letter was Publiſh'd by Father Mabillon, in the firſt Tome of his Analecta.

Waſelinus Momalius, Prior of St. Laurence at Liege.

AMEDEUS, Abbot of Haute-Combe, a Monaſtery of the Ciſtercian Order, and ſometime Biſhop of Lauſanna, viz. from A. D. 1144. to 1149. is reputed to be the Author of Eight Sermons, in Commendation of the Virgin Mary, which were Printed at firſt at Baſil, in 1537. afterwards Publiſh'd by Richard Gibſon, Jeſuit, Printed at Antwerp, in 1600. and inſerted in the Collection of Sermons written by St. Leo, and other Fathers, as alſo in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

Amedeus, Biſhop of Lauſanna.

POTHO.

Potho, Monk of Prom.

POTHO, a Monk of Prom, flouriſh'd under the Emperor Conrad, and wrote Five very Myſtical Books, on the State of the Houſe of God, that is to ſay, of the Church-Militant and Triumphant, in which he produces a great number of very abſtruſe Notions, as well as in another Treatiſe call'd, The Palace of Wiſdom.

Philip, Biſhop of Taranto.

PHILIP, Biſhop of Taranto, the Favourer of Leo the Antipope, was depos'd upon that account in the Council of Lateran, held A. D. 1139. and retir'd to the Monaſtery of Clairvaux, where he receiv'd the Habit of a Monk from St. Bernard. He was made Prior of that Convent in 1150. and Six Years after, Abbot of the Alms-Monaſtery of the Ciſtercian Order, in the Dioceſs of Chartres. Some time before the end of his Life, he return'd to Clairvaux, and died there. Charles de Wiſch, has annexed at the end of his Collection of the Authors of the Ciſtercian Order, Twenty five Letters, which (as he ſays) belong to this Philip.

Serlo, Monk of Ceriſy.

SERLO, a Monk of Ceriſy, choſen Abbot of Savigny, A. D. 1146. Compos'd divers Sermons which were Publiſhed by Father Tiſſier, in the Sixth Tome of the Bibliotheca Ciſtercienſis. He retir'd to Ciſteaux, not long before his Death, which happen'd in 1158. There is alſo to be ſeen in M. Colbert's Library, a certain Manuſcript, which contains a Treatiſe by Serlo, on the Lord's Prayer.

Gauterius of Mauritania, Biſhop of Laon.

GAUTIER, or GAUTERIUS, of MAURITANIA, Biſhop of Laon, flouriſh'd in the Year 1150. and wrote ſeveral Letters publiſhed by Father Dachery, in the Second Tome of his Spicilegium.

The Firſt is directed to a certain Monk nam'd William, who doubted whether Children Baptized by Hereticks, receiv'd the Spiritual Grace appropriated to that Sacrament: He proves the Affirmative, becauſe it is JESUS CHRIST, who effectually Adminiſters Baptiſm.

In the Second, he explains the Myſtery of the Incarnation.

In the Third, he confutes the Opinion of a certain Doctor nam'd Thierry, who maintain'd, That God was Omnipreſent by his Power, but not by his Eſſence.

In the Fourth, he oppoſes the Opinion of another Doctor call'd Albericus, who aſſerted, That JESUS CHRIST was not afraid to Die, and was not ſenſible of any Grief or Trouble before his Paſſion. Gauterius explains, in what Senſe Death might be formidable to our Saviour, and of what ſort of Fear and Sorrow he was capable.

In the Fifth, he reproves Peter Abaelard, for going about to give a Definitive Explanation of the Myſtery of the Trinity, and to Demonſtrate it by Reaſon, and oppoſes in particular, ſome of the Propoſitions that he aſſerted, or which were maintain'd by his Followers.

The Laſt is a Letter directed to Hugh of St. Victor, and publiſhed by Father Matou, in his Notes on Robert Pullus.

Wolbero, Abbot of St. Pantaleon at Colen.

WOLBERO, Abbot of St. Pantaleon at Colen, Compos'd in the Year 1150. a Commentary on the Book of Canticles, divided into Four Books, and Printed at Colen in 1650. This Author died in 1167.

Luke, Abbot of St. Cornelius.

LUKE, Abbot of St. Cornelius, of the Order of Premontre near Liege, in like manner wrote a Commentary on the Song of Solomon, which was Extracted out of that of Aponius, and Dedicated to Milo, Biſhop of Terouane. This Abbot died in 1157. and his Book was Printed at Friburg in 1538. as alſo in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

Bartholomew de Foigny, Biſhop of Laon.

BARTHOLOMEW DE FOIGNY, Biſhop of Laon, was ſuſpended, A. D. 1142. by Ives, Cardinal and Pope Innocent II's Legate, for Authorizing the unlawful Divorce of Radulphus, Count of Vermandois from his Wife. Afterwards he made an entire Reſignation of his Biſhoprick, and enter'd into a Monaſtery of the Ciſtercian Order. He wrote a Letter to Samſon, Arch-biſhop of Rheims, to clear himſelf from an Accuſation that was brought againſt him, for waſting the Revenues of the Biſhoprick of Laon; by ſhewing, that what he had beſtow'd on the Cathedral and on the other Churches of his Dioceſs, that ſtood in need of ſome Supplies, was but a very ſmall Matter, and that his Succeſſor, would be to blame if he depriv'd them of it. This Letter is to be found in the laſt Collection of the Councils. Tom. 10. p. 1184.

Radulphus Niger, Monk of St. Germer.

RADULPHUS NIGER, a Monk of St. Germer, in the Dioceſs of Beauvais, flouriſh'd A. D. 1157. and Compos'd Twenty Books of Commentaries on that of Leviticus, Printed in the Seventeenth Tome of the laſt Bibliotheca Patrum. Another Commentary on the Book of Canticles is likewiſe attributed to him, which was inſerted among St. Gregory's Works; and 'tis alſo reported, that he wrote a Commentary on St. Paul's Epiſtles, an Hiſtory of France, and a Chronicle; but we have no knowledge of theſe Works.

St. Ælred, Abbot of Reverby.

S. ÆLRED, or S. ETHELRED, of the Ciſtercian Order, Abbot of Reverby, in the Province of York in England, flouriſh'd in the middle of the Twelfth Century, and died A. D. 1166. He addicted himſelf to a Spiritual Life, and affected to imitate St. Bernard in his manner of writing. The following Works written by him are ſtill Extant, viz. Thirty Sermons on the Thirteenth Chapter of Iſaiah, concerning the Calamities of Babylon, and of the Philiſtins, and Moabites: A Treatiſe call'd, The Mirrour of Charity, divided into Three Books, with the Abridgment of that Treatiſe: Three Books of the Spiritual Friendſhip, and a Discourse on these Words of St. Luke, JESUS CHRIST being aged Twelve Years: A Fragment of his History of England, and Twenty five Sermons Printed in the Bibliotheca Cistercienſis. His Mirrour of Charity is a very fine Piece, full of solid Maxims on the Love of God, and on other Christian Virtues. In the Treatise of Friendship, which is Compos'd in form of a Dialogue, he shews, That there can be no true Amity, but amongst Christian and Virtuous Persons. Surius has publish'd divers Lives of English Saints under the name of this Author, but he wrote them himself in his Style. We have also among the Historians of England the Life of St. Edward, written by St. Ælred, and some other Historical Tracts relating to the Affairs of that Kingdom. His other Works were set forth by Gilbo the Jesuit, and printed at Doway, A. D. 1631. as also in the Bibliotheca Cistercienſis, and in the last Bibliotheca Patrum. The Rule for Nuns falsly attributed to St. Auguſtin, is inserted under the Name of St. Ælred, in the Collection of Rules published by Holstenius; and Gilbert of Hoiland, has made an Encomium on the same Saint, in the Continuation of St. Auguſtin's Commentary on the Book of Psalms.

and

S. HILDEGARDA, born at Spanheim in Germany, A. D. 1098. was the Daughter of Hildebert and Mathilda; she received the Vail at the Age of Eight Years, and in process of time was chosen Abbess of St. Rupert's Mount near Binghen on the Rhine. The Fame of her Revelations and Miracles, procur'd her so great Reputation, that when Pope Eugenius III. came to Trier in 1148. Henry Arch-bishop of Mentz, and St. Bernard took an opportunity to acquaint him with the wonderful Operations that God perform'd by his Servant Hildegarda; insomuch that the Pope being much surpriz'd at the Relation, sent Albert Bishop of Verdun with some other Persons worthy of Credit, privately to make an Enquiry into the Truth of what was reported concerning that Nun. These Persons having interrogated her, she gave them a plain Account of her Condition, and deliver'd to them several Books, which she avouch'd to have written by Divine Inspiration. The Pope caus'd them to be read publickly in the presence of all the Prelates, and perus'd a considerable part of them himself: Whereupon all the Assistants were surpriz'd, and entreated his Holiness not to suffer so great a Light to be extinguish'd. Then the Pope wrote a Letter to Hildegarda, to Congratulate her upon account of those transcendent Graces which God had bestow'd on her, and to exhort her to preserve them; granting her at the same time a permission to reside in the Place that she had chosen, to lead a Regular course of Life with the other Nuns, according to St. Benedict's Rule. The Popes who succeeded Eugenius, viz. Anaſtaſius IV. Adrian IV. and Alexander III. honour'd her in like manner with their Letters and Admonitions, as well as the Arch-bishops of Mentz, Colen, Trier, Saltsburg, and many other Prelates of Germany, not to mention the Emperors Conrad and Frederick: She returned an Answer to their Letters, without deviating from her Character, that is to say, in a Mystical and Prophetical Style. The Collection of all these Letters is still Extant, with divers Visions directed to particular Persons; Answers to several Questions about the Holy Scriptures, and certain Explications of St. Benedict's Rule, and of St. Athanaſius's Creed. These Works were printed at Colen, A. D. 1566. and in the Bibliotheca Patrum. There are also Three Books of Revelations which bear the name of this Saint, printed with those of St. Brigit at Paris, in 1533. and at Colen, in 1628. St. Hildegarda died in 1180. and her Life was written in 1200. by Thierry or Theodoric, an Abbot of the same Order of St. Benedict.

St. Hildegarda, Abbess of St. Rupert's Mount.

Thierry, Abbot of the Order of St. Benedict,

S. ELIZABETH, Abbess of Schonaw, in the Dioceſs of Trier, near the Monastery of St. Florin, which her Brother Ecbert govern'd in Quality of Abbot, was likewise famous for her Revelations. She flouriſh'd A. D. 1155. and died in 1165. aged 36 Years. There are Three Books of Visions or Revelations, written by this Saint, and a Volume of Letters printed at Colen, in 1628. Her Brother ECBERT Compos'd, besides the Thirteen Discourses, against the Cathari, of which we have already made mention, the Life of his Sister, which is prefix'd to her Revelations: 'Tis also reported that he was the Author of some other Letters.

St. Elizabeth Abbess of Schonaw.

Ecbert, Abbot of St. Florin.

ODO, a Regular Canon of St. Auguſtin, wrote A. D. 1160. Seven Letters about the Duties and Functions of Regular Canons, which are inserted in the Second Tome of the Spicilegium, by Father Luke Dachery.

Odo, a Regular Canon.

JOHN of CORNWALL, had Peter Lombard for his Tutor, but afterwards fell at variance with him upon several occasions. He studied for a long time at Rome, and obtained a great share of the Favours of Pope Alexander III. We have not any of his Works printed, but Dr. Cave mentions two Manuscript Treatises of this Author, viz. one Dedicated to Pope Alexander, under the Title of A Diſcuſſion of Humane Philoſophy, and of Hereſies; and the other call'd A Summary of the Manner how the Sacrament of the Altar is made by the Vertue of the Croſs, and of the Seven Canons or Orders of the Maſs.

John of Cornwall.

In the time of Pope Alexander III. FOLMAR, Provost of Trieffenſtein, near Wurtzburg in Franconia, was accus'd of maintaining the Errors of Neſtorius and Elipandus, concerning the Person and Adoption of JESUS CHRIST, and of spreading them abroad in Bavaria. Two Monks of that Country, viz. GEROCHUS, Provost of the Abbey of Reicherſperg, Folmar, Provost of Trieffenſtein.

Gerochus, Provoſt of Reicherſperg. A nameleſs Dean of Reicherſperg.

Reicherſperg, and another who was Dean of the ſame Monaſtery, wrote againſt him; the former in a Treatiſe of Antichriſt, and the other in a Book written on purpoſe. Their Works are ſtill Extant in the Libraries of Germany, according to the report of Stevart, who aſſures us, that they are worthy to be brought to light; altho' thoſe Authors ſeem to have fallen into an Error directly oppoſite to that of the Eutychians, or Ubiquitarians, in maintaining, That the Divine Perfections paſs'd into the Humane Nature of JESUS CHRIST, and that the latter is become equal to the Godhead. Stevart has produc'd in his Collection the Epiſtle Dedicatory of the Dean of Reicherſperg's Treatiſe, directed to Henry, Dean of the Church of Wurtzburg, and it is alſo inſerted in the Twenty third Tome of the laſt Edition of the Bibliotheca Patrum.

Gilbert Foliot, Biſhop of London.

GILBERT FOLIOT, an Engliſh Man by Nation, and Abbot of Lieceſter, was tranſlated A. D. 1161. from the Biſhoprick of Hereford, which he obtain'd in 1149. to that of London, and was one of the principal Adverſaries of Thomas Becket, Arch-biſhop of Canterbury. He wrote a Commentary on the Book of Canticles, which was publiſh'd by Junius, and printed in Quarto at London, in 1638. There are alſo Seven of his Letters in the Collection of thoſe of Thomas Becket. He died in 1187.

Philip of Harvenge, Abbot of Bonne Eſperance.

PHILIP of HARVENGE, Abbot of Bonne Eſperance, of the Order of Premontre in Hainaut, ſirnamed the Alms-giver, by reaſon of his extraordinary liberality to the Poor, flouriſh'd A. D. 1150. and died in 1180. His Works were publiſhed by Nicolas Chamart, Abbot of Bonne Eſperance, and printed at Douay, in 1621. according to the following Catalogue, viz. Twenty one Letters: A Commentary on the Canticles: Moral Obſervations on the ſame Book. Several Diſcourſes on King Nebuchadnezzar's Dream, on Adam's Fall, and on the Damnation of King Solomon: Six Treatiſes of the Dignity, Learning, Uprightneſs, Continency, Obedience, and Silence of Clergy-men. A Relation of the Lives of St. Auguſtin, Biſhop of Hippon, and of St. Amand, Abbot of Tongres: The Paſſion of St. Cyricius, and St. Julitta, with that of St. Salvius: The Lives of St. Foillan, St. Giſlen, St. Landelin, St. Ida, and St. Valtruda: The Paſſion of St. Agnes in Elegiack Verſe, with divers other Poetical Pieces, and ſome Epitaphs.

Adamus Scotus, a Regular Canon.

ADAMUS SCOTUS, a Regular Canon of St. Auguſtin, of the Order of Premontre, flouriſh'd A. D. 1160. and died in 1180. He Compos'd a Commentary on St. Auguſtin's Rule: A Treatiſe of the Triple Tabernacle of Moſes: Another of the three kinds of Contemplation, and Forty ſeven Sermons. Thoſe Works were printed at Antwerp in 1695. and Father Ouden ſays, That he ſaw Fifty three other Sermons, and a Soliloquy of the Soul, by the ſame Author, in the Library of the Celeſtine Fathers of Mante.

Joan. Eurgundus, a Magiſtrate of Piſa.

JOANNES BURGUNDUS, a Magiſtrate and Citizen of Piſa, was ſent to Conſtantinople, to negotiate certain Affairs for that Republick at the Court of the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, where he met with ſome Copies of St. Chryſoſtom's Homilies, on St. John and St. Matthew, and tranſlated them into Latin. He likewiſe tranſlated St. John Damaſcenus's Treatiſe of the Orthodox Faith, and Nemeſius's Eight Books of Philoſophy. The latter of thoſe Works was printed at Strasburg, in 1512. This Author flouriſh'd in 1150. and died in 1184. His Tranſlations are not very polite, but extremely faithful.

Peter of Riga, Canon of Rheims.

PETER of RIGA, Chanter and Canon of the Church of Rheims, flouriſh'd A. D. 1170. He Compos'd Seven Books under the Title of Aurora, which contain the Two Books of Kings, and the Four Goſpels in Verſe, according to the Literal and Allegorical Senſe. This Piece is ſtill to be found in the Libraries; and Father Oudin aſſures us, That he had them all ready to be printed. However the Publick may well excuſe him from taking that pains, without ſuffering much detriment; in regard that ſuch ſort of Works are of no great uſefulneſs.

Henry, Arch-biſhop of Rheims.

HENRY, Arch-biſhop of Rheims, diſpatch'd two Letters, A. D. 1170. in favour of Dreux, Chancellor of the Church of Noyon, whom Pope Alexander III. determin'd to condemn, viz. one to the Cardinals, and the other to the Pope himſelf: They are both written with a great deal of Freedom, and he complains, that nothwithſtanding the ſignal Services he had done to the Holy See, ſo little regard was had to Perſons, for whom he had a particular Eſteem. However the Pope, return'd a very Civil Anſwer, without granting his Requeſt, ſhewing, That if he did not do what was expected, it ought not to be inferr'd from thence, that he was not deſirous by all means to give him Satisfaction; but that the preſent Conjuncture of Affairs, would not admit of ſuch a Compliance. Both the Letters written by this Arch-biſhop, were publiſh'd by M. Baluzius, in the Second Tome of his Miſcellaneous Works.

Robertus Paululus, Prieſt of Amiens.

ROBERTUS PAULULUS, a Prieſt of Amiens, Compos'd A. D. 1178. Three Books of the Offices of the Church, which were printed ſeperately, and under the Name of Hugh of St. Victor, among the Works of that Author. The Treatiſe call'd the Canon of the Myſtical Purification, which is alſo inſerted among the Works of Hugh of St. Victor, ought in like manner to be reſtor'd to the ſame Robert of Amiens.

Maurice de Sully, Biſhop of Paris.

MAURICE, ſirnamed DE SULLY, from a ſmall Town of that Name, ſituated on the River Loire, (which was the place of his Nativity) was Born of mean Parentage, nevertheleſs upon account of his ſingular Merits and extraordinary Learning, he was promoted to the Biſhoprick of Paris, A. D. 1164. after the Death of Peter Lombard. Henricus Gandavenſis assures us, that he compos'd Sermons for all the Sundays and Festivals of the Year, and certain Instructions for the Priests of his Diocess; the Manuscript Copies of which are kept in the French King's Library, and in that of St. Victor. He died A. D. 1196. and was bury'd in the Abbey of St. Victor.

aſſures

Gervase a Priest of Chichester.

GERVASE, a Priest of Chichester, one of the Favourers of Thomas Becket Arch-bishop of Canterbury, was in good repute for his Learning, and wrote a Commentary on the Prophet Malachy, which (as we are informed by M. James) was kept in the Lomley Library.

Odo Abbot of Bel.

ODO, of the County of Kent, Prior of the Monastery of Canterbury, and afterwards Abbot of Bel, was likewise the Friend and Protector of Thomas Becket. He wrote divers Works, but we have none left, except a certain Letter directed to his Brother a Novice in the Abbey of Igny, in which he exhorts him speedily to assume the Monastick Habit. This Letter was published by Father Mabillon in the first Tome of his Analecta.

Laborantius Cardinal.

LABORANTIUS, Cardinal with the Title of St. Mary, who flourish'd in the Year 1180. compos'd a Collection of Canons: A Treatise of Justice and Equity divided into four Parts, and dedicated to the Governor of Sicily: Another to Hugh Arch-bishop of Palermo: A Letter directed to the same Hugh against the Sabellians: And another Letter to Vivian Cardinal of St. Stephen concerning Appeals. All these Pieces are contain'd in a certain Manuscript of St. Peter's Church at Rome, cited by Baronius and Possevinus.

Alulphus Monk of St. Martin at Tournay.

ALULPHUS, a Monk of St. Martin at Tournay, compil'd a Collection of Sentences and Maxims, taken out of the Works of St. Gregory, and call'd it The Gregorial. It is extant in Manuscript in several Libraries, and Father Mabillon has produced the Preface to it in the First Tome of his Analecta.

Baldwin Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

BALDWIN, a Native of Exeter, in the County of Devon; of a School-Master, became an Arch-Deacon, afterwards turn'd Monk, and was made Abbot of Ferden: From that Abbey he was translated to the Bishoprick of Winchester, A. D. 1181. and at last advanc'd to the dignity of Arch-bishop of Canterbury in 1185. He accompany'd King Richard I. in his Expedition to the Holy Land, and died there in 1191. or 1192. 'Tis reported that Pope Urban sent him a Letter, the Superscription of which was to this effect: To Baldwin a most zealous Monk, a fervent Abbot, a luke-warm Bishop, and an effeminate Arch-bishop. The following Works written by this Prelate are contain'd in the fifth Tome of the Bibliotheca Cistercienſis set forth by Father Tissier, viz. sixteen Treatises of Piety on different Subjects, particularly, on the Love of God, the twofold Resurrection, the efficacy of the Word of God, the Angelical Salutation, &c. A Treatise of the recommendation of Faith: And another of the Sacrament of the Altar dedicated to Bartholomew Bishop of Exeter.

Isaac Abbot of L'Etoile

ISAAC, Abbot of L'Etoile, of the Cistercian Order in the Diocess of Poitiers, flourish'd in the end of the Century: He compos'd divers Sermons publish'd in the sixth Tome of the Bibliotheca Cistercienſis, with a Treatise of the Spirit and the Soul, attributed to St. Augustin: He is also reputed to be the Author of a certain Letter on the Canon of the Mass, which is contain'd in the first Tome of the Spicilegium.

Henry, Peter and Garnier Abbots of Clairvaux.

The Abbey of Clairvaux, has produc'd in the end of this Century three Abbots who may be reckon'd amongst the Ecclesiastical Writers, viz. HENRY the seventh Abbot, who wrote a Treatise call'd, De peregrinante Civitate Dei, and some Letters. PETER the eighth Abbot, who was the Author of some Letters, and GARNIER his Successor, who compos'd divers Sermons. If any Persons are desirous to consult those Works, they may have recourse to the third Tome of the Bibliotheca Cistercienſis.

Gilbert of Sempringham

GILBERT OF SEMPRINGHAM, an English Man, and Founder of the Order of the Canons call'd Gilbertines in England, flourish'd in the end of this Century. He compil'd two Books of Constitutions for his Order, which are to be found in the Monasticon Anglicanum.

Christian.

In the Library of St. Germain des Prez is to be seen, a Manuscript Collection of divers Sermons, which bear the Name of CHRISTIAN: Some are of Opinion, That this Author was Abbot of St. Peter Au Val, in the Diocess of Chartres: Others attribute this Piece to Christian Arch-bishop of Mentz, who died, A. D. 1183. and who wrote (as it is generally believ'd) an History of the Emperor Frederick's Expedition to the Holy Land: But others with greater probability ascribe it, to one of the two Christians, Monks of Clairvaux, and the Pupils of St. Bernard, who were made Abbots and Bishops in Ireland, and of whom mention is made in Chap. 8. of the second Book of St. Bernard's Life. Let the case be how it will, this Author has apparently taken many Notions out of the Works of that Saint.

Gautier de Chatillon.

GAUTIER, sirnam'd DE CHATILLON, a Native of Lisle in Flanders, was the Author of the Alexandreis, or Poem on the Actions of Alexander, printed at Strasburg, A. D. 1531. and at Lyons in 1558. He also compos'd three Books in form of Dialogues against the Jews, which Father Oudin says he has seen in Manuscript in the Library of the Monastery of Premontre at Braine.

Garnier of St. Victor.

GARNIER, a Canon and Superior of the Abbey of St. Victor at Paris, compil'd in the end of the Century, a Treatise call'd The Gregorian, containing certain Allegorical Explications

tions on the Bible, taken out of the Writings of St. Gregory Pope. This Work was printed at Paris, A. D. 1608.

Thomas Monk of Ciſteaux.

THOMAS, a Monk of Ciſteaux, is the Author of a Commentary on the Canticles divided into twelve Books, and dedicated to Pontius Biſhop of Clermont; altho' ſome Perſons have attributed it to other Authors of the ſame Name, and Paul de Reatino a Cordelier took the boldneſs to cauſe it to be printed at Rome, A. D. 1655. under the Name of John Duns firnam'd Scotus; but he was ſoon oppos'd by the Sollicitor General of the Ciſtercian Order, who obtain'd a Decree of the Maſter of the Sacred Palace, by which it was declar'd, that that Commentary was unadviſedly printed under the Name of Scotus, and a Prohibition was made at the ſame time, to ſell or publiſh it for the future under that Name, but only under that of Thomas of Ciſteaux. Charles de Wiſch, who caus'd this Work to be printed in the Bibliotheca Præmonſtratenſis attributed it to divers Thomas's, and afterwards John le Page the Collector of the Library of Premontre, aſcrib'd it to one Thomas Canon of that Order in the Monaſtery of Queſnoy; but the true Author of it is Thomas Monk of Ciſteaux, as it appears from the ancient Manuſcripts which are extant in the Libraries of the ſame Order. It likewiſe bears his Name in the firſt Editions ſet forth by Badius at Paris, A. D. 1521. and at Lyons in 1571. This Author flouriſh'd in the end of the Century.

Petrus Comeſtor Dean of St. Peter at Troyes.

PETER, firnam'd COMESTOR, or the Eater, a Native of Troyes in Champagne, Prieſt and Dean of the Church of St. Peter in that City, acquir'd ſo great Reputation, that he was invited to Paris, and made Chancellor of the Univerſity. He retir'd near the end of his Life to the Monaſtery of St. Victor, and died there A. D. 1198. His principal Work, is a Scholaſtical Hiſtory divided into ſixteen Books, which comprehends an Abridgment of all manner of Sacred Hiſtory, from the beginning of Geneſis to the end of the Acts of the Apoſtles; but he intermixes therein divers Paſſages of profane Hiſtory, and ſome fabulous Narrations. This Work was firſt printed at Rutlingen, A. D. 1473. and afterwards at Strasburg in 1489. as alſo at Baſil in 1486. and at Lyons in 1543. The Sermons, which Buſæus caus'd to be printed under the Name of Peter of Blois, belong to this Author, as well as ſome others which are extant in the Libraries.

Robert of Flameſbury.

ROBERT OF FLAMESBURY, a Regular Canon of St. Auguſtin, and Penitentiary in the Abbey of St. Victor, was in good repute for his Learning. He compos'd a large Penitential, which is kept in Manuſcript in the Library of St. Victor, and in that of the College Des Cholets.

Bartholomew Biſhop of Oxford. Odo of Chirton.

The Engliſh were always very accurate in their penitential Books, and two Authors were more eſpecially famous for writing on that Subject in the end of the Twelfth Century. The firſt is BARTHOLOMEW Biſhop of Oxford, a Manuſcript Copy of whoſe Work is to be ſeen in the Library of St. Victor; and the other is ODO OF CHIRTON, whoſe Piece call'd The Summary of Repentance, is extant in divers Libraries of England, with ſeveral Homilies by the ſame Author.

Elie of Coxie Abbot of Dunes.

ELIE OF COXIE, ſo call'd from the Name of a Village in the Territory of Furnes in Flanders, the place of his Nativity, was at firſt a Monk of Ciſteaux and afterwards Abbot of Dunes. He has left us two large Diſcourſes made by him in the Chapter of Ciſteaux, which are contain'd in the Bibliotheca Ordinis Ciſtercienſis. He died A. D. 1203.

John a Carthuſian Monk of des Portes.

JOHN, a Carthuſian Frier of the Monaſtery of Des Portes, flouriſh'd in the end of this Century, and compos'd five Letters on pious Subjects, viz. the Firſt about ſhunning of the World; The Second and Third of Prayer, the Fourth of the care that ought to be taken to obſerve the Inclinations of the Heart; and the Fifth of Perſeverance in the State that one has once embrac'd, dedicated to Bernard his Nephew, a Carthuſian Monk, who was tempted to quit that Order.

Stephen de Chaulmet a Carthuſian Monk.

There is alſo a Letter written by another Monk of the ſame Carthuſian Convent, nam'd STEPHEN DE CHAULMET, about continuing in the Order into which one has been admitted, which was dedicated to the Novices of the Monaſtery of St. Sulpicius of the Ciſtercian Order. Theſe two Authors wrote in the end of the Century.

Zachary Biſhop of Chryſopolis.

ZACHARY, a Regular Canon (as ſome ſay) of the Order of Premontre in the Monaſtery of St. Martin at Laon, or according to others, Biſhop of Chryſopolis, wrote a Commentary on Ammonius's Evangelical Concord, which was printed at Colen, A. D. 1535. and in the Nineteenth Tome of the Bibliotheca Patrum. We have no certain Account of the Life and Character of this Author, or of the time when he flouriſh'd.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Writers of Ecclesiastical History of the Twelfth Century.

THE Twelfth Century has produc'd so great a Number of Historians, and Historical Works, as well Ecclesiastical as Prophane, that 'tis in a manner impossible to give a particular Account of every one of them; nevertheless we have endeavour'd to make a Catalogue of them, and at least to represent the Authors, and their Works in general: In order to do which more conveniently, and more methodically, we have distributed them under several Articles and Divisions.

The Writers of General History.

Florentius Bravo, Monk of Winchester.

FLORENTIUS BRAVO, an English Monk of Winchester, wrote a Chronicle from the Creation of the World to the Year of our Lord 1118. taken in part from that of Marianus Scotus, printed at London, A. D. 1595. and at Francfort in 1601. as also a Genealogical Account of the Kings of England, which is likewise annex'd to the London Edition. He died A. D. 1119.

Eckard, Abbot of Uraugen.

ECKARD, Abbot of Uraugen, in the Diocese of Wirtzburg, flourish'd A. D. 1130. and left a Work to Posterity. Trithemius makes mention of a Work of this Author, call'd, The Lantern; there are also extant certain Letters and Sermons written by him.

Hugh, Monk of Fleury.

HUGH, a Monk of Fleury, compos'd A. D. 1120. a Chronicle from the Creation of the World to the Year 840. which was printed at Munster in 1638. The same Author wrote two Books concerning the Royal Authority and the Sacerdotal Dignity, which were dedicated to Henry I. King of England, and publish'd by M. Baluzius, in the Fourth Tome of his Miscellaneous Works.

Ordericus Vitalis, Monk of St. Evroul.

ORDERICUS VITALIS, born in England at Attingesham on the River Severn, A. D. 1075. was sent at the Age of eleven Years to Normandy, and plac'd in the Abby of St. Evroul, where he took the Habit of a Monk, and compleated his Studies. He likewise enter'd into Holy Orders, and spent his whole Life in that Monastery; leaving XIII Books of Ecclesiastical History, from the Nativity of Jesus Christ to the Year 1142. which were publish'd by M. du Chesne, in the Volume of the Historiographers of Normandy.

Anselm, Abbot of Gemblours.

ANSELM, Abbot of Gemblours in Brabant, continu'd Sigebert's Chronicle from the Year 1112. to 1148. This Continuation, with two others, the first of which is extended to the Year 1149. and the other to 1225. was set forth by Albertus Miræus, and printed at Antwerp, A. D. 1608.

Otho, Bishop of Frisingen.

The Birth of OTHO, Bishop of Frisingben, is no less illustrious than the Reputation he acquir'd by writing his History: For he was the Son of Leopold Marquess of Austria, and of Agnes the Daughter of the Emperor Henry IV. That Princess was twice marry'd, viz. at first to Frederick Duke of Suevia or Schwaben, to whom she brought forth two Sons, namely, Conrad the Emperor, and Frederick Duke of Suevia: But by her second Marriage with Leopold, she had Leopold Duke of Bavaria, Henry Duke of Austria, Gertrude Dutchess of Bohemia, Bertha Dutchess of Poland, Ita Marchioness of Montferrat, Otho and Conrad. These two last being design'd by their Father for the Ecclesiastick Functions, Otho obtain'd the Government of a College, which his Father had founded at Neuburg, and where he order'd himself to be bury'd: But Otho soon resign'd his Office to Opoldus, and being incited with an ardent desire of becoming Master of the Liberal Sciences, went to Paris, where he compleated his Studies: Some Years after he turned Cistercian Monk, in the Abbey of Morimond, with Fifteen of his Companions. In 1138. the Emperor Conrad, his Brother, conferr'd upon him the Bishoprick of Frisingben in Bavaria, and honour'd him with the Dignities of Chancellor and Secretary of State. He accompanied that Prince in his Expedition to the Holy Land, A. D. 1147. and last in 1156. leaving his Bishoprick, retir'd to the Abbey of Morimond, where he died in the Month of September in the same Year.

This Prelate compos'd a Chronological History from the Creation of the World to his time, divided into Seven Books, and annex'd an Eighth concerning the Persecution to be raised by Antichrist, and the Resurrection of the Dead. He wrote a very fine Style, with respect to the Age in which he liv'd, and much more politely than the other Historians of those Times. He was well skilled in Scholastical Divinity, as also in Aristotle's Philosophy; and was one of the first, who (as Trithemius has observ'd) introduced that Science into Germany. Upon which Account, 'tis not to be wonder'd that he has been very favourable to Gilbert de la Porrée, in the Dissertation prefix'd before his History. It was first published by John Cuspinian, and printed at Strasbourg, A. D. 1515. afterwards at Basil in 1569. and among the German Historiographers at Francfort in 1585. and 1670. He, in like manner, wrote two Books containing the History of the Actions of Frederick Barbe-rousse, which are subjoyn'd at the end of his Chronicle. Moreover Wolfgangus Lazius says, that he saw ſaw an Hiſtory of Auſtria compos'd by the ſame Cob. but there has been no talk of it ſince; neither has it as yet appear'd any where in Print.

Godfrey of Viterbo.

GODFREY OF VITERBO, ſo call'd from the Name of his Native Country, who was a Prieſt, Almoner, and Secretary of State to the Emperors Conrad III. Frederick I. and Henry VI. wrote an Univerſal Chronicle, dedicated to Pope Urban III. and call'd Pantheon, by reaſon of the great Variety of Occurrences contain'd therein: It ends at the Year 1186. and is inſerted among the Works of the German Hiſtorians collected by Piſtorius, and printed at Francfort in 1584. It is reported that this Writer ſpent Forty Years in travelling; that he made a prodigious Collection of all ſorts of Obſervations during his Voyages; and that he underſtood the Hebrew, Chaldaick, Greek, and Latin Tongues. Lambecius makes mention of another Work by the ſame Author, which is to be ſeen in Manuſcript in the Emperor's Library, bearing this Title, The Mirror of Kings, or Genealogies of all the Kings and Emperors from the univerſal Flood to the time of Henry VI.

Robert of Torigny, Abbot of Mount St. Michael.

ROBERT OF TORIGNY, a Monk, afterwards Prior of the Abbey, and at laſt Abbot of St. Michael's Mount, compoſed a Supplement of Sigebert's Chronicle, and a Continuation to the Year 1186. alſo a Treatiſe of the Monaſteries and Abbies of Normandy, the Hiſtory of that of St. Michael's Mount, a Commentary on St. Paul's Epiſtles taken from St. Auguſtin; and the Hiſtory of the Reign of Henry II. King of England. Father Luke Dachery has cauſed to be printed at the end of Gisbert's Works the Supplement and Continuation of Sigibert's Chronicle, and the Treatiſe of the Abbeys of Normandy, with a Letter written by the ſaid Robert, and his Preface to the Commentary on St. Paul's Epiſtles.

Otho of St. Blaiſius.

OTHO OF S. BLAISIUS, continu'd the Chronicle of Otho of Friſinghen to the Year 1196.

John Brompton, Abbot of Jorval.

JOHN BROMPTON, an Engliſh Monk of the Ciſtercian Order, and Abbot of Jorval in the Dioceſs of York, is the reputed Author of a certain Chronicle from the Year 588. to 1198. but the learned Mr. Selden aſſures us, that it was not written by him; that he only caus'd it to be tranſcrib'd, and that he did not live in this Century.

Hiſtorians of England.

THE Kingdom of England has brought forth ſo many approved Authors, who have employ'd their Pens in writing the Hiſtory of their Native Country, that they well deſerve to be reſerv'd to a particular Article.

Henry, Arch-deacon of Huntington.

HENRY OF HUNTINGTON, the Son of a marry'd Prieſt named Nicolas, and the Pupil of Albinus Andegavius Canon of Lincoln, was made Canon of the ſame Church, and afterwards Arch-deacon of Huntington, by Alexander Biſhop of Lincoln, whom he accompanied in his Journey to Rome. He wrote the Hiſtory of the Engliſh Monarchy from its firſt Foundation till the Death of King Stephen, which happen'd in 1154. It is dedicated to the ſaid Biſhop Alexander, and divided into Eight or Ten Books, being contain'd among the Works of the Engliſh Writers in Sir Henry Savil's Collection, printed at London A. D. 1596. and at Francfurt in 1601. Father Luke Dachery has likewiſe publiſhed in the Eighth Tome of his Spicilegium a ſmall Tract of this Author, concerning the Contempt of the World, dedicated to Gauterius. He there ſhews how the Things of this ſublunary World ought to be contemned, relating many Examples of Misfortunes that happen'd to the Great Perſonages of his Age, and the miſerable Death of divers profligate Wretches. He declares, in the Preface to this Tract, that he had before made a Dedication to the ſame Perſon of a Collection of Epigrams, and of a Poem about Love. There are alſo in the Libraries of Oxford and Cambridge ſeveral other Manuſcript Works of this Author, particularly a Letter concerning the Britiſh Kings, dedicated to Warinus; a Treatiſe of the Counties of Great Britain; another of the Image of the World; and a Third of the Engliſh Saints.

Gulielmus Neubrigenſis.

WILLIAM LITTLE, known by the Name of Gulielmus Neubrigenſis, was born at Bridlington near York, A. D. 1136. and educated in the Convent of the Regular Canons of Neutbridge, where he embraced the Monaſtick Life: He compos'd a large Hiſtory of England, divided into Five Books, from the Year 1066. to 1197. This Hiſtory is written with much Fidelity, and in a ſmooth and intelligible Style. It was printed at Antwerp A. D. 1567. at Heidelberg in 1587. and laſtly at Paris with John Picard's Notes in 1610. It is believ'd that he died A. D. 1208.

Walter, Arch-deacon of Oxford.

WALTER, born in the Principality of Wales, Arch-deacon, and even (as ſome ſay) Biſhop of Oxford, tranſlated out of Engliſh into Latin the Hiſtory of England, compoſed by Geffrey of Monmouth, and continued to his time.

John Pyke.

JOHN PYKE, wrote an Hiſtory of the Engliſh, Saxon, and Daniſh Kings of England, and flouriſhed with the former Hiſtorian under King Henry I.

Gervaſe, Monk of Canterbury.

GERVASE, a Monk of Canterbury, compos'd ſeveral Treatiſes relating to the Hiſtory of England, which are contain'd in Mr. Selden's Collection of the Engliſh Hiſtoriographers; particularly a Relation of the burning and repairing of the Cathedral Church of Canterbury; an Account of the Conteſts between the Monks of Canterbury, and Baldwin their Archbiſhop; a Chronicle from the Year 1122. to 1199. and the Lives of the Archbiſhops of Canterbury.

Geffrey Arthur, Biſhop of St. Aſaph.

GEFFREY ARTHUR, Arch-deacon of St. Aſaph, was choſen Biſhop of that Dioceſs A. D. 1151. He left his Biſhoprick by reaſon of certain Commotions which happen'd in Wales, and retir'd to the Court of Henry II. King of England, who gave him the Abbey of Abbington in Cambridgeſhire. Afterwards in a Council held at London, A. D. 1175. the Clergy of St. Aſaph caus'd a Propoſal to be made to Geffrey by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, either to return to his Biſhoprick, or to admit another Biſhop to be ſubſtituted in his room: He refus'd to return, deſigning to keep his Abbey, Abbey; but both the Abbey and the Biſhoprick were diſpos'd of, and he was left deſtitute of any Eccleſiaſtical Preferment. He wrote, or rather tranſlated out of Engliſh into Latin, an Hiſtory of Great Britain from the beginning to his time; which is full of Fables, dedicated to Robert Duke of Gloceſter, and divided into Twelve Books. It was printed at Paris A. D. 1517. at Lyons by Potelier in 1587. and by Commelin in the ſame Year; it is alſo inſerted among the Works of the Engliſh Hiſtorians printed that Year at Heidelberg. It is reported that he, in like manner, tranſlated out of Engliſh into Latin, the ancient Prophecies of Merlin, which were printed at Francfurt with Alanus's Obſervations, A. D. 1603.

The Hiſtory of the Church of Durham was written by ſeveral Authors, the firſt of whom is TURGOT, a Monk of that Dioceſs, who compos'd one from its firſt Foundation to the Year 1096. Turgot, Monk of Durham.

SIMEON OF DURHAM, copied out Turgot's Hiſtory almoſt word for word, from the Year 635. to 1096. and continued it to 1154. He likewiſe wrote an Hiſtory of the Kings of England and Denmark, from the Year 731. to 1130. A Letter to Hugh Dean of York, about the Archbiſhops of that City; and a Relation of the Siege of Durham. Theſe Three laſt Pieces were publiſhed by Father Labbé, in the firſt Tome of his Library of Manuſcripts. The Hiſtorians of the Church of Durham, by Turgot and Simeon, were printed at London, with the Works of the other Engliſh Hiſtoriographers, A. D. 1652. Simeon of Durham.

WILLIAM OF SOMERSET, a Monk of Malmesbury, is juſtly preferr'd before all the other Engliſh Hiſtorians. His Hiſtory of England, divided into Five Books, contains the moſt remarkable Tranſactions in this Kingdom, ſince the arrival of the Saxons to the 28th Year of King Henry I. that is to ſay, from the Year of our Lord 449. to 1127. He afterwards added Two Books, continuing the Hiſtory to A. D. 1143. and annexed to the whole Work Four Books, containing the Hiſtory of the Biſhops of England, from Auguſtin the Monk, who firſt planted Chriſtianity in theſe Parts, to his time. Theſe Works were printed at London, and publiſhed by Sir Henry Savil, A. D. 1596. and at Francfurt in 1601. Father Mabillon has likewiſe ſet forth, in the firſt Tome of his Benedictin Centuries, the Life of St. Adelm Biſhop of Salisbury, compos'd by this Author, who died A. D. 1143. William of Somerſet, Monk of Malmeſbury.

JOHN OF HEXAM, a Native of the County of Northumberland, Monk and Provoſt of the Monaſtery of Hagulſtadt, flouriſhed about the Year 1160. He made a Continuation of Simeon of Durham's Hiſtory of the Kings of England and Denmark, from A. D. 1130. to 1154. This Work is extant among thoſe of the other Engliſh Hiſtorians, printed at London in 1652. John of Hexam, Provoſt of Hagulſtadt.

SYLVESTER GIRALD, born in Wales, flouriſhed in the end of the Reign of King Henry II. to whom he dedicated a Natural Hiſtory, a Topography of Ireland, and a Hiſtory, in form of a Prediction, of the Conqueſt of Ireland by that Monarch, printed at Answerp. Theſe Works were publiſhed by Mr. Camden, and printed at Francfurt in 1602. He alſo wrote an Itinerary of Wales, upon a Viſitation there made by him, with Baldwin Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to excite the People of that Country to undertake a Voyage to the Holy Land. This laſt Work is extant among the others, and was likewiſe printed at London in 1585. with a Deſcription of the ſame Country of Wales. Beſides theſe Pieces, he wrote the Lives of ſeveral Saints, and died Biſhop of St. Davids in the beginning of the following Century. One of his Letters is contain'd in Archbiſhop Uſher's Collection of the Letters of Ireland, and divers other Works of this Author are found among the Manuſcripts of the publick Libraries of England. Sylveſter Girald, Biſhop of St. Davids.

ROGER OF HOVEDEN, an Officer under King Henry II. and afterwards Regius Profeſſor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Oxford, compos'd the Annals of England from the Year 731. where Venerable Bede ends to 1202. This Work is among thoſe of the Engliſh Hiſtorians publiſhed by Sir Henry Savil, and printed at London A. D. 1595, as alſo at Francfurt in 1601. Roger Hoveden, Regius Profeſſor of Divinity.

Hiſtoriographers of the Cruſade.

THE Hiſtory of the Famous Cruſade, inſtituted under Pope Urban II. and the Conqueſts which the Weſtern People made in the Levant, from the Year 1095. to 1099. have afforded Matter to many contemporary Hiſtorians, the greater part of whom were Eye-witneſſes of the Tranſactions related by them.

The Firſt of theſe Hiſtoriographers is PETRUS THEUTBODUS, who ſaw the moſt part of the memorable Actions which he has committed to Writing; and from whom thoſe that wrote after him, took a conſiderable Part of their Relations. Petrus Theutbodus.

The Second is a NAMELESS Italian Author, who accompanied Boamond King of Sicily in the Expedition to the Holy Land. His Work is known by the Title of, The notable Exploits of the French, and other Chriſtians of Jeruſalem, and divided into Four Books. A Nameleſs Italian Author.

The Third is ROBERT, a Monk of St. Remy at Rheims, who aſſiſted in the Council of Clermont in the Year 1095. and afterwards made a Voyage to the Holy Land. At his return, he wrote the Hiſtory of the War of Jeruſalem, divided into Eight or Nine very ſhort Books: He excuſes himſelf in the Preface, upon account of the roughneſs of his Style. Robert, Monk of S. Remy at Rheims.

The Fourth is BAUDRY, Abbot of Bourgueil, who was afterwards ordain'd Biſhop of Dol, A.D. 1114. and died January 27. 1131. His Hiſtory is divided into Four Books; but he was not an Eye-witneſs of what he relates, although he aſſiſted in the Council of Clermont: Therefore he contents himſelf only to follow, and to ſupply the defects of an ancient nameleſs Hiſtory, which Baudry, Biſhop of Dol.

was ill written, inſerting ſuch Accounts as he had receiv'd from others. This Author likewiſe wrote the Life of St. Hugh Archbiſhop of Rouen, and a Tract concerning the Monaſtery of Feſcamp, publiſhed in the Book called Neuſtria pia. To him alſo is attributed the Life of Robert d'Arbriſſelles, which is in Surius, and the Hiſtory of the Tranſlation of St. Valentin's Head, which is extant in Bollandus's Collection in Febr. 14. Moreover it is obſerv'd that he is the Author of the Life of St. Samſon, and that he promiſes certain Notes on the Pentateuch, in the Preface to his Hiſtory. Laſtly, 'tis reported that there is a ſmall Manuſcript Tract of the ſame Biſhop Baudry, concerning the Viſitation of the Sick, in the Library of Vienna in Auſtria. He was employ'd in writing his Hiſtory near the end of his Life.

Raimond d'Agiles.

The Fifth is RAIMOND D'AGILES, Canon of Puy, and Chaplain to the Count of Thouloufe, who was an Eye-witneſs. He wrote this Hiſtory at the Requeſt of Peter Ponce de Baladin, a particular Friend of the ſaid Count, who was kill'd in the Siege of Arache, and dedicated it to the Biſhop of Viviers.

Albert, or Alberic. Canon of Aix.

The Sixth is ALBERT, or ALBERIC, Canon of Aix in Provence, who compos'd his Hiſtory from the Relations of others: It is extended to the Second Year of the Reign of Baldwin II. that is to ſay, to A. D. 1120.

Foucher, Monk of Chartres.

The Seventh is FOUCHER, a Monk of Chartres, who accompanied Robert Duke of Normandy in the Expedition to the Holy Land, A. D. 1095. His Hiſtory is carried on to the Year 1124. But Guibert of Nogent accuſes him of having written fabulous Narrations.

Gautier, the Chancellor.

GAUTIER, or GAUTERIUS, who aſſumes the Quality of Chancellor, is the Eighth: He publiſhed an Hiſtory of the Advantages obtain'd by the Weſtern Chriſtians at Antioch, A.D. 1115. and of the Misfortunes that befel them in 1119. He was an Eye-witneſs of thoſe Occurrences, and was taken Priſoner in the War; but his Hiſtory is not very accurate.

Guibert, Abbot of Nogent.

The Ninth is GUIBERT, Abbot of Nogent, an Author of great Note, whoſe Works deſerve to be ſpecified in a ſeparate Article.

A Nameleſs Author.

The Tenth is a NAMELESS Writer, who has only made an Abridgment of Foucher's Hiſtory, to the Year 1106. where he ended.

Another Nameleſs Writer.

The Eleventh is another Anonymous Author, who compos'd a Relation of the ſame Tranſactions, under the Title of the Hiſtory of Jeruſalem: It was divided into Two Parts, but the Second is only extant, which begins at the Year 1110. and ends in 1124. This Author has in like manner only follow'd Foucher.

William, Archbiſhop of Tyre.

The Twelfth, and moſt conſiderable of the Writers of this Hiſtory, is WILLIAM Archbiſhop of Tyre, who has deduc'd it from the beginning of the Cruſade to the Year 1183. in XXIII. Books. It is probable that this Author was a Native of Syria; however he paſſed very young into the Weſtern Countries, and having compleated his Studies, return'd to the Levant, where he was ordain'd Arch-deacon of the Church of Tyre, A.D. 1167. Afterwards he was employ'd in the Negociations that were tranſacted between the Kings of Jeruſalem, and the Greek Emperors; and at laſt was advanc'd to the Dignity of Archbiſhop of Tyre, in the Month of May 1174. In 1179. he aſſiſted in the Council of Lateran, the Acts of which were drawn up by him: He return'd from Italy by Conſtantinople, and after having reſided ſome time at the Court of the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, arriv'd at Tyre twenty Months after his departure. The Patriarchal See of Jeruſalem being then vacant, William of Tyre was nominated to fill it up; but a certain Clerk of Auvergne, named Heraclius, Archbiſhop of Cæſarea, was preferr'd before him; nevertheleſs William refus'd to acknowledge his Election, and cited him to Rome; where he went incontinently, and was kindly entertain'd by the Pope. In the mean while Heraclius, before he came thither, ſent a Phyſitian, who poyſon'd William of Tyre: But the later foretold before his Death, that the Chriſtians ſhould loſe the City of Jeruſalem, and the real Croſs, under the Government of Heraclius, which happen'd a little while after.

William of Tyre wrote his Hiſtory by the Order of Amaury King of Jeruſalem: He makes uſe of the Memoires of other Hiſtorians to the Reign of Baldwin III. and afterward relates ſuch Matters as fell within the compaſs of his own knowledge, but the Twenty third Book is not finiſhed. His Style is plain and natural, ſhewing much Sagacity of Judgment, Modeſty, and Learning, with reſpect to the time when he liv'd. He likewiſe compos'd the Hiſtory of the Levantine Princes, from the Year 614. to 1184. but this Work is not as yet come to our Hands.

James de Vitry, Cardinal.

The Thirteenth Hiſtoriographer is JAMES DE VITRY, who did not flouriſh till the following Century. This Author, after having been Curate of Argenteuil, became a Regular Canon in the Monaſtery of Oignies, in the Dioceſs of Namur. He preached up the Cruſade againſt the Albigeois, and afterwards againſt the Saracens, and took upon him the Croſs for the Holy War in Paleſtine: He was ordain'd Archbiſhop of Ptolemais, and at laſt, by way of Recompence for the Services he had done the See of Rome, was invited thither by Pope Honorius III. and created Cardinal: He was alſo ſent into France in Quality of Legate, to preach up a new Cruſade againſt the Albigeois, and at his return to Rome died there A. D. 1244. after having order'd his Body to be convey'd to Oignies. His Hiſtory is divided into Three Books; in the Firſt of which, he gives an Account of the State of the Eaſtern Churches; in the Second, of that of the Weſtern; and in the laſt, of the Occurrences which happen'd in the Levant in his time. There is alſo extant a Letter by the ſame Author about the taking of Damietta, which follows his Hiſtory; and another Letter, containing a Relation of the Tranſactions before Damietta, which was written in 1219. to Pope Honorius III. and publiſhed by Father Duchery in the Eighth Tome of his Spicilegium.

The

The Fourteenth is a NAMELESS Author, who liv'd at that time, and wrote the Hiſtory of Jeruſalem, from the Year 1177. to 1190. A Nameleſs Author.

To theſe Hiſtories may be added divers Letters written by ſeveral Kings, Princes and Prelates, to Lewes the Young, King of France; as alſo a Relation of the taking of Damietta by Oliver of Colen, and ſome other Monuments gather'd together by Bongarſius, in his Collection of the Hiſtoriographers of the Cruſade, call'd Geſta Dei per Francos, printed at Hanaw A. D. 1611. in which all the Works but now recited are contain'd. Some of them were printed ſeparately, as the Hiſtory by Robert Monk of St. Remy, of which there is an old Edition without the Printer's Name, or the Date of the Year; and another at Baſil in 1533. There is only one part of Foucher's Hiſtory in this Collection, but M. du Cheſne has publiſhed it entire among the Works of the French Hiſtoriographers. Alberic's Hiſtory was printed at Helmſtadt in 1589. under the Title of the Chronicle of Jeruſalem; that of William of Tyre was publiſhed by Poiſnot, and printed at Baſil in 1546. and afterward by Henry de Pantaleon, printed at the ſame Place in 1560. And laſtly, James de Vitry's Hiſtory was printed at Doway in 1597. Oliver of Colen.

GAUTIER, or GAUTERIUS, a Canon of Terouane, compos'd a Narration of the Life and Martyrdom of Charles sir-nam'd the Good, Count of Flanders, which was set forth by Father Sirmond, A. D. 1615.

Nicolas, Canon of Liege.

NICOLAS, a Canon of Liege, wrote the Life of St. Lambert, published by Chapeaville in his Collection of Pieces relating to the said Church of Liege.

Alanus, Bishop of Auxerre.

ALANUS, a Native of Lisle in Flanders, a Monk of Clairvaux, and afterwards Abbot of Larivoir, a Monastery of the Order of Clairvaux in the Diocese of Trier, was made Bishop of Auxerre A. D. 1153. and compos'd an Abridgment of the Life of St. Bernard, published by Father Mabillon. He left his Bishoprick to return to Clairvaux in 1161. and died in 1182.

Sibrand, Abbot of Mariegard.

SIBRAND, Abbot of Mariegard in Frieseland, is the Author of an Account of the Life of St. Fredrick, Founder of that Abbey, who died A. D. 1175. Sibrand wrote some time after.

Bertrand, Abbot of La Chaise-Dieu.

BERTRAND, Abbot of La Chaise-Dieu, compil'd the History of the Life and Miracles of Robert the first Founder of that Abbey, which is divided into Three Parts, and was published by Father Labbé in the Second Tome of his new Library of Manuscripts.

Radulphus Tortarius.

ROUL, or RADULPHUS, sir-nam'd TORTARIUS, wrote a Book concerning the Miracles of St. Benedict, set forth by Father Mabillon in the Fourth Benedictin Century.

Stephen, Abbot of St. James's at Liege.

STEPHEN, Abbot of St. James at Liege, wrote in the beginning of the Century the Life of St. Modoaldus Archbishop of Trier, divided into Three Books, and the History of the Translation of that Saint, published by Surius and the Bollandists.

Hugh, Monk of St. Saviour at Lodeve.

HUGH, a Monk of St. Saviour at Lodeve, compos'd a Relation of the Conversion of Ponce de Lauze, Founder of that Monastery, which was set forth by M. Baluzius in the Third Tome of his Miscellaneous Works.

Herman, a converted Jew of Colen.

HERMAN, a Jew of Colen, being converted by the Sermons of Egbert Bishop of Munster, and by the Conferences he had with Abbot Rupert, retir'd to a Monastery of Regular Canons in his native Country. He wrote a small Tract about his Conversion, published by Carpzovius in the last Edition of Raimond, printed at Lipsick in 1687.

Thomas, Monk of Ely.

THOMAS, a Monk of Ely in England, wrote an Account of the Life and Translation of St. Etheldrith the first Abbess of Ely, who died A. C. 679. This Piece was published by Father Mabillon in the Second Benedictin Century.

CHAP. IV.

An Account of the Lives and Writings of the Ecclesiastical Authors of the Levant in the Twelfth Century.

THE Country of Greece has produc'd in this Century a great number of Writers of good Note, who attain'd to much skill as well in Divinity, as in the Canon and Civil Law. Of the chief of these we shall give a particular Account in this Chapter.

Euthymius Zygabenus, a Greek Monk.

EUTHYMIUS ZYGABENUS, a Greek Monk of the Order of St. Basil, flourished in the beginning of this Century, under the Emperor Alexis Comnenus, by whom he was highly esteem'd. He apply'd himself very much to the reading of the Writings of the Ancient Greek Fathers, and compos'd the following Works. Viz.

A

A Collection of Passages taken out of the Fathers on divers Points of Religion against the Errors of the Heretick, which is divided into Two Parts, and call'd Panoplia Dogmatica, or the Defence of the Orthodox Faith against all Heresies. The Greek Text of this Work never as yet came to our hands, only a Latin Version made by Zinus, printed at Lyons A. D. 1536. at Paris in 1556. at Venice in 1575. and in the Bibliotheca Patrum. A large Commentary on the 150 Psalms, and the 10 Canticles, taken out of the Works of the Fathers, which was printed in Greek at Verona A. D. 1530. and in Latin of Sanlius's Translation at Paris in 1543. and 1547. as also at Venice in 1568. M. le Moine has published in the First Tome of his Collection of Monuments the Preface to this Commentary, in which the Author treats of several Questions relating to the Psalms. A Commentary on the four Gospels, printed in Greek at Verona in 1530. and in Latin of Henten-nius's Version at Louvain in 1544. as also at Paris in 1560. Simlerus assures us, that there is a Manuscript Copy in Sambucus's Library, of a Commentary by this Author on the Catholick Epistles; and some Ecclesiastical Writers make mention of his Commentary on St. Paul's Epistles. The Commentaries of Euthymius Zygabenus are Literal, Moral, and Allegorical; in the Literal, he makes it his Business to explain the proper signification of the Terms; his Moral Discourses are solid, and his Allegories natural, and fitly adapted to the Matter in debate.

PHILIP surnam'd THE SOLITARY, a Greek Monk, compos'd in the Year 1105. a Work call'd Dioptron, or The Rule of Christian Life, dedicated to Callinicus, and divided into Four Books, a Version of which made by Jacobus Pontanus was printed at Ingolstadt A. D. 1604. and afterwards inserted in the Bibliotheca Patrum. It is written by way of Dialogue between the Soul and the Body, the Author introducing the former as a Tutress or Guardian, and the other as the Pupil: The Soul gives many moral Instructions to the Body, who acknowledges and approves the Truths laid down, owns her natural Infirmities, and even sometimes gives advice to the Soul. The Author in this Discourse produces great variety of fine Passages out of the Greek Fathers, and takes an Occasion to discuss some Doctrinal Points, amongst others the necessity of Confession is more particularly inculcated, He also proves that the Souls of the Righteous, after their Death, are translated to Heaven, and there enjoy everlasting Happiness; and explains several Questions about the Resurrection; but he chiefly treats of Points relating to Morality, and the State of Human Nature. Philip the Solitary, a Greek Monk.

PETRUS CROSOLANUS, or CHRYSOLANUS, being translated from a certain Bishoprick to the Metropolitan See of Milan, in the beginning of this Century, was sent in Quality of Legate by Pope Paschal II. to the Court of Alexis Comnenus Emperor of Constantinople; where he disputed with much earnestness, both by word of Mouth and Writing, against the Opinion of the Greeks, concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost. Upon his return, the Archbishoprick of Milan was contested with him by Jordanes, and he was condemn'd in a Council held at Lateran in 1116. to leave it, and to return to his Bishoprick. The Discourse is still extant which he made to Alexis Comnenus about the Procession of the Holy Ghost: It is in Latin in Baronius, under the Year 1119. and in Greek and Latin in the First Tome of Allatius's Book, call'd Græcia Orthodoxa. Petrus Chrysolanus.

EUSTRATIUS, Archbishop of Nice, was one of those Persons who reply'd to Chrysolanus: He was a Man of profound Learning and Skill, as well in Ecclesiastical as Civil Affairs. His Treatise against Chrysolanus is extant in Manuscript in several Libraries, and Leo Allatius makes mention of Five other Treatises of this Author; but we have none printed, except certain Greek Commentaries on Aristotle's Analyticks published at Venice A. D. 1534. as also his Commentaries on the Ethicks of the same Philosopher, printed in Greek at Venice in 1536. and in Latin at Paris in 1543. Eustratius, Archbishop of Nice.

At the same time NICETAS SEIDUS wrote a Treatise against the Latins, the Design of which was to prove, that Antiquity is not always most Venerable, and therefore that greater Honour is not due upon that account to Old Rome than to the New. Leo Allatius produces a great number of Fragments taken out of this Treatise, in his Books of the Concord between the Greek and Latin Churches. L. 1. c. 14. §. 1, 2. L. 2. c. 1. §. 2. L. 3. c. 12. §. 4. Nicetas Seidus.

ISAAC, an Armenian Bishop, being separated from the Communion of his Country-men, and turn'd out of their Society, compos'd against them in the Year 1130. divers Works, in which he confutes their Errours. In the first and chief of these Writings, he accuses them of being addicted to the Heresy of the Aphthartodocites, that is to say, of believing that the Body of Jesus Christ was not like ours, but impassible, immortal, uncreated, and naturally invisible; that by the Incarnation it was chang'd into the Divine Nature, which absorb'd it, as a drop of Honey thrown into the Sea, is so far intermixed with the Water that it entirely disappears. He adds, that by reason of this Errour, they did not attribute to the Holy Mysteries of the Eucharist the Name of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, but that of his Divinity or Godhead. Isaac confutes his Adversaries by several Passages of Holy Scripture, and the Testimonies of St. Athanasius, and St. Cyril of Alexandria. Afterwards he reproves them upon account of divers Matters which relate only to Discipline, although he makes as many Errors of them as Heresies. Viz. Isaac, an Armenian Bishop.

1. That they neglected to celebrate the Festival of the Annunciation in any Month of the Year, under pretence that the Virgin Mary did not conceive in March: Isaac maintains that she conceiv'd on the 25. day of that Month, and endeavours to prove it by the Testimonies of Eusebius, St. Athanasius, and St. Chrysostom; but they are taken out of supposititious Pieces.

2. That they do not celebrate the Nativity of Jesus Christ with due Solemnity, contenting themselves only to commemorate in a mournful manner, without any Ceremony, the Annunciation of our Saviour's Nativity and Baptism in one Day.

3. That they do not mingle Water with the Wine in the Chalice in order to the Consecration.

4. That in the Administration of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, they make use of unleavened Bread. Isaac confutes this Custom, and affirms, that Jesus Christ us'd leaven'd Bread in the Institution of the Eucharist; and that although it were granted, that he made use of unleaven'd, yet that would not infer a necessity of imitating him, in regard that the Church observes many Things in the Celebration of the Holy Mysteries, which are not conformable to what our Saviour did at that time. He produces several Examples in the Eighth Chapter to that purpose.

5. That they were wont to make an Oblation of Oxen, Sheep and Lambs, at the Altar.

6. That they have not a due Veneration for the Sign of the Cross.

7. That they sometimes join Three Crosses together, and impose on them the Name of the Trinity.

8. That they usually sing the Trisagion, with Petrus Fullo's Addition; that is to say, in adding to these Words, Holy God, Almighty God, Immortal God, these, who wast crucify'd for us.

9. That they do not receive Ordination from the Archbishop of Cæsarea.

10. That they do observe a very rigorous Fast call'd Artoburia, in the Week preceding Tyrophagia; that is to say, the Week before the beginning of Lent, during which the Greeks abstain from eating Flesh, and live on White-meats. Isaac condemns this Custom as superstitious, and the original of that Fast, refuting the Reasons alledg'd in vindication of it. Afterwards he makes an Exhortation to the Armenians to renounce their Errors, and absur'd Customs contrary to the Faith and Discipline of the Church established in the Councils, and by the Bishops of Rome.

Bishop Isaac's Second Treatise against the Armenians is not so large as the former: He there reckons up 29 Articles of Heretical or Erroneous Opinions to be imputed to them, the most part of which may be referr'd to those we have but now observ'd; adding,

* Lights. 11. That they do not solemnize the Festival of * Lumieres, on the Sixth day of January, in commemoration of the Baptism of Jesus Christ.

12. That they usually make their Consecrated Oils of Rape-seed, and not of Olives, and that they do not administer Unction at the Sacrament of Baptism.

13. That they permit none but those Persons who Officiate to say the Lord's Prayer.

14. That they do not blow upon baptized Persons.

15. That they do not shew a due Respect to the Images.

16. That during the time of Lent they do not resort to the Church, nor adore the Crosses.

17. That they were wont to eat Cheese on Saturdays, and Sundays in Lent.

18. That they do not rightly honour the Saints.

19. That they do not observe the Week of Tyrophagia.

20. That they appear before the Altar with their ordinary Habits, and that they keep their Hats on during the Celebration of Divine Service.

21. That they do not administer the Communion on Holy Thursday.

22. That they imitate the Jews in eating a Paschal Lamb on Easter-day, with the Blood of which they sprinkle their Door-Posts, and keep the rest to serve for Benedictions, causing a Victim painted red to be brought to the Church-door, where they sacrifice it with a great deal of Ceremony.

About that time the Armenians sent Legates to Rome to Pope Eugenius III. to enter into a Union with the Latin Church, whose Custom they follow'd in the use of unleaven'd Bread, and in some other Matters. This Embassy is referr'd to by Otho of Frisinghen.

Michael Glycas, a Sicilian.

MICHAEL GLYCAS, a Sicilian, compos'd in the beginning of this Century his Annals, divided into Four Parts; which is not only an Historical Work, but also has some relation to Divinity, and natural Philosophy. In the First Part he treats of the Creation of the World: The Second contains an History from the Creation of the World to the Nativity of Jesus Christ: The Third continues the History from our Saviour to Constantine the Great: And in the Fourth it is brought down to the Death of Alexis Comnenus. These Annals were printed in Latin, of Leunclavius's Version at Basil A. D. 1572. But they were published in Greek and Latin by Father Labbe, and printed at Paris in 1660. Jacobus Pontanus likewise set forth two Discourses of the same Author, with the Diopetra of Philip the Solitary, printed at Ingolstadt in 1604. Leo Allatius produces several Fragments of divers Letters written by Michael Glycas, and cites a Treatise which he compos'd about the Procession of the Holy Ghost, dedicated to Maximus Semenista; another Piece concerning the Question, Whether Jesus Christ made use of unleaven'd Bread at his last Supper? And a Tract of the State of Souls separated from the Body. Lastly, Possevinus observes, that there are certain Treatises of this Author on the Holy Scripture, in the Emperor's Library at Vienna.

Nicetas of Constantinople.

At the same time NICETAS, a Philosopher or Monk of Constantinople, wrote an Apologetical Treatise for the Council of Chalcedon against a certain Prince of Armenia, which was published by Allatius in the First Tome of his Græcia Orthodoxa.

CON-

CONSTANTIN MANASSES flouriſhed in Greece A. D. 1150. and wrote an Epitome of Hiſtory, dedicated to Irene the Siſter of the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, from the Creation of the World to the Reign of Alexis Comnenus, that is to ſay, to the Year 1081. The Latin Verſion of this Chronicle by Lewenclavius was printed at Baſil in 1573. The Greek Text was publiſhed ſeparately by Meurſius at Amſterdam in 1616. but it was printed in Greek and Latin with the Notes of Lewenclavius, Meurſius, Allatius, and Fabrottus in Folio at Paris A. D. 1655. Conſtantin Manaſſes.

CONSTANTINUS HARMENOPULUS, a Judg of Theſſalinaca, flouriſhed A.D. 1150. at the time when the Hereſy of the Bogomiles began to appear: He was an able Lawyer, and compil'd a Dictionary of the Civil Law, which was printed in Greek at Paris in 1540. in Latin at Lyons in 1556. and in Greek and Latin, with the Notes of Joan. Mercerus, and Dionyſius Gothefredus at Geneva in 1587. as alſo a Collection of Canons divided into Six Titles or Articles, and publiſhed in Greek and Latin by Lewenclavius in the Firſt Tome of his Jus Græco-Romanum, or Collection of Greek and Roman Laws. To theſe Works may be added his Treatiſe of the Sects of Hereticks, with a Confeſſion of Faith, which is inſerted in the firſt Tome of Fronto Ducæus's Supplement to the Bibliotheca Patrum. Conſtantinus Harmenopulus.

JOHN, a Monk of the Iſland of Oxia, and Patriarch of the Greek Church of Antioch, A.D. 1150. is the Author of a ſmall Treatiſe againſt the Cuſtom that was then introduced of conferring Monaſteries on Noble men or Laicks. This Tract is mention'd by Balſamon and Blaſteres, and was publiſhed by Cotelerius in the Firſt Tome of his Monuments of the Greek Church. Perhaps it may not be improper here to ſhew after what manner he treats of the Original and Progreſs of the Monaſtick Life. John, Patriarch of Antioch.

"Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt (ſays he) having deſcended from Heaven to Earth for the Salvation "of Mankind, having alſo actually redeemed us by his Death, and eſtabliſhed his Religion through-"out the whole World; the Devil us'd his utmoſt Efforts to cauſe Men to return to their former "exorbitant Courſes: To which purpoſe he at firſt excited the Emperors and Potentates to raiſe "cruel Perſecutions againſt the Chriſtians. Afterwards, when the Chriſtian Religion was em-"braced by Kings and Princes, he caus'd Hereſies to ſucceed Superſtitions; but when theſe means "in like manner prov'd ineffectual, he made uſe of another Method, which was to induce the "Chriſtians to defer the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm: But our Anceſtors the Succeſſors of the Apo-"ſtles, perceiving the dammage ſuch Procraſtinations brought to the Catholick Church, and that "many Perſons died without Baptiſm, ordain'd that all Infants ſhould be Baptiz'd and Educated "in the Chriſtian Religion by their Parents, or by their God-fathers and God-mothers. The "Devil being thus defeated, had recourſe to another Artifice; which was to corrupt the Manners "of baptized Perſons, well knowing that Faith without good Works is unprofitable to Salvation: "Whereupon the Church enjoyn'd Pennance as an Antidote againſt theſe Diſorders; but the Devil "often caus'd the Penitents to fall again into the ſame vicious Courſes, before the time of their "Pennance was expir'd. This difficulty of living Vertuouſly and Soberly in the World, caus'd "many Perſons to take a Reſolution to retire to Solitary Places, there to lead an Aſcetick Life; in-"ſomuch that their Reputation drew many People thither, who imitated their manner of Living; "and their Number being thus encreaſed, they form'd Regular Societies, and erected Monaſteries.

"This Inſtitution began in Ægypt, and from thence was ſpread abroad throughout the whole "World, as St. Athanaſius and Theodorus Studita have obſerv'd. The Biſhops, to render the Mo-"naſtick Life more recommendable, thought fit to confer on the Monks a kind of Conſecration, or "Benediction, which is as it were a renewing of the Baptiſmal Vows. There were among the "Monks a great number of Saints who wrote excellent Books relating to the Monaſtick Diſcipline, "and by that means brought it to perfection. In the mean while the Devil not being able to "endure their Proceedings, at firſt attacked them by Leo the Image-breaker, who endeavour'd to "extirpate their Order; but this Emperor was deſtroy'd, and after his Reign the Monks obtain'd "ſo great Reputation, that they were permitted to receive Confeſſions, to impoſe Pennances, and "to give Abſolution. How many Attempts has the Devil made to ruin an Order ſo well eſta-"bliſhed? He has caus'd Monaſteries and Hoſpitals to be made over by Princes and Patriarchs to "Lay-men: Indeed at firſt they were not conſign'd to ſuch Perſons, to the end that they might "make any Advantage of them, but that they might be re-eſtabliſhed and improv'd. Afterwards "Covetouſneſs being cloked with this ſpecious Shew, the Emperors and Patriarchs began to "grant Monaſteries and Hoſpitals to Laicks, to gain profit by them. The Patriarch Siſinnius op-"poſ'd this Abuſe, which prevail'd from time to time, and which is at preſent ſo great, that al-"moſt all the Monaſteries of Monks and Nuns are in the poſſeſſion of Lay-men, nay even of thoſe "that are matried.

The Patriarch of Antioch condemns the ſaid Cuſtom in the remaining Part of this Treatiſe, alledging the following Reaſons: viz. 1. That the very Title of Donation imports a kind of Blaſphemy, in regard that a Monaſtery, or Church, which bears the Name of our Saviour, of the Virgin Mary, or of the Saints, is given to a meer Man. 2. That the Donor has no Propriety in ſuch Poſſeſſions. 3. That the Monaſteries are Places of Retreat for Perſons who are deſirous to ſerve God, where his Praiſes are ſung, and the Revenues of which are appointed for the maintenance of the Saints, and of the Poor. 4. That the Government of the Church is ſubverted by ſuch irregular Proceedings, when Secular Perſons are ſubſtituted in the room of Monks. 5. That Monaſteries, which are thus made over to Lay-men, are ſoon ruin'd or demoliſhed; and that under Pretence of enfranchiſing them under the protection of ſome Lord, they are made ſubject to the Juriſdiction of ſuch as are ready to pillage and ruin them; treating the Priors and Monks as Slaves, and allowing them only a very small Portion of the Revenues, and that too grudgingly, and as it were out of pure Charity. Besides that these Patrons cannot be perswaded to keep their Monasteries in repair, nor to give Alms, neither do they take care that Divine Service be celebrated therein, nor that a regular Course of Discipline be duly observ'd: But, on the contrary, they apply the Revenues altogether to prophane Uses. That without having any regard to the Monastick Rules and Constitutions, which import, that whoever presents himself in order to be admitted to the Profession, shall undergo a Probation of Three Years; they usually nominate Monks at their Pleasure, and enjoin the Priors to admit them by vertue of their Mandamus. Lastly, that the Monks who are placed there, after so irregular a manner, generally make no scruple to live as dissolutely, eating Flesh inordinately, committing Outrages upon the Laicks, setting forth publick Shews, driving Trades, haunting Ale-houses or Taverns, and making their Monasteries common Receptacles for all sorts of Secular Persons.

6. That greater Disorders were occasion'd on that account in the Convents of Nuns; the Ladies to whom they are consign'd often usurping their Revenues: That they take up their abode, and cause Houses to be built within the Bounds of the Monasteries; and that they introduce Secular Persons, and entirely subvert the Monastick Discipline. From all these Arguments he concludes, that it is a very high Misdemeanour, and a kind of Impiety equal to Heresy, to put Monasteries into the hands of Laicks; and that 'tis a mortal Sin for such Persons to take possession of them; and that they who die in that State, without doing Pennance for their Offence, (which frequently happens) incur Damnation. The Name of Charistocbairi was then usually impos'd among the Greeks on those Lay-men, who had any Abbeys consign'd to them. Theodorus Balsamon, in his Remarks on the 13th. Canon of the Seventh Synod, and Matthæus Blastares, are of a different Opinion from this Author, and approve the Donations of Monasteries which are made by Bishops, provided they be done on good Grounds.

Germanus, Patriarch of Constantinople.

There are extant Two Homilies of GERMANUS Patriarch of Constantinople; viz. one published by Gretser, on the restauration of Image-worship, under the Empress Irene, an annual Commemoration of which was made on the First Sunday in Lent, and the other by Father Combefis, on the Burial of the Body of Jesus Christ.

Arsenius. Andronicus Camaterus.

Arsenius, a Monk of Mount Athos, compos'd in the Year 1150. a compendious Collection of Canons, which is inserted in M. Justel's Library of the Ancient Canon Law.

ANDRONICUS CAMATERUS, Governour of the City of Constantinople, and the Kinsman of the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, wrote at the same time a Treatise against the Latins, in form of a Dialogue, between the Emperor Manuel and certain Cardinals of Rome, concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost. This Book was afterwards refuted by Veccus. Andronicus is also the Author of another Tract, written by way of Conference between the same Emperor, and Peter Patriarch of the Armenians; and of a Treatise of the Two Natures in Jesus Christ. These Works are not as yet printed, but 'tis reported that they are in the Library of Bavaria.

George, Archbishop of Corfu.

GEORGE, Archbishop of Corfu, was sent into Italy by the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, to assist in a Council held at Rome; but he did not pass beyond Brundusium, where he fell sick. However being recall'd by the Emperor, he was present in a Patriarchal Council conven'd at Constantinople. He wrote a Treatise of Purgatory, and another against the Latins, in vindication of the use of leaven'd Bread in the Eucharist. Allatius makes mention of both these Works, which are in Manuscript in the Library of Barberino. Baronius has also published in Latin a Monodia, compos'd by this Archbishop in honour of the Abbot Nectarius, with several Letters in his Annals.

Antonius Melissus.

ANTONIUS, sir-nam'd MELISSUS, by reason of his singular Eloquence, a Greek Monk, apparently liv'd in this Century: He compil'd a Collection of Common Places, or Maxims, taken out of the Writings of the Greek Fathers, on the Vertues and Vices, which are divided into Two Books, and were printed in Greek and Latin at Basil A. D. 1546. as also at Geneva in 1609. and in Latin at Paris in 1575. and 1589. They are likewise inserted in Latin in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

Basil of Acris, Archbishop of Thessalonica.

BASIL OF ACRIS, Archbishop of Thessalonica, being importun'd by Arian IV. to come to an Accommodation with the Church of Rome, wrote a Letter to that Pope, to shew that the Greek Church is not Schismatical, and that the Roman is not superiour to it. Baronius published this Letter with that of Adrian in Anno 1155. of his Annals. It is also extant, but somewhat different, in Greek and Latin, in the Collection of the Greek and Roman Law, with an Answer by the same Archbishop to certain Questions about Marriage.

Lucas Chrysobergius, Patriarch of Constantinople.

LUCAS, sir-nam'd CHRYSOBERGIUS, promoted to the Patriarchal See of Constantinople A. D. 1148. or 1155. held a Council in that City in 1166. and died the Year following. In the Collection of the Greek and Roman Laws are contain'd Thirteen Statutes by this Patriarch, relating to Ecclesiastical Matters; among others, one to prohibit Marriages between Relations to the Seventh Degree of Consanguinity; another against Clerks who intermeddle with Secular Affairs; as also to forbid the performing of rash Oaths, with a Discourse about the Baptism of Captive Children.

Michael of Thessalonica.

MICHAEL OF THESSALONICA, Master of the Rhetoricians, and principal Defender of the Church of Constantinople, being condemn'd in the Year 1160. for maintaining the Heresy of the Bogamiles, retracted his Errors, and made a Confession of Faith, referr'd to by Allatius in the Second Tome of his Concordia Ecclesiæ Orientalis & Occidentalis, L. 2. c. 12.

ALEXIS

ALEXIS ARISTENES, Oeconomus, or Steward of the Church of Conſtantinople, aſſiſted in a Council held in that City A. D. 1166. and there cited the 37th Canon of the Council in Trullo, againſt Nicephorus Patriarch of Jeruſalem. He wrote Annotations on a Collection of Canons printed in Dr. Beveredge's Pandects. Alexis Ariſtenes, Steward of the Church of Conſtantinople.

SIMEON LOGOTHETA, who liv'd at the ſame time, in like manner compos'd Notes on the ſame Collection of Canons, but they are loſt. He is alſo reputed to be the Author of a Piece concerning the Creation of the World, a Manuſcript Copy of which M. du Cange had in his poſſeſſion. Simeon Logotheta.

JOANNES CINNAMUS, ſir-nam'd the Grammarian, Secretary to the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, under whom he likewiſe ſerv'd in the Army, compos'd a Hiſtory of the Reigns of the Two Emperors nam'd Comneni, viz. John and Manuel, from the Year 1118. to 1176. Leo Allatius gives us this Character of the Author: His Style is fine, (ſays he) although he often makes uſe of foreign Terms, and Figures, taken out of the Sophiſters Store-houſe; his Periods are conciſe and full; but the new Method of their Compoſition, renders them ſomewhat harſh and obſcure. This Author every where affects to imitate Procopius, and highly extols Manuel Comnenus: He was ſtill living when Andronicus Comnenus uſurped the Imperial Throne, by cauſing Alexis to be put to death. His Hiſtory, divided into Four Books, was publiſhed in Greek and Latin, by Cornelius Tollius, and printed at Utrecht. A. D. 1652. M. du Cange, in like manner caus'd it to be printed at the Louvre, divided into Six Books, and illuſtrated with Annotations. Joannes Cinnamus.

THEORIANUS was ſent into Armenia by Manuel Comnenus, to endeavour to procure a reunion between that and the Greek Church. Upon his Arrival there, May 15. 1170. he acquainted Nerſeſius their Patriarch with the Deſign of his Embaſſy, and deliver'd to him the Emperor's Letter: The Patriarch receiv'd it with due Acknowledgments of his Imperial Majeſty's Favour, and agree'd to enter into Conference with Theorianus about the Opinions and Cuſtoms in which the Armenians differ'd from the Greeks. Their Firſt Conferences were concerning the Error of the Armenians, with reſpect to our Saviour's Incarnation. Theorianus endeavour'd to convince them by a great number of Teſtimonies of the Fathers, that there were Two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt; and after having diſcourſed largely of that Doctrine, he diſcuſſed the other Queſtions of leſs Conſequence, which were in debate between the Greeks and Armenians, relating to the Feſtival of of Chriſtmas-day, the Triſagion, the Confection of conſecrated Oils with Olives, and not with Rape-ſeed; and the Cuſtom of ſinging the Divine Office without the Church, which was diſapproved by the Greeks. Theorianus vindicated the Practice of the later in thoſe Points, and oblig'd the Armenian Patriarch to acknowledge that they were not blame-worthy, and that theſe different Cuſtoms ought not to be inſiſted on, provided they were agree'd as to the ſame matters of Faith. In order to fix his Judgment, Theorianus produc'd the Decree of the Fourth General Council, and ſhew'd that it was conformable to St. Cyril's Doctrine. The Armenian Patriarch approv'd it, and engag'd to uſe his utmoſt endeavours to get the conſent of thoſe of his Nation, and to cauſe the Biſhops to ſign a Confeſſion of Faith, by virtue of which they ſhould acknowledge the Council of Chalcedon, and anathematize Eutychius, Dioſcorus, Severus, Timotheus, Ælurus, and other Adverſaries of that Council; and laſtly, for that his part, he wou'd always adhere to the Faith of the Greek Church, and continue in its Communion. Theorianus wrote, with his own hand, a faithful Relation of theſe Conferences, and of every thing that was ſaid and propos'd on both ſides. He ſolidly confutes, and in a very methodical manner, the Error of the Monophyſites, and diſcourſes with a great deal of moderation, of thoſe Points that relate to the different Cuſtoms in uſe among the Armenians and Greeks. This Work was publiſhed by Lewenclavius, and printed at Baſil A. D. 1578. as alſo afterwards in the Greek and Latin Edition of the Bibliotheca Patrum, by Fronto Ducæus. Theorianus.

HUGO ETHERIANUS flouriſhed at the ſame time, and under the ſame Emperor Manuel, being a Native of Tuſcany, from whence he paſſed to Conſtantinople, and reſided in the Court of that Emperor, who had a very great reſpect for him. However he did not forbear to write a Treatiſe in vindication of the Latins againſt the Greeks, in which he proves, that the Holy Ghoſt proceeds both from the Father and the Son. It is divided into Three Books, and dedicated to Pope Alexander III. He is alſo the Author of another Piece, concerning the State of the Soul ſeparated from the Body, in which he treats of the Original and Nature of the Soul; of its Union with the Body, and Separation from it; of its Sentiments and Functions in the future State; of the Reſurrection of the Body; and of the Day of Judgment. Theſe Works were printed at Baſil A. D. 1543. and are alſo contain'd in the Bibliotheca Patrum. Hugo Etherianus.

NICEPHORUS BRYENNIUS, a Macedonian, the Grand-ſon of that Nicephorus, whoſe Eyes the Emperor Nicephorus Botaniata caus'd to be put out, for aſpiring to the Empire, and the Son-in-Law of Alexis Comnenus, had the greateſt ſhare in the Adminiſtration of State-Affairs under that Emperor. He improv'd his Skill in Politicks by an aſſiduous application to the Study of the Liberal Sciences, and has left us a Byzantine Hiſtory from the Year 1057. to 1081. which was printed in Greek with Father Pouſſin's Verſion and Notes at Paris A. D. 1661. and with thoſe of M. du Cange at the end of Cinnamus, in the Volume of the Byzantine Hiſtory ſet forth in 1670. Nicephorus Bryennius.

In the ſame Place is likewiſe to be found the Alexias of ANNA COMNENA, the Wife of Nicephorus, and the Daughter of the ſaid Emperor Alexis Comnenus; ſhe relates therein the Hiſtory of her Father's reign, from the Year 1069. to 1118. All Learned Men generally give great Encomiums of this Work, by reaſon of its elegancy, and extol the Genius and Learning of that Princeſs. Anna Comnena.

Princeſs. The Alexias is divided into Fifteen Books; the Eight firſt of theſe were publiſhed in Greek with Hoeſchelius's Verſion and Notes at Augsburg A. D. 1610. and the entire Work was afterwards printed with the Tranſlation and Notes of the ſame Author at Paris in 1651. This laſt Edition was follow'd with that of M. du Cange, who likewiſe illuſtrated it with excellent Annotations.

Johannes Zonaras, Secretary of State at Conſtantinople.

At the ſame time liv'd JOANNES ZONARAS, Secretary of State to the Emperor Alexis Comnenus, who having loſt his Wife and Children embraced the Monaſtick Life, and to mitigate his grief apply'd himſelf to ſtudy, and to the compiling of Books; inſomuch that we are indebted to his learned Lucubrations for a great number of very uſeful Works. Viz.

His Annals, or a compendious Hiſtory from the Creation of the World to the Death of Alexis Comnenus, which happen'd A. D. 1118. This Work was taken out of divers Authors, by way of Extracts, and divided into Three Tomes. It was printed in Greek with Wolfius's Latin Verſion at Baſil A. D. 1557. and afterwards M. du Cange ſet forth a new Edition at the Louvre in 1686. which he divided into Eighteen Books.

Commentaries on the Canons of the Apoſtles, as alſo on thoſe of the Councils, and of the Canonical Epiſtles of the Greek Fathers; which were printed in Greek and Latin at Paris A.D. 1618. and 1622. and in Dr. Beveredge's Collection at Oxford in 1672.

A Diſcourſe of Impurity, inſerted in the Fifth Book of the Jus Græco-Romanum.

A Canon of the Virgin Mary, or a kind of Hymn, containing certain Collects, or ſhort Prayers, made to the bleſſed Virgin againſt all Hereticks. Some Part of this Work was publiſhed in Latin in the Bibliotheca Patrum, and was afterwards ſet forth entire in Greek and Latin, in the Third Tome of Cotelerius's Monuments of the Greek Church.

A Preface to St. Gregory Nazienzen's Poetical Pieces, printed at Venice A. D. 1563. and a Treatiſe to prove that a Widow cannot marry her Husband's Coſin German.

Fifty ſix Letters, that are in the Emperor's Library at Vienna, and ſome of which were publiſhed by Vulcanius in his Notes on the Treatiſe of St. Cyril of Alexandria, concerning the Anthropomorphites.

Beſides theſe Works, Lambecius makes mention of an Explication of the Canons relating to the Feſtival of Eaſter, ſome Fragments of which were publiſhed by Gretſer. Allatius likewiſe cites his his Diſcourſe on the Adoration of the Croſs; the Life of St. Sylveſter; a Diſcourſe about the Preſentation of Jeſus Chriſt in the Temple; and a Panegyrick on Sophronius Patriarch of Jeruſalem. Pontanus makes mention of ſome of his Poems on the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt; and laſtly, Henry Stephen had a Lexicon ſuppos'd to be written by the ſame Zonaras.

Joannes Phocas, a Greek Monk.

JOANNES PHOCAS, a Native of Crete, after having ſerv'd in the Wars under the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, embraced the Monaſtick Life, and made a Journey to the Holy Land, A.D. 1185. Upon his return, he wrote a Relation of what he had ſeen and heard, which was publiſhed by Allatius, in his Collection of Miſcellaneous Works, and bears the Title of, A brief Deſcription of the Places from Antioch to Jeruſalem, and thoſe of Syria and Phœnicia.

Neophytus, a Recluſe.

NEOPHYTUS, a Greek Prieſt, and Recluſe Monk, flouriſhed A. D. 1190. M. Cotelerius ſet forth a Piece written by this Monk, containing a Relation of the Calamities that befel the Iſland of Cyprus, when taken by the Engliſh, A. D. 1191.

John, Biſhop of Lydda.

JOHN Biſhop of Lydda, flouriſhed in the Year 1194. and M. Baluzius has publiſhed a Letter by this Author to Michael choſen Patriarch of Jeruſalem.

George Xiphylin. Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

GEORGE XIPHYLIN, elected Patriarch of Conſtantinople in the Year 1193. beſides an Ordinance about the Juriſdiction of Territories, which is extant in the Collection of the Greek and Roman Laws; Two Synodical Statutes, concerning the Right of conſecrating Churches by ſetting up Croſſes in them; of which Cuſtom Allatius makes mention in the Treatiſe of the George's, and of their Writings. This Author died A. D. 1199.

Demetrius Tornicius,

DEMETRIUS TORNICIUS wrote in the Year 1193. under the Name of the Emperor Iſaac, a Treatiſe of the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, which is extant in the French King's Library. Allatius has likewiſe produc'd the beginning of it, in his Book call'd Concordia Eccleſiæ Orientalis ac Occidentalis.

Lupus Protoſpatus.

LUPUS PROTOSPATUS, Captain of the Eaſtern Emperor's Life-Guards, and a Native of Apulia, compos'd a Chronicle of Occurrences in the Kingdom of Naples, from the Year 866. to 1102. This Hiſtory was publiſhed by Antonio Caraccioli, a Theatin Monk, who caus'd it to be printed at Naples in 1626. with a Continuation to the Year 1519.

Michael Anchialius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople.

MICHAEL ANCHIALIUS, who was promoted to the Patriarchal See of Conſtantinople in the Year 1167. and honour'd by Balſamon, with the Title of moſt excellent of the Sages, compil'd certain Synodical Statutes, prohibiting Clergy-men to take upon them any ſecular Employments, or to ordain Clerks in another Dioceſs, &c. which are contain'd in the Collection of the Roman Laws, L. 3. p. 227. He alſo wrote an Account of the Conference he had with the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, when the Pope's Legates came to Conſtantinople to negotiate an Union between the Two Churches; ſome Fragments of which are produced by Allatius.

Theodorus Balſamon, Patriarch of Antioch.

THEODORUS BALSAMON, Chancellor and Library-keeper of the Church of Conſtantinople, and Provoſt of that of Blachern, was nominated Patriarch of Antioch; but in regard that that City was taken up by the Latins, he was never able to get himſelf actually inſtall'd, and was alſo flatter'd by the means of the Emperor Iſaac Comnenus, with the vain hopes of being advanc'd to the Patriarchal See of Conſtantinople. He flouriſhed from the Year 1180. to 1203. and during that time compos'd divers excellent and very uſeful Books, relating to the Canon Law of the

Eaſtern

Eastern Countreys: The chief of which are his Commentaries on the Apostolical Canons; the General and Particular Councils; and the Canonical Letters of the Greek Fathers. He undertook this Work by the special Order of the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, and of Michael Anchialius Patriarch of Constantinople, and compleated it under the Patriarch George Xiphylin, to whom he dedicated it. It was printed in Greek and Latin at *Paris A.D.*1620. and in Dr. Beverege's Pandects of Canons, printed at Oxford in 1672.

Balsamon in like manner wrote a Commentary on Photius's Nomo-canon, and a Collection of Ecclesiastical Constitutions, printed in the Second Tome of the Bibliotheca Juris Canonici by Justellus; as also Answers to divers Questions relating to the Canon-Law, particularly, of the Erection of Bishopricks into Metropolitan Sees; of such Persons as are chosen Bishops of the Eastern Churches; of the Right of the Patriarchs over the Monasteries; of Festivals, &c. These last Works are to be found with an Answer to certain Questions propos'd by Mark Patriarch of Alexandria, and Resolutions to several others in the Second, Fifth, and Seventh Book of Lemenelavius's Collection of the Greek and Roman Laws. M. Cotelerius has likewise furnished us with Two Letters of this Author, viz. One written to the People of Antioch, about the Fasts they ought to observe; and the other to Theodosius, Superiour of Pupicius's Monasteries, concerning the Custom of Shaving, Admitting, and Investing with the Habit, such Persons as present themselves to embrace the Monastick Life, a little while after their appearance, without obliging them to submit to a Probation of Three Years. The First of these Letters is inserted in the end of the Second Tome of the Monuments of the Greek Church; and the Second, in the Third Tome of the same Work. Balsamon without doubt is the most able Canonist that appear'd among the Greeks in these later Times.

JOANNES CAMATERUS, Chartophylax, and afterward Patriarch of Constantinople, in the end of this Century, wrote in the Year 1199. a Letter to Pope Innocent, in which he declares that he cannot but admire that the Church of Rome shou'd assume the Title of the Catholick or Universal Church. There is also in the Collection call'd Jus Græco-Romanum, a Statute of this Patriarch about the Marriages of Cosin Germans: He died A. D. 1206. Joannes Camaterus.

CHAP. XV.

Of the Original of Scholastical Divinity, and of the first Divines of that Faculty who flourished in the Twelfth Century.

Of the Original of Scholastical Divinity, and of the first Schoolmen.

THE Manner of treating of the Christian Religion, and of its Mysteries, has not been always uniform in the several Ages of the Church; but has been chang'd at several times, according to the various Occasions, or the different Inclinations of Men. The Apostles contented themselves only to teach with much simplicity the Doctrine they receiv'd from Jesus Christ; to propose it to Believers as the Object of their Faith; and to render it credible by the Means of Authority, by the Testimony of the Prophets, by our Saviour's Resurrection, and by Miracles. They never observ'd the difficult Points that might be form'd from the sacred Mysteries; neither did they take any Pains to make a thorough search into them, nor to discover all the Consequences arising from them, much less to explain them according to the Principles of Philosophy and human Reason. Neither were the holy Fathers, nor Ecclesiastical Writers, who liv'd in the First Ages of the Church, more careful to insist on the Explication of these Mysteries; nor did they make use of Philosophy, but only to extirpate the Errors of the Pagans, relating to their Gods, Idols, and false Worship, which might be easily confuted by the Light of Reason, and the Authority of the Philosophers. As for the Jews, and Primitive Hereticks, they only alledg'd to convince them, the Authority of the holy Scriptures, and of Tradition, and the general Belief of all the Churches in the World; and in the Disputes they had with them, they never undertook to give particular Reasons for the several Mysteries, but only to prove, that they ought to be believ'd. It is true indeed, that in Process of time, the Heresies gave occasion more thoroughly to examine the Doctrines, and to fix the Terms that ought to be us'd in explaining them, and to draw Consequences from the Articles of Faith which were formally reveal'd; but the Fathers enter'd upon the Discussion of those Points, being only incited by a kind of necessity: Neither were they so bold as to start a great number of new Questions relating to the Mysteries, nor to resolve them according to Philosophical Principles. Upon the whole, as they did not commit to writing any Speculations about Doctrinal Points, but only with respect to the Heretical Opinions; so neither did they compose any particular Theological Treatise concerning the Doctrines of the Christian Religion, of set purpose, but they treated of them whenever there was occasion to refute some new Heresy.

Origen

Origen was the firſt who undertook to compile as it were a Body of Divinity, in his Work call'd The Principles: But this new Undertaking did not at all prove ſucceſsful, inſomuch that the Author relying too much upon his own knowledge, and being deſirous to accommodate the Doctrines of Chriſtianity to the Maxims of Plato's Philoſophy, had the misfortune to fall into many Errors, which have ſullied his Memory. But ſuch Inconveniences did not happen to thoſe Divines, who contented themſelves only to teach with the ſimplicity of Catechiſts, the principal Myſteries of our Religion contain'd in the Apoſtles Creed, and to prove them by Paſſages taken out of the holy Scriptures. In the Ages following the great Hereſies of the Arians, Neſtorians, Eutychians, &c. the Reverend Fathers were oblig'd to treat at large of the Myſteries of the Trinity, and of the Incarnation; but the holy Scriptures, and Tradition, were the only Principles on which they grounded their Proofs, and they only made uſe of Argumentations to diſcover the Senſe of the Paſſages of Scripture, and of the Ancient Fathers. The ſame thing was done with reſpect to other Hereſies; and we do not find any other Arguments alledg'd to refute them, nor any other Rules made uſe of in the Councils to condemn them: But by little and little an over-weaning Curioſity induced Men to ſtart divers new Queſtions relating to Theological Matters, particularly the Myſteries and other difficult Points of the Chriſtian Religion. Indeed at firſt the Authority of holy Scriptures, and of Tradition, was only brought to decide them, but afterwards Philoſophy was alſo call'd in to their aſſiſtance, more eſpecially the Platonick, that was then moſt in vogue, and which ſeem'd moſt conformable to the Rules of Chriſtianity. The Author of the Works aſcrib'd to St. Dionyſius the Areopagite, who wrote in the end of the Fifth Century, follow'd this Method, and treated in his Books of the Divine Attributes, and Hierarchy, of divers Theological Queſtions, according to the Principles of the Platonick Philoſophers.

Some time after, Boethius, a Man well verſed in Ariſtotle's Philoſophy, made uſe of his Maxims to explain the Myſteries of the Trinity, and of the Incarnation; which engag'd him in Debates about ſome very ſubtil and intricate Queſtions. But St. Joannes Damaſcenus is the firſt who undertook methodically to diſcuſs all ſorts of Theological Queſtions, and to reduce them into an entire Body. In the Ninth Century, Joannes Scotus Erigena apply'd Ariſtotle's Method and Principles to the reſolution of ſeveral Queſtions relating to Points of Divinity; but his ſubtil Notions having lead him into divers Errors; his Doctrine and Method were rejected by the Divines of his Time. The ſtudy of the moſt neceſſary and moſt obvious Points being neglected in the Tenth Century, it is not to be admir'd, that no application was made to thoſe abſtruſe and difficult Queſtions; ſo that Ariſtotle's Philoſophy was not begun to be taught in the Publick Schools, according to the Method of the Arabians, till the beginning of the Eleventh Century; neither was there any uſe of it made at firſt, in Theological Matters: But in proceſs of time, Men, whoſe Heads were fill'd with thoſe Notions, inſenſibly introduced them into Divinity, and apply'd them not only to illuſtrate and decide ordinary Queſtions, but to form a great number of new ones, which were never heard of before. John the Sophiſter, Roſcelinus, and St. Anſelm, were the firſt who put this Method in practice; and after them Abaelardus, Gillebert de la Porrée, and many others, brought it into vogue, and made publick Lectures on that ſubject. Otho of Friſingben introduced it into Germany, and within a little while after, it took place almoſt throughout all Chriſtendom.

But foraſmuch as it is difficult not to go aſtray in following a new Track, ſome of the firſt Authors of this manner of handling Theological Points, particularly Roſcelinus, Abaelardus, Gillebert de la Porrée, as alſo Amaury or Amalaricus, and many others, in the beginning of the following Century, fell into divers Errors; or at leaſt expreſſed themſelves in ſuch a manner as was condemn'd by thoſe Perſons, who adher'd to the Sentiments and Method of Diſcourſe us'd by the Ancient Fathers. There alſo happen'd another Inconvenience, which was, that the different Opinions of theſe Authors, about the moſt part of thoſe Queſtions, gave occaſion to many Conteſts and Diſputes among the Divines; and in regard that the number of the Queſtions encreaſed daily, and every one to maintain his Opinions had recourſe to the moſt ſubtil Topicks of the Ariſtoteleen Logick and Metaphyſick; the Diſputes were almoſt innumerable, and became ſo full of Obſcurities, Intricacies, and Evaſions, that only thoſe who were well verſed in that Art, were able to comprehend any thing, and thus it was impoſſible to come to any determination. Beſides the uncouth manner of handling the ſeveral Subjects, and the barbarous Terms that were us'd, render'd this kind of Study much more agreeable.

Peter Lombard, Biſhop of Paris.

To prevent theſe Inconveniences, PETER LOMBARD, Biſhop of Paris, undertook to make a Collection of the Paſſages of the Fathers, and chiefly of St. Hilary, St. Ambroſe, St. Jerom, and St. Auguſtin, on the principal Queſtions that were then in debate among the School-men; imagining by that means to put an end to their Diſputes, and to form ſuch Deciſions, as the Authority of thoſe Perſons, on whoſe Teſtimonies they were grounded, might render venerable, and might even cauſe them to be receiv'd with common conſent. This Collection was call'd, The Book of the Sentences, (a Title then uſually impos'd on Theological Works) and being preferr'd before all others, was receiv'd with ſo general approbation, that in a little time, it became the only Model of Scholaſtical Divinity that was publickly us'd in the Schools; inſomuch that the Author of it was call'd, by way of excellency, The Maſter of the Sentences: But the Doctors of the Faculty, not contenting themſelves with the ſimplicity of this Work, made voluminous Commentaries on the Text, in which they renewed their Conteſts; reviv'd the ſame Queſtions; and again intermixed, with Theological Matters, the Principles of Philoſophy, and the Maxims of Ariſtotle, which were never us'd by the Maſter of the Sentences: Nay, ſome proceeded ſo far, as to find fault with his Deciſions, although they were expreſſed in the very words of the Fathers. Thus Pope Alexan- der

Anno III. censur'd one of his Expressions; the Abbot Joachim wrote a Book against him; and the Faculty of Paris drew up a Catalogue of Articles, in which the Master of the Sentences was not usually follow'd. However, he may be esteem'd as the chief of all the School-Divines; for although in his Work he has made use of a Method quite different from the others, as to the manner of discussing the Theological Questions, yet his Book has always serv'd as their Model or Ground-work, and apparently they have done nothing else but commented upon it. Upon which account we are oblig'd to enlarge somewhat more on the Life, and Personal Endowments, of Peter Lombard, as also on the Contents of his Work.

He was born in a Village near Novaria in Lombardy, from whence his Sir-name was taken, and perform'd part of his Studies at Bononia, where there was at that time a famous University, more especially for the study of the Civil Law; but in regard that those of France were much more noted, with respect to the Faculty of Divinity, he took a Resolution to go thither, having obtain'd a Letter of recommendation from the Bishop of Lucca to St. Bernard, in which he entreated him to take a particular Care of Peter Lombard's Education; whilst he apply'd himself to study in France. St. Bernard provided all things necessary for his Subsistence, as long as he resided at Rheims; and upon his departure for Paris, recommended him to Gilduin Abbot of St. Victor, to the end that he might maintain him Gratis. Peter, in a little time, acquir'd a great deal of Reputation, and was nominated Professor of Divinity in the University of Paris, of which he is also styl'd President by the contemporary Writers. He follow'd this Employment with so good success, that the Bishoprick of Paris being vacant in 1150. Philip Arch-deacon of Paris, the Son of King Lewis the Gross, who was chosen Bishop of that City by the Chapter, resign'd his Place to him, and condescended so far as to permit a Stranger of an obscure Parentage, and of as mean Fortunes, to be preferr'd before him, by reason of his extraordinary Learning; although he was the Son and Brother of a King: A singular and rare Example of Humility! However, Peter Lombard did not long enjoy this Dignity; for he died July 20. A. D. 1164. and was buried in St. Marcel's Church, where the Licentiates of the Faculty of Paris are oblig'd every Year to compose a Form of Divine Service in honour of his Memory.

This Author wrote, besides the Book of Sentences, certain Commentaries on the Psalms, and on St. Paul's Epistles, which in effect are almost nothing else but Extracts out of the Commentaries of St. Hilary, St. Ambrose, St. Augustin, Cassiodorus, and Remegius, or Remy of Auxerre. The Commentary on the Book of Psalms was printed at Paris A. D. 1541. and that on St. Paul's Epistles at the same Place in 1535.

His Collection of the Sentences is divided into Four Books, and every Book into several Sections; the Division of the whole Work being grounded on St. Augustin's Axiom, That Knowledge has Two Objects, viz. Things, and Signs; that Things are divisible into those that may be enjoy'd, and those which are only to be us'd; that is to say, God and the Creatures. In the First Book he treats of those Things that ought to be enjoy'd, particularly the Three Persons of the Holy Trinity, and the Divine Attributes. In the Second, he specifies those Things the use of which is only allow'd, namely, the Creatures; discoursing of the Creation of the World; of the Fall of the Angels, and that of Man; of Grace and Free Will; of original and actual Sins, &c. In the Third, he gives an Account of the Mystery of the Incarnation of Jesus Christ, by vertue of which Mankind is delivered from Sin; of Faith, Charity, and the other practical Vertues; and of the Commandments of God, which must be observ'd for the attaining to Salvation. The Fourth and last Book, contains Matters relating to the Signs or Sacraments of the Church, except the Seven last Sections, in which he treats of the Resurrection; of the last Judgment; and of the future State.

In the First Section of the First Book, he examines what are the Things which ought to be enjoy'd, and what are those that are only to be us'd, as also, what it is to enjoy and use Things; who are the Persons capable of enjoying and using them, and by what means both the one and the other is done. Then he proceeds to resolve these Questions according to the Maxims of St. Augustin, who maintains that we ought to enjoy God alone; that is to say, we ought only to adhere to him as our ultimate End, and to love him upon his own Account; and that we ought not to fix our Affections on the Creatures; that is to say, not to love them but for God's sake, and not to adhere to them any farther than it seems good to the Will of God.

He proves, in the Second Section, the Mystery of the Holy Trinity, by Passages taken out of the Old and New Testament.

In the Third, he explains after what manner God may be known by the Creatures, and brings Comparisons taken from the Creatures, that may serve to give some Idea of the Mystery of the Trinity; and insists more particularly on that of the Soul consisting of divers Faculties, which are nothing but the Soul itself. He observes, at the same time, that this Comparison, is not alike in all Points, and shews the Difference.

In the Fourth, he discusses this Question, Whether it may be said, that God the Father is begotten himself; or whether it ought to be said, that he begot another God? And concludes with St. Augustin, that it ought to be affirm'd, that God the Father begot another Person, who is God, and the same with him in Substance.

In the Fifth, he examines another Question about the Generation of the Word; viz. Whether it may be said, that the Father begot the Divine Essence, or the Divine Essence begot the Son; or whether one Essence produced another; or whether the Essence be neither produced, nor producing? He relates divers Passages of the Fathers concerning these Questions, and maintains, that it cannot be said, that God the Father produced the Divine Essence; or that the Essence produced the Son; or that the Essence produced another Essence: But that it must be expressed, that the Father produced the Son and the Holy Ghost, who are two Persons of the same Substance, and of the same Essence with the Father.

In the Sixth, he enquires, Whether the Father begat the Son, Volens aut Nolens; (as it is usually termed,) that is to say, by Necessity, or by his own Will? He replies, with St. Augustin, that the Son of God was begotten according to Nature, and not according to Will; and that although God was willing to beget him, yet his Generation is not an Effect of that Will.

In the Seventh, he proposes another more subtil Question; viz. Whether the Father were endu'd with a particular Will and Power to beget his Son? If an Answer be made Affirmatively, it then follows, that the Father has a Power and Will which the Son has not, in regard that the latter is another able not willing to beget. He resolves this Difficulty by saying, that Generation is not an Effect either of the Will, or of the Power, but of Nature, and that is not a Thing. Afterwards he explains in what Sense St. Augustin said, that the Son had Power to beget; that is to say, that it is not by reason of Impotency that he did not beget.

In the Eighth Section, he treats of the Nature, Immutability, and Purity of God: He affirms that he is improperly call'd a Substance, and that there is nothing in God, that is not God himself.

In the Ninth, he discourses of the Generation of the Son from Eternity.

In the Tenth, he begins to treat of the Holy Ghost, and shews in what Sense he is call'd Charity.

In the Eleventh, he proves that he proceeds from the Father and the Son.

In the Twelfth, he explains in what Sense it may be said, that the Holy Ghost proceeds chiefly from the Father; viz. in regard that the Son, from whom he proceeds, as well as from the Father, receives his Nature from the Father. He adds, that in this Sense it is said, that the Father sends the Holy Ghost by his Son.

In the Thirteenth, he shews, that human Understanding cannot comprehend the Reason of the Difference between the Generation of the Word, and the Procession of the Holy Ghost; and declares in what Sense the Holy Ghost may be said to be Ingenitus.

In the Fourteenth, he treats particularly of the temporal Procession, or Communication of the Holy Ghost; and maintains, that it is really imparted to Men; and that Men, though never so Holy, cannot have power to confer it, but only the Father and the Son.

He adds, in the Fifteenth Section, that the Holy Ghost likewise communicates himself; and declares on that occasion divers Questions relating to the Mission of the Son.

The same Subject is continu'd in the Sixteenth Section.

In the Seventeenth, the Author represents several Questions about the Mission of the Holy Ghost.

He explains, in the Eighteenth, in what Sense the Holy Ghost is call'd a Gift, and how he is given to us.

In the Nineteenth, he treats of the Equality of the Three Persons in the Holy Trinity, and of their Union in the same Essence.

In the Twentieth, he proves the Equality of Power among the Three Divine Persons.

In the Twenty first, he shews in what Sense it may be said, that the Father is God alone, the Son God alone, and the Holy Ghost God alone.

In the Twenty second, he distinguishes the Terms that agree with the Three Persons in common, and do not agree with any in particular, as that of the Trinity: Those that agree with every one of the Three Persons, which express the absolute Attributes, or relative to the Creatures; as the being Infinite, Almighty, Creator, &c. And lastly, those that agree with one Person, but not with another; as to be the Father, to be Begotten, to be Given, &c.

He shews, in the Twenty third, that all the Terms relating to the Substance cannot be said in the Plural Number, of the Three Persons of the Trinity, but only in the Singular. Thus it is not said, The Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, are Almighty; although every one of those Persons is declar'd to be Almighty. He excepts the word Person, which cannot be said of the Three Divine Persons in the Singular Number, but only in the Plural; for it cannot be said, that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, are one Person, but that they are Three Persons, according to the Greeks, Three Hypostases.

In the Twenty fourth, and in the Twenty fifth, he examines divers Questions about the Terms of Unity, Trinity, and the Distinction in speaking of the Trinity.

In the Twenty sixth, Twenty seventh, Twenty eighth, and Twenty ninth, he discourses of the Relative Properties of the Three Divine Persons among themselves.

In the Thirtieth, he treats of the Relative Properties of God, with respect to Men; as to be a Creator, &c. and shews, that they do not imply any Change or Alteration in the Divine Nature.

In the Thirty first, he shews, that the Equality and Likeness of the Three Persons are not grounded on their Relative Properties, but on the Identity of their Nature.

In the Thirty second, he lays down Two principal Difficulties; viz. Whether the Father and the Son mutually love one another by the Holy Ghost; or whether the Father be Wise by the Wisdom he has begotten? He acknowledges these Questions to be difficult; yet declares, that there is in God a certain Love, and a certain Wisdom, which are common to the Three Persons, although the

be a Wiſdom which is not the Father, nor the Holy Ghoſt; and the Holy Ghoſt a Love, which is neither the Father, nor the Son; nevertheleſs without imagining Two Wiſdoms, or Two Loves, to be in the Trinity.

In the Thirty third, he propoſes this Queſtion; viz. Whether the Properties of the Perſons are to be diſtinguiſhed from the Perſons themſelves, and from the Divine Eſſence?

He maintains the Negative, and condemns the contrary Opinion as Heretical.

He oppoſes the ſame Opinion, in the Thirty fourth Section. and ſhews, that the Perſons are not diſtinguiſhed from their Nature.

In the Thirty fifth, he begins to treat of the Attributes of God, which deſerve a particular Conſideration; ſuch are his Omniſcience, Omnipotency, Providence, Will, Predeſtination, &c. The Author ſhews, in this Section, that theſe Attributes are relative to the Creatures.

In the Thirty ſixth, he makes it appear, that all Things are expos'd to God's Omniſcience, as well Good as Evil; although Evil be not an Effect that proceeds from him.

In the Thirty ſeventh, he treats of the manner of God's being every where, by his Preſence, Power, and Eſſence; diſcourſing by the way, of the manner how Spiritual Creatures are in a Place, and how they paſs from one Place to another.

Afterwards, returning to the Queſtion about the Fore-knowledge of God, he ſays, that it is not the Cauſe of Things, if it be taken for a ſimple Knowledge; but if his Will, Decree, and Inclination, be comprehended under that Name, in that Senſe it is the Cauſe of all Things. That upon this account God cannot be the Author of Evil, becauſe he does not require, nor ordain it, although he knows it. In the end of this Section, is produced the famous Diſtinction of the Compoſit, and divided Senſation, to explain how God's Fore-knowledge cannot be erroneous, although the Things might happen otherwiſe. It is impoſſible that that ſhould not happen which God has fore-ſeen; that is to ſay, that it cannot ſo fall out that God ſhould fore-ſee it, and yet that it ſhould not happen; but perhaps it might not happen, and then God ſhould not have fore-ſeen it.

In the Thirty ninth, he proves, that the Omniſcience of God has always been the ſame, and that it cannot be diminiſhed or augmented.

In the Fortieth, he begins to treat of Predeſtination, and diſtinguiſhes it from Fore-knowledge, in regard that the former has reſpect only to the Good which God ought to do. Then he again makes uſe of the Diſtinction of Compoſit, and Divided Senſation; to explain in what Senſe it may be ſaid, that none of the Predeſtinated Perſons can be damned, nor any of the Reprobate ſav'd. He makes Predeſtination to conſiſt in an eternal Decree of God, by which he elected thoſe whom he thought fit, and prepar'd Graces for them; and Reprobation, in the Fore-knowledge of their Sins, by virtue of which he prepar'd everlaſting Puniſhments to be inflicted on them.

In the Forty firſt Section, he treats of the Cauſes of Predeſtination, and ſhews that it is purely Gratuitous; and that God has not choſen the Elect, becauſe he knew them to be Righteous, but that he call'd them to be ſo by his Grace.

From Predeſtination he paſſes to Omnipotency; and explains, in the Forty ſecond Section, in what Senſe God is Almighty.

He proves, in the Forty third, that God can do an infinite number of Things, which he does not, and confutes the Arguments and Allegations brought by ſome Perſons to evince the contrary.

In the Forty fourth, he ſhews, that God can abſolutely make Things more perfect than he has done, if reſpect only be had to the Quality of the Creature; but cannot do ſo, if the Wiſdom and Intention of the Creator be taken into conſideration. He adds, that God can always do what he has done, becauſe he always has the ſame Power; although it happens that he cannot do in particular what he has already done.

He treats at large, in the Forty fifth Section, of the Will of God, of its Nature and Effects, and of its different Kinds.

In the Forty ſixth, he explains in what Senſe the Will of God cannot be ineffectual; and in what Senſe he is willing, or unwilling, that Evil be committed: He has no inclination to Evil, yet he is not abſolutely willing to prevent it.

He proves, in the Two following Sections, that the Will of God is always efficacious; that whatever he thinks fit inevitably comes to paſs, and nothing happens but by his Will: That although he does not approve all the Inclinations of Men, nevertheleſs he willingly admits the Effects of their depraved Will, but does not approve the Act of it.

In the Firſt Section of the Second Book, the Author confutes the Error of thoſe Hereticks, who admitted Two Principal or Sovereign Beings; ſhews that God created Angels and Men, and diſcourſes in general of their Nature, and of the End for which they were created.

In the Second, he examines when, and in what Place, the Angels were created.

In the Third, he treats of the State in which they were created; and maintains, that they were created in Uprightneſs, and that their Fall happen'd but ſome Moments after their Creation.

He adds, in the following Section, that they did not enjoy perfect Bleſſedneſs, till they were confirm'd in Good.

In the Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh Sections, he debates divers Queſtions about the Fall of the Wicked, and the Confirmation of the Juſt.

In the Eighth, he follows St. Auguſtin's Opinion, who believ'd that the Angels have Aerial Bodies; and upon occaſion of that Queſtion, he enquires after what manner God was wont to appear to Men, and in what Senſe it is ſaid, that the Devils enter into human Bodies.

In the Ninth, he treats of the different Orders of the Angels.

In the Tenth, he examines whether any Angels of different Orders were ſent, and gives an Account of the different Opinions of the Fathers, with reſpect to theſe Queſtions.

He proves, in the Eleventh, that every one of the Elect has a Guardian Angel, yet owns that the ſame Angel may ſerve as a Guardian to ſeveral Perſons; and afterwards proceeds to examine in what particulars the Knowledge of the Angels may be augmented.

In the following Sections, to the Sixteenth, he explains the Work of the Creation.

In the Sixteenth and Seventeenth, he treats of the Creation of Man; and enquires in what his likeneſs to God conſiſts, when his Soul was created, and in what Place he was ſet.

He diſcourſes, in the Eighteenth, of the Formation of Woman; and endeavours to explain why ſhe was taken out of the Man's Rib.

In the Nineteenth, he treats of the State of Immortality, in which the Firſt Man was created.

In the Twentieth, he debates concerning the Manner how Men were to be brought into the World, and how they were to be nouriſhed, in caſe the State of Innocence had continu'd.

In the Twenty firſt, he gives an Account after what manner the Devil tempted Man.

He diſcuſſes, in the Twenty ſecond, divers Queſtions relating to the Quality and Circumſtances of the Sin of Adam and Eve.

In the Twenty third, he reſolves this difficult Point, Why God permitted Man to be tempted knowing that he was to Fall? And afterwards treats of the Knowledge with which the Firſt Man was endu'd.

In the Twenty fourth, he begins to diſcourſe concerning the Free Will, and Grace, inherent in the Firſt Man; and treats in general, in the Two following Sections, of the Freedom of Grace, according to St. Auguſtin's Principles.

In the Twenty ſeventh Section, he diſcourſes of Vertue and Merit, which are the Effects of Grace and Free Will.

In the Twenty eighth, he confutes the Errors of the Pelagians, as alſo thoſe of the Manichees, and of Jovinian.

In the Twenty ninth Section, he returns to the State of the Firſt Man; and after having ſhewn, that Man even in the State of Innocency ſtood in need of operating and co-operating Grace, for the doing of Good, he debates certain Queſtions about the manner how he was expell'd Paradiſe, and concerning the Tree of Life which preſerv'd him from Death.

In the Thirtieth, Thirty firſt, Thirty ſecond, and Thirty third, he treats of Original Sin, and enquires in what it conſiſts; how it is tranſferr'd from Parents to their Children; after what manner it is remitted by Baptiſm; whether Children contract the Sins of their Parents, as Original Sin, &c.

In the Thirty fourth and Thirty fifth, he diſcourſes of the Nature of Actual Sin.

In the Thirty ſixth, he ſhews, that there are Sins which are both the Cauſe, and the Puniſhment of Sin.

He makes it appear, in the Thirty ſeventh, that God is the Author of the Actions, by which Sin is committed, and of the Puniſhments of Sin, although he is not the Author of Sin.

In the Thirty eighth, he demonſtrates, that it is the End and Intention of the Will which renders the Action either Good or Bad; and that in order to its being Good, it muſt of neceſſity be terminated in God.

In the Thirty ninth, he enquires into the Reaſon, Why, of all the natural Faculties, the Will only is ſuſceptible of Sin?

In the Fortieth, he continues to ſhew, that an Action to be denominated Good, ought to have a good End and Intention.

In the Forty firſt, he produces divers Paſſages of St. Auguſtin, about the neceſſity of Faith, and of an upright Will, to avoid the committing of Sin; and ſhews, that the corrupt Will is the cauſe of Sin.

He enquires, in the Forty ſecond, Whether the Will and the Action be two different Sins? And afterwards explains the Diviſion of the Seven Capital Sins; ſhewing, that they derive their original from Pride and Concupiſcence.

In the Forty third, he relates the Opinions of St. Ambroſe, and St. Auguſtin, concerning the Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt.

Laſtly, he makes it appear, in the Forty fourth Section, that the Power of committing Sin proceeds from God; and that the Power the Devil has to tempt us to Evil, ought to be reſiſted.

The Third Book begins with the Queſtions relating to the Myſtery of the Incarnation. In the Firſt Section, the Author lays down the Reaſons, Why it was more expedient that the Son ſhould be Incarnate, rather than the Father, or the Holy Ghoſt; and diſcuſſes this Queſtion, Whether Two Perſons were in like manner capable of being Incarnate.

In the Second Section, he treats of the Union of the Word, with the Body and the Soul.

In the Third, he ſhews, that the Body taken by the Word was free from the corruption of Sin; that the Virgin Mary herſelf was then alſo free from Sin; and that in the very moment that the Humanity of Jeſus Chriſt was conceiv'd, the Word was united to it.

He

He enquires, in the Fourth, Why the Incarnation is attributed to the Holy Ghost, rather than to the other Persons of the Trinity; and in what Sense it is said Jesus Christ was conceiv'd and born of the Holy Ghost?

In the Fifth Section, he treats of the Union of the Person of the Son with the Human Nature; and shews, that the Word was not united to the Person, but to the Nature.

In the Sixth, he gives an Account of these Propositions; viz. God was made Man, God is Man; and produces Three several Explications of them made by the Fathers.

The same matter is further handled in the Seventh Distinction.

In the Eighth, he resolves this Question, Whether it may be said, that the Divine Nature was born of the Virgin Mary? And discourses of the two-fold Nativity of Jesus Christ.

In the Ninth, he produces certain Passages of the Fathers, concerning the Adoration of the Body of Jesus Christ.

In the Tenth, he proposes this Question, viz. Whether Jesus Christ, quatenus Man, be a Person, or a Thing? He maintains the Negative, and afterwards proves that the Quality or Title of [illegible] can never be appropriated to him.

In the Eleventh, he asserts, that neither ought Jesus Christ to be call'd a Creature, without adding [illegible] Man.

In the Twelfth, he discusses divers Questions; viz. Whether it may be said of Jesus Christ as Man, that he always was, or that it was possible that he might not be God? He determines, that [illegible] be said of the Person of Jesus Christ, but only of his Human Nature.

In the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Sections, he treats of Knowledge, Grace, and the Power of Jesus Christ, quatenus Man.

In the Fifteenth and Sixteenth, he proves, that Jesus Christ took upon him the Infirmities of Human Nature, Sin and Ignorance only excepted, and that he was capable of undergoing Sufferings.

In the Seventeenth, he explains the two-fold Will of Jesus Christ.

In the Eighteenth, he discourses of what Jesus Christ merited for himself, and of what he merited for us.

In the Nineteenth, he treats of Redemption.

In the Twentieth, he enquires, Why Jesus Christ redeem'd us by his Passion and Death? And whether he could not have done it by some other means?

In the Twenty first, he proposes this Question; viz. Whether the Word remain'd united to the Body of Jesus Christ, as well as to his Soul, after his Death? And concludes in the Affirmative.

In the Twenty second, he enquires, Whether it may be said, that Jesus Christ was Man during the time that his Body lay in the Sepulchre?

In the following Sections, he treats of Faith, Hope, and Charity.

In the Thirty third, he discourses of the Four Cardinal Vertues.

In the Thirty fourth, of the Seven Gifts of the Holy Ghost, and chiefly of the Fear of God.

In the Thirty fifth, he explains the difference between Wisdom and Knowledge.

In the Thirty sixth, he treats of the Connexion of all the Vertues, and of the Relation they have to Charity.

The Four last Sections of this Book, contain a compendious Explication of the Decalogue.

The Holy Sacraments are the principal Subject treated of in the last Book.

In the first Section, he gives a Definition of the Sacraments; shews the Causes of their Institution; observes the difference between those of the Old and New Law; and treats in particular of Circumcision, which he believes to have been so necessary for the remission of Original Sin, that he affirms, that the Children of the Jews, who died without partaking of that Sacrament, were consign'd to Damnation.

In the Second, after having nominated the Seven Sacraments of the New Law, he discourses of the Baptism by St. John the Baptist.

In the Third, he treats of the Baptism of Jesus Christ, and after having confirm'd St. Ambrose's Opinion, that Baptism might be absolutely administer'd in the Name of Jesus Christ, he enquires, When the Baptism of Jesus Christ was instituted, and under what Form the Apostles baptized Persons? As also, Why Water is us'd in the Administration of this Sacrament, and no other Liquor; and how many Immersions ought to be made in Baptizing?

In the Fourth Section, he treats of the Effects of Baptism; shewing how some Persons receive the Sacrament, and the Grace of the Sacrament; and how others receive the Sacrament without the Grace, and the Grace without the Sacrament. He proves that Infants receive both; and adds, that they even receive Actual Grace, which afterwards enables them to perform good Actions.

In the Fifth, he makes it appear from St. Augustin's Principles, that Baptism administred by an unworthy Priest, is no less Holy than that which is perform'd by the Hands of a worthy one; because the effective Power of Baptizing is inherent in Jesus Christ, which he does not communicate to the Ministers.

In the Sixth Section, he observes, that the Bishops, or Priests, have a Right to administer this Sacrament; although in case of necessity it may be done by Lay-men, and even by Women: And that it is valid by whomsoever it be administer'd, nay when perform'd by Hereticks, provided it be done in the Name of the Holy Trinity. He asserts, that an Infant cannot be baptized in the Mother's Belly, and afterwards handles several other Questions relating to the Form and Ceremonies of Baptism.

In the Seventh Section, he treats of the Sacrament of Confirmation; and at first observes, that the Form of this Sacrament are the Words pronounced by the Priest, when he anoints the Forehead of the Baptized Persons with the Holy Chrism. The Author adds, that the Administration of this Sacrament was always reserv'd to the Bishops; that they alone are capable of administring it effectually in due Form; and that it cannot be reiterated.

He begins, in the Eighth Section, to discourse of the Sacrament of the Eucharist; and after having shewn some of the ancient Figures of this Sacrament, proceeds to treat of its Institution, of its Form, which he makes to consist in these Words, This is my Body, this is my Blood; and of the Things contain'd therein. He says, Three Things are to be distinguished in the Eucharist, viz. the Sacrament consisting in the visible Species of the Bread and Wine; the Sacrament and the Thing, which is the proper Body, and the proper Blood of our Lord, contain'd under the Species; and the Thing, which is not the Sacrament; that is to say, the mystical Body of Jesus Christ, or the inward Grace.

In the Ninth Section, he distinguishes Two Manners of receiving the Body of Jesus Christ, viz. one Sacramental, which is common to the worthy, and to the unworthy Communicants; and the other Spiritual, which is peculiar only to the former.

In the Tenth, he proves the Real Presence, and the changing of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, and refutes the Opinion of those, who believe the Eucharist to be only a Figure.

In the Eleventh, he at first enquires of what Nature this Change is, and proves it to be substantial; insomuch that the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ are under the Accidents, which before cover'd the Substance of the Bread and Wine, which is annihilated or return'd to the first Matter. He confutes those Persons who asserted, that the Substance of the Bread remain'd after the Consecration; and afterwards gives an Account, why the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ are administer'd to us under Two different Kinds, and why Water is intermixed with the Wine.

In the Twelfth, he endeavours to explain divers Questions relating to the Eucharistical Species, and affirms, that the Accidents remain therein without the Subject; and that they only are broken and divided into many Parts. Afterwards he discourses of the Quality which is peculiar to the Sacrament, as also of its Institution and Effects.

In the Thirteenth Section, he acknowledges, that unworthy Ministers may consecrate the Elements; but denies, that it can be done by excommunicated Persons, and declared Hereticks.

In the Fourteenth, he begins to treat of Repentance; distinguishing the Vertue of Repentance from the Sacrament of Penance: He gives divers Definitions of Repentance, and shews the Necessity of it, as also that it may be often reiterated.

In the Fifteenth, he proves that one cannot be truly penitent for one Sin, without actually repenting of all.

In the Sixteenth, he distinguishes the Three Parts of Repentance; viz. the Compunction of the Heart, the Confession of the Mouth, and the Satisfaction of Works; and discourses in particular of the Satisfactions that ought to be made for venial Sins.

He treats of Confession, in the Seventeenth Section, and shews, that is requisite to confess one's Sins to a Priest, in order to obtain the remission of them.

In the Eighteenth, he treats of the Sacerdotal Power, and of the use of the Keys; and after having produced different Opinions relating to that matter, concludes, That God alone has the Power of absolutely binding and loosing the Sinner, by cleansing the Pollution of his Sin, and remitting the Penalty of Eternal Damnation: That the Priests do indeed bind and loose, by declaring that such Persons are bound or loosed by God, and by imposing Penance, or by readmitting to the Communion those whom they have excommunicated.

In the Nineteenth, he discourses of the Qualities requisite in Ministers, who are employ'd to bind and loose Sinners; nevertheless he acknowledges that unworthy Priests have the Power of the Keys as well as the worthy.

The Twentieth Section, contains the Opinions of the Fathers concerning the Repentance of dying Persons.

In the Twenty first, he discourses of the Expiation of light Sins by the Pains of Purgatory; of the general Confession of venial Sins; and of the Penalties to be inflicted on Priests, who divulge matters related to them in Confession.

In the Twenty second, he proposes this Question; viz. Whether Sins that have been once forgiven, return by the Commission of following Sins? And after having produced the Reasons on both sides, leaves the Question undecided.

In the Twenty third Distinction, he treats of the Sacrament of Unction, which he believes to have been instituted by the Apostles; the Effect of it being the remission of Sins, and the comfort of the Sick Person: He also proves that this Sacrament may be reiterated.

In the Twenty fourth, he treats of the Functions and Dignity of the Seven Orders, and of the different Dignities among Bishops.

In the Twenty fifth, he discourses of the validity of Ordinations made by Hereticks; and after having produced different Opinions, seems to approve that of those who affirm, that Persons who were

were ordain'd in the Church ſtill retain the Power of ordaining, though they turn Hereticks; but deny that thoſe whom they ordain have the ſame Power. Afterwards he treats of Simoniacal Ordinations, and of the Age requiſite for admiſſion into Orders.

In the Twenty ſixth, he ſhews the Antiquity of the Sacrament of Marriage.

In the Twenty ſeventh, he enquires in what Marriage conſiſts, and diſtinguiſhes a Promiſe of future Marriage, from Marriage contracted by the preſent Conſent of the Parties.

In the Twenty eighth, Twenty ninth, and Thirtieth, he gives a farther Account of the Conditions that ought to be annexed to ſuch a Conſent as is neceſſary for the Conſummation of Marriage.

In the Thirty firſt, he explains the Advantages of Marriage, which are Fidelity, the Lawful Procreation of Children, and the Benefit of the Sacrament, and treats of the contrary Vices.

In the Thirty ſecond, he diſcourſes of Matters relating to the Continency of married Perſons at certain times.

In the Thirty third, he relates divers Conſiderations of the Fathers, with reſpect to the Polygamy of the Patriarchs.

In the Thirty fourth, he treats of the Impediments that render Perſons uncapable of contracting Marriage, and which make their Marriage void and of none Effect.

In the Thirty fifth, he ſhews that a Man may be divorced from his Wife upon the Account of Adultery, and that they may be afterwards reconcil'd. The Author adds, that he who has committed Adultery with a Woman may marry her, after her Husband's deceaſe, provided he were not acceſſory to his Death, and did not promiſe his Wife to marry her in his Life-time.

In the Thirty ſixth Section, he treats of the Impediment that ariſes from the difference of Age, and Condition between the Parties, who contract Marriage.

In the Thirty ſeventh, he diſcourſes of the Injunction of Celebacy obſerv'd by Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, and Sub-deacons, and of Pope Calixtus's Ordinance, declaring ſuch Marriages null.

In the Thirty eighth, he treats of the Impediment of a Vow.

In the Thirty ninth, of that of difference in Religion.

In the Fortieth, Forty firſt, and Forty ſecond, of the Degrees of Conſanguinity and Affinity, as well Temporal as Spiritual.

The other Sections, contain divers Queſtions concerning the Reſurrection; the State of the Elect, and of the Reprobates after their Death; Prayers for the Dead; the Invocation and Interceſſion of the Saints; the Circumſtances of the laſt Judgment; the ſeveral Degrees of Beatitude and Glory; and the State and Torments of the Damned, with which ends the Fiftieth Section of the Fourth Book, by the Maſter of the Sentences.

This Work was publiſhed by John Aleaume, and printed at Paris A. D. 1563. and at Lyons in 158[illegible]. It was alſo reviſ'd by Antony de Moucby, and reprinted in the ſame City in 1618. and in other places. The Author makes it his chief Buſineſs (as we have already hinted) to collect the Opinions of the Fathers concerning all the Queſtions diſcuſſed by him: He adds very little of his own, except ſometimes in reconciling certain Paſſages which ſeem to be contradictory; and when he cannot bring them to an Agreement, he uſually leaves the Queſtion undecided. He avoids to meddle with Queſtions concerning which the Fathers have writ nothing, and ſcarce ever makes uſe of Philoſophical Terms and Arguments, much leſs of Ariſtotle's Authority, who is often cited by the other School-men.

The Book of Sentences, by ROBERT PULLUS, is not a Collection of Paſſages of the Fathers, as that of Peter Lombard, but a Theological Work, in which he himſelf reſolves certain Queſtions which are propos'd, either by Ratiocination, or by Proofs taken out of holy Scripture. This Author, ſir-nam'd Pullus, Pullen or Pully, being an Engliſh Man by Nation, paſſed over into France, and flouriſhed in the Schools of Paris. He return'd to England about the Year 1130. and there re-eſtabliſhed the Univerſity of Oxford in 1133. He was made Arch-deacon of Rocheſter, and although he enjoy'd that Benefice, yet forbore not to go back to Paris, where he reſided in Quality of Profeſſor of Divinity. However, his Metropolitan thought fit to recall him, and not being prevail'd with, even upon St. Bernard's Requeſt that he might ſtill remain at Paris, caus'd the Revenues of his Arch-deaconry to be ſeiz'd on, to oblige him to return to England. Whereupon Pullus appeal'd to the See of Rome, and having much Intereſt in that Court, was not only vindicated againſt the Archbiſhop, but alſo invited to Rome by Pope Innocent II. and created Cardinal and Chancellor of the Church of Rome by Lucius II. in 1144. This Dignity was enjoy'd by him till the Third or Fifth Year of the Pontificate of Eugenius III. when he died A. D. 1150. Robert Pullus, Cardinal.

Cardinal Pullus's Book of Sentences is divided into Eight Parts, in the Firſt of which he treats of the Exiſtence of God, of the Three Perſons of the Holy Trinity, and of the Divine Attributes.

In the Second, of the Creation of the World, of the Angels, of the Nature of Man, of the Origine of the Soul, of Adam's Fall, of the Corruption of human Nature, and of Original Sin.

In the Third, of the Law, of the Circumciſion, of the Law of Grace, and of the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt.

He continues his Diſcourſe concerning that Myſtery in the Fourth Part; where he alſo treats of Faith, Hope, and Charity; of Purgatory; and of the State of Souls after their Separation from their Bodies.

In

In the Fifth, he treats of the Reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt, of the Gift of Faith, of the Sacraments, of Baptiſm, of Confirmation, of the Remiſſion of Sins, of Charity, and of Sin.

In the Sixth Part, he diſcourſes of the Effects of Sin; of Concupiſcence; of Ignorance, and other Puniſhments of Sin; of the Temptations of the Devil; of the Aſſiſtance of good Angels, and their Functions; of Repentance; and of the Prieſt's Power of binding and looſing, and of the Uſe that they ought to make of it.

The ſame Subject is farther handled in the Seventh Part, where he alſo treats of the Fruits of Repentance; of Church-Diſcipline; of Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Power; of the Diſtinction of Sacred Orders; of the Qualities of Miniſters; and of Marriage.

In the Eighth Part, he treats of the Euchariſt; of the laſt Judgment, and of the State of the Bleſſed and Damned Spirits.

This Author is ſomewhat obſcure, but argues with a great deal of Judgment: His Style is not altogether rude, neither is it perplexed with Scholaſtical Terms and Diſtinctions: He does not ſtart any Subtil and Metaphyſical Queſtions, but only ſuch as relate to Points of Doctrine, Diſcipline or Morality; neither does he reſolve them by Principles of Logick or Philoſophy, but by Paſſages of the holy Scripture, and according to the received Doctrine of the Church, and of the Fathers, which he makes uſe of as a firm Baſis or Ground-work. He ſometimes produces certain particular Opinions, which nevertheleſs are common to him with many of theſe Ancient Schoolmen; and he is one of thoſe who have maintain'd the feweſt erroneous or dangerous Opinions. In the Firſt Part he ſays, that the Father and the Son are Two Principles of the Holy Ghoſt; but this Expreſſion may be taken in a good Senſe, and he never aſſerted, that the Father and the Son were Two Principles or Eſſences of a diſtinct Subſtance; but Two Perſons, who produced a Third by an Action, which, although really the ſame, may be virtually diſtinct. He ſhews, in diſcourſing of the Sacrament of Penance, that it does not take away the Guilt of Sin, but only remits the Puniſhment; and that the Prieſt's Abſolution is a Declaration that the Penitent is abſolv'd from the Guilt of his Sin, and that he is free'd from the Puniſhment due to it, by the Satisfaction made by him to God: An Opinion which the Author holds in common with many Ancient School-Divines. There are alſo found in his Book ſome other Opinions which are not approv'd; and amongſt others, That the Union of the Word was not made with an animated Body, but with the Maſs of Fleſh, of which the Body was firſt form'd, and afterwards the Soul: That the Torments of the Damned may be diminiſhed: That the Devils are not as yet caſt into everlaſting Flames, and that they Sin'd even at the very inſtant of their Creation: That if the Firſt Man had not committed Sin, thoſe who are Damned would not have been brought forth into the World: That the Saints do not really deſcend on Earth in Apparitions: And that St. Benedict had a clear Knowledge of God in this World, even ſuch as the bleſſed Spirits have in Heaven.

This Author is one of thoſe who have moſt peremptorily affirmed, That the Souls are immediately created by God at that inſtant when they are united to their Bodies, and that the Angels are pure Spirits. He likewiſe maintains, That the inward Intention of the Miniſter is not neceſſary for the Validity of the Sacrament; that without the Love of God Sin could not be forgiven; that Infants dying without Baptiſm are damn'd, and that for that Reaſon they are not bury'd in conſecrated Ground. For matter of Diſcipline, it may be obſerv'd, That Confeſſion made to Laicks for Venial Sins, and even for Mortal ones, in caſe of neceſſity, when there was no Prieſt preſent, was in uſe at that time: That not only the Communion, but alſo Abſolution, was alſo deny'd to Criminals condemn'd to Death: That Prieſts were wont to Diſcipline their Penitents: That Parents were prohibited to enter the Church till their Children were Baptiz'd: That it was permitted to receive, but not to exact Money, for the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, and even for the Celebration of Maſs: That Faſt was uſually broke at Noon, or at the Hour of * None, but that there was no Collation: That the Cuſtom of Faſting on Fridays was obſerv'd, although not acquired to be of very great Antiquity, and that Saturday-Faſts were not ſo regularly kept: That in many Churches ſome repaſt was taken on Holy Thurſday in the Evening, and that this Cuſtom began to prevail: That Baptiſm, even that of Infants, was reſerv'd for Solemn Days: That the Participation of the Cup in the Communion among the Laity was ſtill in uſe, but ſeldom put in practice: And that the Belief of the corporal Aſſumption of the Virgin Mary was eſtabliſhed by the Cuſtom of the Church.

* One of the Canonical Hours.

This Work, by Robert Pullus, was publiſhed by Father Marboud of the Congregation of St. Maur, illuſtrated with learned and curious Notes, and printed at Paris A. D. 1655. The Eccleſiaſtical Writers, who cite this Author, mention ſome other Works compos'd by him; particularly a Commentary on the Pſalms of David, another on the Revelation of St. John, a Treatiſe of the Contempt of the World, Four Books concerning the Sentences of the Doctors, a Volume of his Lectures, and ſeveral Sermons. We have none of theſe Works printed; neither is it known, whether any of them be ſtill extant in Manuſcript, except certain Sermons which were in Petavius's Library.

Peter of Poitiers, Chancellor of the Church of Paris.

PETER OF POITIERS made uſe of a more Scholaſtick Method than any of the above-mention'd Authors: He ſucceeded them in the Divinity-Chair of the Schools at Paris, and was promoted to the Dignity of Chancellor of the Church of that City, which he enjoy'd during 38 Years. He compil'd his Collection of the Sentences in the Year 1170. dedicated it to William Archbiſhop of Sens, and died in 1200. In Doctrinal Points, he follows the Maſter of the Sentences, but uſes a quite different Method, as to the manner of handling the Matters: For he explains and reſolves all the Queſtions by the Principles of Philoſophy, and treats of them as a Logician, with formal Argumen-

Arguments after a very dry and uncouth Manner. This Work was set forth by Father Matheud, at the end of that of Robert Pullus. Peter of Poitiers likewise wrote certain Allegorical Commentaries on the Books of Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers; a Commentary on the Book of Psalms; and other Works; some of which are to be found in the Libraries.

ROBERT DE MELUN liv'd at the same time, and in the end of his Life was ordain'd Bishop of Hereford A. D. 1163. His System of Divinity in Manuscript is kept in the Library of St. Victor at Paris, and often cited by Father Matheud, in his Notes on Robert Pullus. Robert de Melun, Bishop of Hereford.

GAUTIER, or GAUTERIUS, a Regular Canon of St. Victor, in the end of this Century, took upon him to confute the new Method of these Divines, and compos'd a Work which he call'd, A Treatise against the Four Labyrinths of France, viz. Peter Abaelard, Gilebert de la Porrée, Peter Lombard, and Peter of Poitiers, whom he accuses of having asserted many Heresies and Errors, in treating of the ineffable Mysteries of the Holy Trinity, and of the Incarnation, according to the uncertain Scholastick Method, and Aristotle's Principles, with which they were intoxicated. There are indeed sufficient Grounds for this Censure on Three of these Authors, but he had no reason to fall foul upon Peter Lombard, whose Work is only a Collection of Passages of the Fathers, in which Aristotle is not cited: However, it must be acknowledg'd, that the Master of the Sentences, as well as the others, started a great number of Opinions that were not approv'd by the succeeding Divines, and of which the Doctors of the Faculty at Paris made a Catalogue in the Twelfth Century, under this Title, Articles in which the Master of the Sentences is not generally follow'd. Gautier, Regular Canon of St. Victor.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the Commentaries on the holy Scripture compos'd in the Twelfth Century, and of the Three famous Commentators, Rupert Abbot of Duyts, Hugh and Richard of St. Victor.

A New Method of commenting upon holy Scripture was likewise introduced in this Century: The Ancient Fathers, in their Commentaries on the sacred Books, were wont to explain the Text either Literally or Allegorically, in reference to the Instruction of the People; and the Ecclesiastical Authors of the Eighth and Ninth Centuries, who wrote on the Bible, only made it their Business to compile or collect divers Commentaries of the Fathers, of which they compos'd Catena's, or continued Collections of Commentaries. Some also then brought in the use of Glosses for the Explication of the Letter; but in the Century we now speak of, they began to explain holy Scripture, almost after the same manner, as they treated of Theological Matters; that is to say, according to the Principles of Logick, discussing divers subtil Questions concerning the Doctrinal Points, and producing a great number of Common Places. A new Method of Commenting on holy Scripture:

This Method was follow'd by RUPERT, Abbot of Duyts near Colen, in his Commentaries on the holy Scripture; where he proposes to treat of the Holy Trinity, and its Works, and divides them into Three Parts; the First of which is extended from the Creation of the World to the Fall of Adam; the Second, from the Fall to the Passion of Jesus Christ; and the Third, to the Day of the last Judgment: The First Period of Time is appropriated to the Father, the Second to the Son, and the Third to the Holy Ghost. The First Part contains Three Books of Commentaries on the Three first Chapters of Genesis: The Second comprehends Six other Books on the Remainder of Genesis; Four on Exodus; Two on Leviticus; as many on Numbers and Deuteronomy; One on Joshua; One on the Book of Judges; One on some Places of the Books of Kings and Psalms; One on Isaiah; One on Jeremiah; One on Ezekiel; Two Books on Daniel, Zachariah and Malachy; One Book on the History of the Macchabees; and another on some Places of the Four Gospels. The Third Part relating to the Works of the Holy Ghost, being divided into Nine Books, is not a continued Commentary on any particular Book, but on divers Passages of Scripture chosen by him, with respect to the Matters of which he design'd to treat. Rupert, Abbot of Duyts.

The Commentaries of this Author on the 12 lesser Prophets, and on the Book of Canticles, are more continual, come nearer to the Form of Commentaries, and recede less from the manner of Writing in use among the Ancients; but they are extremely mystical, and full of too subtil Reflections, and of Remarks which have not all the Accuracy that might be expected.

The Thirteen Books of the Victory of the Word of God, contain a great Number of Questions and Common Places on divers Passages of Scripture.

The Commentaries of the Glory and Dignity of the Son of God on St. Matthew, and the Commentary on St. John's Gospel, and his Revelation, are very like those on the lesser Prophets.

The Treatiſe of the Glorification of the Trinity, and of the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, divided into Nine Books, contains the Explication of many Paſſages of Scripture, that have ſome relation to the Queſtions, which he propoſes concerning the Three Divine Perſons, and more eſpecially that of the Holy Ghoſt.

As for his Treatiſe of Divine Offices, it is a Work of another Nature; in which he treats of the Divine Service, and of its Ceremonies, and gives myſtical Reaſons of them. He there ſeems to ſtart a particular Notion concerning the Euchariſt, viz. That the Bread is made the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, by the Hypoſtatical Union with his Soul; nevertheleſs ſome Authors have vindicated the Aſſertion, and affirm that it may be explain'd in a good Senſe; but we ſhall not now examine this Queſtion.

The moſt part of Rupert's Works are dedicated to Cuno Abbot of Siegberg, and afterwards Biſhop of Ratisbon, to whom he was recommended by Berenger Abbot of St. Laurence at Liege, in which laſt Monaſtery Rupert ſometime reſided in Quality of a Monk. His Works were printed at Colen A. D. 1578. in Three Volumes, and in Two at Paris in 1638. He himſelf gives us a Catalogue of them, in the Preface to his Treatiſe of Divine Offices: He there makes mention of all thoſe that are ſtill extant, and we have every one of them, except his Treatiſe of the Glorious King David, of which he had then only compoſ'd Eleven Books.

Hugh of St. Victor.

There are Two ſorts of Commentaries on the holy Scripture that bear the Name of HUGH OF St. VICTOR; the former are certain Literal and Hiſtorical Annotations on the Text, to which is prefix'd a Critical Preface concerning the ſacred Writers, and the Books written by them: The others are Allegorical Commentaries intermixed with a great number of Queſtions and Common Places. Theſe laſt are call'd A Volume of Extracts, and divided into XXIV Books: The Ten firſt of theſe, which are inſerted in the Second Tome of the Works of Hugh of St. Victor, contain general Remarks on the Arts and Sciences: The Nine following, which are in the firſt Tome, comprehend a variety of Allegories and Queſtions relating to the Hiſtories of the ſacred Books, from the Creation of the World till the time of the Macchabees, that is to ſay, to all the Hiſtorical Books of the Bible. The Tenth, is a Collection of Moral Homilies on Eccleſiaſtes: In the Four laſt, are compris'd divers Queſtions relating to the Four Goſpels. To theſe are annexed, to render the Work compleat, Explications of the ſame Nature, but more at large, on all the Epiſtles of St. Paul.

Theſe XXIV Books of Commentaries are attributed by Trithemius, and ſeveral other Authors, to Richard of St. Victor; and the Firſt Part is to be ſeen under his Name in a certain Manuſcript very near his time, which is extant in M. Colbert's Library; ſome part of it is alſo printed among the Works of that Author. However, it is affirm'd by ſome Perſons, that this Work cannot belong either to Hugh or to Richard, by reaſon that in the Chronological Table which the Author makes of the Kings of France, in the Tenth Chapter of the Tenth Book, he ends with Philip the Son of Lewes the Young, before whoſe Reign theſe Two Writers were dead. Indeed this Reaſon may ſerve to prove, that the ſaid Work was not compoſ'd by Hugh of St. Victor deceaſed in 1142. but it is not ſo evident a proof to ſhew, that Richard is not the Author of it; becauſe the latter not dying till the Year 1173. and Philip being born in 1165. he might joyn him with King Lewes the Young his Father. However, this very Paſſage makes it appear, that the Author of that Work could not have written later than the Reign of Philip Auguſtus; ſince he is the laſt of the Kings of France mention'd by him, and conſequently the ſaid Author flouriſhed in the Twelfth Century. As for the Literal Notes, it cannot be doubted, that they were the Genuine Works of Hugh of St. Victor, of which the following are ſtill extant; viz. his Preface concerning the ſacred Books, and the inſpired Penmen of them; his Notes on the Pentateuch; on the Book of Judges; on the Books of the Kings; and on ſome Pſalms. Theſe Notes are conciſe, and do not recede from the Literal and Hiſtorical Senſe. Thoſe that he made on the Lamentations of Jeremiah, and on the Prophecies of Joel and Obadiah, are larger, and Allegories are intermixed with them. To theſe Explications of the Books of the holy Scripture are annex'd others, which he wrote on the Book of the Hierarchy attributed to St. Dionyſius the Areopagite. We might alſo add his Explication of the Decalogue, and thoſe of St. Auguſtin's Rule, which are of the ſame Style.

The Four Books of the Cloiſter of the Soul; the Four other Books of the Soul; the ſmall Treatiſe of the Phyſick of the Soul; the Two Books of Birds; and thoſe of the Spiritual and Carnal Marriages, belong to Hugh de Foliet, a Monk of Corby: I alſo aſcribe to the ſame Monk, the Dialogue between the Fleſh and the Spirit, the Style of which is different from that of Hugh of St. Victor; nay, perhaps he is the Author of the Four Books of the Myſtical Ark, and of the Ark of Noah, which bear the Name of the Benedictin Monk of Saxony: Inſomuch that in the Second Tome of the Works of Hugh of St. Victor, there are but very few of his Genuine Pieces; viz. the Soliloquy of the Soul; the Encomium of Charity; the Diſcourſe on the manner of Praying; the Diſcourſe of the Love of the Bridegroom, and of the Spouſe; the Four Books of the Vanity of the World; and the 100 Sermons.

The laſt Tome contains Dogmatical Works; the Firſt of which is called Didaſcalick, or Inſtructive Inſtitutions, being divided into Seven Books, in which are certain Rules for ſtudying, and general Notions of the Sciences. In the Fourth, he treats of the ſacred Books, of the Writings of the Fathers, and of the Councils and Canons: In the Fifth, of the Senſe of the holy Scripture: In the Sixth, of the manner of reading it; and in laſt, which is the largeſt, of the manner of attaining to the Knowledge of God, and of the Trinity, by the Creatures.

The Second, relates to the Will and Omnipotence of God; in which he examines this Queſtion, viz. Whether his Power be of a larger extent than his Will?

The

The following Tracts are compos'd on divers Queſtions relating to the Myſtery of the Incarnation, particularly in reference to the Will of Jeſus Chriſt, his Wiſdom and Knowledge, concerning the Union of the Word with the human Nature; againſt the Opinion of the Maſter of the Sentences, that Jeſus Chriſt is not a Thing; and touching ſeveral other Scholaſtical Queſtions; beſides Three Conferences about the Incarnation, and a Treatiſe of the Perpetual Virginity of the Virgin Mary.

To theſe Treatiſes are ſubjoyn'd Five Books, call'd Miſcellanies of Theological Learning, which contain many Common Places concerning Paſſages of the holy Scripture, and divers Points of Divinity and Morality.

The Three Books of Divine Offices, and that of the Canon of the myſtical Offering, belong to Robert Paululus, a Prieſt of the Church of Amiens, of whom we have made mention elſewhere.

The ſmall Tract, by way of Dialogue between Maſter and Scholar, concerning the Law of Nature, and the written Law, contains brief Reſolutions of a great number of Theological Queſtions.

The Summary of the Sentences, divided into Seven Treatiſes, is a compendious Syſtem of Divinity.

But his chief Theological Work, is a Treatiſe of the Sacraments, divided into Two Books, of which the Firſt comprehends twelve Parts, and the Second eighteen. It is one of the largeſt Treatiſes of Divinity that were compos'd in the Twelfth Century, and the Author therein explains the Queſtions after a very clear manner, altogether free from the Logical Method and Terms, without involving himſelf in the Labyrinth of obſcure and intricate Speculations. He proceeds to reſolve theſe Queſtions by Paſſages of the holy Scripture, and according to the Principles of the Fathers, more eſpecially of St. Auguſtin, whoſe Doctrine he follows, affecting even to imitate his Style; which gave occaſion to ſome Perſons to call him, The Tongue of that Father. He was a Native of Flanders, born in the Territories of Ypres, and not in Saxony, as it was generally ſuppos'd: But he ſpent his Life in France, in the Monaſtery of St. Victor, of which he was a Regular Canon and Prior. He died Febr. 11. A. D. 1142. aged Forty Years. His Works were printed at Paris in 1526. at Venice in 1588. at Mentz in 1617. and at Rouen in 1648.

This Author had for his Pupil RICHARD, a Scotch Man by Nation, and a Regular Canon of the ſame Monaſtery, who likewiſe attain'd to the Office of Prior in the Year 1164. and acquir'd much Reputation by the great number of his Writings. We have but now obſerv'd, that to him may be attributed the Collection of Queſtions on the Bible, part of which is printed amongſt his Works, and the reſt among thoſe of Hugh of St. Victor. The following Works on the holy Scripture are undoubtedly his. Viz. Richard of St. Victor.

Three Treatiſes of Critical Remarks and Hiſtory; that is to ſay, the Firſt to explain the Form and Parts of the Tabernacle; the Second, to give a Deſcription of Solomon's Temple, and of every Thing that was contain'd therein; and the Third, to adjuſt the Chronology of the Books of Kings and Chronicles, concerning the Kings of Judah and Iſrael. To theſe Treatiſes muſt be added a larger Explication of the Temple in Ezechiel. Theſe Four Treatiſes relate altogether to critical Matters, and have no regard to Allegories, nor to Myſtical or Moral Significations.

His other Commentaries are not of the ſame Nature, as not being Literal, but Allegorical, Moral or Dogmatical: They conſiſt in Explications of divers Pſalms; a Commentary on the Book of Canticles; Queſtions on certain difficult Paſſages of St. Paul's Epiſtles; and a large Commentary on the Apocalypſe. The other Works of Richard of St. Victor are of Two Sorts; ſome of them being Pieces relating to Points of Doctrine, and others being Treatiſes of Piety and practical Divinity.

Among the former are to be reckon'd his Treatiſe of the Trinity, divided into Six Books: A Tract dedicated to St. Bernard, concerning the Attributes appropriated to every one of the Divine Perſons: His Treatiſe of the Incarnation: Two Treatiſes of the Emmanuel, or on theſe Words of the Prophet Iſaiah, Behold, a Virgin ſhall conceive, and bear a Son, and ſhall call his name Emmanuel; in which he proves againſt a certain Jew, that theſe Words can be interpreted of none but the Virgin Mary and Jeſus Chriſt: A Treatiſe of the Power of Binding and Looſing, in which he follows the common Opinion of the School-Divines of his time, concerning the Effect of the Keys, and the Power of the Miniſters: A Diſcourſe of the Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt: Certain Explications dedicated to St. Bernard on ſome difficult Places of Scripture: A Diſcourſe to explain in what Senſe the Holy Ghoſt is ſaid to be the Love of the Father, and of the Son: And a Treatiſe of the difference between Mortal and Venial Sins.

His Works of Piety and Morality are theſe; viz. A Treatiſe of the means of rooting out Evil, and promoting Good: A Diſcourſe on the State of the inward Man: Three Books of the Inſtruction of the inward Man, or of the Spiritual Exerciſe, upon occaſion of the Dreams of Nebuchadnezzar and Daniel: A Treatiſe of the Preparation of the Soul for Contemplation: Five Books of the Grace of Contemplation, on the Ark which was ſet in the Tabernacle, with an Addition containing ſome Allegories on the Tabernacle: A Diſcourſe or Meditation on the Plagues that will happen on the Day of Judgment: Another Diſcourſe on the Day of the laſt Judgment: A Treatiſe of the Degrees of Charity: Another of the Four Degrees of fervent Charity: A Diſcourſe of the Two Paſſovers, with a Sermon on the Feſtival of Eaſter: A Diſcourſe of the Baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt: A Sermon on the Effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt: A Tract concerning the Compariſon that is made of our Saviour to the Flower, and of the Virgin Mary to the Branch: Another about the Quality of Standard of the People, attributed to Jesus Christ: And lastly, Two Discourses; viz. One concerning the difference between Abraham's Sacrifice and that of David; and the other relating to the difference between the same Sacrifice, and that of the Virgin Mary.

This Author died March 10. A. D. 1173. and his Works were printed at Paris in 1518. and in 1540. as also at Venice in 1592. at Colen in 1621. and at Rouen in 1650. He shews a great deal of subtilty in his Theological Treatises, and argues methodically with an Exactness befitting an able Logician. His Critical Pieces are very accurate for his time, but his Style is not very lofty, and upon that Account it is, that his Treatises of Piety, though full of excellent Matter, have now all the Grandeur, nor all the Energy that might be wished for.

CHAP. XVII.

Of Gratian's Collection of Canons.

ALthough many Collections of Canons, Decretals, and Passages of the Fathers, relating to the Canon-Law, were compil'd before the Twelfth Century; yet none of them was generally follow'd, or publickly taught: They were looked upon as the Work of private Persons, and the Decisions contain'd in them had no greater Authority than the Monuments out of which they were taken; whilst every one apply'd them to his particular Benefit, but none made them the subject of publick Lectures. The Collection which GRATIAN a Monk of St. Felix at Bononia, and a Native of Chiusi in Tuscany, compleated in the Year 1151. met with much better Success; for as soon as it appear'd, it was so favourably receiv'd, that the Canonists taught it publickly, and in a little time, a great number of Commentaries were written on this Work. Gratian.

In the Ancient Manuscripts, and in the First Editions, it bears this Title, viz. The Concord of disagreeing Canons, and afterwards was call'd, The Book of Decrees, or simply, The Decrees. It is divided into Three Parts, the First of which contains Matters relating to the Law in general, and the Ministers of the Church, under the Name of Distinctions; the Second, divers particular Cases upon occasion of which are debated many Questions that are call'd, The Causes; and the Third, entituled, Of the Consecration, such Matters as relate to the Divine Offices, and the Sacraments.

In the First twenty Distinctions of the First Part, he treats of the Division of the Law; of the different sorts of Laws, as well Civil as Ecclesiastical; of the Authority of the Canons, of the Councils, and of the Decretals of the Popes; of the sacred Orders; of the Qualities of Persons who ought to be ordain'd; of the Form and Ceremonies of Ordination; of the Functions and Conduct of Clergy-men; of the Power of the Pope, and of the Bishops; of the use of the Pall, and of every Thing that relates to the Ministers of the Church. This Part is divided into 101 Distinctions.

In the Second, containing Thirty six Causes, every one of which comprehends divers Questions, every Question being likewise divided into several Chapters; the Author treats of Simony; of Appeals; of Incumbents depriv'd of their Benefices; of the Quality of Witnesses and Accusers; of Elections; of the Government of Churches; of Ecclesiastical Censures; of last Wills and Testaments; of Burials; of Usury; of what ought to be observ'd with respect to *outragious or distracted Persons; of Sentences passed contrary to the due Forms of Law; of Monks and Abbots, and their Rights; of those who assault Clergy-men; of Commendams; of Oaths; of War; of Heresies; of Infractions of the Canons; of Sorcerers; of Marriage, and its Impediments; of the Degrees of Consanguinity; and of Rapes. In the Thirty second Cause, he has inserted a Dissertation concerning Repentance, in Seven Sections; in which he follows the Error of some Writers of Penitentials, who do not believe Confession to be of Divine Right, or absolutely necessary for the remission of Sins. *Furieux.

The Third Part contains Five Distinctions, or Sections; viz. the First, concerning the Consecration of Churches, the Celebration of Mass, and the Divine Service: the Second, concerning the Eucharist; the Third, about the solemn Festivals of the Year, and the use of Images; the Fourth, about the Sacrament of Baptism, and its Ceremonies; and the Fifth, concerning Confirmation, Fasts, manual Labour, and some other Points of Discipline. Some Articles have been since added from time to time, under the Title of Palea, which is suppos'd to be the Name of the Author of these Additions, which were call'd Propalea, or Palea.

The First Edition of this Work was printed at Mentz, A. D. 1472. and the Second at Venice, Four Years after: The Third is that of Paris in 1508. which is the First that bears the Name of Gratian; whose Text is to be found in these Editions after the same manner that it was written by him; that is to say, full of false or erroneous Quotations: For Gratian has not only cited in his Collection, the false Decretals of the Popes, and other suppositious Works, but is also often mistaken in quoting one Author, or one Council for another, or in relating Passages otherwise than they they are in the Original; upon which account it was judged Expedient to correct the Faults of this Author. Antony de Mouchy, and Antony Contius, were the firſt that undertook to do it in France, in the preceeding Age, and the whole Work was printed with their Notes at Antwerp in 1570. and 1573. At the ſame time the Pope's having conſider'd the Importance of this Undertaking caus'd ſeveral Perſons to be employ'd in it, in order to publiſh a new Edition of Gratian's Decretal, corrected, and at leaſt clear'd of the principal Errors: They began to ſet about the Work under the Popedom of Pius IV. and carry'd it on under his Succeſſor Pius V. but did not compleat it till the time of Gregory XIII. They apply'd themſelves more eſpecially, 1. To correct the Errors that had crept into the Text of Gratian, through the Negligence of the Tranſcribers or Printers, by reviſing it exactly according to the Ancient Manuſcripts. 2. By ſubſtituting the Name of the true Author of the Paſſages cited by Gratian, in the room of that which he had ſet down, when it was evident that he was miſtaken. 3. By obſerving the differenees between the genuine Text and that which is quoted by Gratian, and even correcting it in the Text of Gratian in thoſe Places, where he only Copies out their Words.

When this Work was compleated, it appear'd at Rome in 1580, with the Approbation of Pope Gregory XIII. who prohibited it to be publiſhed after another manner. Whereupon it was ſoon printed according to the Copy of the Roman Edition in many Places; viz. at Venice in 1584. at Paris in 1585. at Francfurt in 1586 and 1590. and at Lyons in 1591. and a great number of Editions of it have been ſince ſet forth. Whilſt the Roman Edition was preparing for the Preſs, the Famous Antonius Auguſtinus, Archbiſhop of Taragona, compos'd certain Dialogues concerning the Correction of Gratian, and afterwards made Additions to the ſame Edition, when he had procur'd a Copy of it. This Piece was printed at Taragona A. D. 1587. the next Year after his Death, and ſome time after at Paris, but it was publiſhed with much more accuracy by M. Baluze in 1682. Antonius Auguſtinus diſcovers a vaſt number of Faults, Over-ſights, and Errors in Gratian's Decretal, and makes many curious and very uſeful Remarks; to which may be added thoſe of M. Baluſius, which are no leſs judicious. But whatſoever Correction of this Work has been already, or can be made for the future, it is difficult, or rather impoſſible, to bring it to that perfection which is requiſite for a general Collection of the Canons and Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions, that is to ſerve as it were a perpetual Standard.

However Gratian's Collection was generally receiv'd and taught in the Schools as ſoon as it appear'd, but within a little while after, were added to it certain new Decretals of the Popes, particularly of Alexander III. of which were made Collections like thoſe that are found in the end of the Third General Council of Lateran, and theſe were likewiſe explain'd publickly. It is againſt this new Body of Law, which began to be in vogue, that Stephen de Tournay declames, in his 151 Letter, of which we have already related the Paſſage, to which we deſire the Reader to have recourſe upon this Occaſion, becauſe it may ſerve as a Concluſion to what we have ſaid in this, and in the preceding Chapters.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the General Councils held in the Twelfth Century.

ALthough the Name of Oecumenical, or General Council, denotes an Aſſembly compos'd of Biſhops of all the Churches of the World; nevertheleſs the Eight firſt General Councils held in the Levant, chiefly conſiſted in Biſhops of the Eaſtern Churches, thoſe of the Weſtern being repreſented by the Legates of the See of Rome, who often were accompany'd with few or none of the Prelates of the Weſtern Churches: But after the Separation of the Latin Church from the Greek, it was ſcarce poſſible any longer to hold Councils, in which the Latins and Greeks were willing to aſſemble together, in order to paſs their Judgments in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, or unanimouſly to make common Conſtitutions. Therefore the ſucceeding General Councils were compos'd only of a great number of Prelates of the Weſtern Churches conven'd by the Popes, who were wont to publiſh Deciſions conformably to the Doctrine and Diſcipline which the Biſhops of theſe Councils had approv'd and confirm'd. There were Three of this Nature held at Rome in the Twelfth Century; viz. the Firſt under Pope Calixtus II. the Second under Innocent II. and the Third under Alexander III. We have already produc'd a Relation of the Firſt, with the Extract of its Canons, in treating of the Inveſtitures; ſo that it remains only to give the like Account of the Second and the Third.

The

The Second General Council of Lateran.

The Second General Council of Lateran.

POPE Innocent II. having obtain'd the quiet Poſſeſſion of the See of Rome, by the Death of Peter of Leon, conven'd in the Month of April A. D. 1139. a Council in the Palace of Lateran, call'd, the Second General; which (as they ſay) was compos'd of near a Thouſand Prelates, and of which Thirty Canons were publiſhed.

The Firſt imports, That all Clergy-men, who were ordain'd by Simony, ſhall be depos'd from the Dignity which they have unjuſtly uſurped.

The Second, That all thoſe, who have bought or ſold any Benefice, ſhall be depriv'd of it, and branded with Infamy; and that nothing ſhall be exacted for the conferring of Eccleſiaſtical Dignities and Livings.

The Third, That none ſhall entertain thoſe who are Excommunicated by their Biſhop.

The Fourth, That the Biſhops, and the reſt of the Clergy, ſhall endeavour to pleaſe God and Men, by their inward Diſpoſition, as well as by their outward Behaviour: That they ſhall give occaſion of Scandal to none, neither by the Colour nor Faſhion of their Habits: That they ſhall be cloath'd after a regular and modeſt Manner: And that they, who neglect to obſerve this Rule, ſhall be depriv'd of their Benefices, unleſs they be reform'd, after having been admoniſhed by their Biſhops.

The Fifth, forbids the Pillaging of the Goods, or Revenues, of the Biſhops after their Death.

The Sixth, ordains, That thoſe who officiate as Sub-deacons, or have enter'd into Orders of a higher Station, if they marry, or keep Concubines, ſhall loſe their Offices or Benefices.

The Seventh, prohibits the hearing of Maſs of Prieſts who are marry'd, or keep Concubines; declares the Marriages of Prieſts to be null; and ordains, that thoſe who have contracted it ſhall be divorc'd, and put to Penance.

The Eighth, regulates the ſame Thing, with reſpect to Virgins conſecrated to God, if they marry.

The Ninth, forbids Regular Canons, or Monks, to ſtudy the Civil Law, or the Art of Phyſick, in order to make profit by the Practice of thoſe Sciences.

The Tenth, enjoyns Laicks, who have Churches or Tithes in their Poſſeſſion to reſtore them to the Biſhops under pain of Excommunication; prohibits the conferring of Arch-deaconries or Deaneries on any Perſons but Prieſts and Deacons; declares that thoſe who have procur'd them without entering into Orders, ſhall be depriv'd of them, if they refuſe to be ordain'd: And in like manner forbids the granting of them to young Men, who are not admitted into Orders, or the demiſing of Churches to Prieſts for Rent.

The Eleventh, ordains, That Prieſts, Clerks, Monks, Travellers, Merchants, and Country People, ſhall have free Liberty to come and go with Safety at all times.

The Twelfth, ſpecifies the Days and Times when it is forbidden to make War, and exhorts the Chriſtians to Peace.

The Thirteenth, condemns Uſury and Uſurers.

The Fourteenth, prohibits military Combats that were practiſed at Fairs, and ordains, that thoſe who are mortally wounded in ſuch Rencounters ſhall be depriv'd of Chriſtian Burial; although Penance, and the Viaticum, ought not to be deny'd them.

The Fifteenth, denounces an Anathema againſt thoſe who abuſe a Clergy-man, or a Monk, and prohibits the Biſhops to give them Abſolution, except in caſe of neceſſity, till they have made an Appearance before the holy See. The ſame Canon re-eſtabliſhes the right of Sanctuary for Churches and Church-yards.

The Sixteenth, is a Prohibition to lay claim to Prebends, or other Benefices, by right of Succeſſion.

The Seventeenth, re-enforces the Laws againſt Marriages amongſt Relations.

The Eighteenth, denounces an Anathema againſt Incendiaries, and declares them to be unworthy of Chriſtian Burial; forbids to give them Abſolution, till they have made Reſtitution for the Damage done by them; and enjoyns them for Penance to take a Journey to the holy Land, or to Spain, for the Service of the Church.

The Nineteenth, ſuſpends for a Year, and condemns to reſtitution, the Archbiſhops or Biſhops, who ſhall take upon them to remit the Rigour of the Puniſhment ordain'd in the preceeding Canon.

The Twentieth, imports, That Kings and Princes have a Power to execute Juſtice, in conſultation with the Biſhops and Archbiſhops: A Canon which cannot be underſtood but in reference to Eccleſiaſtical Perſons.

The Twenty firſt, forbids to admit into Orders the Sons of Prieſts; unleſs they have led a Religious courſe of Life in Monaſteries, or in Canonical Houſes.

In the Twenty ſecond, Prieſts are admoniſhed not to ſuffer Laicks to be deceiv'd by falſe ſhews of Penance; and it is obſerv'd therein, that that Penitence is of none Effect, when only one Crime is repented of, without reforming the others; or when one continues to dwell in the confines of Sin, by retaining an Office or Employment that cannot be exerciſed without Sin; or when one bears bears Malice in the Heart; or when one refuses to give Satisfaction to an injur'd Person; or when we do not freely forgive those who have done us an Injury; or lastly, when an unjust War is maintain'd.

The Twenty third, is against Heretics who condemn the Sacraments.

The Twenty fourth, forbids to exact any Thing for the holy Chrism, for the consecrated Oils, and for officiating at Burials.

The Twenty fifth, deprives those Persons of their Benefices, who receive them from the Hands of Lay-men.

The Twenty sixth, prohibits Nuns to reside in private Houses.

In the Twenty seventh, they are likewise forbidden to appear in the same Choir with Monks or Canons, in order to sing the Divine Offices.

The Twenty eighth, prohibits the Canons of Cathedral Churches, under pain of Anathema, to exclude Persons of known Piety from the Election of Bishops, and declares those Elections to be null, that they make without sending for, and advising with them.

The Twenty ninth, denounces an Anathema against Slingers and Archers.

The Thirtieth, declares to be null the Ordinations made by Peter of Leon, and other Heretics or Schismaticks.

The Third General Council of Lateran.

The Third General Council of Lateran.

POPE Alexander III. conven'd in the Year 1179. a great Council at Rome, which is call'd, the Third General of Lateran, to reform a great number of Abuses that had crept into the Church; to make Constitutions about Matters of Discipline; to condemn the Albigeois, and other reputed Heretics; to maintain the Immunities of the Church; and to redress many Grievances that were become very common. This Council which began to sit on the Second Day of March, was compos'd of about Three hundred Bishops, and publish'd Twenty seven Capitularies, or Articles of Canons.

The First, is a Decree for preventing the Schisms of the Church of Rome in the Election of the Popes, ordaining, That if all the Cardinals cannot agree to chuse the same Person, he shall be esteem'd as Lawful Pope, who shall obtain Two thirds of their Suffrages in his Favour; but that he cannot be ordain'd, or acknowledg'd as such, who has less than Two thirds of the Votes: Provided nevertheless that this Constitution shall not be prejudicial to the Custom of other Chapters, in which the Consent of the greater and sounder Part usually prevails; by reason that the Conflicts which arise in those Bodies, may be determin'd by the Judgment of the Higher Powers, whereas the Church of Rome cannot have recourse to any Tribunal that is Superior to it.

The Second, declares to be null the Ordinations made by the Three Anti-popes, Octavian, Guy, and John de Struma; deprives those of Benefices who receiv'd them from their Hands; abrogates the Alienations of Church-Revenues made by the said Anti-popes; and suspends from Orders those Clergy-men, who took an Oath to maintain the Schism.

The Third ordains, That a Person nominated to be chosen Bishop shall be Thirty Years old; that he shall be born in Lawful Wedlock, and noted for his Learning, and the probity of his Manners: That when his Election is confirm'd; when he has taken Possession of the Revenues of his Church; and when the time prescrib'd by the Canons for his Ordination is expir'd; he who had a right to dispose of the Benefices, which he enjoy'd before he was made Bishop, shall have free Liberty to confer them: That the Deaneries, Arch-deaconries, Curacies, and other Church-Livings, with the Cure of Souls, shall be granted only to those who have attain'd to the Age of Twenty five Years: That they who are advanced to a higher Dignity, if they do not cause themselves to be ordain'd in due time, shall be depriv'd of their Benefices, without a possibility of re-instating themselves by vertue of an Appeal. It is also declar'd, that this Constitution shall be observ'd not only with respect to those who shall receive induction to Benefices for the future, but also in reference to Incumbents, if the Canons require it: That those who neglect to observe it in carrying on their Elections, shall be depriv'd of their Right of Electing, and even of their Benefices for Three Years: And lastly, if the Bishop infringe it, or consent to the Infringement of it, he shall lose the Right of conferring Spiritual Livings; which shall be granted by the Chapter, or by the Metropolitan.

The Fourth Constitution, regulates the Number of Horses which the Prelates may keep for their Equipage, during the Visitation of their Dioceses; that is to say, Forty or Fifty are allow'd to Archbishops; Twenty five to Cardinals; Twenty or Thirty to Bishops; Five or Seven to Arch-deacons, and Two to Deans: Now in regard that this Number is very considerable, it is declar'd in the end of the Canon, that what is granted by way of toleration, ought only to be put in execution in Churches which have large Revenues, and that in those Places where the Ecclesiastical Revenues are very mean, the Superiors shall take care not to over-burden their Inferiors in visiting them; and that it is not the meaning of the Decree, to enlarge the Privilege of those, who were not accustom'd to have so great a Retinue. The Bishops are likewise forbidden to oppress the inferior Clergy with Taxes and Impositions, although they are permitted upon urgent Occasions to demand of them necessary Supplies: But the Arch-deacons and Deans are abſolutely prohibited to lay any Taxes upon the Prieſts or Clerks of their Juriſdiction.

Deans

The Sixth, regulates the Formalities of Eccleſiaſtical Judicature, in which are obſerv'd Two common Abuſes, viz. One, that the Superior Clergy, fearing leſt the Inferior ſhould withdraw themſelves from their Juriſdiction by an Appeal, frequently begin with Suſpending or Excommunicating them, without having ſent them any Monitory before; and the other, that the Inferior, on the contrary, who fear the Cenſure of their Superiors, appeal without having receiv'd any Wrong, and to maintain their unjuſt Practice, make uſe of the Remedy appointed for the Relief of the Innocent. Therefore to prevent theſe Abuſes, it is ordain'd, That the Superiors ſhall pronounce no Sentence of Suſpenſion or of Excommunication againſt the Inferior Clergy, unleſs it were preceded by a Canonical Monition; if the Crime of which they are guilty be not of the Number of thoſe, that render the Perſons ipſo facto excommunicated or ſuſpended; and the Inferior are forbidden to enter an Appeal, before Iſſue be joyn'd: As for thoſe, who make a Lawful Appeal, it is decreed, that a competent Time ſhall be allow'd them to proſecute it, and that in caſe they neglect to do it within the limited Time, the Biſhop, after the expiration of that Term, may make uſe of his Authority: Laſtly, that if the Party ſummoned preſent himſelf in Court, and the Appellant does not appear, the latter ſhall be oblig'd to re-emburſe the former all his Charges. It is alſo requir'd, that this Ordinance be regularly obſerv'd, more eſpecially in Monaſteries, and with reſpect to Religious Perſons.

The Seventh, condemns the Abuſes which paſſed into a Cuſtom, of exacting Money for Induction to Benefices; for the Burial of the Dead; for the Benediction of Marriages, and for the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments. The Biſhops are likewiſe forbidden to impoſe new Duties on the Churches, to augment the old Ones, and to appropriate any part of their Revenues to their own private uſe, and they are enjoyn'd to maintain the Liberty of their Churches.

The Eighth, prohibits to beſtow, or even to promiſe, Spiritual Livings, before they become vacant; ordains Patrons to make their Preſentations within Six Months after the Vacancy; and grants to the Chapter the Right of nominating to ſuch Benefices, as are too long left Vacant by the Biſhop, when they are in his Gift; alſo to the Biſhop the like Right of nominating to thoſe that ought to be conferr'd by the Chapter, upon the ſame Default: But if both Parties neglect to do it, the Right is declar'd to devolve on the Metropolitan.

The Ninth, reforms the Abuſes that prevail'd under colour of Privileges granted to the Knights Templars, and other Religious Societies, who by virtue of theſe Privileges attempted many Things againſt the Authority of the Biſhops: For they receiv'd Churches from the Hands of Laicks; admitted excommunicated Perſons to the Participation of the holy Sacraments; allow'd them Chriſtian Burial; placed and diſplaced Prieſts in ſeveral Churches by their own Arbitrary Power, and without acquainting the Biſhops; frequently celebrated Divine Service in Churches that lay under a Suſpenſion; and weaken'd the Epiſcopal Authority by Combinations and Fraternities. To put a ſtop to the career of theſe Abuſes, the Council prohibits all Privileged People to entertain excommunicated Perſons; enjoyns them to preſent to the Biſhops thoſe Prieſts whom they would have put in the Churches, which do not by undoubted Right belong to their Juriſdiction; and that theſe Prieſts ſhall give an Account of their Spiritualities to the Biſhops, and of their Temporalities to the Religious Society on whom they depend; ſo that theſe Benefices cannot be taken from them without the conſent of the Biſhops. It is alſo farther declared, that if the Knights Templars come into Places lying under a Suſpenſion, they ſhall only have Liberty to perform Divine Service once in them; and that the Members of their Society ſhall not be exempted from the Juriſdiction of the Biſhops. This Regulation is extended to all the other Societies, that enjoy any Privileges, and make an ill Uſe of them.

The Tenth imports, That Money ſhall not be exacted for the admitting of Monks into Monaſteries; that they ſhall not be ſuffer'd to have any Perſonal Eſtate; that they ſhall not live privately in Towns, Villages, or Pariſhes, but in large Convents; that they ſhall not go out of them alone; that the Monks, who give any Thing for their Entrance into a Monaſtery, ſhall not be advanced to Sacred Orders; and that they who exact any thing upon that account, ſhall be depos'd from their Office; that he who enjoys private Poſſeſſions, unleſs they were given him by the Abbot for his Office, ſhall be excommunicated; that an Abbot, who neglects to put this Order in execution, ſhall be degraded from his Dignity; that Priories, or Commiſſions, ſhall not be given for Money; that Conventual Priors ſhall not be chang'd, unleſs for a juſt Cauſe, as in the Caſe of Dilapidation, or Irregularity, or if it be judg'd expedient to remove them to higher Station.

The Eleventh, renews the Prohibitions ſo often reiterated with reſpect to Clergy-men who are in Orders, to keep Company with Women; condemns Sodomites to very ſevere Puniſhments; and forbids Eccleſiaſtical Perſons to frequent the Monaſteries of Nuns, unleſs upon ſome emergent Occaſion.

The Twelfth, forbids all Clerks, who are maintain'd by Church-Revenues, to exerciſe the Functions of Attorneys or Solicitors in Law-ſuits, unleſs it be to manage their own Affairs; or thoſe of the Churches, or thoſe of the Poor, who are not able to defend themſelves. They are alſo prohibited in this Canon, to ſerve as Receivers or Judges to Lay-Lords, under the Penalty of being ſuſpended from the Exerciſe of their Miniſterial Functions. The ſame Thing is likewiſe more rigorouſly forbidden to Monks.

The

The Thirteenth, enforces a Prohibition to the same Person to possess several Benefices, with the Cure of Souls, and ordains residence therein.

The Fourteenth, in like manner, prohibits the Plurality of Prebends, and condemns the Proceedings of Laicks, who put Clergy-men in the Churches, and turn them out whenever they think fit; who take upon them to distribute the Goods and Revenues of the Church at their Pleasure; and who exact Duties, and lay Taxes on the Churches, and on Ecclesiastical Persons. Therefore they who persist in such Practices for the future, are threaten'd to be anathematiz'd; and the Priests and Clerks, who receive Benefices from the Hands of Lay-men, to be depos'd: The latter are also forbidden, under pain of Excommunication, to summon Clergy-men before their Judges; and it is decree'd, that they who retain the Tithes, and other Church-Revenues, shall be depriv'd of Christian Burial.

The Fifteenth ordains, That the Estate or Goods which Clergy-men have got out of the Revenue of their Benefices, shall be left to the Churches to which they belong, whether they have so dispos'd of them by their last Will and Testament or not. By this Canon is also abolished the Custom of Deans commissionated by the Bishops to exercise Episcopal Jurisdiction, who upon that account exact a certain Sum of Money.

The Sixteenth determines, That in Chapters, affairs shall be transacted according to the Advice of the greater, and more sound part of the Canons.

The Seventeenth, provides a Remedy for the Inconvenience that happens, when the Lay Patrons are divided, and present several Clerks for the same Church. It is ordain'd, That he shall be preferr'd who is the most worthy, and has the greatest Number of Suffrages.

The Eighteenth, orders the Settlement of a School-master in all the Cathedral Churches, for the Instruction of Youth, to whom is to be allotted a Benefice of a sufficient Revenue for his Maintenance; in consideration of which, he is forbidden to exact any Thing for granting a License to teach, and oblig'd to deny it to those who are not capable of performing that Employment.

The Nineteenth prohibits, under the Penalty of an Anathema, the Taxes and Impositions laid by Magistrates on the Churches, and Ecclesiastical Persons; at least unless the Bishops and the rest of the Clergy, having regard to the Exigencies of the State, especially when the Revenues of the Laity are not sufficient for the discharging of them, shall judge it expedient that the Churches should contribute somewhat to that purpose.

The Twentieth, condemns the Tournaments, in which Soldiers fight, and often kill one another, to shew their Courage and Dexterity.

The Twenty first prescribes, under pain of Excommunication, the observing of a Truce, that is to say, of a Cessation of all manner of Acts of Hostility, from Wednesday-Evening at Sun-set to Munday-Morning, from Advent to the Octave after the Epiphany, and from Septuagesima till the Octave after Easter.

The Twenty second ordains, That Monks, Clerks, Pilgrims, Merchants and Peasants, who come and go to manage the Affairs of Husbandry, shall pass on the Roads with Safety, and that no new Tolls shall be exacted of them.

The Twenty third, grants to Lepers, who are sufficiently numerous for the keeping of a Church, a Church-yard, and a Priest, a License to that purpose, upon Condition that they do no Injury to the Ancient Churches, as to their Parochial Rights.

The Twenty fourth, forbids Christians to furnish the Saracens with Iron, Arms, Ship-tackle, or other Instruments of War, and excommunicates those who list themselves in their Service at Sea, as also such Persons as seize on the Goods of those that have suffer'd Shipwreak.

The Twenty fifth ordains, That Publick Usurers shall be depriv'd of the Communion during their Life-time, and of Christian Burial after their Death.

The Twenty sixth declares, That it ought not to be endur'd that the Saracens should have Christian Slaves, nor that the Christians should reside among them. It gives permission to receive the Testimony of Christians against the Saracens, and ordains that those who are converted to the Christian Religion, shall remain in the quiet Possession of the Estates which they enjoy'd before.

The Twenty seventh Canon is that which relates to the Albigeois, and others, who were reputed Hereticks in those Times, of which we have already given some Account elsewhere.

These are all the Regulations that were made in the Third General Council of Lateran. Bartholomew Laurens, sir-nam'd Poïn, who published the Acts of this same Council, has annexed to it a large Collection of divers Constitutions of Alexander III. and of the Popes who preceded or succeeded him, which he looked upon at least in part, as a Sequel of this Council, because he found it in the same Manuscript: But this Work does not in any manner belong to the Council, and ought not to be esteem'd as a part of it; so that we shall take no farther Notice of it in this Place.

CHAP. XIX.

Of the Provincial Councils held in the Twelfth Century.

WE shall only treat in this Chapter of those Councils which made Regulations of the Church-Discipline, or that determin'd any important Ecclesiastical Affairs, and we shall pass by in silence a very great Number of lesser Councils, which were held only to re-establish or confirm the Privileges of particular Churches and Monasteries; or to consecrate certain Churches; or to translate the Relicks of Saints; or to pass Judgment concerning the Differences between Churches and private Persons about Temporalities; or lastly, to condemn or to acquit some Persons accused of Crimes.

The Council of Valence held in the Year 1100.

The Council of Valence, A.D. 1100.

IN the Year 1100. John and Benedict the Pope's Legates, arriv'd in France, and call'd a Council at Autun, which was held in the Month of September at Valence. It was compos'd of Twenty four Prelates, as well Archbishops as Bishops and Abbots, and the Deputies of the Archbishop of Lyons assisted therein. The Canons of Autun accus'd their Bishop of Simony, and the Matter was warmly debated on all sides, but the Determination of it was refer'd to the Council of Poitiers. Hugh Abbot of Flavigny, who was turn'd out by the Monks, obtain'd Letters of Restauration in this Council of Valence.

The Council of Poitiers held in the Year 1100.

The Council of Poitiers in 1100.

THIS Council was assembled on the Octave of St. Martin in the same Year. The Bishop of Autun, not having sufficiently clear'd himself of the Accusation brought against him, was depos'd and excommunicated, notwithstanding his Appeal to the Pope in this Council, and in the preceding: For the Legates had declar'd, that no regard ought to be had to that Appeal, since they were invested with the whole plenitude of the Pontifical Power. This Council was compos'd of Eighty Dignitaries, as well Bishops as Abbots, and in it was pronounced a solemn Excommunication against King Philip for retaking Bertrade. The Abbot of St. Remy at Rheims was confirm'd in his Abbey; the Case of Drogo, Treasurer of the Church of Châlons, was argu'd, and it was made to appear, that he could not possess that Benefice, having another in another Diocess: Lastly, a certain Church was adjudg'd to Ives Bishop of Chartres, which had been usurped from him, and Sixteen Canons were made in this Council.

The first imports, That only the Bishops or Abbots shall be empower'd to administer Clerical Tonsure to the Monks, that is to say, to engage them in the Monastick Life by vertue of that Ceremony, and that they ought only to confer it on those Persons who actually turn Monks.

The Second, That nothing shall be exacted upon account of such Tonsure, nay not so much as for the Sizzers and Napkins that are us'd in performing the Ceremony.

The Third ordains, That Clerks shall not do Homage to Lay-men, and shall not receive Church-Livings from their Hands.

The Fourth, That the Benediction of the Sacerdotal Habits, and of the Utensils belonging to the Altar, shall be reserv'd to the Bishop.

The Fifth, That the Monks shall not be allow'd to wear the Maniple, unless they exercise the Office of Sub-deacons.

The Sixth, That the Abbots shall not make use of Gantlets and Sandals, nor of the Ring, in officiating, unless they have obtain'd a Privilege from the See of Rome.

The Seventh, That Prebends shall neither be bought nor sold, and that no Household-Provisions shall be exacted for the conferring of them.

The Eighth, That no Prebends, nor any other Benefices, shall be dispos'd of during the Life-time of the Incumbents.

The Ninth, That the Clerks and Monks shall not buy any Altars or Tithes of the Laicks.

The Tenth declares, That the Regular Canons may Baptize, Preach, enjoyn Penance, and Bury the Dead, with a Licence from the Bishop.

The Eleventh, That the Exercise of these Functions is forbidden to Monks.

The Twelfth ordains, That those Clerks, who carry about Relicks to get Money by them, shall not be suffer'd to preach.

The

The Thirteenth, That the Archbiſhops ſhall not exact of the Biſhops, nor the Biſhops of the Abbots, any Copes, Carpets, Baſons, or Napkins, for their Conſecration.

The Fourteenth, That Laicks ſhall have no ſhare in the Offerings made at the Altar, nor in the Gratuities allow'd to the Prieſts, eſpecially upon the account of Burials.

The Fifteenth, That no authorized Judges ſhall ſeize on the Revenues of the Biſhops, either in their Life-time, or after their Death.

The Sixteenth, and laſt Canon, confirms every Thing that Pope Urban had ordain'd in the Council of Clermont; particularly concerning Tithes and Altars unjuſtly retain'd by Laicks, as alſo concerning the Celebacy of Prieſts, Deacons, Sub-deacons, and Canons, and the Prohibition to hold Two Prebends, or Two Dignities in Two ſeveral Churches. Moreover it is related in a certain Ancient Chronicle, that this Council ordain'd, that the Biſhops ſhould have a Right to recover their Poſſeſſions.

King Philip, to cauſe the Excommunication which was denounced againſt him in the Council of Poitiers to be taken off, wrote to the Pope, that he was ready for the future, not to have to do carnally with Bertrade. Whereupon the Pope referr'd the Management of that Affair to Richard Biſhop of Albano his Legate, who held at Beaugency a Council of the Biſhops of the Provinces of Rheims and Sens, in which the King and Bertrade took an Oath upon the Holy Goſpels, that they would no longer have carnal Copulation together, and that they would not ſee one another, but in the preſence of ſuch Perſons as could not be ſuſpected, till they had obtain'd a Diſpenſation from the Pope. However the Biſhops and the Legate durſt not give them Abſolution, but reſerv'd the Determination of the Matter to the Pope: Afterwards Richard being departed from France, the Pope granted a Commiſſion for that purpoſe to Lambert Biſhop of Arras, with the Archbiſhops and Biſhops of the Provinces of Rheims, Sens and Tours, whom he impower'd to abſolve the King, in caſe he renounced his unchaſt Correſpondence with Bertrade, and engag'd no longer to ſee her, unleſs it were in the preſence of unſuſpected Perſons. At laſt, Lambert Biſhop of Arras, Diambert Archbiſhop of Sens, Radulphus Archbiſhop of Tours, and many of their Suffragans, being conven'd at Paris A. D. 1105. receiv'd the Oaths of the King, and of Bertrade, conformably to the Tenor of the Pope's Letter, and gave them Abſolution upon thoſe Conditions.

The Council of Anſe.

The Council of Anſe in 1100.

IN the Year 1100. the Archbiſhops of Canterbury, Lyons, Tours, and Bourges, and Eight Biſhops, aſſembled at Anſe near Lyons, held a Council, in which they debated Matters relating to the Voyage to the Holy Land, and excommunicated all thoſe Perſons, who had taken upon them the Croſs, but had not made the Journey, till they ſhould perform their Vow.

The Council of Troyes.

The Council of Troyes in 1104.

RICHARD Biſhop of Albano, Legate of the See of Rome, held a numerous Council at Troyes in Champagne A. D. 1104. in which Godfrey was choſen Biſhop of Amiens, and Hubert Biſhop of Senlis accuſed of Simony clear'd himſelf by Oath: This Council approv'd of, and confirm'd the Privileges of the Monaſteries of the Church of St. Peter at Troyes, anp of the Abbey of Moleſme.

The Council of Beauvais held in the Year 1114.

The Council of Beauvais in 1114.

GODFREY, who was ordain'd Biſhop of Amiens in the preceding Council, being ill us'd in that Country, took a Reſolution to quit his Biſhoprick; inſomuch that in the Year 1114. Conon, the Pope's Legate, having call'd a Council at Beauvais, the People of Amiens demanded another Biſhop, and Godfrey's Letter was read, in which he declar'd, that he had renounced his Biſhoprick. The Council, that nothing might be done with precipitation, reſerv'd that Affair to be determined in the Council of Soiſſons. However they made a Conſtitution, in which it was declar'd, That the Revenues, of which the Churches had a quiet Poſſeſſion during a Year and a Day, ſhould belong to them for ever; provided that this Poſſeſſion ſhould take Place only againſt Lay-men, and that a Poſſeſſion of Thirty Years ſhall be requiſite to transfer a Right from one Church to another.

The Council of Rheims held in the Year 1115.

The Council of Rheims in 1115.

CONON, held a Council the next Year at Rheims, in which he excommunicated the Emperor Henry, and oblig'd Godfrey to return to Amiens.

The Council of Toulouſe held in the Year 1119.

The Council of Toulouſe in 1119.

POPE Calixtus II. being arriv'd in France, held June 6. A. D. 1119. a Council at Toulouſe, compos'd of certain Cardinals, and of the Archbiſhops and Biſhops of Aquitaine, in which he publiſhed Ten Canons.

The Firſt, is againſt thoſe who buy or ſell Spiritual Livings.

The Second imports, That no Man ſhall be made a Provoſt, Arch-Prieſt, or Dean, who is not a Prieſt; nor an Arch-deacon, who is not a Deacon.

The Third ordains, That Hereticks, who contemn the Communion of the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, the Baptiſm of Infants, Holy Orders, and Lawful Wedlock, ſhall be excommunicated, and that the ſame Puniſhment ſhall be inflicted on their Adherents.

The Fourth, forbids Princes and Lay-men to poſſeſs Tithes, Oblations, Monaſteries, or other Revenues belonging to the Churches.

The Fifth, prohibits to make Slaves of Free-men.

The Sixth ordains, That Clergy-men ſhall not be oblig'd to perform any manner of Service to Laicks for Church-Revenues.

The Seventh, That none ſhall ſeize on the Fourth Part of the Offerings which belong to the Biſhop.

The Eighth, That neither Biſhops, nor Prieſts, nor any other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, ſhall be permitted to leave their Benefices to their Heirs, as an Inheritance by Right of Succeſſion.

The Ninth, That nothing ſhall be exacted for the conſecrated Oyls, Holy Chriſm, or the Burial of the Dead.

The Tenth, That the Monks, Canons, or Clerks, who quit their Profeſſion, ſhall be Excommunicated.

The Council of London held in the Year 1125.

The Council of London in 1125.

IN the Year of our Lord 1125. John de Crema, Legate of the See of Rome, William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Turſtin Archbiſhop of York, Twenty Biſhops, and about Forty Abbots, aſſembled at London, made Seventeen Decrees, in which they prohibit Simony; to give or to receive any Thing for Ordinations; to receive a Spiritual Living from the Hands of Laicks; to chuſe a Succeſſor to ſuch Livings; to confer them on Perſons who are not in Orders; to deprive a Clergy-man of a Benefice without a Legal Sentence paſſed againſt him by his Biſhop; to ordain One who belongs to another's Dioceſs; to entertain One who has been excommunicated by his Biſhop. Clerks are likewiſe forbidden to cohabit with ſtrange Women, and to follow Uſury; Witchcraft is condemned; and Marriages are prohibited between Relations to the ſeventh Degree; but it is declar'd, that Husbands, who endeavour to get their Wives divorced, under pretence of Conſanguinity, are not allow'd to make proof of it by Witneſſes.

The Council of London held in the Year 1127.

The Council of London in 1127.

WILLIAM Archbiſhop of Canterbury held another Council at London Two Years after the former, in which he renew'd the moſt part of thoſe Conſtitutions, adding ſome others againſt the Plurality of Benefices, alſo concerning the Reſtitution of Tithes, and the Plainneſs that ought to be obſerv'd by the Abbeſſes in their Habits and Attire.

The Council of London held in the Year 1138.

The Council of London in 1138.

PArt of the ſame Conſtitutions were reviv'd in the Council held at London, A. D. 1138. during the Vacancy of the See of Canterbury, by Alberic Cardinal Biſhop of Oſtia, the Pope's Legate in England. This Council was compos'd of Eighteen Biſhops, and about Thirty Abbots, and in it were publiſhed Seventeen Canons; of which the following are not comprehended in the preceding Councils: viz. The Second, which forbids the keeping of the conſecrated Elements in the Euchariſt above Eight Days, and ordains, that they ſhall be reverently carry'd to the Sick by the Prieſts or Deacons, and even by Lay-men, in Caſe of Neceſſity: The Fourth, which prohibits a Biſhop, who is ſent for by another Biſhop to conſecrate a Church, to exact any Thing beſides his Right of Procuration: The Tenth, in which is referr'd to the Pope the giving of Abſolution to thoſe who have miſus'd Prieſts, or Perſons conſecrated to God: The Twelfth, being a Prohibition to build a Chappel without a Licence from the Biſhop: The Thirteenth, in which Church-men are forbidden to engage in Warlike Affairs, and to bear Arms: The Fourteenth, prohibiting hibiting Monks to quit their Profession: The Fifteenth, which forbids Abbesses to be attir'd, and to have their Heads dressed after the manner of Secular Women: And the Seventeenth, which imports, That School-masters shall not be permitted to let out their Schools to others for Money. Lastly, Theobald Abbot of Bec, was chosen Archbishop of Canterbury in this Council, and divers means were treated of for the making Peace between the Kings of England and France.

The Council of Rheims held in the Year 1131.

The Council of Rheims in 1131.

POpe Innocent II. as it has already been declar'd, held a Council at Rheims, A. D. 1131. in which he Crown'd Lewes Sirnam'd the Young, King of France, and published Seventeen Canons very advantageous to the Church, but since they are recited in the Second General Council of Lateran, it were needless to produce an Extract of them in this Place.

The Council of Rheims held in the Year 1148.

The Council of Rheims in 1148.

THis Council conven'd by Pope Eugenius III. March 22. A. D. 1148. published Eighteen Canons, which are all among those of the Second General Council of Lateran. We have already given an Account of the Transactions therein, relating to the Condemnation of Gillebert de la Porrée.

The Council of Tours held in the Year 1163.

The Council of Tours in 1163.

THis Council held at Tours by Pope Alexandsr III. on the 28. Day of April, was compos'd of Seventeen Cardinals, 127 Bishops, and of a very great Number of Abbots, and other Ecclesiastical Persons. Arnulphus, Bishop of Lisieux, made an excellent Discourse before mention'd; Alexander renew'd his Bulls of Excommunication against Octavian, and the Ten following Canons were publickly set forth.

The First, forbids the dividing of Prebends, and the changing of Dignities.

The Second, condemns Usury, more especially that by virtue of which the Interest of Things left in pawn by poor People, amounts to a greater Sum than the Principal.

In the Third, Clergy-men are forbidden to bestow Churches, Tithes, or Offerings on Laicks.

The Fourth, is against the Albigeois, which we have already recited in discoursing of those People.

The Fifth, prohibits the letting out of Churches to Priests for an Annuity or yearly Rent.

The Sixth, forbids the exacting of any Thing for admission into Orders; for Nominations to Benefices; for the Burial of the Dead; for the Holy Chrism; and for the consecrated Oils.

The Seventh, is a Prohibition to Bishops to grant Commissions to Deans, or to Arch-Priests, for the carrying on of Judiciary Proceedings in their room, or instead of Arch-deacons.

By the Eighth, Monks are forbidden to go out of their Cloisters in order to study, or to become Professors of the Civil Law, or to practise Physick.

The Ninth, declares the Ordinations made by Octavian, and by the other Schismaticks or Hereticks, to be void and of none Effect.

The Tenth, proposes new Methods for maintaining the Revenues and Liberty of the Churches, and ordains, That whenever the Chaplains, who reside in the Castles, perceive any Injury to be done the Church, they shall make an Address to the Lord of the Castle, to demand Restitution; and if he neglect to do it within the space of Eight Days, the Celebration of the Divine Offices shall be suspended in the Castle; except that of Baptism, Confession, and the Communion, in case of Danger of Death: Only it is permitted to say Mass privately once a Week in a neighbouring Village, to consecrate the Host: It is added, That if the Inhabitants of the Castles continue in their obstinacy Forty Days, the Chaplains shall absolutely abandon the Place. They are also order'd to retire in Three Months, if they be charg'd with any manner of Servcies, and enjoyn'd to get Information when the Booty is brought in; whether any of it belong to the Churches, or be claimed by Clergy-men: All the Vicars and Chaplains are requir'd to take an Oath to observe these Injunctions.

By this Canon, the Inn-keepers and Inhabitants of Towns or Villages, are forbidden to entertain excommunicated Persons: Church-yards and Ecclesiastical Revenues are exempted from all manner of Rent-charges and Assessments: The Excommunication to be inflicted on those who misuse Clergy-men is reviv'd, with a Reservation of that Cause to the See of Rome. All manner of Converse or Correspondence is prohibited with Persons who lie under a Sentence of Excommunication: The Deans are enjoyn'd to take care that these Ordinances be duly put in execution, and to give notice to the Bishop or Arch-deacon, of the Trespasses that shall be committed upon them. The Abbots, Monks, Priors, Abbesses and Prioresses, are likewise free'd from all manner of Rent-charges, and and Impoſitions. Laſtly, an Anathema is denounced againſt Clergy-men and Laicks, who ſhall preſume to buy or to ſell any Revenues or Poſſeſſions, which they know to belong to the Church.

The Council of Caſſel in Ireland.

The Council of Caſſel in Ireland, held A.D. 1172.

IN the Year of our Lord 1172. Henry II. King of England, having made himſelf Maſter of Ireland, call'd a Council at Caſſel, compos'd of the Prelates and other Clergy of Ireland, in which the following Canons were eſtabliſhed.

The Firſt imports, That all the Faithful in Ireland ſhall be oblig'd not to inter-marry with their near Relations, but to contract Lawful Marriages.

The Second, That all the Children ſhall be made Catechumens at the Church-door, and ſhall be baptized in the Church.

The Third, That all the Faithful ſhall pay to their reſpective Pariſh-Churches Tithes, as well of Cattel, and of the Fruits of the Earth, as of their other Revenues.

The Fourth, That all the Church-Revenues ſhall be exempted from all manner of Taxes and Impoſitions.

The Fifth, That when a certain Sum is made up, that is to ſay, ſtipulated or agreed to be paid for the Murder of a Perſon; the Clergy-men, who are the Heirs of the deceaſed Party, ſhall not be oblig'd to pay any part of the Fine.

The Sixth, That all the Faithful when ſain Sick ſhall make their laſt Will and Teſtament in the preſence of their Confeſſor; and that they, who have a Wife and Children, ſhall divide their movable Goods into Three Parts; One of which ſhall be allotted to the Wife, another to the Children, and the Third for the Funeral Expences: That if they have no Children, they ſhall leave one Moiety of their Goods to their Wives; and if they have no Wife, their Children ſhall have a Moiety.

* A ſort of Service for the Dead.

The Seventh, That a Maſs and *Vigils ſhall be ſaid for thoſe who die after having made Confeſſion, and that the accuſtomed Duties ſhall be paid to them.

The Eighth, That Divine Service ſhall be celebrated in all the Churches, according to the Rites and Cuſtoms of the Church of England.

The Council of Avranches held in the Year 1172.

The Council of Avranches in 1172.

THirteen Canons were publiſhed in the Council which was held at Avranches A. D. 1172. by the Cardinals Theoduin and Albert, for the giving of Abſolution to Henry II. King of England.

The Firſt, forbids the conferring of Benefices with the Cure of Souls on Children.

The Second, is a Prohibition to beſtow on the Sons of Prieſts, the Churches that were poſſeſſed by their Fathers.

The Third, is likewiſe a Prohibition to give part of the Offerings to Laicks.

The Fourth, prohibits the appointing of Churches to be ſerv'd by annual Vicars.

The Fifth, obliges the Curates of large Pariſhes to provide a Vicar, when they have means to do it.

By the Sixth, the Ordination of Prieſts without a Title is prohibited.

The Seventh, forbids the letting out of Churches to farm for a Year.

The Eighth, prohibits the depriving the Prieſts, who perform their Functions therein, of a third Part of the Tithes belonging to them.

The Ninth, grants a Licence to thoſe Perſons, who are in poſſeſſion of Tithes, to beſtow them on ſuch Clerks as they ſhall think fit, on condition that they ſhall afterwards return to the Church to which they belong of very good Right.

The Tenth, forbids a Husband to turn Monk, whilſt his Wife remains in the Secular State; unleſs they be both too old to get any Children: The ſame Thing is forbidden with reſpect to the Wife.

The Eleventh, adviſes Faſting and Abſtinence during the time of Advent.

The Twelfth, prohibits the placing of Clergy-men as Judges in the Civil Courts of Judicature.

The Thirteenth, determines nothing as to the Eſtates of excommunicated Perſons; the Perquiſites claimed for the Benedictions of Marriages and Baptiſm; and for the giving of Abſolution to thoſe who lye under a Sentence of Excommunication; by reaſon that the Biſhops of Normandy refuſ'd to admit that Decree.

The

The Council of London held in the Year 1175.

THE Two Henries, Kings of England, being arriv'd at London, met with Richard Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the reſt of the Prelates of the Realm, who held a Council on the Sunday preceding the Feſtival of the Aſcenſion, in which the Archbiſhop Richard publiſhed the following Nineteen Canons. The Council of London in 1175.

The Firſt ordains, That they who have enter'd into Holy Orders, and keep a Concubine, whom they refuſe to expel, ſhall be depriv'd of all manner of Eccleſiaſtical Office and Benefice: That the Clerks who are in Orders, below the Degree of a Sub-deacon, and are married, ſhall not be divorced from their Wives; but ſhall no longer enjoy their Spiritual Livings: That they who are Sub-deacons, or in ſuperior Orders, and contract Marriage, ſhall be compell'd to part with their Wives: And laſtly, That the Sons of Prieſts ſhall be uncapable to ſucceed their Fathers in the Churches poſſeſſed by them.

The Second, forbids Clergy-men to enter Victualling Houſes, to eat or to drink there, except when they are travelling on the Road.

By the Third, Clerks, who are in Orders, are forbidden to aſſiſt at Tryals in Capital Caſes.

The Fourth ordains, That the Arch-deacon ſhall oblige thoſe Clergy-men who wear long Locks of Hair to cut them off, and that they ſhall be cloath'd modeſtly.

By the Fifth, Biſhops are prohibited to ordain the Clergy of another Dioceſs, by reaſon of the Inconveniences that may ariſe from that Practice.

The Sixth, forbids the Tryal of Criminals to be manag'd in Churches, or in Church-yards.

The Seventh and Eighth, renew the Prohibitions to exact any Thing for the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments; for the burying of the Dead; or for admittance into Orders, or the Monaſtick State.

The Ninth, in like manner, forbids the making over of Churches to any Perſon under Pretence of endowing them; as alſo the exacting of any Thing for the Preſentation to a Benefice.

The Tenth, prohibits Religious Perſons to follow the Trade of Merchandizing, or to be Farmers, and likewiſe Lay-men to take Spiritual Livings to farm.

By the Eleventh, Clergy-men are prohibited to bear Arms.

The Twelfth imports, That the Vicars who endeavour to retain the Benefices of thoſe who have the Title, contrary to their Promiſe or Engagement, ſhall be no longer ſuffer'd to exerciſe their Functions in the ſame Dioceſs.

The Thirteenth ordains, That Tithes ſhall be paid of all Things.

The Tenor of the Fourteenth is, That a Clergy-man, who is caſt in his Tryal, ought to be condemn'd to defray the Charges of it; and that if he has not wherewithal to pay, he ſhall be puniſh'd according to the Biſhop's Diſcretion.

The Fifteenth ordains, That there ſhall be only Ten particular Prefaces, for the Feſtivals which are ſpecified in that Canon.

The Sixteenth, prohibits the adminiſtring of the conſecrated Bread in the Communion ſteept in Wine.

The Seventeenth, forbids the Conſecration of the Euchariſt any otherwiſe than in a Gold or Silver-Chalice, and aboliſhes the Uſe of Tin-Chalices.

By virtue of the Eighteenth, clandeſtine Marriages are forbidden.

The Nineteenth, is a Prohibition to marry Children, who have not attain'd to a competent Age of maturity, unleſs it be in caſe of Neceſſity, or for the promoting of Peace.

The Synod of York held in the Year 1195.

HUBERT Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Pope's Legate in England, held at York a Synod of the Clergy of that Church in the Month of June, A. D. 1195. in which, after having depos'd Robert Abbot of St. Mary, by reaſon of his Weakneſs and continual Diſtempers, he publiſhed certain Ordinances relating to Church-Diſcipline, more eſpecially about the Celebration of the Euchariſt. The Synod of York in 1195.

The Firſt imports, That the ſalutary Hoſt, being the moſt excellent of the Sacraments, the Prieſt ought to uſe all poſſible Diligence and Application, to the end that it may be conſecrated with Humility, received with Fear, and diſtributed with Reverence: That it is requiſite that the Miniſter of the Altar be ſure that he offer Bread and Wine with the Water in the Sacrifice; and that he cannot celebrate the Maſs, unleſs he have a Miniſter who is endu'd with ſome meaſure of Knowledge: That care ought to be taken to keep the Hoſt in a neat Box, to renew it every Sunday, and to carry it to the Sick in a Clerical Habit, and with Diſcretion.

The Second, enjoyns the Arch-deacons to take care that the Canon of the Maſs, which he calls Secretum Miſſæ, be very correct.

The

The Third, forbids Prieſts to oblige Laicks to cauſe a certain Number of Maſſes to be ſaid inſtead of Penance, or to make Bargains for the price of Maſſes.

The Fourth, contains a Prohibition to require more than Three Perſons to ſtand as Sureties for a Child at the Baptiſmal Font; that is to ſay, Two God-fathers and One God-mother, when it is a Boy; or Two God-mothers and One God-father, if it be a Girl: Deacons are likewiſe forbidden to Baptize, except in a Caſe of very great Extremity, or to adminiſter the Euchariſt, or Penance; but Prieſts are enjoyn'd to go readily whenever they are ſent for to baptize Children, or to give the Holy Communion to ſick Perſons.

The Fifth, provides for the keeping of Churches, and their Ornaments, in good repair; and ordains, That the Euchariſt ſhall be conſecrated in a Silver-Chalice, in thoſe Churches that have means to procure one.

The Sixth imports, That the Clergy-men, who have receiv'd the Crown from the Hands of the Biſhop, ſhall have Tonſure with it; but if they neglect to obſerve this Ordinance, they ſhall be compell'd to do it by the Forfeiture of their Benefices; and they who have receiv'd neither, by the order of the Arch-deacon or Deans. He recommends to Prieſts the wearing of Habits ſuitable to their Profeſſion.

By the Seventh it is enjoyn'd, That Eccleſiaſtical Juſtice ſhall be adminiſter'd Gratis.

The Eighth, ordains the payment of Tithes without any diminution.

The Ninth, prohibits Monks to take Offices or Licences from their Superiors to farm, and to travel or to go out of their Monaſtery without a juſt Cauſe, and without a Companion: As for the Nuns, they are likewiſe forbidden to go out of their Convents, unleſs accompanied with their Abbeſs or Prioreſs.

The Tenth, forbids the letting out of Tithes to farm to Laicks, although they were aſſociated with a Clergy-man.

The Eleventh ordains, That the Curates ſhall publiſh thrice a Year the Excommunication againſt Perjur'd Perſons with extinguiſhed Candles, and ſhall denounce them excommunicated every Sunday. This Caſe is reſerv'd to the Archbiſhop, to the Biſhop, or to the Grand Penitenciary.

The Twelfth, renews the Prohibitions ſo often made, That Clergy-men ſhould keep unchaſt Correſpondence with Women, and regulates the manner of trying thoſe who are accus'd of that Crime.

The Council of Montpellier held in the Year 1195.

The Council of Montpellier in 1195.

MICHAEL, Legate of the See of Rome, paſſing over to Spain A. D. 1195. upon occaſion of an inrode which the Saracens had made againſt the Chriſtians in the Territories of his moſt Catholick Majeſty, who was oblig'd to retire to thoſe of the King of France; held a Council of the Biſhops of the Province of Narbonne at Montpellier, in which he reviv'd and publiſhed many Decrees of the latter Councils and Popes; amongſt others, ſome about Peace and Truce; againſt Robbers and Pirates; concerning Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, and the Prohibition to lay Taxes on Churches; againſt Uſurers; about the Habits and Manners of the Clergy; the Frugality to be obſerv'd by Biſhops in keeping their Tables, &c. He leaves the Archbiſhop of Narbonne, and his Suffragan Biſhops, at liberty to denounce Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures againſt the Infringers of theſe Ordinances, or to ſuperſede them, accordingly as they ſhall judge moſt expedient, leſt the Hereticks ſhould take an occaſion from a general Suſpenſion of long continuance, to pervert the Faithful, and to corrupt their Principles.

CHAP. XX.

Obſervations on the Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of the Twelfth Century.

THE Illuſtrations that we have inſerted in the Body of this Work, as to the moſt important Eccleſiaſtical Affairs of the Twelfth Century, may ſerve to ſuperſede any farther Pains that might be expected here, in making ſeveral Remarks on the Doctrine and Diſcipline of that Age. For, as to the original and progreſs of Scholaſtick Divinity, recourſe may be had to what we have ſaid in the XV Chapter. As to the manner of explaining the Holy Scriptures,

Scriptures, it would be requisite to consult the Observations made in Chap. XVI. And as to the Reception of Gratian's Decretal, only to peruse what has been related in Chap. XVII. Neither is it necessary to enlarge on the Heresies and Errors which appear'd in the Church in those Times, or on the Doctrines that were established against them, since we have already treated of them in particular Chapters. Indeed the Affair of the Investitures might supply us with some Reflections, if we had not discoursed at large on that subject in the Second Chapter; so that nothing more remains to be said, concerning the Schisms of the Popes, and the Contests they had with the Emperors and Kings, which rent the Church, and occasion'd innumerable Calamities. I shall only observe here, That these Dissensions were so far from diminishing the Power of the Popes, that they serv'd even to corroborate and augment it: For it was in this Century, that they established their Sovereignty in Rome, and their Independency of the Emperor, and even assum'd to themselves a Right of conferring the Imperial Crown: They extended their Jurisdiction and Authority over the Churches farther than they had hitherto done, and met with much less Opposition in their Attempts than in former Times. The most part of the Councils were call'd either by them, or by their Legates, and they were the Authors of the Constitutions that were made therein, and to which the Bishops scarce did any Thing else but give their Consent. Appeals to the Pope in all sorts of Causes, and in favour of all sorts of Persons, were become so frequent, that no Affair was transacted, the Determination of which was not immediately referr'd to the Court of Rome; which oblig'd those Persons, who had any Zeal for the maintaining of Church-Discipline, and among others St. Bernard, publickly to complain of the Abuse. And indeed, they were constrain'd to find out some means to prevent it, in the Third General Council of Lateran, by forbidding Appeals that were enter'd before the Sentence was pronounced, and by ordaining that the Appellants should be oblig'd to prosecute them within a limited Time. Of the Authority of the Pope.

The Discipline of the Church was likewise weaken'd by the frequent use of Dispensations, which were granted at Rome, with so much facility, that that Abuse is esteem'd by St. Bernard as one of the most notorious Disorders that ever happen'd in the Church. The Popes had a very great share in the Collating of Bishopricks: For although the Bishops were then chosen by the Clergy, and ordain'd by the Metropolitan; nevertheless the Decision of the Differences that arose about the Validity of the Election, being of necessity referr'd to the Consistory of Rome, the Popes had an absolute Power to favour whom they should think fit; and if the Metropolitan refus'd to ordain him, whose Election was approv'd by them, they were in a Capacity to ordain him themselves. Sometimes they sent a Legate to assist on their behalf in the Election, where certain Persons were recommended to the Electors, or to the Patrons of the Benefices, and it would be difficult to have no regard to such Recommendations. The Elections of the Popes were reserv'd solely and wholly to the Cardinals, whose Dignity was advanced to such a degree of Height, that they were not only reputed to be superior to Bishops, but also to Patriarchs and Primates. These Cardinals were then chosen indifferently out of all Nations, and France produced above Fifty in that Age.

The Manners of the Clergy were more regular in this Century than in the Two preceeding; insomuch that Simoniacal Practices, and other Enormities were not committed by Ecclesiastical Persons, neither so frequently, nor so publickly: It was forbidden to exact any Thing for the Administration of the Sacraments, for Ordination, or for the Collation of Benefices; yet this was practis'd at Rome, and elsewhere, under divers Pretences. Hitherto it was strictly prohibited, that they who were in Orders should marry; nevertheless when they did so, they were not divorced from their Wives; but only were degraded, turn'd out of the Clergy, or put to Penance: 'Twas only in this Century, that these Marriages were declar'd null, and that those Persons who had contracted them were constrain'd to be divorced; at least the first Ordinance which imports such an Injunction, is that of the First General Council of Lateran. The Constitution which excluded the illegitimate Sons of the Priests from the Clergy, was generally receiv'd, and many were enacted to prevent the Continuance of Spiritual Livings in Families, as it were a peculiar Inheritance. The Clergy-men us'd their utmost Efforts to exempt their Persons and Estates from the Jurisdiction of the Secular Powers, and the Bishops, who as yet were wont to administer Ecclesiastical Justice personally, began to have Officials, whose Name and Functions were unknown till that time: They likewise communicated their Episcopal Authority to Deans and Curates; which Custom was forbidden by the Third General Council of Lateran: They excommunicated or suspended the Laicks, who usurped or retain'd the Revenues belonging to the Church, or who meddled with the disposal of Spiritual Livings: However they themselves sometimes bestow'd Altars, that is to say, Benefices on Lay-men to enjoy the Revenues of them for a time; and these sorts of Benefices were call'd Personats: This Custom prevail'd in like manner amongst the Eastern Churches, where the Emperors and Patriarchs granted the Revenues of certain Monasteries to Laicks. The Visitations of the Ordinaries became so very chargeable to the Curates, that there was a Necessity of regulating their Retinue. Lastly, all the Bishops were oblig'd to have in their Cathedrals a Person capable of teaching the Arts and Sciences, and Universities began to be form'd in the great Cities; amongst which those of Paris and Bononia were the most Famous; the former for the study of Divinity, and the other for that of the Civil Law.

The Doctrine of the Sacraments was reduced in form of a methodical System in this Age, and divers Questions were discussed on that Subject, which never were started before. We shall not at present insist on them, but only observe certain particular Points of Discipline: The Administration of Baptism, even that of Infants, was reserv'd for solemn Days; but Parents were not allow'd to assist at that of their Children, and the triple Immersion was still in use. The Custom Observations on the Discipline of the Sacraments.

of publick Penance for publick Offences was not entirely aboliſhed; but it was very ſeldom put in practice, by reaſon that Remiſſion of Sins muſt be obtain'd by other means, more eſpecially by Cruſades and Pilgrimages. The granting of Abſolution for certain Crimes began to be reſerv'd to the Pope, and the Biſhops: At Firſt, the Species of a Sin in general was not reſerv'd, but a particular Action which appear'd to be enormous; and afterwards the Offence of thoſe Perſons, who abus'd Clergy-men, was generally referr'd to the Pope's Cognizance. Publick Confeſſions at the point of Death were likewiſe in uſe; but the Benefit of Abſolution, and of the Communion, was deny'd, at leaſt in France, to Malefactors condemn'd to Death: Perſons who were in Diſtreſs, out of a Principle of Devotion, often caus'd themſelves to be laid on Aſhes, having their Bodies cover'd with a Hair-cloth, or cloathed in the Habit of a Monk: Voluntary Mortifications, ſuch as the Penitential Shirt, the Hair-cloth, and the Scourging Diſcipline which Penitents gave themſelves, or caus'd to be given by others, were very much us'd in thoſe Times: They were wont to eat only once a Day, on the Days of Abſtinence; but they began to break their Faſt at the Hour of * None in Lent, and at Noon at another time: Fridays Faſt was obſerv'd more regularly than that on Saturdays. The Participation of the Euchariſt under both Kinds was cuſtomary during the whole Century; although in the beginning of it ſome took the Two Species both together, by ſteeping that of the Bread in that of the Wine, and in the end of the ſame Century, ſome took only one. The Term of Tranſubſtantiation was then us'd by certain Writers, to expreſs the Change of the Elements of Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt. Then alſo the Prieſts receiv'd Alms for their Maſſes, but it was forbidden to demand any; and although they offer'd the Sacrifice for certain Perſons in particular, yet it was not doubted but that it was offer'd by them at the ſame time for all the Faithful; to which purpoſe ſee a remarkable Paſſage of Arnulphus of Liſieux, which we have related in the Account of the Works of that Prelate. Conſtitutions were publiſhed about the time, during which the Hoſts might be kept; but the Ordinations, and even the Conſecrations made by Schiſmaticks, or by Hereticks, were reputed to be void, and of none effect.

* One of the Canonical Hours.

Remarks on the Monaſtick Life.

To ſay ſomewhat in like manner concerning the Monaſtick State, we ſhall obſerve that the Benediction of Monks, which was firſt introduced in the Eaſtern, and afterwards in the Weſtern Churches, became as it were neceſſary, and that an expreſs Profeſſion was enjoyn'd, which till then was never requir'd. This Benediction was uſually given by a Biſhop, or by an Abbot; nevertheleſs a ſimple Monk might alſo perform the Ceremony, and it was not forbidden to be reiterated: When a Monk was made Abbot, he receiv'd the Benediction from his Diocéſan; yet ſuch Benediction was not judg'd abſolutely neceſſary. It appears that it was cuſtomary in thoſe Times, both in the Levant, and in the Weſtern Countries, that the Monaſteries ſhould receive Money or Goods of thoſe Perſons, who were to be admitted into them; but that it was prohibited to exact any Thing on that account. The Ciſtercian Order, which was ſmall and poor in the beginning, ſoon became ſo Numerous and Rich, that it gave ſome cauſe of Jealouſy to that of Cluny, and to all the other Black Friers. There aroſe ſeveral Conteſts betwixt them, as well by reaſon of the Difference of their Cuſtoms, as upon account of Temporal Intereſts, and more eſpecially, becauſe the Ciſtercian Monks receiv'd thoſe of the Order of Cluny, who were deſirous to paſs over to them: It likewiſe fell out ſometimes, that the Ciſtercians retir'd to Cluny, and were there entertain'd; but they procur'd a Diſpenſation from the Pope for that purpoſe, and it does not appear, that thoſe of Cluny, who went to Ciſteaux, obſerv'd the ſame Formality. This Cuſtom of paſſing thus from an Order of a moderate, to another of a more auſtere Diſcipline, began to be introduced in the Twelfth Century. The greateſt part of the Monaſteries obtain'd Exemptions of the Popes to withdraw themſelves from the Biſhop's Juriſdiction; an Abuſe that was condemned by St. Bernard, and which the Prelates were afterwards oblig'd to reſtrain in the Third General Council of Lateran. Some conſiderable Abbots were permitted by the Pope to wear the Epiſcopal Ornaments; viz. the Mitre, the Dalmatick, the Gloves, the Sandals, and even the Crofier: Although thoſe who were of a more moderate Temper diſliked this Cuſtom; nevertheleſs it became ſo frequent, that many Abbots uſurped that Right, without any Licence from the Pope; and it was neceſſary that the Third General Council of Lateran ſhould forbid it them, as well as the ſimple Monks, who were not in Orders, the wearing of Maniples. Monks were likewiſe prohibited, in the Firſt General Council of Lateran, to adminiſter the Sacraments, and to exerciſe any of the Functions of Curates; but this Prohibition did not hinder, but that many were taken out of Monaſteries to be made Biſhops and Cardinals. It was alſo very Cuſtomary for Biſhops to retire in the end of their Life into Monaſteries, and having ſpent the remainder of their Days in pious Exerciſes, to die in thoſe Places of retreat. The Order of Grandmont was founded in the beginning of the Century, by Stephen Muret; this Society being compos'd of Hermits dwelling in little Cells, which were ſeparated and ſhut up within the ſame Incloſure: The Rule which he enjoyn'd them to follow, was very judiciouſly compos'd, and approv'd of by the Popes, Urban III. and Clement III. It is alſo affirm'd, That the Order of the Carmelites began to be eſtabliſhed in the Year 1121. by certain Hermits of Mount Carmel, whom the Patriarch of Antioch got together to form a Religious Society: They were Lay-men, who were wont to ſay the Office of the Virgin Mary, and were oblig'd to no other Vow but that of Obedience.

Regular Canons.

The Regular Canons were employ'd in adminiſtring the Sacraments, and in exerciſing the Functions of Curates, when they were authoriz'd to that purpoſe, by their Biſhops: But ſome Prelates made a Scruple to admit them to ſuch Employments, and the Regular Canons themſelves were not very willing to be taken off from their Solitary Life. At that time there aroſe a kind kind of Contraſt between them, and the Monks, about the Preeminence and Dignity of their Stations: The Order of Regular Canons was augmented by a new Congregation, of which St. Norbert was the Founder, A. D. 1126. They were call'd Canonici Tunicati, by reaſon of their Habit, whereas thoſe who bore the Name of St. Auguſtin were ſtyled Superpelliceati.

With theſe Regular Canons may be joyn'd the Military Orders, which became very numerous in that Century, and were under the ſame Conduct and Rule: The moſt Ancient were thoſe of St. John of Jeruſalem, or the Knights Hoſpitallers, inſtituted in the beginning of the Century, to entertain the Pilgrims who were travelling to that City. The Second, are the Knights Templars, who had their Inſtitution in the Year 1118. and whoſe Office it was to provide for the Safety of the Pilgrims, by encountering thoſe who diſturb'd them in their Journey. The Knights of the Teutonick Order, who profeſſed ro perform both theſe Employments, were eſtabliſhed ſome time after. Laſtly, in imitation of theſe Orders, thoſe of St. James, and of Calatrava, were inſtituted in Spain, for the Pilgrimages of St. James in Galicia, and ſome others, in other Countries.
